This is the highest state and the most craved for state, of the mind of the ones keeping their mind wisely directed towards God, or, as one could say, the flower od the mind's cleanness. This is the desired unit of the faith done in the communion of the Ghost; the extolled fruit of the deifying wisdom; the foundation of the spiritual peace; the chamber of the unimaginable joy; the gate of the love from God; the offspring of the illumination; the cause for springing out of heart the inexhaustible waters of the Ghost; the true food of the fore-imagined manna; the delectation, the transformation, and the growing up of the soul; the beginning of the mysteries and of the godlike untold unveilings; the end of the unique and first truth; the raising of any kind of thoughts; the guarding of all cogitations; the elevation above understanding; the occasion of the awe; the above-mind transformation and transfiguration of the mind, in simple, borderless, endless, non-comprised, in a imageless and shapeless state, without quality, non-diverse, without quantity, untouched and above-world; the mind's total restoration in the godlike image.

So, you, by reaching this state and by being under such a deifying work of the loving-of-people grace, do not hurry to utter, because of your lack of skillfulness, some word, before the face of the Lord. For His will be the unique and simple glory forever and ever[1205].

77. While the mind wants to contemplate the realities of the understanding (intelligible) from above itself, if the mind doesn't have together-working for that, by grace, also its heart, the mind will only see feeble, non-enlightened, and muddy things. That's why, the mind will miss also its main pleasure, even if, because of the mind's nescience, it will seem to the mind that is sweetened, because of the fact that the mind hasn't tasted yet the sweetening and the mind doesn't know what that sweetening is[1206].

[1205] It is about the same very convincing argument regarding the necessity of being silent when the mind feels an unmediated relation with God as Person. The simple unity, alive and impossible to define how rich, or any person, it hides when the man gets out of the spell of directly experiencing that person, and experience that is upheld by the reciprocal attention of the two persons. The word scatters the spell, it scatters the most essential reality, or the living into that reality, as in the fairy tales where the will of communication in words the mystery of the beloved person it makes that person leaving forever. But then the question is: what the importance of the words still consists of? The uttered word in an introduction to the Word-Person. One can speak until he reaches the unmediated experiencing of the person, namely the direct communication with the person. Once reached there, we must keep our silence. We must experience the word-person in its fullness through the silence which our persons catch with, as an all-comprising word, another person. The multitude of words keeps us in a world of lifeless peels, in an apparent reality. The essential reality is the person. But we live in our person only the image, the most essential image of the plenary and ultimate reality that is the godlike Person, better said the Trinitarian communion of Persons.

[1206] If the mind isn't accompanied by the heart, it won't have the experience of God as Person, for the mind always tends towards discerning, in order to understand, or the mind is carried

79. The mind, guide by grace towards contemplation, it is always being truly nourished with spiritual manna. This is for the felt manna too, that one eaten by Israel during their exodus in desert, it has a worthy of being cherished power, as one that was feeding and sweetening the body; by what was that manna according to its being, they didn't know. That's' why too, it was called as manna, a word showing its unknow nature. This is for, the word manna means: "What is this?". And this was for, while eating what they were seeing, and because of not knowing the nature of that thing, the Jews asked in their bewilderment: "What is this?". Likewise, the seer too, by getting out of himself towards himself, with his mind, he always asks himself: "What is this? – for it gladdens when looked at, and it fattens the mind when it is spiritually eaten, but it exceeds the possibility of being understood in itself, because of being godlike and above-nature, and it nourishes and it waters the mind in a wonderful mode, but it escapes any understanding of the mind, not only because of being non-comprised, according to its being, but also for being endless and borderless[1207].

80. Also I would say, rightly so, that three are the things bearing witness to the truth: the creation, the Scripture, and the Ghost. This is for through Scripture and creation, when looked at spiritually, it is being contemplated the One and simple truth, as a truth coming out of Him. And through these three witnesses, the mind reaching and stopping into the two truths[1208], the mind has found, by the grace of God, its way. This is for, through the simple truth, the mind has found the height and the depths thought with the mind (intelligible), as also its endless width, which, by placing the mind in a state of awe, it away, by the tendency of finding out some self-standing things, in order the mind to be able to fully comprise them with the understanding. But my heart makes me to experience that all of these are some feeble and inconsistent realities. Only the heart, ads the most total and as the most intense organ of the person, it experiences the Person of God. And the mind sees the light only through the heart, or it experiences the love from the Person. But the encounter with another person comes only out of that person's will, namely out of that person's grace.

[1207] As the manna too, that was nourishing the body into wilderness, likewise God Who nourishes the mind, He cannot be understood in Himself. The mind, by being nourished with Him, it asks: what is This? The mind feels the impulse of asking, for, by getting out of the divide and estranged self, it gets out towards the true self, and through that into God Who is above understanding.

[1208] The two truths are: the simple truth, or The One, or God; and the multiple truth, composed, created by the first one.

makes the mind to fearfully extoll God. And through the composed truth, the mind has found, in addition to the mentioned things, also the heart's peace, the love, and the joy, which make the mind singing with love, overwhelmed with wonder. But the man needs a long time and much toiling and much patience, in order to, by somehow rejecting the senses and by removing from within mind the things submitted to the senses, the mind to be elevated to the realities thought with the mind (intelligible), consequently to which, it shines to the soul the seeing of the truth.

I haven't said that the truths need, in order to be found, some like these, as there are the time intervals, or the toiling, or the patience, in order to be comprised, but I've said that the man needs them. And this is, for the truth is one and simple, despite it appears to the contemplation (to the view) in a twofold mode, and not only that it almost shouts out from all quarters, confessing itself to the ones who want to see the truth. But the man, because of being composes and intertwined with the senses, and also submitted to transformations and to changing, he sometimes deviates from himself and he becomes his own enemy, without knowing it, deceiving on himself due to his self-appreciation and getting ill of faithlessness. And by these three, namely through self-appreciation, through cunningness, and through faithlessness, he miserably falls off the truth confesses by the three realities previously mentioned: the Scripture, the creation, and the Ghost. That's why, in order to reject the awful self-appreciation and the others, the man needs the three ones which I've been speaking about, saying that he needs them[1209].

[1209] Through the simple truth, the author understands God in Himself; and through the composed truth, the author understands the composed truth, namely the creation. Through this we can understand the affirmation that the first truth makes the mind to fearfully extoll God; and the second truth makes the mind to extoll God with love, due to the mind's gratitude for the gift of the world, given to the man, by God. Nut the composed truth can also mean the fact that we cannot know God without knowing on ourselves too, namely without Him entering the relation with us. In this sense, one can understand the expression that the truth is simple in itself, but when contemplated by us it appears to be twofold. But the two truths, being in connection, they actually are one truth. And this truth confesses to us from all quarters. That's why the truth is not difficult to be fount out. On the other hand, though, because of depending on us to recognize the truth, namely to be found out, or recognized, if we do not know on ourselves, we won't be able to know that truth either. This is for we are part of the creation and only together with the creation we are in connection with God, namely only by knowing on ourselves, as such, we know Him.

This is for, the mind, by getting humble, to believe with simplicity and thus to immediately know limpidly, out of Scripture, and out of creation, into the Ghost, not only the all-simple truth, but also the composed truth coming out of the all-simple truth, and even what have been impeding the mind from seeing the truth and it has been parting the mind from the joy of having the truth.

So, the first truth is One and the only simple by nature. After the first truths there comes the composed truth coming out of the first truth for us, the composed ones[1210]. And the ultimate and the best end of our mind, which the whole living and ascesis strive towards, of the ones who are guided according to the Ghost's target, it is that the empty mind to see and to rejoice of the shininess sprung out of the prime and unique truth and out of the composed truth wonderfully coming out of the simple truth. And this thing couldn't be achieved otherwise, except through humbleness and simplicity in faith, on the ground of the Scripture's witness and of the creation's witness into the Ghost[1211].

And when the mind will mirror with the three powers it has, the truth, out of the three witnesses mentioned above, by somehow bending towards itself, it becomes much more humble and steadfastly faithful. Form here it ascends, step by step, gladly, towards contemplating (seeing) the truth, whose rays are more limpidly illuminated. Due to these ones, by turning back again towards itself, for the greatness of the glory saw by it, the mind descends to an even humbler and simpler state, and it is overwhelmed with awe, under the power of the fate. And thus, by constantly repeating and crossing some kind of godlike circle, the mind ascends through faith, humbleness, and simplicity, to seeing the truth and the shininess of the truth makes the mind to descend to even more humbleness and to become even simpler in faith[1212]. Ad the mind doesn't cease from waling this road "until there still is said today" (Hebr. 3: 13), contemplating with humbleness, with simplicity, and with faith, through the witness of the creation and of the Scripture, the truth into Ghost, and turning back again from where it has started. Thus, by being day by day deified through grace, and by being illuminated by the above-mind realities, and by living a life full of the joy into Christ, our Lord, the man tastes as an earnest, the rejoicing of the eternal and future good things.

[1210] For us, the ones composed out of soul and body, the simple God has composed Himself with the body.

[1211] Maybe the author hints towards 1 John 5: 7-8: "Three are confessing into heavens: the Father, the Word, and the Ghost. And these Three are One. And there are three confessing on earth: the ghost, the water, and the blood". But our author placed instead of the last trinity: the creation, the Scripture, and the Ghost. Couldn't we understand through water the creation, through blood the Scripture, which bear witness to the embodied Christ? Anyway, the creation, the Scripture, and the Ghost compose a unity too. This is because the Scripture cannot be separated from the creation, which it confesses about that it is a gift from God, neither it can the creation be separated from the Scripture which it finds its meaning and purpose into. And both of them cannot be understood and received as witnesses of God, except into the Ghost.

81. The contemplative life is upheld without shortcoming and unstained, through these three: through faith, through the manifest impartation with the holy Ghost, and through the wisdom of the good science[1213]. This is for the contemplation is, to say it through a definition, the knowledge about the realities to be understood with the mind in the things submitted to the senses (or the intelligible ones in the sensitive ones), and sometimes also of the intelligible ones (known with the mind) simple, separate from senses; this takes place to the advanced hesychasts. That's why, one needs faith[1214]. "This is because, if you don't believer, you won't understand" (Isa. 7: 9). Also, the Ghost is necessary for "the Ghost searches all things, even the depths of God" (1 Cor. 2: 10). That's why, the godlike Job said: "The breaths of the All-Upholder is that teaches me" (Job 33: 4).

The godlike and living work of the Ghost, by igniting the flaming fire within heart, to say so, and by invigorating the heart in an above-world manner, it focuses and in gathers the mind at Himself, and it impedes the mind from any scattering, by giving [1212] Through humbleness, the soul ascends in the godlike light, because ethe humble one, by no longer seeing himself, he sees God. But the godlike light makes the mind to become even humbler, in order by this to see even more light. It is a continuous turning into a circle, but in an increasingly higher circle, in a spiral. The humbleness is ever-deeper and the elevation is ever-higher. Or, form the ever-higher ascension it doesn't lack the ever-deeper humbleness, and from the ever-deeper humbleness it doesn't lack the ever-higher ascension. The depth and the height coincide increasingly more, in an increasingly necessary interiority, united with the godlike life.

[1213] Here we have a new trinity. The creation and the Scripture are concentrated in one: in science. And the Ghost is presented as ramified in two: in the Self-impartation and in the faith He produces.

[1214] The contemplation doesn't stop at the realities submitted to the senses, but it sees through them the realities known with the mind. But these ones, on one hand they are "seen", and on the other hand they aren't felt with the senses. That's why one needs faith in order to recognize them.

to the mind, in addition to serenity and much content and comforting, also godlike love, in order to easily see the godlike realities, and in order to tarry around them, and in order to represent God to itself in a ne mode, as also in order the mind to rejoice of God with a great and difficult to bear love, and with a gladness according to it[1215].

But one need wisdom too, as I said before. This is for "the wisdom, sys the Scripture, it illuminated the face of the man" (Eccl. 8: 1). It illuminates it, for the mind easily moves from the senses to understanding, and form the realities submitted to the senses to the understood and godlike views, and the mind sees, through understanding unveiling, the untold realities. It illuminates the mind for the mind unitarily contemplates and sees the above-being God, and for the mind is being imprinted by God. "Blessed is the man, whom you advise, Lord, and through Your law You teach him" (Ps. 93[1216]: 12). This is for such a man is truly wise, by reaching through advising at faith, and by learning out of the Ghost's teaching the hidden things of God. The wise man is truly a great thing, for he walks through faith in the union and in the above0nature partaking with the Ghost.

And truly three are the ones who cannot be grabbed and held, as somebody said: God, the angels, and the wise man[1217], who is another angel on earth, a supervisor of the seen nature[1218] and a mysterious knower of the works, of if somebody [1215] This is a description of the mode in which the Ghost works within man. The Ghost primarily work within heart, for the heart is the most sensitive organ of the man. The Ghost's work ignites within the heart the love for God. Through the vibrant life, which the heart is awakened at, thus, the work of the Ghost gathers the mind and it united the mind with the heart, or, with itself too (with the Ghost's work). Due to the attraction exercised by this powerful life of the heart, the mind no longer feels itself attracted by the outside things, but it is filled up at its turn, with a joy and with a love for God, that, together with the simplicity and with the limitlessness which the mind gained by getting out of the narrowing of the outside images, they make the mind to see God in a new manner, through a fresh and unmediated feeling.

[1217] God, the angel, and the wise man cannot be grabbed and held, for they are free and borderless. They aren't like the objects are, or like the animals are. Only the passionate man can be grabbed and driven with the nose ring, by the cunning ones.

[1218] The man is a supervisor of the seen nature, or a conscious seer of the seen nature. There is a seen world only for the man exists, as conscious subject, to see it. But seeing the nature it means knowledge too. This means that the world is rational, and it is a fabric of materialized rationalities, for the man who is the rational subject, in order the man to realize about the wants to say it so, of the uncreated godlike gifts springing out of God; This is for the man impropriates on all ways, through a total view, like the angels, the knowledge about God. So is, to say it shortly, the one who is wise into the Holy Ghost, by faith, and who, as such, is blessed.

Besides, it will be enough to me, the things said to me by Saint Luke in the Gospel – to me, for I reckon that Lord Jesus was free of the creatures' law – in order to represent to myself the power and the praise of the wisdom and of the grace. This is for he wrote that Jesus "was increasing in wisdom, with the age and by grace" (Lk. 2: 52), and again that He "was growing and getting stronger into Ghost" (Lk. 2: 40), being Him full of wisdom. And because I've started writing even more clearly about the things I said before, I am bringing here also what the wise Solomon says towards God: "Who would search for the trace of the one from heavens and who would know Your advice, if You didn't give wisdom and if you didn't send Your Holy Ghost form the high ones" (Wisdom of Solomon 9: 16-19). Do you see to how much power reaches the wisdom when intertwined with the impartation with the Ghost? And, do you see how far from salvation jumps the one who hasn't achieved wisdom and Ghost from God, neither is him guided by one who is wise and partaker to the Ghost?

If about the Savior, Whom the whole fulness of the godhead lives in (Col. 1: 19), things like these ones have been written, it won't be difficult to understand how much wisdom intertwined with the influence of the Holy Ghost the whole mankind needs and how much mercy, power, and advancing from the loving of soul God, it has been found worthy of the wiseman into the Ghost, who researches the traces of the realities from heavens and it steps towards the knowledge of The Most Heigh.

So, after telling you so many things about the seer man, it is due now to toil and to partially speak about the seeing too, in order to nourish the cogitation of the one who listens with the whole his heart. This is for God commands to all the ones who speak about Him, they to give out of their abundance also to the ones who lower and those too, to piously be imparted with the higher spiritual gifts of the godlike illumination, in order they to come closer in communion Ghost and without pride, to their fellow humans, and in order they to speak them about the realities known with the mind and about God. Thus, they not only strongly illuminate, in the church of the living God, the straight and non-errant teaching, but also the pious and the all-beautiful face of the love, which is the sign of the Christ's disciples, it ceaselessly chines within our hearts, poured within us through the Holy Ghost, towards the consummate and simple love for God and for the people. Only thus we can live on earth an angelic-like life, a truly happy and all-pleasant life, as ones who are connected through the godlike and deifying love to twofold nature[1219], "which all the law and the prophets are upheld by" (Mt. 22: 40) and which nothing is sweeter to the soul like, especially when it has is springing, in an unmediated manner, out of the seeing and the knowledge of God and of the godlike realities, namely of the illuminating grace[1220].

So, the one who established as his own purpose, to ascend well and beautifully, at God, in order him to be united with God, and in order him to be consummately be deified through God, or, in other words, to be saved, since without the mind's deification the man cannot be saved, as the speakers about God say, in addition to fulfilling the Lord's commandments, as much as it is possible, let him occupy also with the due contemplation of the creatures and of all the seen realities, in order him not to have a blind doing, namely one separated from contemplation, neither him to have the contemplation without soul, namely without going[1221]. That's why, he begins with the wisdom of the rationality and of the mind, and with the holy knowledge of the Scripture, namely with a good start, in order him to look, with a good purpose and with rationality, at the world of the realities submitted to the senses, as at a shown sign of the Creator, endless in power and in [1219] "Our love is of twofold nature", because of being both godlike, as one poured within us by the Holy Ghost, but it is also human, as one which, our human nature too, it is ignited by.

[1220] The love spring out of the knowledge of God, for this knowledge is the seeing of His loving face, and not a speculation about Him, from distance. The love for his father, it spring within the child, out of the knowledge, or out of seeing the loving face of his father.

[1221] This expression is a parallel to the expression of Saint James: "The faith without deeds is dead" (Jas. 2: 20). The contemplation is the job of the soul's eye of the man. But a man who sees without love, he is a cold, soulless man. That's why he cannot see the full reality. And the love is the fruit of the doing. So, without doing, one cannot reach the true view of God and of the people. Consequently, the ascesis doesn't consist of despising the world, but it consists of understanding the world into God.

wisdom. So, he meets, as much as it is possible, the endless in power realities and their whole diversity[1222], and he secretly delights and nourishes his mind out of the hidden realities. And, as the time passes, by living a life in quietude, and without disturbance, and by cogitating only at the godlike realities, through the meditation of the Scripture and of the seen things, he makes as his own occupation, to spiritually look, as much as possible, at the creation, in dialogue with the Scripture and with the images (symbols), in dialogue with the truth, through a more unitary sight.

When this happens, the mind, with the help of the worshipped Ghost and of His work, the mind is elevated to seeing and to knowing the holy truth, as Great Dionysus says, namely on the second level of the contemplation, to say is generally, at the godlike views and meanings, namely at the ones without cover and without images[1223].

By this, the empty mind comes closer to the uncovered intelligible realities (those known through cogitation) and, by mostly occupying itself with the godlike showings, through its cleanness and by tending towards God, in looks in itself, as in a shiny mirror, the supra-sparking rays of the Sun known with the mind.

Nourished, on the way, through grace, again by the good things which the mind is imparted with according to its spiritualization[1224], being elevated and more unitarily and more concentratedly penetrating at those many and happy godlike views and impartations, or, from their great diversity at the untold love of the unchanged and hidden One[1225]. This is for on [1222] Through the world's things, he meets the infinite creator and providential energies of God.

[1223] The first level of the contemplation, or of the soul's sight into the Ghost, it consists of seeing the godlike realities in the things' images. The second level consists of looking at the godlike realities in themselves, without t the covers and the images of the things, for those ones have been overwhelmed by the stronger work of the Holy Ghost within mind.

[1224] Nourished, grown up, fattened up, and increased by the godlike gifts which the mind is imparted with, the mind steps higher up, on the third level of the sight.

[1225] It is constantly affirmed the encounter with the unitary and simple and godlike Person, beyond His multiple manifestations. This is the third and the last level of the contemplation, or of the seeing. This is an encounter with God within love. This is for only between person and person the true love can be ignited. But the person, no matter how seen would that person be, and regardless how many times we would encounter that person, it otherwise remains hidden, as a center of the endless depth of all that person's manifestations. And the godlike Person is unchanged in His love, in His quality as unique center of all manifestations, unlike His manifestations which can be seen and which are changes according to the one who needs them.

this level, the seer is transformed under the work of the illuminating Ghost Who remembers him and Who keeps in the seer's mind the whole truth, with the whole understanding feeling, in fire and in deifying love, endless, and with the whole heart, and for God. And this is, also according to the Great Dionysus, the deified and unitary impartation with The One Himself, as much as it is possible to the man.

So, the bearer of God - and full of thinking at Him - mind, by flying on these levels of impartation with the threefold hypostatical Unity, in a threefold more happily mode[1226], and by seeing itself as wounded with love and ignited in its feeling, the mind gets enthusiastic, and the mind truly gets out of itself, by entering, with the shiny face, the untold (apophatic) mysteries of the theology (of the knowledge about God). And there, the mind abundantly feasts, through unseen embracing, with The One Who is without-beginning, and endless, and non-comprised, and entirely uninterpreted and all-ununderstood. But, in the same time, the mind imagines God, as an endless and borderless ocean of the being that escapes any meaning related to time and nature, according to the mentioned theologian[1227].

This is, as Saint Dionysus says too, the feasting of the sight nourishing, in a godlike manner, and deifying every person ascending towards Him, starting with the contemplation and the knowing of the things, as says this holy teacher, where it clarifies the holy symbols of our hierarchy. Abut also the Great Basil says: "After somebody crosses through contemplation beyond the beauty of the seen things, and he presents himself to God Himself Whose view cannot be shown except to the clean hearts, he advances to the higher mysteries of the theology (of [1226] The One encountered with the mind, He is threefold in Hypostases, and therefore He is full of the love's life. The love becomes His unity, and it also becomes His Trinity. It is a living One, through a borderless love; that's why He is an One threefold in Hypostases. By being imparted with Him, the mind is imparted with this unitary love amongst the Three One and the mind feels, for that reason, a unique and still threefold happiness. This is for the mind if filled up with filial love towards the Father, but also with the union amongst the Three Ones, and between the mind and God into the Holy Ghost.

[1227] We have here, again, an enthusiastic description of the seeing of God, which the author originally united in, the abstract exposition belonging to Dionysus the Areopagite, with the fiery feeling described by Saint Simeon the New Theologian. By this, the author is close too, to the sentimentalist description of the Occidental mysticism, but he also keeps the theological consistency of Saint Dionysus the Areopagite, by taking further the Christianization of some Neoplatonic themes, by strongly accentuating the personal character, of better said: the tri-personal character, and therefore a loving character, of The One.

the knowledge about God), so that he can become seer". And again, when mentioning about the word of David, who spoke into Ghost: "In the morning I will stay before You and You will see me" (Ps. 5: 3), he says: "When I will stay before You and by contemplating with my mind the realities from around You, I will get closer, then I will receive the seer work through the illumination of the knowledge".

Such things can be heard also from Saint Maximos the Confessor, who shows how much advancing it brings the contemplation and the knowledge of God through Scripture, and through creation, and that from here it comes the enlightening of the knowledge, which the happy deification is produced through. Of course, this is a good thing which rarely and with difficulty it can be found by hesychasts (by the ones who occupy themselves with the self-appeasing), because of the absence of the one who learns out of experience with the help of the grace, as the highest teacher of the appeasement, Saint Isaac the Syrian, says, in the word which he starts speaking about the spiritual feeling and about the seer power[1228].

So, Saint Maximos says: "We call as deifying lights the teachings of the saints, as ones seeding the light of the knowledge and which deify the ones who listen to them". He obviously expresses the same idea as Saint Dionysus who says: "All the other deifying light, as many as he has given us as gifts, by following to the words (from Gospels), the hidden teaching of our teachers, at our turn, we secretly teach them to others too". And in another place, he says: "The godlike knowledge, on the ones who impropriate it as much as it is possible to the human beings, it elevates them, according to their powers, and it unifies them according to its own simple unity". And again: "The whole brightness of light, started out of the Father, by coming to us as a good gift, it makes us floating straightly upwards, as a unifying power, and it turns us towards the deifying unity and simplicity of the Father Who gather us up" (Rom. 11: 36). You can notice that the one who becomes simple, by strongly and wisely turning himself towards God, or by godlike work, when he reaches to contemplate God, by being elevated either from things or from Scripture, either from all kind of godlike symbols, he is united with God and he is deified, and even more than that, he is even called as god? “This if for 0 he says - all the ones amongst the understanding and speaking being, who have turned with the whole their power, towards the union with the starting godlike hiding, and they are elevated, as much as they are allowed to, towards its godlike rays, in an untold mode, by imitating God, if we can say so, they will also be found worthy of the same name wit God”. Also, the Great Gregory the Theologian, he limpidly says about the human being that is “an animal guided by the godlike oikonomia, in order him to be move elsewhere, and the end of the mystery it is his deification by consenting to God”. And Saint Maximos says: “the cogitated image of the godlike Scripture it transforms the knowers, through wisdom, towards deification, through the transfiguration of the Word within them, so that they mirror the glory of the Lord, on their unveiled face: (2 Cor. 3: 18)[1229]. This contemplative life needs the three things mentioned before: faith, impartation with the Holy Ghost, and the wisdom of the good-knowledge into Christ Jesus, our Lord.

82. The contemplative (seer) life into the-life-maker Ghost, it mysteriously filles up the seer with many and wonderful views cogitate with the mind (intelligible), which aren’t contemplated on the same moment and all at once, nut in time and through getting wiser over a long time, according to a rule and gradually. Now you hear the one having such a life, saying that he sees out of the quietude’s abundance and out of getting far from all things, except from God: “Different I am, until I will have passed” (Ps. 140[1230]: 10). Some other time, he says that he sees due to his turning with his conscience towards creatures: “How great are Your things, Lord, wisely You have made all of them” (Ps. 103: 24); or: “The fragrance of Your vestments, as a fragrance of rich filed, which You have blessed it, Lord” (Gen. 27: 27). Sometimes, this life, by making the seer to look more intensely, and to ascend height know with the mind (Ps. 83[1231]: 3), it persuades him to say: “I walk on the traces of the fragrance of Your chrisms” (Song of Songs 1: 4); or: “I will extoll You, my [1229] The man is deified through the transfiguration of Christ within him, namely through the deification of the Christ’s human nature, united with the mans’ nature and imprinted in the man’s nature. Then the man mirrors on his unveiled face the shininess of the Christ’s transfigured humanity, that it has become the man’s shininess. Then the man has become transparent to the transfigured Christ, or deified in his humanity.

God, my Emperor, and I will bless Your name for ever and ever" (Ps. 144: 1); or: "You knowledge it has become wonderful to me, it has been strengthened, I won't be able towards it" (Ps. 138[1232]: 6). And in another place, he says: "All-Hight are You, Lord, for ever and ever, and Your remembrance is from generation to generation" (Ps. 101: 12). You have been extolled very, above all gods. Namely, it prepares the seers who ascends towards God, for extolling of God, through that sight above-sight. Some other times, it brings the seers to a manifest untold knowledge (apophatic), making them to cry out: "There is no other like You amongst gods, Lord, and there is nothing like Your things" (Ps. 85[1233]: 7). And to the ones who spiritually look at the "knowledge's mountain" and "the holy place of God", it shows them where ascend to and where stop at, those "innocent with their hand and clean in heart" (Ps. 23: 40). But not only that, but it gives them to see also ascensions to heavens and descents to depths (abysses), namely the heigh and the deep mysteries. Sometimes the seer stops, wondering, around seeing the face of The One in Trinity. Some other times, he tarries in contemplating Jesus and the oikonomia or the embodiment and in the amazed looking at the mysteries from above-nature which follow out of it.

And after all these many and blessed views, the seer who has reached to be illuminated, he is introduced, o, what a grace, in a wonderful mode, also in the themselves bosoms of God, where he finds the true ceasing from all things and the untold resting and the spiritual and above-nature delectation (not to say drunkenness) with the good things from God and with the godlike ecstasy (the godlike getting outside himself) in those more than blessed bosoms, which hide in their great depth countless godlike mysteries, which the seer gets satisfyingly close by feeling the supra-being of God[1234]. These bosoms have been received by Abraham, as inheritance form above, for even God Himself had made Himself as part of Abraham, according to

[1234] The term "supra-being" of God, it is used by Dionysus the Areopagite, because the "being", he says, it is a name given to God through the resemblance with the being of the created realities, and it keeps us tight to this way of thinking. This supra-being is beyond any God's coming out of us; it is totally ununderstood. Although, the one who doesn't reach to see into the God's depth of mysteries, he "feels" that supra-being; he feels it as hidden under those depths of mysteries.

the word: "I am the God of Abraham" (Gen. 26: 24). So, God, by being especially the God of Abraham, the God's bosom too, are the Abraham's bosoms (Lk. 16: 22). Thus, that one who wants to say that the seer life into the Ghost it elevates somebody into the God's bosoms, or into Abraham's bosoms, he says that it introduces the seer in the full simplicity and in a more than loving joy, as also that it deifies the seer, it makes the seer happy, and it places the seer into untold satisfaction and delectation. But this will take place only if the seer's mind has been imparted with wisdom and the mind strives as much as it can to look upwards, into Christ Jesus, our Lord.

83. If both the creation and the Scripture have come to existence through the word of God, and, when spiritually looked at, they strengthen the mind and all the mind's powers towards seeing and understanding God, since the heart is spiritually worked and moved, all-wisely Prophet David teaches us, by telling us in a place: "with the word of the Lord are the minds strengthened (which here he calls them as skies) and with the Ghost of His mouth the whole their power" (Ps. 32[1235]: 6); and in another place: "full is the earth (cogitated with the mind, or our heart) of God's mercy" (Ps. 32[1236]: 5), namely of the power and of the motion well felt and manifest, moved by the Ghost. This is because, before feeling the mind within heart, the power and the motion (of the Ghost), not only that he won't gather strength out of the seer and spiritual research, done on the creation and of the godlike Scripture and out of bringing the rationalities form within them to a sole rationality, but it will also be overwhelmed by a great fear, lest to be lost because of being filled up with hallucinations[1237]. That's why, if we want to occupy ourselves

[1237] Only when guide by the Ghost of God, united with the Word, the mind isn't filled up with wrong ideas, or with hallucinations regarding their meanings. This is for the Word of God is, in the same time, the true and supreme Rationality. How many heresies appeared by subjectively interpreting the Scripture and how many non-Christian explanation have been given to the world! Like Saint Maximos the Confessor too, the author of the present writing sees, both in creation and in the Scripture, the rationalities and the meanings of the same Word of God, or of the same unique and supreme Rationality. In the world's things and in the deeds and in the Scripture's writings, we are addressed the words of the same Word-Person or hypostatical Rationality; namely our personal rationality, made in the image of the supreme Rationality-Person, it can judge rightly, according to the supreme Rationality, and it can perceive the things and the teachings of the Scripture as real words of the Word-Person, only because the Holy with the contemplation of God in the Scripture and creation, in order to unitarily concentrate the many reasons of the things and the many views (of the Scripture) in a sole rationality and in a sole Ghost, and in order to have a sole sight, one unitarily, simple, and imageless, in the limitlessness, infinity, and without beginning-ness, which are open to us within them, let's firstly look for finding the treasury within our heart[1238]. And we pray the holy God to fille up our earth (inward) with His mercy. And then, with the whole power which we will have, let's give freedom to our mind, to fly out, as it has been said, towards the unitary, simple, imageless, eternal, endless, and borderless understanding of God, in a view helped by the Word and by the Ghost.

84. When the man will have walked the road of the virtues, in humble thought, patiently, with hope and with faith and with righteous and simple feelings, the life-maker power and work of the Holy Ghost will come within heart, illuminating the soul's powers and moving them and by urging them according to their nature. Then it will attract the mind kept in work, at itself, and it will unite the mind with itself, quickly and in an untold mode, so that the mind and the grace will be totally through and doubtlessly a ghost. Then, the mind helps by the breath of the grace, it comes by itself to seeing, by ending, in an untold mode, its walks and wanders, through the work and the light of the Holy and of-life-maker Ghost[1239]. The mind moves itself, then, in

Ghost, as Ghost-Person, He strengthens our character as persons, by strengthening within us the conscience that we are, through creation and Scripture, in a relation with the supreme Person of the Word.

[1238] The treasury from within us are the Ghost and the Word of God, received by us at Baptism (see Mark the Ascetic, About Baptism, in The Romanian Philokalia, volume I), but we can find Them by refreshing out dialogue with the Word into the Ghost, through prayer.

[1239] The author said before, that the work of the Ghost attracts the mind to Himself. Now he adds that the Ghost's work will unite itself with the mind, insomuch that they become one ghost, and that the mind helped by grace it comes by itself to contemplation. "By itself" it means that the work of the grace which the mind has been united with, it doesn't stop the spontaneous motion of the mind, but it strengthens the mind. But it strengthens the mind towards seeing God. The strengthened spontaneity of the mind it means strengthening the man's character as person. The man's person meets his work, which it has been imprinted in, and which the Ghost's work has strengthened it, with the Ghost Himself. The man impropriates the Ghost's work, and the Ghost make the man's work as His own, so that they work together like some kind of bi-personal unit. The work is one, but theandric, the working unit is one, but bi-personal. Each person and work can interpret the another. Through the human person work the Ghost's Person, but without the man's person ceasing to work. A contrary, the man's the unveiling of the godlike mysteries, known with the mind (intelligible) and it reaches to enter the whole silence and quietude, with a seeing characteristic to its nature[1240], in the untold and above-nature realities.

And the mind deepens itself all the more in seeing, and it is taken in mastery by God, and the mind is elevated as much as it can towards seeing God, with the science about the godlike realities gathered out of the holy readings, as much as it is abundant in humbleness, in prayer, under the work of the Holy Ghost, into the Holy Ghost. Then the mind isn't stranger either of the work of theologizing (the work of speaking about God), but it immediately reaches at this work and it doesn't endure not to speak about God (to theologize) and even ceaselessly. But without the mentioned heavenly gift and without the Ghost ceaselessly blowing, through a continuous movement, within heart, all the realities seen by the mind, woe, are hallucinations[1241]. And all the things the mind says about God, are vain words blown away by the wind, and not awakening as it is due, the feeling of the soul[1242]. This if for that feeling stays then only under the influence of the words coming from outside, out of which is born the most dreadful wandering regarding the things cogitate with the mind (intelligible); and itself the peaking about God it is marginal, perishable, and evil. That's speaking about God doesn't stay under the influence of the illuminating Ghost, from Who it comes the unitarily and unchanged truth of the realities cogitated with the mind (intelligible) and that of the speaking about God (of the true theology). This is for that one in whose heart, generally speaking, it isn't, manifestly, the life-maker and illuminating power of the Ghost, and the always springing or inspiring work of the Ghost, if somebody wants to person is made even more working, but he works by working, in the same time, the Ghost through the human person, in the human person's work.

[1240] It is "a seeing characteristic to it", meaning that the mind needs it, not in the sense that it can do it with its own natural powers.

[1241] The Ghost guarantees the objectivity of the mind's seeing, or of the right understanding of the world's rationalities, and of the Scripture, and therefore the right theologizing or speaking about God. This is for He keeps our mind on the line of the right-judgment, by being united with the word, or with the supreme Rationality, and strengthening the seer in his real quality as person. The contemplation is done in silence. But after that, what it has been contemplates it is communicated to other by theologizing or speaking about God.

[1242] Only the word of the one whose heart the Ghost breaths within, are full of life, with the conviction that through what it says through them they provide life; that's why only them awaken into the hearer, powerfully and durably, the soul's feeling.

say so: flowing, it isn't the understanding union, but rather division[1243]; neither power nor steadfastness, but rather weakness and fickleness; neither light and seeing the truth, but rather darkness and vain contrivance of hallucinations, and in all ways reckless and wandering path.

For the mind can travel on three plans or on three ways, according to the Holy Fathers: on the nature's way, on the above-nature way, and on the contrary-to-nature way. When the mind sees something cogitated with the mind (intelligible) in a concrete thing, it sees according to the nature, but it sees with the above-nature work of the Ghost; when the mind sees a hypostasis, but not in a concrete thing, it sees an angel or a devil. But if the mind has been partially unified and the Ghost's candle illuminates more strongly, the mind sees in above-nature mode, and, of course, an undeceiving way. And when the mind, by looking at the visible things, it becomes divided and darkened and its life-maker power gets quenched, then the mind sees something contrary-to-nature and that seeing is a deceiving one. That's why, we mustn't stretch our mind towards the spiritual seeing in hypostasis, neither to believe in any sort of views, until the heart isn't influenced and moved by the power of the Holy Ghost – according to the things said before – if we want to have a sane and wise mind.

85. Some people, by working wisely, they attempt to heal the fire of their passions with the heavenly dew of the grace. About these ones it was written: "The dew from You it is healing to us" (Isa. 26: 19). To some other people, the same dew, by being united with an even greater godlike help, that dew becomes manna to them, or some kind of bread, if received as it is due and worthily, with the breaking of the humble heart and with the water of the tears and with the fire of the spiritual knowledge. And thus, it becomes their food, in the image of the heavenly food. About those ones it has been said, for many times, and with a good reason: "The man ate angelic bread" (Ps. 77: 29). But there are also some people whose nature, after it has advanced, it become and it is shown to them, in a higher mode, itself as manna. About these ones the Gospels say: "What is born out of Ghost, Ghost is" (Jn. 3: 6). The first stage is that of the wisemen who occupy themselves with the appeasement (hesychasts). The next one is that of the ones who, in addition to the godlike knowledge, they silently live in ascesis. And the third one (the highest one) it is that of the ones who have become totally simple and they have been transformed by Christ Jesus, our Lord[1244].

86. The mind, by escaping – through understanding (intelligible) grace – from pharaoh and from Egypt, and from the toils and troubles from there, namely from the bodily living that raises the passionate waves of the bitter and salty evilness, namely to a living delivered from the Egyptians understood with the mind (intelligible) and, shortly speaking, by suffering in understanding (intelligible) mode all the things which came then upon Jews in a seen mode, and by being delivered from them, it eats through a certain feeling of the soul a manna understood with the mind (intelligible) whose image was being eaten by Israel in a felt mode. And after the beginning of this living, it happens that, as those were craving for the seen meats, the mind to lust for them, at its turn, because of the memory, the sacrifices understood with the mind (intelligible) of the Egyptians, in a dangerous and not less wrong mode[1245]. Such a mind that eats manna, it has a spiritual scale (Lev. 19: 35), which is used by the mind in weighing the food and in order not to gather more than is needed for its daily food, lest, by exceeding the measure, all of it to get rotten and to be lost, and, in the same time with it, to be lost due to lack of food, also the mind that doesn't keep the measure.

[1244] About the three levels of the spiritual ascension the author spoke in the head no. 81. Here they are described a little differently. To the ones form the first level, the grace becomes them a dew healing the fire of the passions. To the ones from the second level, it becomes manna, which, as food, it helps them in their spiritual growth, through the knowledge of the godlike rationalities of the things. This level has two stages. The second stage of it, it is the contemplation of these rationalities in silence. On the third level, the grace fully unites with the man, so that the grace becomes one ghost with the man. The assimilation of the man with the grace it has become complete. It is what has been said also in the head no. 84.

[1245] After the mind has been liberated form the passions of the bitter and salty sin (committing sins brings bitterness and the spicy taste, on one hand pleasant, on the other hand unpleasant, of the salt, unlike the delicate, thin taste of the clean life), it still is followed by the memory of the sins, and it feels itself attracted to consent to them, as some sacrifices spiritually brought to the demon-gods, like those of the Egyptians. The Byzantine Holy Father and writers didn't use in order to name these experiences, the term "spiritual", as it is being used in Occident, for they were putting a great accent on the "mind" and on its natural or above-nature contents, namely on the "intelligible" ones, for, actually, from the mind starts the temptation and the sin, or to get far from them.

And the mind that eats manna, it is known by the fact that, not eating anything else, it obviously lives a more beautiful life than anything else that eats something else, of course, in an understanding (intelligible) mode. And this is, for the mind it has been somehow changed, through the habituation to that food, in the quality of the manna, to say it so. And the sign of this fact is the lack of any lust for the other foods, which it has been previously lusting for, as also the fact that everywhere it wants to eat only mana and it has become child and it has attached itself to honoring God. Besides, it is not wonder that somebody becomes what he continuously eats and bears within himself for a long time.

So, neither the mind's transformation through habituation, in the quality of the manna, it isn't something unnatural. This is for it is very natural that a continuous and unchanged food to transform the ones whom it nourishes, in itself. Thus, the mind not only that it has achieved the level of an angel, but it becomes partaker to the godlike adoption, by being righteously moved from a spiritual glory to other spiritual glory, and not only by looking at The One, but by itself becoming One and living and being imparted, in an above-world manner, with Him. For, to say so, by being imparted with untold mysteries in a godlike manner, and with love for God into the Holy Ghost, it consummately become like the seen and extolled realities, so that it sees itself too, as transformed through habituation in the manna's characteristic. This level is much higher and much more honored than that one of the one who knows himself as eating manna, but he hasn't been transformed, by habituation, in a feature of the manna. The mind experiences the first state at the beginning, when it gathers in itself, in a unity thought with the mind. And the second is the clear showing of a more manifest union, of the unveiling of some mysteries of the knowledge and of the detachment from all things and of that understanding above-simplicity.

87. The mind is simple by nature, for also That One Whose image the mind is, He likes to work simply[1246]. And by being so, it likes to work in a simple mode[1247]. This is for everybody likes what it fits him by nature. But the mind becomes also diverse, but not because of itself, but because of the senses and of the things submitted to the senses. But when the mind places its rationality between itself and the senses and the things submitted to senses, and the mind weighs in and judges skillfully, without making the senses blunter than necessary, and without covering or despising the beauties of the things easily submitted to senses, or to praise those in a low manner, and, therefore, without carelessly obeying the mind's authority to them, but by wisely giving to each one of them what is due, then the mind immediately becomes unitary and simple, being restored in its nature[1248]. By getting far from the divided realities, the mind starts again loving The simple One, and working unitarily and simple. And by loving That One, the mind searches for Him and by searching for Him, the mind flies above anything that is composed, until the mind finds The One Who actually is One and simple, and Who is God. And reached here, now the mind stays covered only with His wings, now the mind floats into the skies, being delighted as it appropriate to be delighted the mind guarded and borne by God.

88. The thick mist placed by passions over the foreseeing power of the soul, it makes the soul seeing other realities than The One Who is. But, when through the often prayer, by fulfilling the commandments and by being elevated to see God, the mind removes from itself, with the help of the grace, the thick mist which we mentioned about, and the mind limpidly diverse, namely it makes the mind to be divided amongst the images which occupy the mind, or to pass from a limited image to another. Besides, itself the need felt by the mind, for making associations between things, it shows the mind's tendency towards unity, towards simplicity, and towards removal of the limits. The mind is simple by nature, namely borderless, and capable of comprising all things, for it is the image of God Who is simple by excellence, as borderless and all-comprising through Himself. About the simplicity of the mind and about the mind's sinking into the depth of the godlike light, or into the supra-luminous darkness of God, Saint Simeon the New Theologian spoke in details (in Heads II, 14, 16, 17, 18, in The Romanian Philokalia, volume IV).

[1247] The mind likes working simply, namely to comprise everything in a borderless mode, to enter the relation with The simple One, in Who are comprised all the realities in an undifferentiated mode.

sees that is sees God[1249], not needing any interpreter for that, as somebody won't need a teacher in order to see with the senses, if he doesn't have placed on the apple of the eye something that hinders the sight. This is for, like the things submitted to the senses are connected with the senses, when the senses are healthy, likewise are the realities cogitated with the mind, they are familiar with the understandings when those ones are cleaned of the slag of the passions, and like through the perceiving with the senses it is born the knowledge of the things submitted to the senses, likewise out of the understanding look it is born the seeing of the realities cogitated with the mind. And after it, it follows the imageless, borderless, and simple contemplation of God, which, by keeping the mind under its mastery, it makes the mind free of all things submitted to the senses and known with the mind (intelligible), by locking it up in the depth of the endless, non-comprised, and borderless[1250], and the mind will be overwhelmed with awe, as one cannot express through words.

89. O, Master, the One Who are the beginning and the upholder of all seen and unseen realities; The One Who has as beginning the lack of beginning, You the Uncreated One; You have a border the limitlessness, You the Non-Comprised One; You Who are as being, above-being, You the Uncreated One; and You Who have as image, the lack of image, You the Unseen One; and You Who have as characteristic the eternity, You the Incorruptible One; You who have as countenance, the lack of countenance, You Who are without trace[1251]; as place, You are what one cannot go around, You the Uncircumscribed One; as content, You are what is non-comprisable, you the Non-Comprised One, You the Unsearched One; as knowledge and [1249] "The mind sees that it sees God". The mind is aware of the fact that it sees God. The simple sight is had by animals too. But the man is aware of seeing. God cannot be seen but in a conscious mode. God awakens and strengthens the man's conscience of being in front of Him. Like God, by not creating the man as an object, He make the man free through His freedom, likewise He makes the man conscious, through His conscience.

[1250] "The locking up of the mind" into the infinite's depth, it is an improper term, forcedly used, because of the absence of a better term. In infinity and in limitlessness, the mind is in its element. But the mind still is locked up within these, so that it cannot get out, so that the mind no longer feels the pleasure for getting out in narrowness. Somebody is locked up in the freedom from outside, so that he no longer can "get out" of it, in the narrow prison cell.

[1251] The One Who doesn't' have any countenance, he doesn't leave any traces, so that one couldn't tell where He was, or where He is.

sight, You are the Unknown and the Unsee, You the Unapproachable and Ununderstood One; as work, You are what one cannot tell, You the Untold One[1252]; as interpretation, You are what cannot be interpreted, You the Uninterpretable One; as understand You are, the non-understanding, You the Ununderstood One; and in all aspects, as affirmation, the You are the above all negation, You Who are above God[1253]. You Wholly are wonder, quietude, courage, love, sweetness, satisfaction, and safety in all aspect, and lack of worries, and joys, You Who are the only glory, kingdom, wisdom, and hypostatized power[1254]. That's why You cause the kidnapping out of all the seen realities, and the stopping from all the thought realities in an untold manner[1255]. That's why, in You, You the Untold God, there is the wonderful resting or the ones who look through the impartation with the Holy Ghost.

90. "The Godhead, wondering us, it is by this also ever more desired. And by being desired, it cleans us up", says Gregory the Theologian[1256]. "And by cleaning up on the ones who [1252] God is Word that cannot be fully expressed in words, as, by keeping the proportions, the human person too, he is word that cannot be exactly expressed, a fact that forces us to use countless words in order to describe the human person, but it always remains totally insufficient. God is the speaking Word-Person Who reveals Himself through words, but it couldn't have been exhausted in His intelligible manifestations and words, even if He had used the infinitely, as the case is, again by keeping the proportions, also with the human person.

[1253] "Above God". This term is again taken from Dionysus the Areopagite, in order to show that God is above what we reckon and call as God. Besides, all the names we use to call God, they must, on the other hand, be denied, because God is above what those names usually express, because of being those names borrowed from creatures; or, we must place before them the attributes: 'supra" or "above". This is for one doesn't deny God His kindness, His infinity, His being, because He would have missed them, but for He has them not only in a potentiated mode, but even in a mode transcendent to the move which the creatures have them in.

[1254] All the features of God are hypostatized, or they have their support in a hypostasis, in a supreme subject, in a Person. Nothing out of the thought things, they do not exist by themselves, but in a hypostasis. Only the hypostasis is real by itself. The features and the works have their reality only in hypostasis.

[1255] In the Person or in the supreme communion of Persons, there is the only resting of the thinking, for only that Person or supreme communion of Persons satisfied the thinking, and it makes the mind thinking as the infinity thought by it. The mind isn't satisfied in its thinking with anything that isn't a person, because nothing is explainable except having as support a person. But into a person the human subject finds not only the resting of the thinking, in the same time continuously nourished by that person, but also the resting of the thirst for love, always unsatisfied that person.

desire the godhead, the godhead deifies them too. And with the ones who have reached to be like this, God speaks to them as to his familiars". But not only God ones this, but also the ones cleaned up thus, they are dialogue with the godlike realities and with God, into Ghost and truth, as they would dialogue with the ones whom they are familiar with. That's why, also the theologian continues: "This is for God unites Himself with Gods and He makes Himself know to them". Can you see the wonder of the union? This is for he says: "God unites Himself with gods". Actually, if the union is done amongst the ones who feel the same, it is obvious that also their feelings and their joys are the same. That's we he also says that "he makes himself known to them". This is for the ones who has been deified and who has reached to be gods by grace, they live with the godlike realities and with God as with their familiars, and they know those realities as they contemplate God, in a similar mode, the ones who have reached in the godlike image and gods, and He talks to them and He unites Himself with them, and the speaks and he unites himself with them, according to the said things. That's why, the great Gregory adds, not purposelessly, but in order to be known, that: "As much is known God by the clean ones and by these gods, as they are known, similarly, by The One Who is God by nature, the ones who are gods by work"[1257].

And you can imagine how much, if you reckon as it is due. The ones whoa re elevated are very happy, as it is due, towards the views of the contemplations of God, with the whole power of their soul, and with spiritual skillfulness. When you see them overwhelmed by the limitlessness of God, due to the non-beginning, of the impenetrability, of the infinity, of the eternity, and of the infinity from around Him, totally amazed by the wonder above any wonder, of God. Due to this reason, their soul remains attached to the love "for God" (Ps. 62[1258]: 8) and they are engulfed by an unbearable longing for contemplating the godlike face and its extolled beauty, being they melted by the [1257] The ones who have reached gods by grace, they know God, as much God knows them. This is for God dwells with His power within them, as much as He knows them; so, God empowers them in knowing Him, as much he dwells within them, by the fact that he knows them. They know God as people, buy to the extent of their quality as participants to God, because neither God knows them otherwise except in their quality as participants to Him. But who can understand the height of his level as participant to God, namely the greatness of being him known by God and of being God known by him?

happiness of experiencing it. And so, they are cleaned up and deified under the godlike work, and they become the image of God and gods and they are united into knowledge with God.

And God, by making Himself known to the ones who are godlike out of abundance, consequently to the above-nature gift and to their deification, and to their godlike union, He wonderfully kidnaps with His beauty above-beauty, the whole understanding feeling and the whole their desire, so that he keeps them charmed around Him, as some other angels, who sing in an unretained impulse, like it is due: "God stood in the assembly of the gods and in the middle He will chose the gods" (Ps. 81: 1); and: "The God of the gods, the Lord spoke and he called the earth (namely the earthers), form the sunrises to sunsets" (Ps. 49: 1); and "The chieftains of the people gathered in the same place with the God of Abraham" (Ps. 46: 9); and the stood around God as there stay the "Seraphs around Him" (Isa. 6: 2), receiving the godlike illuminations of the above-world mysteries and by keeping themselves undetached from God Who is endlessly above all realities. If, therefore, the clean in their heart, are happy, according to the Lord's saying, for "they will see God" (Mt. 5: 8), how won't be happy the seers, who are cleaned up through the awe engulfing them out of knowing God, being they elevated, by spiritually advancing, on the level of God? Therefore, the ones wanting the happiness, they must experience the deification and thus to stay motionless as some Cherubs around God and to maintain, with the whole zeal, the contemplation, the knowing, and the doing, into Christ Jesus, our Lord.

91. I would want to see You as better as I can, and then to extoll You, You the life-Maker, the life of the ones who see You, Lord my God. But wanting, I do not know hos to worthily speak about You; I truly do not understand and I get entangled. O, how characteristic You are to the mind, You Master, Maker, and All-Wise. Only by seeing You, the mind enjoys its peace and its own resting. This is for the mind desires You by nature, and it tries to be delivered from the scattering into the external and seen things, for, being at peace from their part, to cogitate at itself and, especially to understand and to penetrate, with natural nimbleness, the heigh realities, and through its consummate lack of matter, to attach itself to the stronger realities. Through the natural rationality, the mind tends towards what is place above all realities, the mind tends by itself towards what is placed above all realities and it is above everything that is submitted to senses.

So, it is proven that, being the mind helped as it is due, by the Holy Ghost, shown in faith, and being elevated, or better said by being attracted, for being a mind, towards the thought (intelligible) realities from around You, as by some relatives, it desires much to see You, with the whole zeal of the soul. This is for the mind experiences these wonderful and happy things according to its nature. This is because, by its nature, as one that is understanding, the mind is winged and quicker that all creatures, and the though (intelligible) realities are, naturally, desired by it; the mind needs to cogitate and to understand them, like the creatures dressed up in senses need the realities submitted to the senses, in order to eat them. This is for, to me, cogitating and understanding, it is the same thing like eating is to the creatures submitted to senses. This is for, like the mind actually lives, it grows up, it rejoices, and it is delighted by understanding, likewise the creatures dressed up in senses have these by eating. And the mind experiences these by the fact that it works, and that overwhelmingly means that the mind understands; and this happens especially when, through Your spiritual kindness, the mind has reached in an untold manner, within You, the mind's desire being united with the charm of Your glory. This is for, the one desiring something, what will he taste when he will be imparted with what it attracts him, especially if that something is like You are, and if through Your oikonomia, his desire is directed towards something so great as You are? This is for You, Lord, You the all-wise, almighty, all-good Emperor, by building the mind up as a understanding being, You have made it so that to easily be gladdened of Your things, according to its nature, and to be imparted, in an untold manner and with deep awe, with Your godlike love and to love You with an insane pleasure and with a drunk enthusiasm.

So, the mind, by being built to overwhelmingly love the beauty and the kindness, and by naturally loving all of these, it has, by the godlike Providence, the desire to always understand the high realities and to lust for the realities ahead, and to rejoice, in advance, of the best of them. And with this You show Yourself to the mind, in an all-wise mode as such, and You kidnap the mind, by making the mind to be attracted by the love for seeing You and to get out from all realities with the whole feeling of the soul, in order the mind to remain only with You. This is for You not only show Yourself as diverse, You the all-sweet, neither only simple, nor only non-comprised, neither only fearful, nor only gentle, but now like this, and then like that, so that, thus, the motion and the changing of the mind, by passing from here to there, not to have any reason for deviating towards something from amongst the realities which are outside You, because of variety, images, or simplicity, for the desire after what is non-comprised, or for what can be comprised, in order to find something scary or something gentle[1259].

By and large, You, by being the One Good and Beautiful, in a comprising mode, and the above-nature beginning, which gives the tasting of all good things and beauties, the mind cannot contemplate, and live, and it cannot fully delight itself except in You. This is for You have all realities in Yourself, in Your quality as their Cause, and You are above all realities, as the Builder, of countless times countlessly above-beauty. Thus, by being One according to being, God, you make Yourself seen diversely according to the works, for their multitude, and great for their size.

So, even if You let Yourself to be comprised by some people, again You appear them as wonderful and overwhelming. This is for, by being totally non-comprised according to Your being, You aren't fully comprised either according to the work or according to the power. This is because, who has found out the measure of Your power? And Your wisdom, who has known it? And the ocean of Your kindness, who has researched it? And, finally, who has understood all the way up to the end, something of Your realities? Although, on the other hand, after all of these, You let Yourself to be comprised, in another mode.

Actually, the mind, by starting the contemplation from the understood (intelligible) realities form the seen things, later it ascends to the realities which are one and un-comprised around You, You the Savior. Then, by being attracted by the sweet and full charm of what it contains and by being driven by its love for beauty and for good, it hurries with the whole its zeal and it craves for ascending, as much as it is possible, even beyond this. But because of not being able to reach further, by cogitating, [1259] Although is simple in Himself, God shows Himself to the mind as being diverse, for this is, before reaching at Him, loving the diversity. Through the diverse realities, God leads the mind towards Him as The One. Bu in Him as One, the mind finds all the realities.

through resemblance, at what escapes it, without any doubt, as at something that is above all realities, it is comprised by a great love and it insanely gets drunk of You and fiery longings are ignited within soul, and it makes by what it can comprise out of You, a fuel that nourishes the fire of the godlike love, for what it doesn't comprise, and making out of non-understanding, victuals of an even greater love[1260].

This is for, what can be comprised around You, You the All-Wise, it doesn't charm the mind more than is ignited by what escapes the understanding and it is unreachable by the knowledge. This is for, this upholds the awe and it urges to a special desiring. I may add here, that this urges also to a searching not for what You are according to Your being, because this isn't to nobody and by any means possible to find out, but of the infinity of the power and of the existential work and usually contemplated and theologized around You, which are, as it was said, endless because of their seize and ununderstood due to their multitude. This is for in those, which are around You, though one cannot reach their end, for they are endless, but to the one who comes closer to You through cleanness and who focuses his sight on Your beauty, it is possible to him to reach more limpid and more luminous views, and to be deified to the extent of those views. That's why you ignite, with the ray of the love, the mind that perseveres next to You, as much as it is possible to the human mind, by illuminating that mind more and more and by introducing that mind to impenetrable and mysterious and above-skies views. O, all-praised Monad (Unit) and all-worshipped Trinity, and impenetrable depth of power and wisdom! How, out of this love, as from a flight departure place, as from a race starting line, You bring into the all-godlike darkness from around You, the mind that has been cleaned as it is due, by moving that mind from glory to glory, eve if that mind often stays within the above-light darkness[1261]? I do not know, as You know: do You introduce the mind into the darkness which Moses was introduced within, or it is that one the image of this one, or this one is the image of that one? If this is a darkness cogitated with the mind (intelligible)[1262] and that within that darkness are committed in a godlike, above-nature, and untold mode, in the mysterious hiding of the soul, the mysteries of the union and of the spiritual love, This is very well known by the ones who are guided by the torch of the illuminating Ghost.

[1260] The love is a wound for it makes the being to suffer due to the desire of being healed by encountering the beloved One, by fulfilling His will. And it is fire, in the same time, because also the fire wants to be quenched by that encounter. The love is a wound produced by fire, or accompanied by fire, for it is accompanied by the temperature that searches for to be appeased.

92. Who, by seeing You, Lord, Holy Trinity, he doesn't rejoice of The One Who is the Emperor and the ceaseless Master sand the Giver of all good, and the blessed source of all good? And who could rejoice with a true joy, before seeing Your all-upholding mastery? Of course, nobody and in no way! That's why, truly happy are the ones who are clean in their heart, for those ones will see You with the eye of their soul, for You are, to them, the most exquisite spiritual joy. They rejoice with much gladness and satisfaction, and they are being filled up with overwhelming love, even if they often fight against bodily narrowing and they suffer the devilish inrushing. This is for the spiritual light of Your beauty, Lord, it is endlessly endless above any closeness of the worldly sadness, to the one who is illuminated by grace. That's why You walk before them, wholly, like a sweetness; You wholly are a lust to them, a holy desire and an untold love. That's why, the ones who see you through a certain understanding, You wound them with the above-nature and unbearable arrows of Your love. And, that's why, they run "after You tracing the fragrance of Your chrisms" (Song of Songs 2: 5; 1: 4), with a strong and tireless straining, for You made Yourself seen to their souls, You the untold God, and their souls ceaselessly try to attracts You within themselves, for they are conquered and melted down wonderfully, due to their longing for You. That's why, they keep You in their minds without forgetting about You, for they depend on Your above-nature beauty. Better said, You ceaselessly and spiritually are mastering their hearts, day and night, and the sleep left their eyelids; and the sweetness… … Even while their eyelids are asleep, "their heart takes vigil" (Song of Songs 5: 2) getting gladdened, as the Prophet says: "in their beddings" (Ps. 149: 5); And they watch and they are equally mastered and they do not know what to do; they do not understand and they get out of themselves, due to the untold shininess of Your face, and due to the infinity of the glory of Your holiness, and due to Your ascensions which order by themselves, and due to Your mysterious unveilings, and due to Your hidden, untold, all-beautiful, and all-good gifts which are around You, Father… Uphold, Lord, the ones who dwell into righteousness, together with Your face (Ps. 139[1263]: 13).

Of the One amongst Saints Our Father

The Method of the Holy Prayer and Attention[1264]

Three are the kinds of the prayer and of the taking heed, which the soul is elevated through, or, which the soul is lowered through. The soul will be elevated if the soul uses them at the appropriate time, or the soul will be lowered, if the soul uses them recklessly, at an inappropriate time. And the watchfulness and the prayer are connected to one another like the soul and the body are too: if one is absent, the another won't be able to stay too. Their union is done thus: firstly, the watchfulness opposes the sin, as a guard and as a vanguard; after watchfulness, the prayer abolishes and erases all the evil thoughts, which were impeded by the guard, because the taking heed, by itself, it won't be able to do that[1265]. These ones are, therefore, the gate of the life: the taking heed and the prayer. If we clean them up through watchfulness, we will get improved; and if we defile them through the lack of guarding, we will get worse.

For we have said, therefore, that the taking heed and the prayer are of three kinds, we have to present the feature of each of them, in order the one who wants to be saved, to achieve the life and to consummate his life, and to choose amongst these [1264] We have translated it according to the original text, printed by J. Hausherr S. J., in: "Orientalia Christiana", no. 36, June-July, 1937l pp. 150-175: La méthode d'oraison hésychaste, and not according to the Greek text from The Greek Philokalia, which sometimes adds to the original text several explanations. Although, on some occasions, we used in our translation, the explanations from the neo-Greek text.

[1265] The words: taking heed, watchfulness, guard, guarding: all of them have the same meaning. So, the taking heed, of the watchfulness, it unites with the prayer, meaning that the first one precedes the second one. The watchfulness stops the evil thoughts in their attempt to lay mastery upon cogitation, but only the prayer actually abolishes the evil thoughts.

three kinds which differ from one another, the good one, lest, by keeping the worst one, because of his nescience, to be him removed from what is the best.

About the First Kind of Prayer

The features of the first kind of prayer are these ones: when somebody does this prayer, he raises his hands and his eyes, together with his mind, to the sky, and the mind composes godlike meanings and imagines heavenly beauties, angels hierarchies and tents of the righteous and, simply speaking, all the things he heard from Scripture, he gathers them, during prayer, in his mind; thus, he stirs his soul to the godlike love, by looking at the sky, and even shedding, sometimes, tears from his eyes. By doing so, he sweetly swells up in his heart and he takes pride and he reckons that, what is happening to him, it is a godlike comforting. Therefore, he prays for always living in such an occupation.

But these are signs of the deceit. This is for the good isn't good until is done well. One like this, even if he/she dedicates himself/herself to a life in the fullest quietude, it will be impossible to him not to go out of his mind. And if he/she doesn't fall in a passion like this, he/she still won't be able to reach the achieving of the virtues and the dispassion. Through this kind of taking heed, they were deceived the ones who see lights sensitively, and who smell good fragrances, and who hear voices, and many other like these. Some of them fell totally under the mastery of the devils, being they taken from place to place and from country to country. Others, because of not knowing the one who transforms himself in angel of light, and that's why they received him, they were deceived by him and they remained non-corrected to the end, by not accepting any advice from people. Some of them laid their hands on themselves, and they committed suicide, because they went insane because of the deceiver. And other threw themselves in precipices. Finally, others hung themselves. And who could tell all the sorts of the deceit?

Out of the said things, the wise one knows what the gain born out of the first taking heed is. And if somebody doesn't fall into these things, for he lives in community (because these things happen only to hermits), he still remains the whole his life without advancing out of it[1266].

About the Second Kind of Prayer

The second kind of prayer is being done like this: the mind withdraws from the realities submitted to the senses, and it guards the senses against the external realities, and it gathers up all its thoughts, in order not to look for vain things; and then, the mind, here it researches the thoughts, and there it takes heed to the things it asks for, with the mouth, from God, or here it attracts to itself the enslaved (by the devil) thoughts, or here, itself engulfed by the same passion, it starts to forcedly come back to itself. But to the ones who strives like that, it is impossible to him to gain the peace, or to receive the crown of the victory (2 Tim. 4: 8). This is because one like this, he resembles to the man fighting at night, who hears the voices of his enemies and who receives their blows, but he cannot clearly see who they are, or where they have come from, and what they are fighting him for, given the darkness from within his mind, a darkness causing him this shortcoming. The one fighting like this, he won't be able to escape the intelligible (thought with the mind) enemies; he will endure the tiredness, but he will suffer the loss. This is because of being him kidnapped by the vain glory, so that he brags himself for having the taking heed. And he is being mastered and mocked by his vain-glory, so that he will despise others as they would lack the taking heed, and he will pretend himself being the shepherd of the sheep, resembling him to the blind wanting to guide another blind (Mt. 15: 18).

[1266] This first taking heed deserves this name for it is also a focusing on God. But it is insufficient, because of imagining the heavenly realities according to the earthly realities. It sets up the imagined realities in limitative contours. Here isn't about the prayer asked for not thinking, for instance at Christ on the cross, but it is about not imagining Christ as appearing to him in the same non-pneumatized mode, as He was on the cross. The mind must always have a content. In the earthly life, if the mind doesn't think at the borderless God, it will pass to other limited thoughts, because of needing the things it represents. But in the future life, the mind won't need such things. There, the mind could be filled up only with God. But, if the mind hasn't been accustomed, here, to think at God, by as often as possible remembering the name of Jesus, there the mind will be empty of any content. And this means a helplessness of getting rid of the most awful boredom. Any instant will be like an extremely tormenting eternity. And the mind will know that it won't ever get rid of this void, in order to be able to think at something.

These are the features of the second kind of prayer. Out of them, the one who strives himself, he will be able to know this kind of prayer's shortcomings. This second kind of prayer is better than the first one, as a full moon night is better than a night without stars and without light[1267].

About the Third Kind of Prayer

WE are going to start speaking about the third kind of prayer. It is a foreign (wonderful) and difficult to be interpreted thing. And to the ones who do not know it, it is not only difficult to understand, but it is almost impossible to believe. It is a thing that cannot be encountered to many people. This is because, I reckon that those days, this good thing has run away from us, together with the obedience. This is because of the obedience being the one that, by detaching the ones who loves it, from the evil age from now, and by detaching him from passions and from worries, it makes him steadfast and tireless in following this way, especially if he has found a non-deceiving adviser too. This is for, what temporary things could attract the mind of that one who has died, through obedience, to any addiction to the world and to hid body? Or, what worry could master the one who has left in God's responsibility, and in his spiritual father's responsibility, all the worries for his soul and for his body, and he is no longer living to himself, neither is he waiting for a day for his pleasures? That's why, the temptations of the rebelled powers, which attracts the mind as some ropes in countless traps of thoughts, they are being broken, and the man who has reached free, by powerfully fighting against and by understanding the enemies' thoughts, he skillfully banished those thoughts away and the arises prayer out of a clean heart. This is the beginning of the true monastic living. The ones who do not start thus, they will be vainly crushed.

And the beginning of the third kind of prayer, it isn't done by raising the hands and by gathering the thoughts and by calling for the help from heavens. This is for, these ones are, as I said before, the features of the first prayer. But it doesn't start [1267] This one no longer remains attached to the outside images, which he elevates to the sky, but he still remains in an inward struggle with the thoughts. He doesn't gain the fight, he doesn't achieve the peace of thoughts, for he is still fighting alone, because of not having the obedience to another who to be more skillful at this fight.

either from the second kind, in which the mind takes heed at the thought from outside, while not noticing the enemies from inside. This is because of one like this being hit without him, at his turn, hitting back, and he is being wounded, but without wounding back, at his turn, and he is taken in slavery without being him able to defend himself against the ones who are enslaving him. Ceaselessly, the enemies hit him from behind, but especially from the front, and they make him loving the vain-glory and being full of self-appreciation.

Therefore, if you want to start this begetting-of-light and charmful work, you will start from here: after obeying in detail, as I described before, you must do everything with conscience. This is because, without obedience, there isn't a clean conscience[1268]. You must keep your conscience clean for God, and then for your spiritual father, and, thirdly, for people and things[1269]. You mut keep your conscience clean for God, so that ell the things you know as not serving Him, you won't do them; for your spiritual father, in order you to do everything he tells you according to the purpose he pursuits, not adding and not cutting anything to that; you must keep your conscience clean for the people, in order you to not do the things you hate, to another; and you must keep your conscience clean for the things, in order you to preserve your temperance in everything you do: eating, drinking, or dressing yourself up. Simply speaking, you must do everything as you would have been in front of God, in order you to not be rebuked by your conscience in any regard.

And now, after we've just clarified the true taking-heed, we are going to speak, if you want, about its features too. The true and undeceiving taking-heed and the true and undeceiving prayer consists of that that the mind to guard the mind in time of prayer and the mind to ceaselessly turn inside itself, and out of that depth, the mind to raise its prayers towards the Lord. Thus, the mind, by tasting "that the Lord is good" (Ps. 33[1270]: 8), it no longer wants to get out of the heart's dwelling place. This is [1268] By not obeying to a skillful adviser, you won't be able to realize the limits of your powers, and you will over-evaluate on yourself, because of not having somebody to draw your attention on your shortcomings and on your mistakes.

[1269] This conscience is some kind of responsibility felt for people and even for things and circumstances given to you, but especially for the way you are using them. And the ground of this responsibility it consists of being accountable to God.

for the mind says, at its turn, together with the Apostle: "Good is to us, to be us here" (Mt. 17: 3). And by constantly researching those places, he banishes away, with harsh strokes, the thoughts seeded by enemies. To the ones who do not know this kind of living, this seems to be harsh and difficult. And, actually, this is choking and tiresome not only to the inexperienced ones, but even to the ones who have gained a true experience, but they still haven't tasted and they still haven't made its pleasure to penetrate inside their heart[1271]. But the ones who have tasted its pleasure, and who have made its sweetness to penetrate inside the heart, they can shout out, together with Paul: "Who will separate us from Christ's love?", and all the other things (Rom. 8: 35).

This is for our Holy Fathers, by hearing the Lord saying that: "Out of heart are coming the evil thoughts, the killings, the fornications, the stealing, the liar witnesses, and those are which defiled the man" (Mt. 15: 19-20), and the urge to clean up the inside of the cup, in order the outside to become clean too (Mt. 23: 26), by leaving any other work of virtues, they directed the whole their ascesis towards this guarding of the mind, for they knew that with this one, all the other virtues are achieved without difficulty, and without this one no other virtues can persevere[1272]. This is why, some of the Holy Fathers, they called it as “mind’s appeasement”, others as “taking-heed_, others as “heart’s guarding”, other as “watchfulness” and “resisting by word” (against the enemy), and others called it as “researching the thoughts and mind’s guarding”. But all of them, by and large, they have worked the soil of their heart, and, by that, they reached to nourish themselves with the godlike manna. About it, the Ecclesiastes says: “Be glad, young man, for your youth, and walk the ways of your heart, without stain, and take out, the stirring up, from your heart” (Eccl. 11: 9); or: “If the ghost of the master rises against you, you won’t leave your place” (Eccl. 10: 4). By saying “place”, he wanted to point to your heart, as the Lord says: “Do not get scattered in your thoughts” (Lk. 12: 29); or: “Narrow is the gate and narrow if the path leading to life” (Mt. 7: 14); and: “Blessed the poor in spirit” (Mt. 5: 3), namely the ones not having in themselves any thought regarding the present age. And Apostle Peter says: “Be awake and take vigil, because of your enemy, the devil, he walks roaring like a lion, and searching for somebody to swallow up (1 Pt. 5: 8). Paul, at his turn, he writes, very limpidly, to the Ephesians, about the guarding of the mind: “Our fight is not against the blood and the body” (Ephes. 6: 12). And all the things said by our godlike Fathers, in their writings about the heart’s guarding, it is known to the ones who zealously research these.

[1272] The taking-heed is a watchfulness of the man upon himself. If this is a permanent one, all the sins will be avoided and the man does only the good things of all kind, namely he becomes accustomed to all kind of good things, and these ones are the virtues. In fact, this third kind of taking-heed and of the prayer, it consists of searching for the own self, and it consists of encountering God through it, and it consists of persisting in them. It is about encountering God through the self-awareness, and this encounter is a dialogue with God in prayer, a dialogue taking place in this endless abyss of the self, or of the heart. Only in our indefinite, consciously discovered and lived, we can encounter the abyss of the godlike Subject, or we can the consciously living Him, in an acute responsibility. Properly-said, the abyss of our subject is being actualized when encountering the godlike Subject Who calls us to responsibility, or to self-awareness. But our abyss, or the self-awareness, it can be closed up, by the fact that the mind narrows itself according to the shape of the limited things. This is for then it will disappear too, our awareness of the presence of the endless God. Our mind tends to extend itself (εντείνει) towards the endless, in order to get rest in it. But the mind gets out of infinite in that heart that if filled up with the awareness of God's presence. The author of the "Method" asks us not to remain at working the virtues, without seeing the godlike infinite, or without being aware of God's presence, but the mind must see this infinite and then the virtues will come by themselves. Then the virtues will not longer be achieved with difficulty, and they no longer will be easily erased, but they will easily be born and they will become steadfast, for they are irradiations of this conscience about encountering God's infinite, one that has become

Before everything, you must gain three things, and then to start advancing towards the searched for target; and these three things are: the lack of worries concerning the unjustified and the justified things, namely to be dead to all things; the clean conscience, by guarding yourself non-condemned by your own consciences and the dispassion, by not letting yourself to be attracted to anything belonging to this age, or to the body.

Then, by sitting down in a corner of quiet monastic cell, take heed to do what I am telling you: close the door and raise your mind from everything that is vain or temporary. Then, turn the lower side of your cheek, or your chin, towards your chest, in order you to take heed, with your mind and with your sensitive eyes, to yourself. And, hold, a little, your breath too, in order to keep your mind too, and in order to find the place where your heart is, and there entirely to be your mind too[1273]. In the beginning, you will find a darkness and a thickness impossible to cross through. But by persevering, and by doing this day and night, you will find, o, wonder, an endless joy. This is for immediately the mind finds the place of the heart, the mind sees what it doesn't believe. It sees the sky from the middle of the heart and it sees itself as entirely luminous and full of discernment power. From here onwards, immediately a thought occurs, even before getting composed and taking image, the prayer banishes that thought away by calling upon Jesus Christ and so he makes that thought to disappear[1274]. From now on, the mind, in its spite on devils, it rises against them its natural anger, and it hits them, and so it banishes away on those enemies known with the mind (intelligible). You will learn all the other things, with the help of God, by guarding you mind and by keeping Jesus within your heart. This is for, he says, sit down in your monastic cell and this one will teach you everything.

Question: Why the first and the second kinds of taking-heed cannot consummate the monks?

Answer: That is because of not being used, by us, according to their succession. Saint John Climacus likens these ones to a ladder, saying: "Some people diminish their passions;

[1273] This is the neo-Greek version of this paragraph. The paragraph from the paleo-Greek text, which we do not believe that it was a normative one, but it might had been the malevolent invention of an adversary of the hesychasm (see the Introduction to Nicephorus from Loneliness, in The Romanian Philokalia, volume VIII) sound like this: "And then lean your chin on your chest and move your sensitive eye together with your mind towards the middle of your belly, namely ay your bellybutton. Compress too, the inhaling of the air through your nostrils, in order you to not breathe easily, and search, with your thought, inside your entrails, for the place of your heart, where all the soul's power are dwelling". This recommendation couldn't be followed because of the contradiction from withing it: because how could someone search for the place of his heart while focusing his mind upon his bellybutton? Only the neo-Greek version is logical. Maybe, this last one had at its basis a paleo-Greek text which hasn't been preserved in many copies, because of being compromised by the detail with the focusing upon the bellybutton. Anyway, the neo-Greek text is, entirely, some kind of explanatory text for the paleo-Greek text. This is explained by the ones who practiced this "Method". That's why we are totally right by considering that thus was understood and practiced the "Method" also regarding the place on which the mind and the look of the ones who practices this prayer must focus on.

[1274] It is about a "sky" known with the mind (intelligible), or spiritual. It is the heart's openness to the godlike infinity. In this openness in the godlike infinity, or of being aware of God's presence, everything becomes luminous to the mind. All the thoughts referring to the temporary things, they lose their importance and power of attraction. Christ, ceaselessly called upon, He is sovereign in this "sky".

others sing and spend most of their time into this; others, again, they persevere in the mind's prayer; finally, other focus their sight into deep. According to the state he is in, he says, one must do his work"[1275]. So, the ones who want to climb on that ladder, they do not step from up downwards, but from down upwards, and they step, firstly, on the first step, then on the next step, and so on, on all steps. Thus, one can be elevated from on earth and elevated to heavens. If we want, therefore, to reach at the consummate man of the fulness of Christ, let's start climbing the ladder from the age of the childhood's nourishment, in order us, by gradually stepping upwards, to reach the measures of the fully grownup man and of the wise old people. So, the first age of the monastic life it consists of diminishing the passions. And this is the thing of the beginners[1276].

The second step and changing of age, that one making somebody to become, out of a young boy, a spiritual young man, it is the perseverance in singing. This is for, after appeasing and diminishing the passions, the singing becomes sweet to the tongue and it is noticed by God, given that isn't possible to sing to God in a foreign land (Ps. 136[1277]: 4), namely in a passionate heart.

The third step and change of the age, that makes out of a young man a spiritually grownup man, it is the perseverance in prayer. This belongs to the advanced ones. And the prayer differs from singing like the fully grownup man differs from the young man, or from the young boy, as different steps on the ladder we are climbing on.

Therefore, being these organized like that and decided by the Ghost, it is impossible to the child to make himself a man and to ascend to the state of the master who has white hair, otherwise than starting with the first step, as I said, so that, by stepping well through the four steps, to be him elevated to consummation.

And the beginning of advancing towards light, of the one who wants to be spiritually reborn, it is the diminution of the passions, or the guarding of the mind. This is for, otherwise, it is impossible the passions to be diminished. Secondly, there comes the perseverance into prayer. This is for, by being the passions appeased and diminished through the heart's resistance against them, the desire for reconcilement with God, it ignites the mind. Thus, the strengthened mind banishes away, through the hits of the watchfulness, the thoughts which blow on the heart's surface. And again, it dedicates itself to the taking-heed and to the second prayer. During this time, it is unchained the strengthening of the ghosts and the blows of the passions disturb the heat's bottomless depth (abyss). But, by calling upon Lord Jesus Christ, the passions are burnt and melted down as the wax. But the passions still do not get appeased, but by being taken out from there, they ignite, through senses, the surface of the mind. But the mind quickly cast them out from here and the mind will immediately feel the peace[1278]. But in order to totally escape from, and in order to no longer having to fight, this is impossible. This is because this thing is characteristic only to the one who has reached the state of the consummate man, who has totally withdrawn himself from the world, and who ceaselessly perseveres in guarding his mind. From these ones, the one who takes heed, he is gradually being elevated to the wisdom of the white hair, or to the stage of the seeing, a thing that is characteristic to the consummate ones.

[1275] G. P. 88, 1105 C.

So, the one who accomplished these things at the appropriate time, and in good order, after banishing his passions from within his heart, he will be able to perseveres in singing too, and to defend himself against the thoughts arisen through senses, and against the disturbance from on the surface of the mind; also, he will be able to look, both with the bodily eye and with the mind's eye – for one needs this one too – at the sky, and to make a clean prayer into the whole truth[1279]. But this [1278] The mind warmed up by the longing for God, it no longer pays attention to the thoughts which are foreign of Him. The heart no longer gets narrowed through the pleasure for the limited things which these thoughts refer to, but it is being warmed up by the love for the infinite God, and the heart fiery sings to Him. But the heart still hasn't reached to see the infinite God, namely at the serenity produced by being aware of His presence. The passions limit the seeing into God's limitless depth. The warmth of the singing, at its turn, it can unveil the passions which cover the heart's abyss, which the godlike limitlessness can be seen in. The passions still attempt to disturb the mind through senses. The passions are no longer able to disturb the mind's depth, but only its surface, and only for a short while. But the calling upon the name of Jesus, it widens the seeing. This is for, through the humanity of Christ, one can look at the infinity of Christ's godhead.

[1279] After reaching, little by little, to dispassion, and by this reaching the habituation of the looking into the heart's bottomless depth, he will also be able to occupy himself with the singing too, and he also can look at the things' meanings, for he will no longer be tempted to happens only from time to time and only a little, because of the enemies setting up traps in the sky.

This is for we are asked only for this: to be our heart cleaned up through watchfulness. This is for "if the root if holy, according to the Apostle, it is proven that there will be the branches too" (Rom. 11: 16), and the fruits. But the one who raises his eye and his mind to the sky, and who wants to imagine some things thought with the mind (intelligible) outside the way I've told you about, he will rather mirror idols than truth. This is because, as long as the heart is unclean, the second and the first taking-heed cannot advance. This is because, as when building up a house, we do not place the roof firstly, and then the foundation, so you must think that it is with these too. This is for, firstly, we guard our heart and we diminish the passions from within it, and by this we lay down the spiritual foundation of the house. And then we reject the blowing of the evil ghosts, stirred up by the outside senses, through the second taking-heed, and thus, by getting rid of war, we elevate the walls upon the foundation of the spiritual house. Then, by consummately focusing us upon God, or through our withdrawal (into ourselves), we stretch the roof of the house and so we consummate the spiritual house in Christ Jesus our Lord. Whom it is due the glory forever and ever. Amen.

remain with them, as they would have been the sole reality, namely to the sin. But starting with them, before achieving the dispassion, it means remaining with a limited mind, and doing the first and the second types of prayer, and being tempted by sins, namely to remain attached to the things and forgetting about God.

On the Life of Our Pious Father

Maximos the Cavsocalivite[1280]

Saint Gregory od Sinai, by encountering Saint Maximos, and having a dialogue with him, amongst other things, he told him also this: "I pray you, all-honorable father, to tell me: do you practice the mind's prayer?". And that one smiled a little, and he said: "I do not want to keep it hidden from you, honorable father, the wonder of the Birth Giver of God, a wonder She did it to me. I, from my youth, I've been having strong faith in my Master – the Birth Giver of God, and I've been praying Her, with tears, in order She to give me the gift of the mind's prayer. On one day, while going at Her church, as I usually did, I was praying Her again, with immeasurable warmth of my heart. And there, as I was kissing - with longing - Her holy icon, I suddenly felt within my chest and within my heart a warmth and a flame coming from the holy icon, a flame that wasn't burning me, but it was cooling me down, and it was bringing into my soul a great pricking of the heart. Since then, father, my mind has started saying the prayer within itself, and my mind started getting sweetened with remembering the names of my Jesus and of the Birth Giver of God, and to always be remembering Them. And, since then, the prayer has never been absent within my heart. Forgive me!".

And Saint Gregory told him: "Tell me, you holy man, have you ever experienced, while saying the prayer "Lord Jesus Christ" etc., some godlike transformation, or some ecstasy, or some getting out of yourself, or some fruit of the Holy Ghost?". And Saint Maximos answered him: "O, father, in order to have such experiences I went in a desert place, and I always desired the quietude, in order to enjoy, as much as possible, the fruit of the prayer, which is an overwhelming love for God and a kidnapping of the mind to the Lord". And Saint Gregory said: "I pray you, father, tell me: do you have these things which you are telling me about?". Saint Maximos smiled again and told him: "Give me to eat and do not research my deceit". Then, Saint Gregory said: "O, only if I had too, this deceit of yours, you holy! But I pray you to tell me: during the time which you mind is kidnapped in, to God, what do you see with the eyes of the understanding?[1281]. And, I wonder, could the mind raise, together with the heart, also its prayer?" And Saint Maximos answered him: "It cannot, because, when the Holy Ghost comes within man, through the mediation of the prayer, the prayer stops. This is for, then, the mind is wholly taken under mastery by the grace of the Holy Ghost, and it no longer is able to set its powers in work, but the mind remains in non-working and it obeys only the Holy Ghost, and where the Holy Ghost wants, there He takes the mind, either into the immaterial sky of the godlike light[1282], or to other impossible to tell view, or, often, to a godlike speaking. Shortly speaking, as the Comforter, or the Holy Ghost wants, so he comforts His servants. As each one of them needs, likewise He gives them His grace too.

What I am saying, somebody can limpidly see it at prophets and apostles, who were found worthy of seeing so many views, despite the people were laughing at them because of reckoning them as insane and drunk (Acts 2: 13); Prophet Isaiah saw the Lord in a heigh throne and raised and having seraphs around Him (Isa. 6: 2). The proto-martyr Stephen "saw the skies open and on Jesus Christ on the right hand of the Father", and so on (Acts 7: 56).

Likewise, not too, the servants of Christ are found worthy of seeing diverse views, which some people do not believe to, neither they accept those views, by any means, as being true, but they reckon those views as deceits and they reckon the ones seeing those views as deluded. I wonder and I cannot understand, how these people have become so petrified and blind in their soul, so that they no longer believe what the non-liar God has promised, through Prophet Joel, that He will give to the ones who believe in Him, where the prophet said: "I will pour out of My cup over each believer and over my servants and over [1281] It is about the intertwining characteristic to the Eastern thinking, between the spiritual contact with the reality of God and between understanding it, and being illuminated by a meaning of it.

my handmaids" (Joel 3: 1-2)[1283]. It is here about the grace given by our Lord and which He gives the grace even now and He will give the grace to the end of the world, according to His promise, to all His faithful servants. And when this grace of the Ghost comes upon each believer, it won't show him the usual things, neither those belonging to the world known with the senses, but the grace shows the believer those things which the believer has never seen, neither imagined. Then, the mind of that human being learns from the Holy Ghost heigh and hidden mysteries, which, according to the godlike Paul, the human eye cannot see, neither the human mind can contrive by itself (1 Cor. 2: 9). And, in order you to understand how the human mind sees these, think at what I wan to tell you.

The wax, when placed far from fire, it is hard and strong; and when you throw it in fire, it melts down and, in the middle of the flame, it ignites and it burns and it becomes wholly a luminous light and so it entirely ends in fire and it is impossible not to melt in fire and not to flow like water. Likewise, the human being's mind: when alone, without encountering God, it understands the things which are under its power. But when the mind gets close to the godlike fire, and to the Holy Ghost, then the mind is totally mastered by the godlike light and the mind it becomes totally a light and in the flame of the All-Holy Ghost the mind ignites and it melts due to His understanding and there is no way that in the fire of the godhead, the mind to understand its things and the things it wants"[1284].

Then, Saint Gregory told him: "But there are resembling things too, which are delusions". And the Great Maximos answered him: "Others are the signs of the deceit, and others those of the grace. Thus, the evil ghost of the deceit, when coming close to the human being, it bewilders the mind and it makes it savage; it makes the heart harsh and it darkens it; it causes fear, dread, and pride; it makes the eyes harsher, it disturbs the brain, it shudders the whole body; it stirs up, through hallucination, in front of the eyes, a light that isn't shiny and it isn't clean, but it is red; it gets the mind out of control and it makes it devilish; and it moves her/him to utter indecent and blasphemous words with her/his mouth. And the one who sees this ghost of the deceit, for several times, he gets angry and full of fury. Such a person doesn't know, at all, the humbleness, neither the crying and the true tear, but she/he always praises herself/himself with her/his good things' and she/he is full of vain glory and unrestrained and not fearing God and always mastered by passions. And, in the end, she/he totally gets out of her/his mind, and she/he comes to total perdition. May the Lord deliver us, with your prayers, from this deceit.

[1284] Even in the relation of love with another, our understanding is too, a melting down and forgetfulness about ourselves. We understand us and the another as a full of warmth unit.

And the signs of the grace are these ones: when the All-Holy Ghost comes to a human being, He gather her/his mind and He makes her/him humble, it remembers her/him about death, about her/his sins, about the future judgment and about the eternal damnation; He makes her/his soul easy to break, so that she/he weeps and mourns; He makes her/his eyes peaceful and full of tears. And the more the Ghost comes closer to the soul, the more the Ghost comforts the soul more strongly, through the holy sufferings of our Lord Jesus Christ and through His limitless love for people, and the Ghost occasions the mind height and true views, namely: 1) regarding the non-comprised power of God Who has brought all realities from inexistence to existence, with a sole word; 2) regarding the limitless power, which governs and takes care of all realities, by itself; 3) regarding the non-comprisable Holy Trinity and the uncrossable torrent of the godlike being, and all the other aspects. Then, the human being's mind it seems kidnapped by that light and illuminated by the light of the godlike knowledge. Her/his heart becomes serene and gentle and it shows the fruits of the Holy Ghost: the joy, the peace, the long-suffering, the kindness, the compassion, the love, the humbleness, and all the others. Her/his soul receives an impossible to tell joy".

By hearing these things, Saint Gregory of Sinai got amazed and he was wondering about the things the godlike Maximos was telling him, and he no longer called him as man, but as earthly angel.

On the Life of Saint Gregory, Archbishop of Thessaloniki, The Wonder Doer

For, all the Christians must ceaselessly pray

Do not somebody reckon, my Christian brothers, that only the sanctified ones and the monks owe to ceaselessly and always pray, and not the laymen too. No, no. All the Christians generally owe to be always in prayer. This is for, the all-holy Philotheos, the Patriarch of Constantinople, he wrote in the "Life" of Saint Gregory of Thessaloniki, that he had a beloved brother, called Job, and very simple and strong virtuous man, whom the Saint spoke to, one time, and he told him about prayer and about the duty of each ordinary Christian to always strive to pray, and to ceaselessly pray. This is for, Saint Apostle Paul commanded all ordinary Christians to: "Ceaselessly pray" (1 Thess. 5: 17). Likewise says Prophet David too, despite he was king and had all the businesses of his kingdom to manage: "I have been seeing God in front of me, always" (Ps. 15[1285]: 8), namely I see Him in an understanding (intelligible) manner, through prayer, as He is always in front of me. And Gregory, the speaker about God, he teaches all Christians, by telling them that we must call through prayer, the name of God, even more often than we breathe.

And by saying the Saint, to his friend, these things, and many other things, he also told him that we must obey, at our turn, the advices of the Saints; and that we must not only always to pray, but we must also teach all the others, monks and laymen, wise and simple people, men, women, and children, and to urge them to ceaselessly pray.

[1285] In KJB we have: Psalm 16: 8: "I have set the Lord always before me: because he is at my right hand, I shall not be moved."; in ROB we have: "I have been seeing, before, the Lord always before me, for He is on my right hand in order I to not wobble."

By hearing these things, to that old man, called Job, it seemed a new thing and he started resisting and saying that, in order somebody to be always praying, he must be amongst hermits and monks, who are outside the world and are outside the worries from the world, and not the laymen who have so many worries and duties. The Saint continued to give him other impossible to reject witnesses and proofs, but the old Job didn't yield. The godlike Gregory, trying to avoid the much-speaking and the quarrel, he stopped speaking and left for his monastic cell, as the old Job did too. But, later, when Job was alone praying in his own monastic cell, the angel of the Lord appeared in front of Him, sent by God Who wants all the people to be saved; and after the angels rebuked him for arguing with Saint Gregory and for resisting him in proven facts which the salvation of the Christians depend on, the angel commanded him, on behalf of God, to take great heed in the future and to guard himself against saying something contrary to such a useful thing to the soul, because, otherwise, he will resist the will of God; neither to want to receive in his mind some opposite thought, nor to cogitate otherwise than the godlike Gregory told him. Then, that all-simple old man immediately went to Saint Gregory and fell at his feet and, after asking him to forgive him for his resistance, he unveiled him all the things told him by the Lord's angel.

Can you see, my brothers, what all the ordinary Christians owe like, from the smallest to the greatest, to always utter the prayer of the mind: "Lord Jesus Christ, have mercy on me" and to get themselves accustomed to always tell it with their mind and with their heart? Think at how much we please God by doing this, and how much we benefit out of this, if God sent, out of His great love for people, even an angel from heavens in order the angle to unveil us this, so that, we no longer have to doubt about it.

But what the laymen say? "We are engulfed with so many things to do and with so many worries of the world, so that it is impossible to us to ceaselessly pray".

I answer them that God hasn't' commanded us any impossible thing, but God has only commanded us things which we can do. That's why, this too, it is possible to be fulfilled by any one: to painstakingly search for the salvation of his soul. Because, if that had been impossible, it would have been impossible to all ordinary laymen, and there wouldn't have been so many accomplishing it while living within the world. Amongst these ones, Constantine, the father of Saint Gregory can be an example. That one, despite being in the imperial palace, and he was appointed as the parent and the teacher of Emperor Andronicus, and he managed, on a daily basis, the empire's businesses, in addition to those of his household – for he was a very rich man and he had a great wealth and he and many servants and he was married to a wife and he had several children – though he was so unseparated from God and so surrendered to the ceaseless prayer of the mind, so that he forgot, on many occasions, the things he discussed with the emperor and with the other councilors form the palace, regarding the empire's businesses, and he was asking again about the discussed subjects. That's why, the other councilors, who didn't know the reason why he was doing that, they got upset and they rebuked him for he was forgetting so quickly, and because got the emperor upset, by asking him twice on the same subject. But the emperor, who knew the motif, he defended him and said: "Constantine has his thoughts and those thought impede him to take heed at our words, which are temporary and vain. The mind of the blessed Constantine is nailed with the true and heavenly things and, that's why, he forgets about the earthly things, for the whole his attention is focused on prayer and bon God".

That's why Constantine was a highly regarded person (as the blessed Patriarch Philotheos says) and he was very loved by the emperor and by all the councilors of the empire, as he was loved by God too, and he was found worthy of working wonders. This is for, on one occasion, he boarded a ship (as All-Holy Philotheos says in the "Life" of Saint Gregory, Constantine's son), in order to go with the whole his family to Galata, with the intention to meets a hermit who was living in ascesis there, for Constantine wanted to take prayer and blessing from that hermit, while they were on their way, Constantine asked his servants whether they took something to eat, to bring it to that Abba. But his servants told Constantine that they forgot about that, because of the hurry, and they didn't take anything, with them. The blessed Constantine got a little sad, but he didn't tell anything, and, by going ahead in a canoe, he stuck his hand in the sea and with the silent prayer of his mind he prayed to God, the Master of the sea, to give him something to eat. And, after a little while (o, wonderful deeds which You Emperor Christ glorify with, Your servants!) he pulled his hand out of the sea holding a very big fish, which he threw it into the ship in front of his servants, saying: "Behold, the Lord took care of us and of Abba, His servant, and He sent him something to eat". Can you see, by brothers, what kind of glory Jesus Christ glories His servants with, who are always with Him and who always call upon His holy and all-sweet name?

But that righteous and holy man called Eudochius, wasn't him too, in palace, and busy with the imperial businesses? Wasn't him meeting the emperor and the palace's councilors, in so many worries and occupations? Despite all these, he always had the mind's prayer non-separated from his mind (as Simeon the Metaphrastes tells us, in his "Life"). That's why, the threefold blessed, despite he was living within the world and in the worldly realities, he was truly living an angelic and above-world life, and he was found worthy of taking from the reward-Giver God, also a godlike end.

And other countless people were in the world and they were entirely dedicated to the savior prayer of the mind, as the history tells us. Therefore, my Christian brothers, I pray you too, together with the godlike Chrysostom, for the salvation of your soul, do not disregard this duty of praying. Follow the example of the ones who I told you about, as much as you can. And if this thing seems to you as being difficult in the beginning, be sure and convinced, as from the part of All-Upholder God, for, itself the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, ceaselessly called by us, it will ease all our difficulties and, in time, when we will have accustomed ourselves to it and we will have been sweetened with it, we will know by experience that this thing isn't impossible, neither it is difficult, but it is possible and easy.

That's why Saint Paul too, who knew better than we do, the great benefit the prayer brings it to us, he urged us to ceaselessly pray (1 Thess. 5: 17). He never wanted to advice a difficult to accomplish or an impossible thing, which we couldn't have fulfilled, because if that had been the case, we would have shown us as disobedient and transgressors of the commandment, and therefore worthy of damnation. But the Apostle's purpose, when saying to us to ceaselessly pray, it was us to pray with our mind, and this is possible to always be done.

This is for, even if we work with our hands, or when we take a walk, or when we sit down, or when we eat or drink, we will always be able to do the well-pleasant to God and true prayer of the mind. We can work with the body while we are praying with the soul. The outside man can accomplish any job with the body, while the inside man is dedicated to serve God and never to be absent from the spiritual work of praying with the mind. This is for so commands us God-Man Jesus in the Holy Gospel, by saying: "And you, when praying, enter your room and close the door, and hiddenly pray to your Father" (Mt. 6: 4). The soul's chamber is the body. The doors of our being are the five senses. The soul will enter his room, when the mind doesn't walk from here to there in the world's things, but it perseveres inside our heart. And we close our senses and they remain safe, when we do not let them to attach to the things submitted to them and shown. Thus, the mind remains free of any worldly addiction and it unites itself, through the hidden prayer of the mind, with God our Father. And then he says: "Your father who sees into hidden, he will give you visibly" (Mt. 6: 6).

God, the Knower of the hidden realities, He sees the prayer of your mind and He rewards it with shown and great gifts. This is for, this is the true and consummate prayer that fills the soul up with the godlike grace and with the spiritual gifts (charismas). This is for, the longer you close the Chrism in the vessel, the more that vessel spreads more fragrance. Likewise, it is the prayer: the more you imprint the prayer into your heart, the more the prayer fills up your heart with the godlike grace. Blessed and lucky are the ones who get accustomed to this heavenly thing, for with it they are able to defeat any temptation coming from the devils, as David defeated the beastly Goliath (1 Kings[1286] 17: 51). With it they quench the disordered lusts of the body, like the three young people too, they quenched the heat of the oven (Dan. 7: 25-26). With this work of the mind's prayer, they tame the passions, as Daniel tamed the wild lions (Dan. 6: 18 and the followings). With it, the dew of the Holy Ghost descends into their heart, like Elijah descended the rain over Carmel (3[1287] Kings 18: 45).

This prayer of the mind it is that ascending up to the throne of God, and it is preserves in golden cups, in order to be brought as burnt incense sacrifice to the Lord, like John the Speaker-about-God says in Apocalypse: "And twenty-four elders fall down before the Lamb, each one having next to him cups with gold and incense, which are the prayers of the Saints" (Apoc. 5: 7). This prayer of the mind, it is a light always illuminating the man's soul, and it ignites the man's heart with the flame of the love for God. It is a ring keeping God and man united. O, unparalleled grace of the mind's prayer! The mind's prayer makes the man to always be inn dialogue with God. O, truly wonderful and special work! - namely to be bodily together with the people, while being, in an intelligible mode, with God. The angels do not have material voice, but they ceaselessly bring, with their mind, to God, ceaseless doxology. This is their work. The whole their being is dedicated to this work.

Therefore, you too, brother, when you enter your chamber and close the door, or when your mind doesn't jump from here to there, but your mind enters your heart, and your senses are strengthened and not nailed on the things of the present world, and in addition to this you always pray with your mind, you will become alike the saints; and your Father Who sees your secret prayer that you bring in the hidden of your heart, He will visibly reward you with great gifts (charismas). And what greater and richer good thing, than this one, could you find, that of being you, as I said, in ceaseless dialogue with God? This is because, without God, there never can be a happy human being, either here or in the future life.

Therefore, brother, whosoever you would be, when you take this book in your hands and, by reading it, you will experience its benefit to your soul, I warmly pray you, remember to do a prayer towards God, with a "Lord, have mercy!", for the sinful souls of the one who strived to write this book and of the one who spent his money in order to print it. This is because these ones strongly need your prayer, for their souls, and you need it for your soul. Be it, be it![1288]

[1288] One can see that the whole this word was written by Nicodemus the Hagiorite, who, together with Metropolitan Makarios of Corinth, they composed the collection of the Philokalia. He asks for the reader's prayer, for himself and for John Mavrocordat, one of the members of the ruler family of the Romanian Countries (before the Union from the year 1918, there were three Romanian Countries, called as: The Romanian Country, Transylvania, and Moldavia (E. l. t.'s n.)), who spent the necessary monetary resources for printing the first edition of the Philokalia (Venice, 1782). He used, for the first part, the "Life" of Saint Gregory Palamas, wrote by Patriarch Philotheos of Constantinople, the disciple of Saint Gregory Palamas, but he presents also the excerpts form it, by using his own words.

From the History of the Hesychasm In The Romanian Orthodoxy

The Hesychasts and the Prayer of Jesus in the Tradition of the Romanian Orthodoxy

Publishing in German translation the "One Hundred Heads" of Kallistos and Ignatius, A. M. Hartmann speaks about the role the hesychasts from the Greek and Russian Churches had[1289]. He doesn't mention anything about the existence of the hesychasm and of the Philokalist and hesychastic spirituality in the life of the Romanian Orthodoxy, of course, because of not knowing the Romanian language.

According to Nilus Sorschi (1433-1508), Ammann must pass directly to the hesychasm renewed in Russia, at the end of the XIX Century, by Paisius Velichkovsky. For that period, he only generally says that the Philokalist writings, which were circulating as manuscripts at Athos, "weren't stranger from the Greek-Slav East".

But, by speaking about the rebirth of the Philokalist spirituality in Russia, at the end of the XVIII Century, he notices: "There is no wonder that the Philokalia, immediately after it was printed in Venice (in the year 1792), it took the road of its spreading starting from Moldavia, the Principality of Mavrocordat Family. There was living in the Neamț (Njamec-Kloster) Monastery, not far from Tiraspol, a monk called Paisius Velichkovsky, who spent many years at Mount Athos (Greece). This Russian, being a knower of the Greek language, he translated, out of the 36 books of the Greek Philokalia, 24 in the churchly Slavonic, and he published his translations under the title of "Dobrotoliubie", in the year 1794, in four part and two volumes, in Sankt Petersburg". The great echo the published work had, it determined that in the year 1857 to be published a [1289] Quoted work, p. 8. The lack of knowledge about our history often determines the Occidentals to ask the Romanians who travel in West, childish questions. After the Romanian say that they are Orthodox, the Occidental conclude: "If you are Orthodox, it means you are Slavs, because you aren't Greeks, and we only know about the Greek and the Russian Orthodoxy (l'Orthodoxie gréco-russe)". And when the Orthodox Romanian specifies: "We aren't Slavs, but Latin-Orthodox", the Occidental asks: "But what the Romanian Orthodoxy produced, by and large? There isn't known any contribution of the Romanian Orthodoxy to the Orthodox spirituality".

new edition, in six volumes. Starting with the year 1867 the former Bishop of Tambov and Vladimir, who became a hermit bearing the name Theophanous the Recluse, he started publishing the Philokalia in a Russian translation in five volumes. This work immensely influenced the Russian spirituality and theology[1290].

I would want to explain here, what there is no wonder that Philokalia or the Philokalist writings started spreading just from Moldavia.

This can be explained by the fact that in the Romanian Countries, the hesychasm and the Philokalist spirituality by and large, they were introduced since the XIV Century, and they remained an uninterrupted reality during the whole next Century, like in Athos too, due to a certain self-standing existence which these Romanian Countries could preserve, and due to their connections with Mount Athos. In the XVIII Century, Monk Paisius, arrived from Poltava, he found thus, in Moldavia, a monasticism which, through numerous of its representatives, it was practicing, in the uninterrupted continuation of this tradition, a hesychastic life, animated by the Prayer to Jesus.

Just because of that self-standing existence of the Romanian Countries, and to the development of the monastic life, which these countries have been able to maintain, and to the copying of manuscripts related to the Orthodox spirituality, and, later, due to publishing books with such content, some of which could have been sent to other Orthodox peoples, it has been possible to ceaselessly maintain the spirituality of the Holy Fathers, in this monasticism. This, at its turn, it determined that in the Romanian theological creation too, to be maintained the old patristic spirit, through personalities like: Neagoe Basarab, Barlaam, Dositheos, Dimtrie Cantemir, while the Greek and the Russian theologies oscillated between the Catholic and the Protestant influences (for instance, at Greeks, between the Catholicizing tendency of Melethius of Sirig, and that of Patriarch Dositheos of Jerusalem and that Protestant of Cyril Lucas, and of Metrophanes of Cretopolis, or that of John Cariofil; and, at Russians, there was the oscillation between the Catholicizing tendency of Kiev School, until Peter the Great, and the Protestant tendency, one starting with Peter the Great, through Theophanous Procopovici, until through Dimitrie Cantemir, it started being discovered the Orthodox line in spirituality, then strengthened by Basil from Apple's Meadow[1291], and Paisius Velicicovchi, who lived a hesychastic life in Moldavia, where they came, very probably, after finding out about the Moldavian monasticism, through Dimitrie Cantemir).

Metropolitan Tit Simedrea unveiled the fact that around Gregory of Sinai, amongst the monks belonging to other Orthodox nations, there were Romanian monks too[1292]. The Romanian historian Răzvan Teodorescu says: "The existence of a Romanian monasticism in the period previous to the second half of the XIV Century, with some echoes of the monastic life from the Balkan Peninsula, out of importance centers as that one from Chalcidica (Athos), or closer ones as those from Paroria and Kelifarevo… it can be suspected, and with a good reason, some modest wooden hermitages, or even built in stone, which memory hasn't been preserved, being able to gather together, on the Danube's bank of under a mountain, in the extended forested regions, the monks who, far from cities…, they would have organized their existence according to the canons of the Orthodox monastic order… before the apparition of the first documentary attested monasteries, in Moldavia and Romanian Country"[1293].

The existence of the monks in the Romanian Country, together with a parish clergy, before the enthronization of the first steadfast metropolitan at Curtea de Argeş, it is attested also by the synodal act from Constantinople[1294]. Carmen Laura Dumitrescu attributed the mural painting of a cave church from near Câmpulung, at the end of the XIII Century[1295].

It seems that the caves carved in rock around the mentioned church, beyond the river nearby, attest a Sinai-like hesychastic life previous to that one from the XIV Century, for those caves imitate the caves from beyond the river, founded in the year 475, by Saint Sava, at East of Bethlehem (a monastery bearing Saint Sava's name) and where were living since the V

Pavel Chihaia places, in time, the beginning of these small hesychastic settlements, in connection with the influence of Saint Theodosius School's. Saint Theodosius was a Bulgarian disciple of Gregory of Sinai; he lived in Kelifarevo (12 kilometers East from Trnovo, in the surrounding mountains)[1296].

Emil Turdeanu, though more criticist regarding the presence of some Romanians around Saint Gregory of Sinai in Paroria, he still admits as very probable the presence of several Romanian in Kelifarevo, around Saint Theodosius, as fully proven by the penetration of the spirituality of this center at North of Danube: "The cultural tradition of the Paroria will penetrate at North of Danube a few years later (after the death of Gregory of Sinai, that happened in the year 1346) through the mediation of another hesychast center, the monastery from Kelifarevo, founded by Theodosius, the disciple of Gregory of Sinai, near to Trnovo. We are going to see later, what his role, in forming the Slav literature in the Romanian Countries, it was. But we must say just from here, that, due to the Bulgarian disciples from Paroria, with Theodosius in their front, especially due to the source of hesychastic spirituality ignited at Kelifarevo, the work of Gregory of Sinai was translated in Bulgarian and then spread at North of Danube"[1297].

And, in another place, Emil Turdeanu mentions an affirmation from the "Life" of Saint Theodosius, written by Patriarch Kallistos of Constantinople: "Immediately after he has settled down in the mountainous place, vulgarly called as Kelifarevo, the news flew everywhere, quicker than a bird's flight, not only to the Bulgarian people, but also to Serbians, Hungarians (I think here is about the Romanians from Hungary, o. n.) and Romanians, and even to the people living around Mesimbria". Mentioning this place, Emil Turdeanu says: "The popularity he enjoyed amongst Romanians it has some chance to translate the reality"[1298].

The hesychastic spirituality came, without any doubt, also through the tight connections had by The Romanian Country with the Cutlumus Monastery from the Holy Mountain. The material and financial resources provided by Voivode Vladislav I, on the purpose to help rebuilding this monastery under the abbot Hariton, they made possible that in this monastery to settle down several Romanian monks, just in this period which the hesychasm was flourishing in, and it was upheld by Patriarchs Kallistos and Philotheos, the disciples of Saint Gregory Palamas; the first Patriarch we've just mentioned, he sent, at the request of Voivode Alexandru Basarab, on Jacinth of Vicina as first Metropolitan of the Romanian Country. These monks didn't definitively lock themselves up in the Mount Athos. They sometimes came back home. So they came before the year 1370, because of not being content with the community life from there, for they lived a quieter life in the Romanian Country, in the small hermitages from here. After Voivode Vladislav obtained, via mail, from Abbot Hariton of Cutlumus, the approval for the monks coming there from the Romanian Country to live a more independent life, these monks went again to Cutlumus and one of them, Melchisedec reached to be even the Monastery's abbot (between the years 1370-1375). He was, in the Romanian Country, the archpriest Mickael, so that he was more elevated from cultural and spiritual points of view. Another was Hieromonk Jacob[1299].

In the year 1372, the Abbot Hariton from Cutlumus was brought by Voivode Stanislav and appointed as Metropolitan of Curtea de Argeș, after the death of Jacinth, happened in the same year. But, in the year 1376, Hariton withdraws again at Athos, reaching to be the protos of the Holy Mountain. In this quality, in the year 1378, he gives the monks from Cutlumus a series of advices, which remind about the hesychastic teaching[1300].

Another impulse of monastic life in hesychastic ghost, it came in the Romanian Country through Nicodemus, the founder of the monasteries with community life. It is "a general consensus upon the fact that Nicodemus was a follower of the hesychasm"[1301]. This one, he exchanged letters, with Patriarch Efthimios from Trnovo, a disciple of Saint Theodosius. Nicodemus asked for an answer, from Efthimios, to some questions, and he was receiving answers[1302]. Patriarch Euthimios was friends also with Anthimos, the third Metropolitan of the Romanian Country, a Greek from Constantinople, whom he also was asking some questions to[1303]. Patriarch Euthimios gave an even greater momentum to the translations of Greek spiritual writings, he himself being author of spiritual writings. His writings had a great echo in the Romanian Countries. The life of Saint Paraskevi, written by him, it is put by Metropolitan Barlaam in his "Book of Teaching", and out of "Panegyric to Saints Constantine and Helena", written by Euthimios, Voivode Neagoe Basarab took several paragraphs in his "Teachings"[1304].

In Moldavia, starting with Voivode Alexander the Kind One, who set the Metropolitan from Suceava in connections with Constantinople, there were brought the works of some hesychastic authors, as Gregory of Sinai and Patriarch Philotheos, and those works were translated here in the churchly Slavonic[1305].

Surely, these hesychastic writings – as also those coming from Kelifarevo -, though in Slavonic translations, they didn't remain without fructifying in the Romanian monastic life.

Otherwise, there wouldn't have been felt the need for being copied and spread out in the Romanian Countries.

We can see those writings' fruits in the rich spreading of the type of the sihastru monk in these countries. The word "sihastru" it is the Romanian calque after the word "hesychast". Like Patriarch Kallistos is called in the Romanian manuscripts as "Calistru", likewise the word hesychast became in the Romanian uttering as "sihastru" (after the st of a Greek word, the Romanians added a r, maybe due to the influence of the Greek term ησυχαστήριος, a place of appeasement, which became in the Romanian language: sihăstrie.

Almost everywhere, where big monasteries were erected, there were around them one or more "sihaştri/hesychasts", often living in monastic cells carved in rock, or they lived in wooden shacks. In the book we quote, belonging to Paul Chihaia, are given some pictures representing such monastic cells in rocks, from Buzău Mountains. Near to Putna Monastery, in a rock hanging above a valley from nearby, it still lasts the monastic cell of Daniel the Hesychast. One can presuppose that Stephen the Great built Putna Monastery for he was attracted to this place, by the life lived there by Daniel the Hesychast, who was, according to the tradition, his spiritual guide. After Daniel the Hesychast withdrew to Voroneț surroundings, Stephen the Great built there too, a monastery, the Voroneț Monastery, where Daniel the Hesychast is buried at[1306]. Likewise, near Tismana, there still can be seen the monastic cell where the tradition says that lived, on occasions, the founder of the Monastery: Nicodemus. Neculce, who tells us that the Voroneț Monastery [1306] Ion Neculce conveys us a tradition according to which "Voivode Stephen, while traveling from the Neamț Stronghold upwards, following the Moldova River, he went to Voroneț, where a hesychast father was living, called Daniel, and Voivode Stephen knocked on the door of Daniel's monastic cell, asking him to open the doors but the hesychast answered and asked Stephen to wait outside, until he will finish praying; after Daniel finished praying, he called Voivode Stephen in, and Stephen confessed him his sins, he asked Daniel what he must do, for he couldn't fight the Turks: must he surrender the country, or not? And the hesychast answered him not to surrender the country, for the war is his; but, after victory, he must build a monastery there, on behalf of Saint George, who to be the patron of that church. So, Voivode Stephen went up North, to Chernivtsi and Hotin, and he gathered an army formed by all sorts of people, and then he came down South. And the Turks understood that Voivode Stephen followed to come with his army and they left too, the Neamț Stronghold, and, renouncing to fight they started running towards Danube. And Voivode Stephen followed them and he beat them until they managed to cross the River Danube. And then, Voivode Stephen turned back and built up the Voronetzi Monastery and consecrated its church to patron Saint George" (O samă de cuvinte (Several Words), Cartea Românească Publishing House, 1938, p. 12).

was built by Voivode Stephen the Great at the urge of Daniel the Hesychast, he also tells us that Voivode Alexandru Lăpuşneanu build up Slatina Monastery, after being urged by another hesychast[1307].

But, once a monastery was built up, the hesychastic life flourished in the most inaccessible places from around that monastery. On Putna Valley, not far form the monastery, there blossomed a "hermitage" for the monks who wanted to live a life of quietude, a life dedicated to the prayer. This "Sihăstria"[1308] lasted until the Bucovina was occupied by Austria, more precisely, it lasted until Joseph II abolished with all the monasteries from Bucovina, this hermitage too. Ever since 1776, on 10th of January, Voivode Gregory Ghica granted some exemptions to the "hesychast" monks from Putna[1309]. Pocrov is attested since the year 1691, with the name "Sihăstria Neamţului"[1310] (Manuscript no. 1287, in the Library of the Romanian Academia). This name is also attested by the Manuscript no. 1287, from the Library of the Romanian Academia. The manuscript contains, in Romanian translation, the writing of Agapius Landos: "The Salvation of the Sinners". Pachomius, Bishop of Roman, gave this manuscript to the hermitage from Mount Chiriac, namely to Pocrov. We also know about other writings, of ascetic literature, which circulate in the Romanian language right in the beginning of the XVII Century. In the Library of the Romanian Academia, there are the Paterikons from XVII Century (Manuscripts: no. 1429 from the year 1676, no. 3163 from the year 1706 etc.).

Great hesychasts lived in Sihla Hermitage, and around it, near to "Sihăstria" Monastery from today. The actual hermitage was built in the year 1731, near to Saint Theodora Cave. Saint Theodora lived in this cave situated near to the today's Sihla hermitage. Saint Theodora is honored, by our people, for her holy life, for she was a consummate hesychast. After several years of living a hesychastic life in the Buzău Mountains, together with other three sisters who were with her, they lived around forty years around the cave which later the Sihla Hermitage was built up; Sihla became famous amongst hesychasts since the XVII Century. The tradition tells us about Saint Theodora that she was always with the Prayer to Jesus on her lips and in her mind and that she was living a very harsh life. Hesychast was Paul too, namely the spiritual guide of Saint Theodora[1311].

Father Ioanichie Bălan, from Bistriţa Monastery, from Moldavia, who searched, for several year, the lives of the Romanian monks who lived, starting with the XV Century and up to XX Century, he composed several volumes with their writings, and he says: "In Tazlău Monastery's tradition (built up in the year 1497), as also in the cases of other monasteries, there was the custom of living, around the monastery's hearth, numerous hesychasts. These ones were the strongest from among the monastery's monks, who aimed for the lonely life of hermit. In order to do that, they mandatorily lived the first few years in community life, for getting accustomed to the mysteries of the spiritual life. Then, after receiving the blessing to do it, they left the monastery and went up in the mountains, either as disciples of other old hesychasts, or alone, or together with other hermits like them. In the mountain they occupied a vacant cave or they dug up an earthen hut or they carved a cave in the rock. Each one of them kept in touch with the monastery they belonged to. On each Sunday they came down from the mountain, and they received their "portion" given them by the abbot (bread, biscuits, vegetables, fruit, salt), they confessed their sins to the monastery's spiritual guide, and on the second day, after receiving the Holy Impartation, they left again for their hermit cells. The permanent occupation of the hesychasts was the Holy Prayer to Jesus"[1312]. "The old people from Tazlău [1312] Quoted work, p. 200. Marcus Bandinus, Catholic Bishop, who came to visit in the year 1646, he affirmed that "the forests and the precipices around Neamț Monastery were swarming with the multitude of the hesychasts" (Annales of the Romanian Academia, history section, series II, vol. XVI, 1893-1894, at C. Bobulescu, Pocrovul, Craiova, 1943, p. 4). Likewise says D. Cantemir that "the mountains are full of monks and hermits who are sacrificing there, in the quietude and the loneliness of God, their humble and lonely life" (in Description Moldaviae, Minerva Publihsing House, Bucharest, 1976, p. 195). The same D. Cantemir says that only in the upper country of Moldavia, there were over 200 monasteries and almost an equal number of hermitages. And Paul of Aleph, who accompanied Patriarch Makarios of Antioch, in Moldavia, between the year 1652-1652, he says that only in the courtyard of Holy Three Hierarchs Monastery, there were monastic cells hosting over 300 ascetics (in Călători străini

Commune tell even today, the things they heard from their ancestors, namely how those hesychasts descended, on each night, to attend the Matins in the monastery, and, after midnight, they went up again, to their monastic cells. They tell about these venerable hesychasts were very pious, they prayed ceaselessly, they ceaselessly read the Book of Psalms, they uttered the Prayer to Jesus, they were doing thousands of prostrations on each night, they were taking vigil, and they were speaking only about God"[1313].

Those hesychasts actually were very popular in our past. Their role in upholding the power of endurance of our people, in dire times, it was recognized. I mentioned Daniel the Hesychast, who advised Stephen the Great, encouraging him to fight for defending the Christian Moldavia, on a moment of discouragement. They weren't some recluses careless to the world, in the sense of the recluses from Occident, or even from Mount Athos. They helped the people by bearing its wights. Father Ioanichie Bălan, says: "Then, the hesychasts were coming to help the people with the advice, with the confessions, with the rebuking, and with the urge. The monks, the hesychasts, those hermits running away from the world, they loved the people the most, and they ceaselessly prayer for them. These pilgrims of the mountains, these friends of the Carpathian Mountains, the inhabitants of the forests, they were, in the same time, the closest advisers of the voivodes... All voivodes had as spiritual guides and as secret advisers, monks and hesychasts. The voivodes trusted them the most, they hoped in them the most, they opened their hearts, they kept their advice as a saint commandment, and they asked from them for prayer and blessing when leaving for defending their faith and their ancestral land"[1314].

despre Ţările Române (Foreign Travelers on the Romanian Countries), Scientifical and Encyclopaedical Publishing House, Bucharest, 1976, p. 481). The same Paul of Aleph says that in the right pew the monks sang in Greek, and in the left pew thy sang in Romanian (p. 63). So, before the whole Liturgy being printed in Romanian, they sang in the pew in Romanian, and this sems to have been an old tradition. We reckon as very probable, that the people sang, while in Church, in Romanian, uninterruptedly, in continuation to a tradition we have ever since V Century (see: Priest Professor D. Stăniloae, Besii în mânăstirile din Orient (The Besii in the Monasteries from Orient, in "Biserica Ortodoxă Română" ("The Romanian Orthodox Church"), XCIV (1976), no. 5-6, pp. 583-590).

Their popularity can be seen also out of the fact that the name of sihastru (hesychast), as transliteration in Romanian popular language, it has become and it has remained, in the life of our people, with the whole its meaning from the XIV Century, when it spread from Mount Athos, as a familiar name, but also as a proof for the hesychastic mode of the monastic life practiced in the whole our part, in the sight of the people. As far as we know, to no other Orthodox people, the name hesychast has become so popular, neither it has been preserved with this wide and popular resonance, because neither the hesychastic mode of the monastic life has been preserved like that.

Father Ioanichie Bălan described in the mentioned work, the life of several hundred of such hesychasts, much venerated by our people. Their succession continued uninterruptedly since the XIV Century and up to our time. This description sheds a new light, a deeper one, of an impressive seriousness, on the role of the monasticism in our past and the foundations of our people's endurance on this land, despite the storm of a history waging uninterrupted difficulties, as also the springs of such a wise and balanced spirituality. These hesychasts kept us present in our mountains, together with our shepherds. In their hermitages found shelter the people who were seeking for refuge in very difficult times, voivodes, but also average people. The hesychasts were recruited from amongst the Romanian believers from both sides of Carpathians, they constituted a way of maintaining our unity as people, in the deepest roots of that unity.

In the followings, we are going to mention some facts about such hesychasts from all centuries, as described by Father Ioanichie Bălan.

Thus, from XV Century, it is presented the life of Pious Joseph. From his youth, he built up a small Romanian hermitage, together with a few of his disciples, in the Jordan's wilderness. Then, after the falling of Constantinople, he withdrew with his disciples on the mountain situated to the West of Bistriţa Monastery, were they built small monastic cells out od stone slabs, all over that mountain. "His disciples bore the names: Simeon, Methodius, Barnaba, Peter, Gherman, Pir, and the Greek. The ruler of Moldavia, Bogdan the Blind, built them in the year 1512 "the hermitage of Joseph", which, later, received the name "Bisericani Monastery". In the XVII Century, there were living around the monastery around 400 "hermits"[1315].

One of the great hesychasts was, in the XV Century, the hieromonk Sisoes. Originating from Bucovina, he became the disciple of Daniel the Hesychast, living around Voroneț. Then, with the blessing of Daniel the Hesychast, he withdrew in Rarău Mountains, living there, in ascesis, by himself. Later on, by gathering some disciples around him, he founded the "Rarău Hermitage", or the "Sisoes' Hermitage". Some voivodes built up later two more "hermitages" on Rarău"[1316].

There existed monks, living in a great ascesis from very early times, in Transylvania, from amongst whom, some of them either turned back as hesychasts in their places where they came from, from the Moldavia's hermitages, or they received their formation firstly in the Transylvania's hermitages and then they went in Moldavia's mountains. It is a known fact, then, that many of the hesychasts from Moldavia's forests, were being recruited out of the Transylvanians shepherds, who were grazing their sheep out there[1317]. In the XV Century, a great ascetic was Pious Ghelasie, the abbot of Râmeț Monastery, situated at the entrance in the Apuseni Mountains. It is a monastery believed to date from around the year 1215 and, probably, its existence as a few kilometers of Geoagiu de Sus, it was a decisive factor for establishing a Romanian Bishopric at Geoagiu. Ghelasie had a great role in Transylvania, by forming numerous monks, defenders of the Orthodoxy[1318].

The multitude of hesychasts living in the surrounding mountains, it had a decisive role in founding Agapia Monastery, by Petru Rareş at the year 1527, or between the years 1542-1552, at the feet of those mountains. Father Ioanichie Bălan affirmes that even with a few hundred years before, in these mounatisn were living hesychasts. According to the "Condica Sfântă" ("Holy Registry") of Agapia Monastery, they were especially Transylvania shepherd.

The mountains peaks from around Agapia (Serghia, Pahomia, Eufrosin, Sihastria) have their names from hesychasts who lived on them. On one of these peaks there was a hermitage.

Lower on those mountains, there were the monks living in monastic cells, who, unlike the hesychasts, they had a small monastic cell. A small monasterial settlement was erected at "Livada Părinţilor" (the Fathers' Orchard), where we can see, even today, the church's foundation and those belonging to other smaller buildings. The place is called, even today, "The Chairs", probably for the monks were sleeping there for two or three hours a night, according to a practice of the hermits of not sleeping on a bed, but only on a chair.

The older hermitage from "Livada Părinţilor" (the Fathers' Orchard) is also called today as "the monastery of Agapius", after a hesychast called Agapius, who settled it down in XIV Century. Lower on, there was built, around XV Century, the hermitage from Mount Eufrosin. In the "Livada Părinţilor" were discovered coffins made out of thick oak lumbers, containing skeletons whose skull were placed on a rock, as usually the monks are buried. Agapia from the Hill, from today, it dates from after the year 1500. It has a its patron "The Transfiguration", which again shows its hesychastic character, given that in the hesychastic teaching it is affirmed that all the toils with the Prayer to Jesus, they lead the one who practice them, to seeing the Tabor light.

Itself the Agapia Monastery, either that one from "Livada Părinţilor", or one antecessor to the present settlement, it is attested since the XV Century. In the archive of Neamţ Monastery, it is preserved a Sentence issued by Voivode Ilieş, in the year 1437, in a legal trial had by Agapia Monastery, for a field, with Neamţ Monastery. In the year 1461, Arsenius, the Agapia's abbot, had another legal trial with the Neamţ Monastery. Similarly, another abbot, Isaiah, had a legal trial with the Secu Monastery[1319].

Also, at the advice of two hesychasts it was founded, in the second half of the XVII Century, by Barlaam, the Metropolitan of The Romanian Country, the Turnu Monastery from Vâlcea Country. These hermits were called as Mishael and Daniel, and their caves cane be seen, even today, in the monastery's courtyard[1320].

[1319] All these data about Agapia Monastery, they come from Nicolae Dărîngă, quoted work, pp. 11-17.

[1320] Hiero-deacon Ioanichie Bălan, quoted work, p. 355. In this monastery it is being observed the tradition from Mount Athos. The monks were great fasters and practitioners of the Prayer to Jesus, living in consummate silence and obedience.

In the mountains surrounding Cozia Monastery, there were living in ascesis other hesychasts, whose names were used to name those places: Anthimos's Creek, Philotheos's Mountain, Theophilus's Mountain, or Theophila etc.[1321]

The tradition of the hesychast life continued today at Tazlău, during the XVII Century too. In a voivode's document from the year 1617, there a mentioned several hesychastic monks living in the old forests from around the monastery. The most renown amongst them was Onuphrius the Hesychast, who lived in ascesis for almost a half of a century, in that forest from on the "Onuphrius's Hill". On the same "Hill" lived in ascesis his followers too: Seraphim the Hesychast and Paul the Hesychast. Until today, we can see the ruins of the old monastic cells and caves once inhabited by hesychasts[1322].

A multitude of hermits lives in ascesis in the caves from Mount Ceahlău. There existed even a hermitage, called "Schitul Sihastru" (The Hesychastic Hermitage), or "Hihăstria Ceahlăului" ("The Ceahlău's Hermitage"), founded, according to the tradition, since the time of Bogdan Descălecătorul[1323], then „Schitul lui Silvestru" (Silvester's Hermitage), founded by the hermit bearing the same name, in the XVI Century. In a cave from Ceahlău, there were living in ascesis the hermit called Vucol. Until these days, that cave is called as "Vucol's Cave". Higher up, in another cave, there were living in ascesis, in XVI Century, the hermit called Gideon, maybe the most famous hermit from on Ceahlău. Besides them, there are mentioned in the XVI-XVII Centuries also other hermits, whose names were used to call meadows, creeks, and caves, as: Gherman's Cave, Gennady's Meadow, Patapios's Creek, Nicanor's Creek, Bucur's Creek, Cassiana Hermitage etc. Ceahlău was a real Romanian Athos Mountain (I. Bălan, quoted work, p. 193 and the followings).

Many and great hesychasts lived around Secu Monastery too. One has to presuppose that, in the first place, Barlaam translated in Romanian the "Ladder" of Saint John Climacus, while Barlaam was a monk at Secu, before the year 1618, or even before the year 1602, while he was a student at the school of teacher Dositheos from Zosim hermitage, previously to the period which he was living in Secu Monastery (A. I. Gonţa, Un aşezământ de cultură de la Alexandru Lăpuşneanu pe Valea Secului înainte de ctitoria lui Nestor Ureche, Schitul Zosim (A Cultural Seettlement from Alexandru Lăpuşneanu, before The Foundaiton of Nestor Ureche: the Zosim Hermitage), in "Mitropolia Moldovei şi Sucevei" ("The Metropolitan of Moldavia and Suceava"), year 1962, no. 9-12, pp. 694-712). This is for the Ladder is the best manual for hesychasts[1324].

[1323] We think that it is important to „translate" this name, for the Moldavia's history grants him the quality as founder of the country, the first one arrived and starting a settlement there. So, an approximate equivalent would be: The Settler (the one who unmounted his horse and settled down there).

O witness of the extended monastic life of hesychastic type, in the county of Buzău, are the numerous caves and the remnants of equally small hermitages in the region. Pavel Chihaia[1325] mentioned many of these hermitages, following the example of Alexandru Odobescu, of B. Iorgulescu, and of N. Stoicescu[1326]. Thus, they specified: the little church from Fundătura, documentary attested since the year 1679, the Cave of Joseph, the Hermitage of Agathon, dating earlier than the year 1521, having a cave in front of it, where there was an altar, the Alunişul Hermitage (1649-1668), the Fundul Peşterii Monastic Cell, where were living hesychasts in the year 1782, The cave of Dionysus, situated upwards of the Cave of Joseph, Saint George Monastery, foundation of Michael the Valiant, Pîrăul (The Creek) Monastery, near to Alunișul-Nucu, about which, a document dating from 1964 it tell us that it was, at the beginning, a "poor (simple) little hermitage", as other little hermitages too, which were around it and "hesychastic monks live in them", but also that Matei Basarab built a stone monastery, which was the mother of all little hermitages from there.

In the first half of the XVIII Century, there was living in ascesis, in a cave near to Iezerul Hermitage (Vâlcea County), the Hermit Antony, originating from Teiuș (Transylvania). When Bishop Ilarion restores, in the year 1714, the Iezerul Hermitage, he received great help from Schemamonk Anthony[1327].

A monk living in a great ascesis and in ceaseless prayer, he was Hiero-Schemamonk Irodion, the abbot of the Lainic Monastery, who was chose as spiritual guide by Saint Calinic himself, when Saitn Calinic was Bishop of Râmnic. He was officiating the Holy Liturgy on a daily basis and having, on each time, tears flowing down on his cheeks. Tens of thousands of people were coming to see him, from both sides of the Carpathians, for he knew the people's thoughts and he was working wonderful healings. Saint Calinic called him as "the Morningstar from Lainici". He passed away, from this world, in the year 1910, at the age of 95. O proof of his holiness is the fact that his remnants were found unrotten in his grace[1328].

Not to say about other monks, known for their life of prayer, for their great ascesis, and for their gift of knowing the people and of healing the people. We only mention here Ioanichie Moroiu, the abbot of Sihăstria Monastery (dead in 1944)[1329]; and Vichentie Mălău, from Secu Monastery, who was sleeping only for three hours a night, on a bench without beddings; he had the ceaseless prayer, he was doing everything with pleasure, saying that "who obeys and does what he is told to, he officiates a liturgy"; he tasted the foods, the water, the wine, the fruits, and all the land's harvests, according to blessing, joyfully, as an "Impartation" (dead in 1945)[1330]; then there was Atanasie Păvălucă, who came around the year 1939, together with his brother called Cyril (in their civilian life they bore the names John and Anania), from Breţcu, to Neamţ Monastery. Unlike his brother Cyril who left for the Holy Mountain, where he died young, Atanasie Mălău lived a life of great ascesis, by eating, during the whole his life, only once a day: bread, vegetables, and fruits, and reading, on each day, the whole Book of Psalms, or telling it by heart, only sleeping while sitting on a chair, and only for two or three hours a night, walking barefooted both in the summer and in the winter, being zealous in uttering the Prayer to Jesus, and not letting his thought to start going towards the earthly realities when a brother asked him what he must do in order to be saved, Father Anthony answered him: "have Christ in your mind and you will be saved". But, when that one asked, in continuation: "And how can I receive Christ in my mind?", Father Anthony answered him: "Through the ceaseless prayer and guarding of the mind. Say, always, the Prayer to Jesus, run away from people, and do not accept, with your mind, any evil thing". He remained, the whole his life, shepherding the sheep in the forest, not wanting to accept a monastic cell in the monastery, not even during winter, but always staying at the sheepfold. Only when he felt his end coming, he withdrawn at the monastery. He died in the year 1955, at the age of 78[1331].

In addition to these ones, we are going to mention here also a few hesychasts who lived in the XX Century, who has a great role in the life of the Orthodox monasticism, and even beyond the border of our country.

Amongst many others, we are mentioning here Irinarh Roset, the disciple of the Schemamonk Joseph, living nearby Văratec Monastery. After the death of his spiritual father, Irinarh become a hesychast living in the forests from around Nechit Hermitage (near Neamţ Monastery), where he was, for twelve years, working the Prayer to Jesus. Later on, the founded the Horaiţa Monastery, and then he left for Mount Tabor, where he lived for 16 years in a consummate hesychasm in Tabor's caves, and in the year 1859 he stared building the great Orthodox church on that mountain, a church that exists even today, as the only Orthodox church from Tabor Mountain. He was visited there too, by many people, for his prayer were bringing healing of grave illnesses. The whole his life he was practicing the Prayer to Jesus, but he kept that secret from everybody[1332]. In this regard, his disciple Nektarios, he told that, once asking him: "Honorable Father, Father Gherasim, the hesychast from Dălăhuți Hermitage, has told me that you have the prayer of the mind"; the father answered him: "My son, I really had it for a short while, but I left it. This is because, while I was sitting in that wilderness for twelve years, I was praying to God and to His All-Clean Mother, to give me this gift too. But, while sitting I at prayer, one night, at midnight, my monastic cell was powerfully illuminated by a flam of fire, but that wasn't burning me; and my heart started saying with a loud voice: "Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, have mercy on me the sinner". And I got scarred and I feared not to be that some devilish deceit. On the next day I went to my spiritual guide, Father Josephus (it is about Schemamonk Josephus, the spiritual guide of Văratec Monastery), who had the prayer of the mind (we are going to publish in his volume his Method for the Prayer to Jesus) and who worked wonders, and I confessed him what happened to me. And he gave me canon not to sleep on a bed, but on a chair, and only for an hour at every 24 hours. Turning back to my monastic cell, I tried to follow my spiritual guide's commandment. Then, by seeing I that I wasn't able to fulfill his commandment, I left the prayer"[1333].

One can see out of this story too, the special note of the Romanian Orthodox spirituality that, on one hand, it affirms the need for a harsh ascesis for preparation, through removal of passions, in order to practice the Prayer to Jesus, and, on the other hand, it recommends a great discretion, lest the practitioner of this prayer to be take into mastery by the vain glory, which is a passion gravely defiling the man.

Another great Romanian hesychast from the XIX Century, he was Nektarios the Protopsaltes. He lived as a hermit starting with the year 1845, for 16 years, in a shack near the place where Prodromul Hermitage was erected on Mount Athos, at the place called Vigla. There he lived a life of fasting, or taking vigil, and of secretly working the Prayer to Jesus. In the year

[1333] To be seen this, in details, in: Viața unui îmbunătățit călugăr roman – Irinarh Roset (The Life of an Improved Romanian Monk – Irinarh Roset), as presented by Archimandrite Nectarie Banul and reviewed by C. Erbiceanu, in the Review "Biserica Otrtodoxă Română" ("The Romanian Orthodox Church"), no. 7, 1898, pp. 740-791, at Hieromonk Ioanichie Bălan, Quoted work, manuscript (bundle).

1862, after Prodromul Hermitage was consecrated, Pious Nektarios lived in that Hermitage, where he dies in the year 1903. He was, at his time, the most famous psalms singer from the Holy Mountain. Together with him, lived as hermit and then to Prodromul Hermitage, his brother Athanasius[1334].

Another great worker of the Prayer to Jesus was the Hiero-Schemamonk Justin, who left the Neamț Monastery for the Holy Mountain, in the year 1810, with his disciples Patapios and Gregory. There they bought from Lavra Monastery the place called "The Ianicopole's Vigla" and they built there 40 monastic cells around a little church that existed before, and they gathered in those monastic cells the Romanians living in ascesis in caves o in other monasteries. After the year 1820, Pious Justin withdrew himself in a cave, living in fasting, in taking vigil, and working the Prayer to Jesus, for 20 years, until he died, in the year 1845[1335].

The form of monastic life in small hermitages, more suitable to practicing there the Prayer to Jesus, in an atmosphere of quietude, it was, until XVIII Century, extended in Transylvania too, especially in its southern part, and in the neighborhoods of Bistrița, at the feet of Carpathians, where the communication was more easily to be done from, with the hermitages from South and East of Carpathians. Between Brașov and Sibiu, in the XVIII Century, there were around 120 such small hermitages. These hermitages and the connections of the hesychasts living in them, with the hermitages from the South and East of Carpathians, they were the greatest obstacle in the way of Uniatism's spreading in Transylvania, after the year 1700. The Austrian document kept complaining about these monks crossing the border from the South and East of Carpathians, towards North. That's why, at the order of the Imperial Court from Vienna, General Bucov demolished, by bombarding them with his cannons, the hermitages from South and East of Transylvania[1336].

[1334] About him wrote C. Ersiceanu, in the Review "Biserica Ortodoxă Română" ("The Romanian Orthodox Church"), 1899, p. 410.

The uninterrupted existence of the thousands of hesychasts and of the hundreds of small hermitages with hesychastic life in the forests of the Romanian Countries, so also from Buzău Mountains, it explains why the Ukrainian monk Basil came, at the beginning of XVIII Century, in this land, and he settled himself down in one of those hermitages, and then he founded his own hermitage and he became abbot there. Here he found a more intense monastic life than in his own country, which, after crossing through an accentuated Catholic influence, it was at that time under a Protestant influence, a fact that led to a cooling down of the monastic life. Even about Paisius, who came from the same region, after Basil from Poiana Mărului (Apple's Meadow), J. Hidarin says: "Abbot Paisius was the renewer of the Russian monastic life and its guide and educator, in ascetic readings... This was because, at that time, Russia didn't have such writings"[1337].

Basil, after living for 20 years at Dălhăuți, where there was a strong hesychastic life, which he was able to immerge himself in, as we have seen out of the life of Irinarh Roset, he settled himself down just in the region so rich in small hermitages, that one of Buzău Mountains, near to the hermitages of Trăsteni and Cîrnu, founding the hermitage from Poiana Mărului (Apple's Meadow), at 40 kilometers distance from Râmnicu Sărat. It was, otherwise, an older tradition of the Russian monks to come in the Monasteries from Moldavia, where they could find the satisfaction of a monastic life of greatest spiritual depth[1338].

Surely, Basil from Poiana Mărului was inspired by the hesychastic practice of the monks from those small hermitages, when he composed the "Forewords" at Philotheos of Sinai, at Hesychius of Sinai, of Gregory of Sinai, and of Nic Sorschi. It could be possible that he wrote these "Forewords in Slavonic". But, because of having in community Romanian monks who he wrote those "Forewords" for, it is probably that himself wrote the "Forewords" in both languages: Romanian and Slavonic. For, by living for decades amongst Romanians, he could learn Romanian enough well in order to be able to wrote in both languages. This eventuality seems to be founded on the fact that the Romanian language of these translations it is quite clumsy.

We publish in this volume the "Foreword" at Saint Gregory[1339] of Sinai, which we have in a clearer text. Besides, the content of these "Forewords" it is quite similar. We publish it rather in order to highlight the difference between Basil from Poiana Mărului and his disciple Paisius, and the texts composed by the Romanian monks, in what concerns the conditions required for practicing the Prayer to Jesus. While the Romanian monks asks for a period of previous preparation, a very serious one, before starting the practice of this prayer, Basil and Paisius urge everybody to directly start practicing the mentioned prayer.

In the year 1742, also in the mentioned monastic region, there acme the Ukrainian monk called Plato, the future Paisius. He passed through Dălhăuți, where he was under the spiritual authority of his compatriot: Basil[1340]. He was longing for coming in Moldavia, because of Metropolitan Anthony, a refugee in Russia, during the Russian-Turkish war (1735-1739), from whom Paisius found out many facts about Moldavia and the churches from there[1341].

The Russian historian Cetfericov, who wrote Paisius's life, he wrote also about the state of the Romanian monasticism [1340] Deacon P. I: David, quoted work, p. 6, reproduces after: Pr. Paul Mihail, Starețul Mănăstirii de la Neamț, înnoitorul monahismului (The Abbot of Neamț Monastery, the Renewer of the Monasticism), in the Review "Mitropolia Moldovei și Sucevei" ("The Metropolitan of Moldavia and Suceava"), 1962, no. 5-6, pp. 417-419, a paragrapf where we can found some words belonging to Paisius too: "Brother Plato (Paisius) asks the two "Moldavian-Vlachos" monks to allow him to accompany them towards "the country of our parents… to the blessed language and Moldavian people…", p. 6. It is one of the arguments brought by Deacon P. David for the Romanian origin of Paisius, amongst other arguments (born in Poltava, where D. Cantemir, together with other Romanians settled down, and having as parents the priest Peter and his wife Anna, kindred with Bantăș family, whom the mother of D. Cantemir was kindred with, too; he was made churchly reader in Pecerskaia Lavra, by the Moldavian Metropolitan Anthony, who later became Metropolitan of Cernigov; tonsured, by the same Metropolitan, in monasticism, in Lubetzki Monastery, which was a refuge for the Moldavian monks and had Pachomius – who was a Moldavian too - as abbot etc.).

[1341] Fr. Paul Mihail, quoted article, p. 409, he presents the witness of Paisius (Plato) that, when hearing the Moldavian Metropolitan Anthony, officiating the Liturgy at Kiev, in Romanian, he fell in love with the language and the people from Moldavia. Fr. Paul Mihail quotes from "Autobiografia lui Paisie" ("The Autobiography of Paisius"), published by Ștefan Berechet, Iasi, 1918, p. 13.

at Plato's (Paisius's) arrival in Moldavia: "Plato enter the Moldavia's land with the feeling of the greatest joy and of sincere love. He knew that there the monasticism was flourishing, that there came many ascetics from Russia, who were searching for a peaceful shelter and favorable to the lonely and quiet life, and he wanted with the whole his soul, to attach himself to the hermits from there, and to live together with them in loneliness and silence, so that he would accomplish his steadfast dream from his childhood and from his youth. At that time, Moldavia appeared to be as one of the most flourishing little corners of the Orthodox world. In the Greek Orient, the narrowed and oppressed by Turks, couldn't enjoy the necessary freedom. In Russia, the monastic life was experiencing a narrowing because of Russian government"[1342].

About Dălhăuți, where Plato (Paisius) firstly stopped, Cetfericov said: "Hegumen of the hermitage was a disciple of Abbot Basil. Here lived many important ascetics. So he was, for instance, Father Rafael, who occupied himself with copying the holy books" (it is very probably that those books were transcribed in Romanian too, in order to be used in the spiritual life of the monks from there). "Other ascetics were: Monk Dositheos, who lived far from that hermitage, or Schemamonk Timothy, who was skillful in spiritual dialogues and in translating the holy books (he must translate those books in Romanian in order to be understood by the Romanian monks). These monks lived withdrawn in a deep valley". "They impressed Paisius very deeply". Here Paisius discovered the hesychastic living.

Then, by going at Trăisteni, here Plato (Paisius) heard, from the first time, the prayers according to the rule from Mount Athos, uttered with great piousness and by fearing of God. In this hermitage were living up to 20 monks, who lived in congregation, and around 15 hermits who lived in the surroundings, providing for themselves by hand-working. Here, Plato (Paisius) encountered many important hesychasts". On one of them the birds were landing on him and accompanied him wherever he went, until he entered the church's building[1343].

[1343] Quoted work, pp. 140-141. Here Paisius encountered Onuphrius, who died at Vorona Hermitage, and whose relics are kept in the altar.

When the famous hermit Onuphrius came at Trăisteni, from Cîrnu Hermitage, Plato (Paisius) accompanied him at Cîrnu, a hermitage placed on the Buzău Valley, up in the mountains. Fr. Paul Mihail says, using Paisius's autobiography: "There, in a hermit monastic cell, Plato understood the secrets of the true monasticism, and he understood and felt more profoundly the benefactor effect of the prayer"[1344]. "Paisius met there other hesychasts too, who had a great spiritual power. He met Hieromonk Alexe, who was reading from the writings of the Holy Fathers, explaining their meaning. Paisius also knew better the great hermit Onuphrius, who live before, for a very long time, in wilderness, then in Transylvania in the great mountains, and then he was living not far from the mentioned hermitage, in a lonely monastic cell". Paisius visited Onuphrius, together with other monks, at his monastic cell. "The path to Onuphrius's cell crossed through wonderful forests, and the cell was on the edge of a mountain, from where it had a wonderful view upon the surrounding valleys and mountains, which were covered in virgin forests… The old Onuphrius was spending his time in prayer, in reading, in singing psalms, and in hand-working, for he was making wooden spoons, wooden plates, out of linden wood, and with a great skillfulness. He was very gifted in advising others". "With Father Alexe, Onuphrius was speaking in detail about the bodily passions, and about soul's passions, and about fighting the thoughts, and also about devils, about the unimaginable temptations brought by them and about their skillfulness". "By listening to these words of old Onuphrius, Plato (Paisius) was getting increasingly in love with the hermit life"[1345]. Behold were Paisius had his apprenticeship to the hesychastic life.

We are going to pass over the activity of Paisius at Athos, and then in Moldavia, because otherwise we would extend this presentation for too long. Neither are we going to insert in this volume his Epistle about the Prayer of the Mind, because it has been already published[1346]. In addition to that "the teaching of Abbot Paisius about the Prayer to Jesus, as also his teaching about monasticism, are closely related to the teaching about this Prayer, of His teacher and spiritual father, namely of Schemamonk Basil"[1347].

About Paisius it has been written extendedly, both in Russian and in Romanian. But we think that an aspect which we must insist more upon, it would be the framing of his spiritual and organizational activity in the Romanian ambience which he lived in, by showing, in addition to what he gave to the Romanian monasticism, what he received at his turn, often much more that he offered, from it.

What it seems to us that Paisius brought with him in the Romanian monasticism, it wasn't his preoccupation with the Prayer to Jesus – for, this was always a presence amongst the thousands of hesychasts from the mountains of the Romania Countries -, but it was actually the fact that he introduced this prayer in the congregational life, and by this he reinvigorated the hesychast spirituality of the congregational life. Paisius came from Mount Athos accompanied by a Romanian-Russian congregation, and that congregation was joined by some monks from Moldavia too. But, Basil from Poiana Mărului affirmed, previously to Paisius's arrival, insistently, that the Prayer of the Heart isn't only for hermits, but also for the monks living in congregational life. But it isn't this an influence of a way of practicing this prayer on the Romanian soil, which took an even greater development at Cernica Monastery? Although, the great majority of the hesychasts from the Romanian Countries still remained in their superior hesychastic life.

A second aspect brought by Paisius it was the incentive given to the monks around him, to translate the Philokalist writings from Greek, translations which, most of them, were a proofing of soke older translations, often done, when it was about the Slavonic texts, which were made not only from Greek but also from Romanian translations. Paisius himself took part to this translation work[1348]. Actually, Paisius's contribution wasn't one of renewing or deepening the spiritual life, but it was rather one of cultural substance, of multiplying, correcting, and spreading the spiritual writings.

[1348] Cetfericov says that Paisius declared that he was correcting the Slavonic translations according to the Romanian translations and according to the Greek original texts.

In any case, out of the meeting between the Romanian hesychastic tradition, one of a great depth, and the introduction of that tradition in the frame of a larger congregation, through Paisius, it has emerged the balanced spiritual life from Cernica and Căldăruşani Monasteries. The restorer of Cernica Monastery, and the initiator of the great plan of spiritual life imprinted to that monastery, he was the Transylvanian Gheorghe, who accompanied Paisius for 24 years, at Athos and in Moldavia, and who declared himself as Paisius's disciple[1349].

But Abbot Gheorghe brought in the life instilled by him to the Cernica's congregation, a few special features, which were maybe influenced by some characteristics of the Romanian soul, and to a greater extent, by the local necessities. He accentuated, more than Paisius did, the practical side of the spiritual life. He did that, not only in order to help the monks to achieve in the safest mode the consummation of the dispassion, but also in order they to become useful to the monastery's community, and even to people in need for help. In this sense, Saint Calinic, the chose flower of the Cernica's spirituality, he united, in his spiritual profile, amazingly, the prayer and the most severe restraint, on one hand, with the fullest obedience in community and with the care for the poor, and also with his activity as founder and builder of churches. He asked, in his written Advices, in the first place, for accomplishing the commandments of God and for deeds of humbleness and of obedience, but he also said that "Let's have the Prayer to Jesus, ceaselessly, in our mouth, in our mind, and in our heart"[1350]. We could say that we have here an "integral spirituality".

The restraint, the obedience, and the humbleness, they are not only some characteristic values of the spiritual consummation, but they are also values creating good communion and brotherhood. The monks must be, in this regard too, like some envoys with the deed, of the Kingdom of God, a Kingdom of the consummate communion. And especially in this it verified the real force of the mentioned values. If the individual hermits, or the hermitages as small groups, they mainly promote the focusing of the mind in union with God, through Cernica, the Philokalist spirituality actualized its force of brotherly cohesion amongst the spiritual people.

That's why, Abbot Gheorghe gave as another norm for this congregation, that never the number of the monks living there to exceed 103, in order its spiritual guides to be able to work ceaselessly to consummate each member, and in order to be possible to accomplish a concrete brotherhood amongst all monastery's members. Applying the hesychastic spirituality on congregational plan, it was promoted by Paisius too. Abbot Gheorghe manifested, in the same time, a realistic spirit concerning the Heart's Prayer. In his "testament" he asked the monk who lived in a congregation, for not thinking that he can see "quickly", "simply and in a short while the work of the mind". We are, he said, still passionate human beings, un like the members of Father Paisius's congregation. And until we do not clean ourselves of passions, we won't be able to work the prayer within our heart[1351]. This didn't mean, of course, forbidding the Prayer to Jesus. We saw that Saint Calinic asked the monks for ceaselessly having in their mouth, in their mind, and in their heart, the Prayer to Jesus. Through "the work of the mind" Abbot Gherghe meant a total and uninterrupted immersing in contemplating God and in union with God, as the Holy Fathers from yore understood that, and as the hesychasts from the Romanian past practiced it in the caves and in the small hermitages there were living in - and not a simple mentioning of the name of Jesus, one that can be done on diverse levels of focusing[1352]. Abbot Gheorghe warned against the opinion regarding the quickly reaching at the consummation of living into God, by drawing the attention upon the deceits the which the one who starts doing this work will expose himself to, if he hasn't been strengthened, for a long time, in the state of dispassion.

In this way, Abbot Gheorghe and his descendants at Cernica's leadership, they wanted to be accomplished an equilibrium between striving to accomplish the brotherhood amongst all the congregation's members and the striving for real consummation.

[1352] To be seen the One Hundred Heads of Kallistos and Ignatius Xanthopol, head no. 53. And Basil from Poiana Mărului, discerned between the Prayer to Jesus that everybody can make, and the seer prayer that only a few are capable of.

Also for accomplishing a more strengthened brotherhood, Abbot Gheorghe recommended the avoidance of all individualistic manifestation within congregation, valuing the obedience the most, then the confession of the sins twice a week, at the spiritual guide the Abbot indicated to each monk, and the Holy Impartation once a month[1353].

We are going to present, in this volume, in order to illustrate this strengthening of community spirit, a few excerpts from the "Testament" of Abbot Gheorghe.

Itself the Prayer to Jesus, it found in this will of framing the monk in the community's life and in Church's life of praying, by and large, with avoiding any individualistic spirit, a framing of itself also in the other Praises of the Church. The Prayer to Jesus mustn't make the monk disinterested in the content of the prayer of the Church's public cult. By framing the Prayer to Jesus in these communitarian prayers of the Church, themselves these prayers are defended against the danger of a mechanical and formal uttering of them, being filled up with taking heed at their content and with the spiritual warmth resulting out of that.

We are going to give here, in order to illustrate the making of this kind of Prayer to Jesus, especially by the beginners, two methods of it, one by Schemamonk Joseph (manuscript in the Library of the Romanian Academia, no. 1441, f2r-4v.) and another by an unknown monk, who probably lived at Cernica, because he mentions the Abbots Paisius and Gheorghe as his teachers. This prayer is part of a wider exposition concerning the state of the monasticism in the Romanian Countries and in the Holy Mountain (manuscript from the Library of the Romanian Academia, no. 1841, from f. 9 r.). These methods not only they reinvigorate the other prayer of the Church required to the monk in his daily prayers program, but through them, the Prayer to Jesus too, it becomes a part of the mandatory daily prayers program of the monk. Of course, this doesn't mean that the monk cannot say the Prayer to Jesus during the remaining time (during the diverse tasks he is appointed to, or when eating, or before getting asleep etc.). A contrary, this is recommended in all the Romanian spiritual texts.

We are mentioning here also that Schemamonk Joseph, the author of one of these Methods, he was himself a greatly experienced practitioner of the Prayer to Jesus. He is the same person with the spiritual guide of the Văratic Monastery, with whose blessing, the abbess of this monastery, Nazaria, a Schemamonk from Brasov, copied in the year 1811, the manuscript no. 500 belonging to that monastery, comprising the writing About Prayer of Patriarch Calist, who was "one of the most famous hermits" in the Pocrov Mountain, from around Neamţ Monastery, whom the Christians from all quarters were running at, in order to confess their sins. He helped to the building of Văratic Monastery, he had the gifts of the speech and of healing the sick, and he also had several famous disciples, as Irinarch Roset, the builder of churches on Mount Tabor[1354].

Finally, we are going to insert in this volume a speech about the previous conditions required for the Prayer to Jesus, a word we found in the library of the Bishopric of Roman, no. 41, written in the year 1823. The writing bears the name "Alăută duhovnicească şi trâmbiţă cerească" ("Spiritual Theorbo and Heavenly Trumpet"). The writing doesn't mention the name of its author, but Father Ilie Cleopa from Sihăstria Monastery affirmed that there is a tradition attributing this writing to a nephew of Abbot Neonil from Neamţ (in the first half of XIX Century). In this writing it is even more accentuated the need for cleaning the passions, as condition of the Prayer to Jesus. It is asked somebody not to start practicing this prayer, before cleaning his impulse towards bodily earnings. If the mentioned Kallistos the Katafygiote asked for rejecting the thoughts at the things, in order the self, by becoming one, to be able to focus entirely on The One and to be able to unite with Him, being known the fact that somebody cannot clean on himself, of the thoughts at the things, as long as he desires those things, this writing asks for cleaning itself the desire for achieving the temporary things.

One can reckon that through this, it is aimed an even greater strengthening of the community life. This is for, while the monk who lives, as hermit, an individual life, a life on his own, he usually has a few material things of his own, the one consummately accomplishing the conditions of the life in community, he has nothing of his own: neither food, nor clothing, neither initiative for a thing of another. Also, for strengthening the community's life, "Alăuta duhovnicească..." ("The Spiritual Theorbo..") asks for an often confession of the sins. Without this, one cannot really accomplish a clean Prayer to Jesus, for he lacks the humbleness and the awareness of his sins, and there it sneaks in, the vain glory, or the self-appreciation that he has reached the consummation through this prayer. Only when accompanied by the often confession of the sins, the Prayer to Jesus ceases of being a factor encouraging a life by one's own, a live we would call it as individualistic.

Foreword or Guidance

To the ones who will want to read this book written by Saint Gregory of Sinai, and not to mistake regarding its content. It has been composed out of the holy and instilled by the Holy Ghost writings, of the All-Pious Schemamonk Basil from Poiana Mărului, from The Romanian Country[1355]

Many, when reading this book of Saint Gregory of Sinai, and because of not having experienced the mind's work, they are wrong in understanding it, by reckoning that this work was characteristic only to the holy and passionless men. That's why, by keeping the custom from nowadays, namely only reading and singing the psalms, the troparia, and the canons, they make only the external prayer. They do not understand that this type of song prayer, the Holy Fathers gave it to us only until a time, for the helplessness and for the childhood of our mind. This is for, by getting accustomed, through reading and singing, us to ascend on the level of working with the mind, and not to live, to the very end, in the first ones. Because, what could be more childish than that? This is for, by reading and singing only with our lips, the external prayer, we remain to a joyful opinion about ourselves, because of reckoning that we do an important thing, and by comforting ourselves only in number (namely with how much we pray, quantitatively), and with this we feed the internal Pharisee.

But the Holy Fathers, by removing us from this helplessness of our childhood, as on some little children from the bosom of the one who nourishes us with milk, they show us the low level of this work, by likening the singing with the voice to the speaking the languages (of the pagans). This is because, this saint says: Our singing it is due to be angelic, as our living is too, and not bodily or, to say so, pagan. This is for singing with voice and by shouting out, it has been given because of our laziness and lack of skills, in order to elevate us at the true prayer. The fruit of the external singing was shown by Saint Simeon the Speaker about God, in the mode of the prayer accompanied by the second taking of heed. He says: "And the second taking of heed is this: When the mind gathers itself together from the realities known with the senses and it guards the senses against the external things, by gathering itself in its thoughts, it walks into these ones vainly, by forgetting about the external ones. This is for, sometimes the mind studies its thoughts, and some other times pays attention to the requests it addresses to God, and sometimes it pulls towards itself the enslaved thoughts (by the demons), and some other times, engulfed by some passion, it starts again coming back, forcedly, to itself. And it is impossible to the one who fights light this, to somewhere achieve peace, or to take the crowns of the victory. Because, one like this, he is like the ones who fight at night, who hears the voices of his enemies and who receives the wounds from them, but he cannot clearly see who they are, or where they are coming from, or what they hit him like, or what is that for, because the darkness causes to the mind this helplessness. The one who fight like this, he won't be able to escape from being crushed by the ones belonging to another nation. He endures the tiredness, but he won't get the reward. And he is even stollen by the vain glory, as one who reckons about himself that he takes heed; and he is defeated and mocked by the vain glory. In addition to that, he also despises others, as one who aren't like him and he pretends to be the shepherd of the sheep, but he likens to the blind who promises to guide other blind people"[1356].

But how can we guard our mind? By following the mind in feeling the external realities, or by gathering it out of them, because they scatter the mind through them, when looking at the things submitted to the senses? The sight, by seeing the beautiful or inappropriate things, or the hearing, by hearing the smooth or the rugged sounds, or the smell, by smelling the good or the bad smelling things, the taste, by tasting the sweet or the bitter things, the touch, by touching the mellow or the hard things, they start running after those like the leaves borne by the wind, and the mind, by mixing itself with them, it cogitates at their works. So, is it possible to escape the thought, thus, from the thought from the right side, of from those form the left side? By no means and never. So, if the external senses cannot stop the mind from thoughts, the mind must run outside senses, during the prayer, and to enter the heart, and to stay there def and mute to all thoughts. This is because, if somebody empties himself only of sight, of hearing, and of speaking, he achieves some peace against passions and evil thoughts. But much more will be sweetened with the resting of the evil thoughts and he will taste the spiritual joy, a joy caused by the prayer of the mind and by taking heed, when the mind will get far from the five external senses and he will lock up the mind in the internal and natural chamber, or in the wilderness[1357]. This is for, as the two-edged sword, wherever you will wield it to, it cuts with its edge the things it reaches at, likewise it works the Prayer to Jesus: sometime, by being turned towards the evil thoughts and towards passions, and some other times towards sin, and towards remembering the death and the eternal toils[1358].

And if somebody will want, without this prayer, and only by using the singing of prayers with the external senses and with the external opposition, to topple down the enemies' attacks and to resist any passion, or any cunning thought, that one will be quickly defeated, and for many times. This is because the devil here defeats the one who resists him, and here the devil obeys him pretending to be defeated by him. By this, the devil mocks him, making him tending towards vain glory and towards [1357] The outside wilderness is an image of the inside, when emptied by any thoughts. Only thus, the mind can focus exclusively upon God; or, only thus the mind can maker a clean prayer. But one must notice that, while aspiring towards this emptying of thoughts, the spiritual man doesn't' want to become indifferent. By that, he achieves out of the union with Christ, and overwhelming kindness and a clean love for everybody and for all things. Properly-said, he empties on himself only of the passionate, egotistic attitudes towards people and things, and not of all attitudes. It is recommended no longer to be seen the realities in themselves, namely dispersed, but as united with God.

[1358] It seems that there is a contradiction between the recommendation that the mind to be emptied in order the clean prayer to be done, and the affirmation that this prayer itself produces an emptying, by cutting off any content from within the mind, in order the mind to do the clean prayer. Actually, the mind's emptying starts through prayer and, gradually, to the extent the mind advances towards the state of clean prayer, the prayer empties, more fully, the mind of other contents. It is required only the man to not reconcile himself to a continuous co-inhabitance between prayer and thoughts.

inattention and by making him considering himself as the sheep's shepherd and teacher.

Knowing that, Saint Hesychius says: "Our mind cannot defeat, by itself, the devilish hallucinations. Let it never hope that it will be able to do that. This is because (the enemies) are very cunning and they pretend that they obey. And thus, they impede you with the vain glory. But they cannot, even for a little while, to resist the calling of Jesus Christ" (Hesychius I, 24; The Romanian Philokalia, volume IV, p. 46. And again: "Take heed lest you liken yourself to Israel from yore, and thus, you to be given to the enemies thought with the mind. This is for, by being Israel delivered from Egyptians, by the God of everybody, Israel contrived, as help, idols made out of clay. And through idol made of clay, you must understand our helpless mind which, when calling upon Jesus Christ against the evil ghosts, it easily banishes those evil thought away, and with wonderful science, it defeats the unseen attacks of the enemy. But the more the mind trusts to itself, recklessly, the more the mind crumbles down like the martin who rolls down" (Hesychius I, 25-26; The Romanian Philokalia, volume IV, p. 47). And this suffices in order to know the power and the measure of the mind's work and of the outside work, namely that power of the outside prayer and singing.

But don't reckon, you the right-believing reader, that, the Holy Fathers, by taking us from the external much-singing, and by commanding us to accustom ourselves to the work of the mind, they disregard the psalms and the canons (the troparia). Let's not be that. This is for those are given, by the Holy Ghost, to the Holy Church, within which is being done the whole work of sanctification through ordination and the whole mystery of God-the Word's oikonomia, until His second coming, within which our resurrection is comprised too. And there isn't something human in the churchly rule, but everything is a gift from God, not receiving any adding from our worthiness, either any diminution because of our sins.

But our work doesn't tackle with the Church's rules, but it analyzes the individual rule and living, of any monk, who, through zeal and through the heart's righteousness, he has accustomed himself to achieving the gift of the Holy Ghost, and not through the simple words of the Psalms (without taking heed at them) by only singing them with his lips and with his tongue[1359].

This is for the Apostle says: "I want to say five words with my mind, instead of thousands with my tongue" (1 Cor. 14: 19). Therefore, it is due, firstly, us to clean our mind and our heart with five such words, by saying within our heart's depth: "Lord Jesus Christ, have mercy on me", and so we will ascend to the understanding singing. This is because any beginner, who still is a passionate human being, he can do with his understanding, this prayer, into the guarding of his heart. And the singing cannot do that, by any means, until the mind will be, firstly, cleaned up with this prayer[1360]. This is why Saint Gregory of Sinai, by thoroughly researching the lives and the writings and the spiritual experience of all the Saints, more than anyone did it, through the Holy Ghost Who lived within him, asked us to make all efforts for prayer. And Saint Simeon, the Archbishop of Salonica, by having the same Ghost and gift, he commanded to hierarchs, to priests, to monks, and to all laymen, and he advised them to continuously say this prayer and to unite it with their breathing. He says together with the Apostle: "There isn't either in heavens or on earth, a stronger weapon than the name of Jesus Christ".

And you need to know this, you who crave for this holy work of the mind, that the teachers and the most ones who were practicing this prayer, they weren't living into wilderness, or as hermits. This is for they mostly lived in the big monasteries, who were placed in the middle of the cities. We wonder how Patriarch Photios, being him elevated to the rank of patriarch from his previous government position, and not being him a monk, he got [1359] As in case of Theoleptos of Philadelphia, Basil from Poiana Mărului too, he recognizes the importance of the Church. Withing Church we receive the grace, with the help of which we develop our live into Christ Who leads us towards salvation. Although, Basil regards the Prayer of the Heart as something special, and therefore somehow outside what is being committed within Church. This somewhat dualistic vision, it is surpassed in the Romanian "Methods" of praying to Jesus.

[1360] We have here a different succession than at Abbot Gheorghe. At the last one, in the first place, there is the singing and then it follows the prayer of the heart (as also at Saint Gregory of Sinai and at the other Ancient Fathers). At Basil from Poiana Mărului, it firstly comes the Prayer to Jesus and then it comes the singing. Actually, both prayer and singing have diverse stages. The more someone ascends in consummately doing the Prayer to Jesus, the more spiritually he utters or he sings the other prayers too. Anyway, they must be combined, in order the believer to remain, on one hand, within Church, and on the other hand, to be him gradually spiritualized.

so accustomed to this work of the mind[1361]. And so much he advanced, that his face was shining like that one of Moses, by the gift of the Holy Ghost Who was within him, like Simeon of Thessaloniki says. This one confesses that that one even composed a book about this work of the mind, with the whole philosophical wisdom. He also says that the holy patriarchs of Constantinople, Saint John Chrysostom and Ignatius and Kallistos, they wrote, at their turn, books about this work. Aren't these enough to you, o, you loving of Christ reader, in order to, by forsaking any doubt, top start getting accustomed to the taking heed of the mind? If you say: I am not living in loneliness, what benefit will I take? I will answer you that Saint Patriarch Kallistos got accustomed with the work of the mind in the big Monastery from Athos, while serving in kitchen. And if you doubt because you aren't in a deep wilderness, the second example will be Saint Bishop Photios. And again, if you get lazy at the mind watchfulness, bringing as argument the tasks you have to accomplish, you will again be object of laughter. This is because either the wilderness, or the lonely life, the do not bring such an increase in this work, as obeying with understanding, says Saint Gregory of Sinai.

And if you fear the right side (the sin of getting haughty for abundantly having a certain virtue, o. n.), because of not having a teacher, in this regard the Lord Himself commands you to learn out of the Holy Scriptures, by saying: "Study the Scriptures and within them you will have the eternal life" (Jn. 5: 39).

And if you lean leftwards, by being you troubled of not having a quiet place, in this too you will be strengthened by Saint Peter the Damascene, who said: "This is the beginning of the man's salvation, to forsake his will and understanding and to make, as his own, the God's will and understanding. Then, there won't be in any creation a thing, or a beginning, or a place, which to be able to impede him".

And if you feel yourself impede even more, by finding out reasons for that in many words belonging to Saint Gregory of Sinai, who presented us many aspects concerning the deceit emerging out of this work, the same mentioned Saint guides you, by saying: "It is inappropriate us to fear, or to doubt about calling the God. This is for, even if some people deviated, and they got harmed in their mind, you must understand that they suffered that because they wanted to work according to their own will, because of their haughtiness. This is for, the one who searches for God with obedience, and by asking, and by humbly thinking, he won't ever be harmed, for the grace of Christ Who wants "that every man to be saved" (1 Tim. 2: 4)[1362]. This is for, the ones who lives rightly and without blemish, by avoiding the self-content and the haughtiness of his mind, even if all the devilish groups rise upon him thousands of temptations, he will remain unharmed, as the Holy Fathers said. But the one who walks according to his own rule, and according to his own advice, he will fall into deceit. And if somebody stumbles upon the stone of the writing (by reading the things written about deceit), towards stopping the mind's work, let him know about himself that he is turning the things up-side-down. This is for, not towards stopping this work, but in order to defend us against deceit, the Holy Fathers showed us the ways the deceit comes to us. That's why Saint Gregory of Sinai commands us not to fear, neither to doubt, while getting us accustomed to the Prayer to Jesus. He presents two causes of the deceit: working according to our own rule, and the haughtiness of the cogitation[1363].

By wanting us to remain not-guilty of these things, the Holy Father command us to study the holy writings and to get ourselves corrected by them. "Let his have his brother as a good adviser, says Saint Peter Damascene, and if he cannot find a good in word and in his deeds abbot, in the image of the Holy Fathers, and a good knower of the Holy Fathers' writing, then it will be appropriate to him to silently receive the spiritual advising out of the teaching and the writings of Holy Fathers, and to search within them answer to everything in order to do good deeds". So, we must, at our turn, to read the writings, to guard this measure and this rule, and not to avoid their teaching and guidance, as do the ones who aren't experienced in the [1362] About deceit and other causes. The Greek Pholokalia, volume IV, p. 87, Third Edition.

[1363] These are the passions of the pride, opposite to obedience and to humble cogitation. The first one is the pride manifested outwardly, and the second one is the pride cultivated within the soul.

mind's work, and, by reckoning on themselves as rightly judging, they present themselves, or, better said, they pretend to be, as they would know what they are doing, even when they refuse to get accustomed to this holy work, by invoking three motifs.

The first reason why, it is that they let this work to belong only to the holy and dispassionate believers, because of reckoning that only to those ones it fits, and not to the passionate ones. The second reason why, it is the almost total absence of the teachers in this kind of living. And the third reason why, it is the deceit that can emerge out of this work.

The first reason is useless and unfair. This is for, even the first stage of the beginner monks, it owes to diminish the passions through the mind's watchfulness and by guarding the heart, and this is the prayer of the mind needed by the doers[1364]. The second reason, it also is lacking its judgment or its justification. This is for, as it was told before, in the place of the teacher we have the writings as a teacher, when the teacher is absent. And the third one is that one out of which somebody makes an impediment to himself. This is because, by reading just in order to deceit himself, he stumbles upon writings, by understanding them wrongly. This is because, instead of receiving the writing in order to guard himself, and in order to know the deceit, he considers them and he receives then as cause for running away from the mind's work. This is like someone amongst the chief commanders, when announced to somebody that the enemy stalks him on his way, and that the enemy waits for him in hidden, because the enemy is unable to wage war to him openly, this commander, as one lacking any skills, instead of unveiling this in order to defeat the enemy, he gets scared and he runs away, and so he becomes object of rebuking amongst people, and especially before his emperor and of emperor's advisers.

And, fi you fear such kind of work and accustoming only because of your nature and stupidity, I will much more strongly fear for you. This is because you mustn't avoid going into forest because of some stupid stories, or because of fearing the wolf. This is for you must fear only God, and never to run away because of fear or to deny Him. Truly, this work requires fear and tremble, the crushing of the heart and humbleness and much studying the holy writings, but not fear and rejection, neither work according to the own pleasure. This is because it was said: "The daring and careless one, by wanting more than he is capable of, he haughtily runs towards what he wants, for he wants to reach there before the due time". And again: "If somebody imagines that he will easily reach the high things, he has achieved a devilish lust, and not the truth. And such a man is easily trapped by the devil and made devil's slave".

[1364] So, according to Basil from Poiana Mărului, there is a prayer of the mind that must be done even by the monks being on the level of the doing. This is a mind's prayer according to their measure and adapted to their state of cleaning of passions and of working of virtues. Itself this prayer helps to diminishing the passions and to advancing towards higher stages of the mind's prayer, all the way up to the all-clean of thoughts and passions prayer.

And why must we crave for the ceaseless increase of our mind in the prayer which only one in thousands is found worthy of, as Saint Isaac says? It will be enough to us, to the sinners, to experience at least the trace of the mind's peace, which is the working prayer of the mind, which one banishes with, from within his heart, the enemy's adding and the evil thoughts, and which belongs to the beginner monks and to the passionate ones and which somebody will be elevated through, at the seer (contemplative) and spiritual prayer, if God wants that. And we mustn't weaken, because of that, because not many are found worthy of the seer prayer[1365]. But this is not there it would be injustice at God. But we only must not get lazy on the path leading us to this holy prayer, namely not to get lazy resisting the passions and the deceits and the evil thoughts, through the mind's working. This is for, by advancing us on this path of the saints, we will be found worthy of being partakers with them, even if we do not achieve the consummation while being in this life, as Saint Isaac and other many saints said.

But – and this is worthy of wonder about and scarry -: How comes that someone, by knowing the writings, he doesn't experience to do what the writings tell? And other, without knowing the writings, neither asking for guidance, they dare to come closer, with their understanding, to the mind's taking heed? And some of them even tell that the taking of heed and the prayer must work in the lusting part, and they say that this part is placed in the middle of the belly and not in the heart.

And this is the first and the most wanted amongst deceits[1366]. This is for, not only that the prayer and the taking heed mustn't be done while focusing on that place, but neither the warmth coming from the lusting part, to the heart, it must not be accepted by any means. And when one speaks about the middle of the belly, we must understand that that is the heart, as says Saint Theophylact. And the heart's place isn't in the bellybutton, nor in the middle of the belly, but it is on the left side of the chest[1367].

This is for, the three parts of the soul are placed like this: the rational part (the speaking part) within the chest, the part of the anger or of the craving, within the heart[1368], and the lusting part in the bellybutton[1369]. The devil easily enters here, as Job says: "It fill is up with slobber, as the leeches and as the frogs in [1366] We have here the proof that in the Romanian and Russian Traditions (but also in the Greek one, as the neo-Greek text of "The Method of the Holy Prayer and Attention" it tells us), it has been argued against the accusation invented by the adversaries, perhaps some Catholicizing ones, who spoke against hesychasm (see the note at the Method of Nicephorus from Loneliness, in The Romanian Philokalia, volume VII), namely that the hesychasts directed their sight towards the middle of their belly. By this, many people were impeded from practicing the Prayer to Jesus.

[1367] In "Foreword" at Philotheos of Sinai, Basil from Poiana Mărului, insists longer on the fact that the mind must search above the heart, as an emperor, and not on the right side of the chest, neither in the lower parts, in order not to stir up the heat of the anger within the chest, or the heat of the lust from the lower parts of the heart. But what is new at Basil, it is that he asks for the mind not to search either in the middle of the heart, but in a place situated above the heart, for, according to him, the heart is the headquarters of the rationality and therefore, if the mind focused on that middle, the mind, or the rationality, it would remain in itself, in a pure rationality. The mind must try to reach above itself, and to master upon itself, as an emperor. The human being must search for reaching even above himself, namely to be elevated above himself, towards God, towards God's infinite truth, and to enter the relation with God, by exceeding on himself, as his nature requires. But, in order the mind to do that, it must remain near to its won center, namely near to the heart, for only through the heart the mind can ascend above itself. The idea that the heart is the center of the cogitation it is justified by the fact that the heart is the vital center of the organism, and therefore of the cogitation, too, for the cogitation drives the whole man. Into the heart, and though through the heart above his heart: there must the man be.

[1368] The anger or the craving: the soul's energy. It is the soul's power. That's why it is seen like corresponding to the chest, where the physical power is concentrated.

[1369] The lusting part is shown in the body's softness, in the body's extreme passiveness. If this part is led by cogitation and strength, it becomes a sentiment attaching, with love, to the truly high strong and high realities, to God, or it looks towards Him. Otherwise, it goes insane, or it is made the slave of the evil one, and to the apparently strong realities and passingly.

the muddy pond, nourishing and sweetening themselves with the saltiness of the lust". That's why, Saint Andrew of Sinai says: "There is a great need to reach the proven truth and to be clean of the things which are opposite to the gift. This is because, especially within the beginners, the devil uses to give the deceitfulness the image of the truth, by giving his tricks spiritual countenances, namely by replacing one for others.

This replacement he does it in the middle of the belly too, by bringing instead of the naturel warmth, his burning, and instead of the gladness (natural), a beastly joy" (The Greek Philokalia, Third Edition, volume IV, p. 76).

But I reckon that is natural that the worker must know also this: the burning or the warmth coming out of the middle (from the middle of the belly, o. n.) to the heart, sometime it comes out by itself, in a natural manner, without thoughts of fornication. "And this is not deceit, but it is the manifestation of the nature", says Saint Kallistos the Patriarch. "And if somebody reckons that it is from the gift too, and not only from nature, this truly will be a deceit"[1370]. And the same one, he says again: "What sort are these ones, he mustn't be concerned with that, the one who lives in ascesis, but he must simply reject them".

But some other times, the devil himself mixes his heat within our lust, and by this he attracts our mind to fornication thoughts. And this non-mistakenly is deceit.

And if the whole body get warmed up, but the mind is clean and passionless, so that the mind enters the depth of the heart, starting and doing the prayer within the heart, let it be known that this truly is from the grace, and it isn't a deceit.

But it happens to some of the ones living in ascesis, not a little bodily impediment and helplessness, in this holy work. This is because of not being able to keep with measure and with assertiveness the above-nature toils and fasting which the saints were accomplishing, it seems to them impossible to start, without these ones, the mind's work. Dogging them against this loss, through the measure he established, Great Basil teaches us like this: "The restraint will be established according to the bodily power of each one". I truly believe that one must take this too, in his account, lest, by crushing with the measureless restraint the bodily power, to make our body exhausted and helpless in what regards the spiritual advancing. This is for we must have this one working, and by no means to weaken it through the lacks of measure. This is for, if it had been good to weaken our bodies and to linger barely alive, God would have made us like that from the beginning. But, since He didn't make us like that, are wrong the ones who don't guard what has been done.

[1370] There are, within body, warmth and warmth. There is a warmth of the clean prayer, when the feeling is taken in the prayer's service, and there is warmth of the nature, when the feeling isn't elevated towards something higher than what passingly satisfies the nature. But there is too, warmth stirred up by impulses from below nature, belonging to the hatred, to the immeasurable and contrary to nature lusts, warmth belonging to the disorder in the individual and social life. This warmth wings up the sin, namely the impulse towards evil. Then, the soul's and body's powers, they are ignited by devils as personal enters of the evil, worse than the man can be.

The one who fasts, he must guard, therefore, only the right-faith, in order not to nest the evilness in his soul, due to the laziness; in order not to weaken the mind's watchfulness and the purposely raising of the cogitation towards God; this is in order the godlike feeling not to get darken, neither to get darken the illumination emerging, out of it, within the soul. This is for, if the mentioned good things will increase, the passions won't find a time to raise against the body. This is for, by being the soul occupied with the things from above, it won't give the body time for passions' awakening. That's why, once this state produced within the soul, the one eating certain food, he won't differ by anything from the one who doesn't eat that food. And we even say that one like this, he has kept not only the fasting, but also that forever-restraint. And he is commendable for the exquisite care for, and taking heed at his body. This is for the temperate life doesn't heat up the passions. This is said also by Saint Isaac the Syrian: "If you will force the helpless body over measure, that will bring the soul disturbance over disturbance". And Saint John Climacus says: "I have this this enemy (the belly) rested and giving the soul watchfulness". And again: "I've seen this enemy melted down by fasting and still full of sin, and this is in order not us to hope in ourselves, but in order us to hope towards the living God". This fits also the happening told by All-Pious Nikon, saying: "At that time there was an old man living alone into wilderness, who didn't see people for thirty years and who didn't eat bread, but only roots; but he said that during all those years he was very upset by the devil of the fornication. And the Holy Fathers reckoned that neither the haughtiness, nor the food was the cause for that war, but the fact that that old man wasn't accustomed to the mind's watchfulness and to fight against the enemies' deceits".

That's why Saint Maximos says too: "Give to the body according to the strength and turn the whole your ascesis towards the mind's work". And again, Saint Diadochus says: "The fasting has praise in itself, but not from God". This is for, the fasting works and it sets in order, the whole being of the ones who want the fasting. So, it is inappropriate to the right-believers to boast about their fasting, but let them see the target of our cogitation into God. "This is because the craftsmen of any craftsmanship never boast with their tools, like those tools would be the end of their craftsmanship, but each one of them waits for finishing the work with the help of those tools, in order they to truly show their craftsmanship" (Head no. 47; The Romanian Philokalia, volume I, pp. 352-353).

But, by having a state fitting the receiving of a certain kind of food, do not put the whole your zeal and hope only in the fasting. But, by fasting with measure, and according to your power, force yourself in mind's work. If you have power to get fed only with bread and water, it is good. For it is said: "No other food strengthens the body as the bread and the water do. But, do not think you are accomplishing some good deed by fasting thus, but hope for gaining, out of fasting, the whole temperance. And thus, your fasting will be with understanding", says Saint Dorotheos.

And if you are helpless, Saint Gregory of Sinai commands you to eat a quarter of kilogram piece of bread, and to drink three or four glasses of wine, or of water, if you want to find God; and to eat a little of all the sweet things which you will be offered with, in order you to get rid of thought's haughtiness, and in order not to get disgusted of the good things God has created, but to thank Him for everything. And this is the judgment of the skillful ones.

This is for, if you doubt about your salvation because you eat all the sweet food and you drink a little wine, this comes out of your faithlessness and out of your thought's helplessness. And eating some foods, without committing a sin, and according to God's will, one can find it in three states of the soul: in restraint, in getting fed, and in satiation. The restraint means to still be hungry when you get up from the table; the getting fed means not being either hungry or burdened with food; and the satiation means to get a little burdened with food.

These all things have been shown to you, o, you lover of mind's work and lover of mind's taking of heed, only out of the word of the great Holy Fathers: what the measure of the restraint is like and what the balanced fasting is like; and what someone must live in ascesis like, while also taking heed at it. So, by hearing these things, we owe not to get far from the mind's work, but we owe to force ourselves into this with the whole our zeal, praying our Lord Jesus Christ to be our helper and Teacher into this. Whom the whole glory, and honor, and worshipping are due to, forever and ever. Amen.

Out of the Advices of Abbot Gheorghe From Cernica Monastery

1. "So, through right-reckoning, after my death, search in the right side of my spiritual bosom, for what means the escape of the mind from under the thoughts' slavery, for, you might find a valuable little treasure chest, symbolizing the heart's cleanness, that one not-stollen by thought. And, by opening that treasure chest, you might find another treasure chest, made of clay and painted, namely the defeat upon despair, with may sorts of toils through this body made out of clay. By breaking that one too, in pieces, you will find, in it, three much valuable gems, which are called as the gain of the three parts of the repented soul, which I extol the Holy Trinity through, by serving the Holy Trinity ever since my birth.

And again, in the name of the Father, I have made myself an example amongst you, through the fruit of the love, by equally loving all of you. In the name of the Son, I placed myself under the feet of everybody, in order I to be able to hunt, through patience, your souls in the name of the Holy Ghost, I didn't let the senses fly over the nature's border, for I felt mercy on you, and I warmed you next to my heart's joy, and directing you towards the shore of the salvation"[1371].

[1371] This is a paragraph from "The Testament of Abbot Gheorghe", published by Cassian from Cernica, in Istoriile Mănăstirilor Cernica și Căldărulșani (The Histories of Cernica and Căldăruşani Monasteries) (pp. 30-31). Abbot Gheorghe left to the monks form his monastic community, as inheritance, his example imprinted in the most intimate part of his being, but which they can discover, though, only through their own wisdom. This inheritance is the hearts cleanness. But this has, at its basis, the victory upon despair, one achieved with many toils of the body. According to Abbot Gheorghe, all the ascetic toils lead to gaining the hope and, out of the hope's firmness, it grows up the cleanness of that heart that puts the whole its hope – a

2. "Again, with the gift of the gentleness I am adding commandments to the my cross-bearer sons, how you to be like some angels into body, not leaning yourselves down towards liar vanities, neither to restless delectations, or to walks which are inappropriate to your gift, according to the word said by the vessel of the choice: "Because, though all things are allowed to me, but not all of them are useful to me" (1 Cor. 6: 12). Therefore, both the good habit and the adornment of the countenance, to be composed according to the right-following, as I said, by likening yourselves to those young all-pious Saints, who were of same age as you are, according to the human nature. So, you take example of blessed patience, from Acacius, the one who was totally like the martyrs. You take clean example of obedience, from Dositheos, the one who totally lacked the evilness. And you take example of humble wisdom from Zachariah, the one who suffered much. But let's look also at that evil willing against, which is followed by perdition and damnation, if we want to escape Esau's falling, or that one of Gehazy and of Judah. This is because, it is written that: "Serve the Lord with fear and rejoice of Him with tremble".

This is for, if you spend the days of your life by taking heed, and not into carelessness, you won't be touched by any devilish craftsmanship. This is for you must know, my beloved sons, that the intrigue, the envy, the greediness, the cunningness, the anger, the remembrance of the evil and the haughtiness, ever since the creation of the world, they do not know how to honor the all-pleasant to God increase, and hope raised above the hopelessness of all the disappointed hopes in the temporary things - in God Who is the ultimate and unbreakable gem, of our life. And deeper than these, there are the three much valuable stones, or the three powers of the soul, as cleaned with the power of the love coming from the Holy Trinity: the cogitation, the lust, and the anger. These ones have been cleaned by serving only the Holy Trinity. Properly-said, the foundation stone of our being, filled up with hope and cleanness, it has three sides: the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.

Out of the Father's power, Abbot Gheorghe was able to love, equally, all the members of the monastic community, like the Father loves everybody, for He is everyone's Father; out of the Son's power, Abbot Gheorghe endured all things from everybody, in order him to gain all of them; out of the Holy Ghost's power, Abbot Gheorghe remained close to everyone, in communion with them, in order him to take all of them towards salvation. This is a spiritual theology placing the Holy Trinity as the basis of the threefold unity of the soul, and at the basis of the communion, and which makes of the Holy Trinity the source of reunification of the threefold soul and of the tight communion between the persons who are not confounded to one another, neither they hinder one another in their development. The Trinitarian harmony is seen as the basis of the endeavors for restoring the soul's and social harmony.

And into the toils of your brotherhood, the loving-of-people God will be extolled, and you will inherit the peace that turns back again, to the adornment according to the nature, the ones who have their mind whole. Through them, you become too, to many, mirror for correction and you will rejoice into the light of the living ones"[1372].

3. "So, reckon this step f the ladder as being the most comprising commandment. This is for, on this, is based the whole beginning of the monks' salvation: honor the obedience towards one another just like your breath. But not out of a non-blessed by God interest, but only towards the benefit of your neighbor, in order you to fulfill too, the love decided by the law"[1373].

[1373] Testament…, at Cassian of Cernica, quoted work, p. 36. Out of the whole Testament of Abbot Gheorghe we can see that it results the fact that he saw the love as the main factor of the cohesion, of the communion (for the monks: of the monastic community) as the most comprising virtue. Also, in order to accomplish a communion into love, which isn't hindered by the personal and ethnical differences, but it uses these for strengthening the communion, firstly in smaller units, Abbot Gheorghe gives also the order that in his monastic community to be admitted only Romanian monks, and not also monks belonging to other nationalities, as it was in Paisius's monastic community.

The Typicon of that Holy Prayer Done with the Mind, as It Has been Received from FATHER JOSEPH. Written in the Year 1810[1374]

After the bell rung for awakening, you immediately rise up and bow to the ground, for three times. Start praying: "Glory to You our God…", "Heavenly Emperor…", "Holy God" and, after "Our Father…", the Trinitarian troparia: namely the four troparia: "Getting us awake from sleep". Then: "Come to worship…", for three times, and the Psalm no. 50: "Have merci on me, God…", "I believe in One God…". Then: "Birth-Giver of God, Virgin…", "You Baptizer of Christ…, you pray for us…", "Under your mercifulness…", then: "It is due to bless you…" and then say the otpust[1375]. Then you start comprisingly confessing all your sins, then: "Loose us, forgive us…", "And on the ones who hate us…" and 50 big prostrations, or what you have from your spiritual father.

After these ones, gather all your senses together, and lean your head towards your left shoulder. Then close up your mouth and put two of your right hand's finger on your chests' left side, right above your heart[1376]. And then you inhale through your nostrils, slowly, in the depths of your chest[1377]. And there you say: "Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, have mercy on me". And do not focus your mind on your nose's breathing. But let your mind overshadowing the depth of your heart, while saying the all-desired name. Neither imagine your heart, or something else. And do this only for a quarter of an hour, in order not to burden your mind, for you are a beginner.

[1374] Manuscript from the Library of the Romanian Academia, no. 1441, f. 2 r – 4 r. It is a sure thing, that the author of this manuscript is identical to Hiero-Schemamonk Joseph, the spiritual guide of the Văratec Monastery, with whose blessing, the Abbess of Văratec Monastery wrote, at the beginning of XVIII Century, the manuscript of Văratec Monastery, comprising "Raiul" ("The Paradise") of Patriarch Kallistos, numbered as an independent writing, unlike the text from The Greek Philokalia, which is numbered as integral part of the writing in 14 heads "About Prayer". To be seen some data regarding his life, in the present volume, vid supra, at the end of the article "Isihaștii ori hesihaștii în tradiția ortodoxiei românești" ("The Hesychasts in the Tradition of the Romanian Orthodoxy").

Then, go to the Matins, and find there a little place, and keep your fingers on your heart, but under your coat, and there you do not lean your head down, in order somebody else not to notice and understand what you are doing. And there, you will say the prayer for a quarter of an hour, and do not weaken with your mouth, o, my little brother[1378].

And, after the Matin will come to an end, read the hymns dedicated to the Mother of the Lord, and whatever you know more. And, if you want, allow yourself to sleep for a little while. And then, you will pry again, with your mind, for a quarter of an hour. Then, on the eight hours, you will pray again for a quarter of an hour. Then read whatever you know more, and then go to sleep. And do this, daily, for five time on the day. But, do not overlook the tasks you are given by the community, even if you will miss the mentioned moments for praying, because you must believe that the salvation is in obedience. And going to accomplish your tasks, occupy yourself with the silence and with [1376] By asking us to close our mouth up, the author implicitly recommends us to say the prayer's words rather with the mind (of course, starting up from a certain level of accustoming to the prayer). Then, through the fingers placed right above our heart, the seeing is helped to focus right upon the place where the upper part of the heart is. The connection between body and soul, it is mostly used in order to accomplish some acts and states within the soul, which are produced with the help of some body's organs. Especially, by focusing the bodily sight upon the place where the upper side of the heart made of flesh is, one accomplishes a focusing of his mind, or of his thinking, towards his spiritual heart.

[1377] It is required the air not to be inhaled noisily, but smoothly and little by little, in order to ease the detaching of the cogitation from the material realities, and even the detaching from this act of breathing.

[1378] It is easier to keep saying the words with your mouth than with your mind. This is because of needing a greater focusing when saying the words with the mind. That's why, even when the mind is no longer able to focus on these words, one must continue uttering those words at least with his mouth, a fact that requires less strained focusing. And the mind must be released, willingly, from this concentration, before the mind renounces, unwillingly, because of the tiredness.

being simple. And thus, little by little, you will teach your mind while still not burdening it[1379].

But also, when you will utter the prayer with your tongue, you still must overshadow, with your mind, the holy table from the heart's altar[1380].

You always follow this, and let nothing to separate you from the love for Christ, neither the trouble, nor the disgust. Neither the other things.

Gervase the Monk

[1379] This Method doesn't only ask for identically repeating the prayer, but it also shows the mode one can progress towards God, or to more prayer with his mind, or to a deeper focusing on the prayer. As far as we know, this is the only Method showing that.

[1380] The mind will be able to look, through the heart's opening – or the opening of the own self's indefinite, at the godlike limitlessness, even if there aren't uttered the words of the prayer. The tongue isn't allowed to say these words without a participation of the conscience.

The Good Rule of the Living by One's Self

The Good Rule as Established by the Holy Fathers, as It Is Appropriate to Monk Who Lives Outside the Community's Life (Who Lives by Himself), In Order Him to Live in Taking of Heed, as the Fathers from Yore Did[1381]

"Make all efforts, oh, you monk, in order you not to sleep during night, more than three hours, or, during winter, at most for four hours. And immediately when awakening from sleep, wash your eyes with cold water and, starting as usual, give glory to the Lord, saying: "Our Father…", the troparia: "Awakening Us from Sleep…" and the two prayers: "Awakening Us from Sleep…" and "Glory to You Emperor…". Then leave the litany and start doing your canon of prayers, by doing, in the beginning, seven great prostrations, and then the kneelings.

And these great prostrations, in the Holy Mountain, to the one who has the great Schema, they are in number of 120, day and night. So, you do seven great prostrations, with your knees on the ground, and after each one, you will stand up on your feet and you will say the holy Prayer at Jesus, each time you will mark upon yourself the sign of the cross, namely: "Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, have mercy on me the sinner", by whispering the prayer with your mouth or by saying it in your thought. If it will be possible to you, hold the nostrils' breath until you'll finish the prayer's words. Say the words with your mind and think at nothing else, except only at the words you utter, while searching for the place where your heart is.

[1381] Manuscript in the Library of the Romanian Academia, no. 1841, f. 119 5r – 154 v. It follows a description of the situation of the monasteries from the Romanian Country and from the Holy Mountain. The same hand copied, in the same manuscript, before this description, the text written by Kallistos Tilicudes: The Word for Getting Skillful to Appeasement (f. 102 v – 118 v), given before in this volume. At the end of Tillicudes's "Word" it is written: "This word was written by me, the humble Schemamonk Gheorghe, a brother in monasticism. Bought by Hyacinth (something indecipherable), Hiero-Schemamonk from Robaia, through Angious Pavlou (in Greek), 1818.

Likewise, you will do twelve bowings down to the ground, standing upwards after each on them, and then bowing yourself down until reaching the ground with your hand, while still uttering this Prayer to our Lord Jesus Christ, uttered with great humbleness and with tears, if possible, and not forgetting about the prayer because of some disturbance or noise.

The you will sit down for a little while, giving peace to your heart, as it was said. And then you will read six psalms, sand "God is the Lord", with troparia. Then start reading the Book of Psalms, reading each time two cathisma. If you feel yourself weakened, you may sit down. And you will continue with the next prayers, in the same mode.

Then, say: "Have mercy on me, God" and read a canon, whichsoever you will want. If you can read: on Monday the one addressed to the angels, on Tuesday that one addressed to the Baptizer, on Wednesday that one addressed to Lord's Mother, on Thursday that one addressed to the Holy Apostles, on Friday that one addressed to the Honored Cross, on Saturday that one addressed to all the Saints, and on Sunday that one addressed to the Lord, it will be a very good rule. This is for I remember that this rule is being kept by the Fathers living into loneliness and in the Holy Mountain of Athos. After the canon, read whatever you like more, with the verses: "All the Creatures", and three psalms and the Glory, and then the Third Hour, and then you will finish.

If it is winter, start working with your hands, and do not let yourself falling asleep, for, if you do so, you will find much benefit, by remaining awake after reading and by taking heed at yourself. And if you are very strongly engulfed by weakness, you may rest for a little while, because the nights are long during winter. And if there is summer, you will absolutely not sleep.

And if it is Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, endure while working into the taking heed of the heart, until the seventh hours will come, or at leas until the sixth hours. And then, by standing yourself up, read the Hours with the Blessings, and the Apostle: "Brothers, the fruit of the Ghost is the love, and the joy, and the peace" and the others (from the Epistle towards Galatians), then the Gospel according to Luke: "The Lord said this parable: some judge who didn't fear God neither he felt shame because of people". Then: "I will bless the Lord, I will extoll You, my God", "It is really due" and the otpust.

And some of the Fathers, as I've seen and heard, and as I felt by trying too, after they awaken from sleep and appease themselves a little, by taking heed at their heart and by thinking at "Lord Jesus Christ", they stand on their feet and start their prayers, and after each hundred, they do 12 great prostrations. Then they appease themselves. After that, they read the Midnight Office and the Matins. And then they appease themselves. And then they do again bowings down, each time after passing a hundred prayer beads, they do bowings down. After doing so, you will rest yourself too; when possible, darken your monastic cell by placing a curtain against the window. If you are disturbed because of seeing somebody, you will close up your eyes in order to see nobody and to keep your thought and your mind focused on the prayer's words and on the place from above the heart. And, in addition to that, stop your mind wandering in the disorder of the thoughts, or, even more important, make so to your heart. You won't take heed, by any means, at thinking something else; even if that thing is good, it still isn't good. You must force your mind to thing only at "Lord Jesus Who are everywhere and fulfill everything". Neither some hallucination, either big of small, nor light, neither fire, nor voice, neither rumble, nor any image regardless what, either seeing it or hearing it, you mustn't believe it. Neither will you take heed at something like that even if they ever happen to you. This is because all of these are appearances and lies. I reckon, to some extent, out of my own research, that I have experiences such things. But I also have discussed regarding these things, with other persons, who saw and hear even greater things and hallucinations. This is because the ones who appease themselves with their mind and with their body, until they have crossed through these liar appearances, they won't be able to come to the truly good advancement.

Neither you must get scared, by any means, by the fear appearing while your sleep, or by sounds, of by being called on your name. And one mustn't believe, by any means, in gains obtained in dreams, or to take heed to something like those. Neither one must think at what those gains were like, good or bad. This is because of, by trusting many such things, a person can come to self-appreciation and get corrupted. But it seems to me, as the Saints say, that it is beneficial and towards advancement, that, by crossing through these happenings, which you won't be able to understand, you to search for guidance and correction, because, without advice, many get lost. And, when you have nobody whom to ask your questions to, by letting yourself to the mercy of God, do your praying program, either you are sleeping, or you are awake, either you are eating, or you are drinking, or you are doing whatever thing.

This is for, the prayer will teach you all the things and it will be useful to you, until you will be able to understand.

And after getting up, and at least until the time for lunch, do not talk to anybody and avoid any company. And if you aren't alone, but you have at least a disciple, you will establish everything since evening. This is for, we are commanded to give God our things in thinking and then to establish and to think at the things needed for the body, or for any other need. And you will be able to do all these things, when you are with nobody and having no worries. This is for, you will throw all your worries away, while being heavenly and human church. You must set all the things in order from before, and then you will be able to have no worries. This is for you to have no worries, neither task received from another person, except only the strictly necessary ones. And thus, you will be able to become a resting place and to be voiceless even while in council. Thus, the ones who are skillful in these things, by having the Holy Scripture in front of them, they ascend to the better things, in order they having eternal life.

And after the otpust of that hour, eat the usual food, according to the rule of the Holy Fathers, by paying the whole attention, eating on those days only once a day, not drinking wine and not eating oil. And on Tuesdays and on Thursday, if you eat twice a day and with temperance, you won't commit sin, even if you drink a little wine and by adding a little oil in the soup. And if you drink the quantity of a glass of wine, you will mix that wine with water equivalent to three glasses, and if you drink the wine unmixed with water, you will be allowed to drink two glasses of wine. And your glass to be of 240 cc, and no more. And if you decide to eat also only once a day, you will benefit much, and while standing on your feet, during night, you will advance.

And it is due, on Saturday and on Sunday to eat twice a day, eating all the allowed things, with temperance, for the glory of God, and for strengthening your body. And in the days which aren't fasting days, you are allowed to eat all kinds of food, from cheese to oil and fish and wine, with temperance, and nothing more. This is for the much eating isn't characteristic to the ones who live in ascesis, but it is characteristic to the ones living only with the hope and not knowing on what path they are walking. And if they painfully search for understanding, it will be unveiled to them, by the mercy of God.

And after having your lunch on the fasting days and on the other days, if it is summer, do not allow to yourself to fall asleep, but force yourself, by working with your hand, to resist sleeping. And if you knew that you need some resting, you would allow yourself to sleep for a little while, because of your body's weakness, maybe for an hour, and then, by getting up again, utter the prayer for three hundred times, and after each hundred times you will do 12 prostrations, as I mentioned it before. This is for, after sleeping, the human being is more appeased in his mind and in his body than any other time, until other thoughts enter the heart and the mind, coming from the many circumstances of the world. And this has been known by experience. So, take heed and work on time. And when the ninth hour has come, by standing up, you will read the prayer of the Ninth Hour and the Vespers and a canon dedicated to the Lord's Mother. And after finishing, you will appease yourself with the whole your taking of heed, having, meanwhile, your monastic cell as dark as possible and not talking to anybody. And by giving yourself to clean prayer, be patient and pray with watchfulness until the second hour comes, towards the next day (seven hour in the evening). Then, stand up and read the Compline, and the Hymns dedicated to the Lord's Mother, and to the Saint celebrated on that day. Then, again, take heed, and keep praying until the hour comes to go to bed, and then rest as it was shown in the beginning.

In addition to all of these, brother, force yourself to stand on your feet, during night, while taking vigil. This is for by doing so, the Fathers disrobed themselves of the former man and they saw God. And, you add to the taking of vigil, the watchfulness, and attach to watchfulness the Prayer to Jesus. And after tarrying in doing that, you will understand it, and your soul will taste out of the tree of life.

And you won't be able to do all these things, if you do not yoke yourself to always remember your death.

And the advanced ones and who aren't upset by many oppressions (temptations), we have seen them that even in assembly with brothers, or, if needed, when in town, they still stay in a peaceful house, namely they can appease themselves. And in loneliness and in quietude, they are helped more than while in an assembly. This is because in assembly, the passionless and the strong ones can defend themselves, but neither to them that is very beneficial. But they only accept attending a meeting if they are heralded by some notice from God, and for a certain need of their congregation. But their mother is the estrangement and the quietude. And you can find the estrangement and the quietude wherever you will be able to pray more easily. This is for, if you pray you will be a church, without any doubt. But even in loneliness, do not stay alone, without a companion, namely without having a neighbor; you need that in order not to go off your minds, and living in two or three brothers it is called as the imperial way. Therefore, be in community, even in loneliness. This is for, this is confessed and chosen by the Holy Fathers, as it is chosen in the Holy Mountain of Athos too. This is because there the enemy is present too, and there were seers living in quietude. From there is being learnt now that the imperial way o living in in two or three. They also have an abbot and an adviser, and they live in two or three monastic cells and having a church under a roof and having all things in common. They have types of assembly, according to the will of the biggest amongst them; and they have their prayer, and their eating in common, and their clothing, and their sleeping, and other necessary things, within advice and blessing. And thus, they can advance spiritually, with the gift from God. And no one is allowed to live alone, either far or nigh. It is strongly forbidden one to be separated and living by on his own in everything. This is because, that is a deceitful thing and bringing falling either towards the right, or towards the left, bringing soul's and bodily passions, as I have seen and as it is known to the knowers. And again, there are some people who live alone. Their dwelling is called as hut and it has no church. But they live two people in each chamber. But there are also ones who, after living two in a room, now they live only one in a room, in a hut, or in a cave, or in a crack of the earth. But they do that only after receiving advice from their brothers in assembly, or in wilderness, and they are advancing with the advice and with the science they receive from other pious fathers, and therefore they dared and they are daring to live alone, and to fight the passions and the devils, as I've even seen. But there rarely are ones who have totally rejected the whole taking care for their body and all the worldly worries, and, reaching the advancement, they have thrown all their hope towards God, for they desire Him.

And the ones who still have passions, let them not to dare fighting the devils while living in isolation, for they will be killed by the devils. But it is due to us to force ourselves to do that on the imperial way, and were the place will help us, we owe to strive for the salvation of our soul. And thus, without suffering any falling, we will spend the remnant of our life. And the ones who want that comforting from the Lord, they will easily gain it. Of the Lord be the glory, forever. Amen.

It follows a long description of the monastic life from Mount Athos and from The Romanian Country. He speaks about the Romanian traditions at Mount Athos. He says that there are many Romanians at Mount Athos, especially at Cutlumuş Monastery, having as subordinated monastery the Slatina Monastery from Argeş Bishopric. But "there are more Greek monks in our country". "And only in the Holy Mountain and in The Romanian Country, there are good rules, and elsewhere, there are weak and bad rules and all over the Turkish Country it is difficult both to the churches and to the believers".

He speaks admiratively about Pious Gheorghe and about Pious Paisius. Both of them had many disciples, as one can see even now. The author reckons about himself as being an uneducated man in comparison to them (f. 155 v – 156 v.)

It is a very interesting description for the history too, of The Romanian Country.

Spiritual Lute and Heavenly Trumpet[1382]

This little book is called as spiritual lute and heavenly trumpet, which, by trumpeting in the ears of the believers, it ignites and it stir up their hearts towards loving God, and it makes them being zealous and fulfilling with the work too, the things described by this writing. And through this work, they are elevated to the Kingdom of Heavens. And the ones who love God with the whole their heart, they will benefit very much out of the things written in this little book, if they strive to accomplish the things which they read in it. And the ones who love the temporary earnings, and who love the glory of this vain world, not that they only get no benefit out of reading this book, but they even call the things from it as fairytales and they laugh at them. But through this laughter, they cause to themselves the weeping on the fearsome day of the judgment.

This is confessed, due to his love for God, towards a greater reassurance, by Cleophas, when going to Emmaus together with Like, by saying: "It wasn't our heart burning, when He talk to us, on the way?" (Lk. 24: 32). He who has ears to hear, let him hear. And may the hearing of their ears to be igniting their heart towards loving God.

So, there are many wanting this spiritual and comforting work of the mind, namely the Prayer to Jesus. But they reckon that they can gain it only by their wit, namely with their natural wit and with that craftsmanship (method) presented by the Holy Fathers, who taught the ones who live in ascesis, how they must pray.

[1382] Manuscript in the Library of the Roman Bishopric, no. 41. Note: 1823. F 1 r. – f. 40 v. It comprises only this writing. According to Father Cleophas from Hihăstria Monastery, the author would be a nephew of the Abbot Neonil from Neamț Monastery, from the first part of the XIX Century. While Kallistos the Katafygiote mentions, as ultimate help for focusing the mind, the unity of God, the present writing asks for the liberation from under the worries determined by the earning of the temporary things. Only thus, the mind can be liberated from the limited thoughts which divide and narrow the mind.

The craftsmanship taught by the Holy Fathers it is good. But, if we do not achieve the humble cogitation and the humiliation, instead of the nature skillfulness, that craftsmanship used by the Holy Fathers in their ascesis, it won't help us at all. This is because that comforting of the heart and that work of the mind aren't destine to anything else except to ignite and set in fire the human being's heart, towards the love for God. And what is this born out? Only and solely out of the humble cogitation. And out of the humble cogitation it is born also the humiliation (the heart's pricking). And the humiliation ignites and it makes fiery, the human being's heart, towards loving God. And the ones who have earned the love for God, they have cast off their mind, all the gains and the earnings of the present life, and they reckon, as totally ugly, all the beauties of this vain world.

So, if the mind is liberated from the gains and earnings of the present life, and if the mind sees, as ugly, all the beauties of this vain world, the mind will see on itself as free, and given the fact that the mind is working by its nature, it cannot stay empty, but the mind will run towards its Creator, namely towards the All-Good God; and the mind will get attached to Him, and it will love Him, and it will always be talking to Him, either while awake or sleeping. And, in a short while, the whole spiritual comforting of the mind is born out of that, namely out of the humble cogitation and out of not loving the earning of the temporary things, and out of not loving the beautiful realities of this vain world. Out of these it is born the heat of the heart, out of these the heart starts praying with sighs. And if somebody loves the temporary earnings and the adorning of the clothing, and searches for prayer and strives for finding it, that one toils vainly. This is because the temporary and corruptible earnings, are the brambles, or the thorns, which, after the seed of the sower it fell amongst them, they grow up and won't let the good plant to grow, but the choke it up.

So do the worries of this temporary life: they choke up and they quench the little spark ignited within the human being's heart, towards the love for God, and they make the heart being totally cold. And it is a totally pitiful thing, one worthy of continuous weeping, the fact that we, for a little dizzying and temporary comforting, to deprive on ourselves, of our beautiful calling and of our motherland. This is for, itself Lord's mouth, it speaks to us, saying: "You cannot serve two lords, because either by loving one of them you will hate another, or you will attach yourself to one of them and you will miss taking care of another: you cannot serve both God and mammon" (Mt. 6: 24).

And again, the Little Lamb of God prayer His Father, saying: "Father, give them to be one with Us, as WE are one" (Jn. 17: 21), namely to be in love, according to the Apostle's word, who said: "What will separate us from the love of the Lord? Hunger, or nakedness, or sword, or the others?" (Rom. 8: 35). Let's think at a young man who, by making friendship with a young woman, and by being sweetened by a little touching, he gets ignited and fiery in his heart for the much love for her, and he dedicated her all his feelings and he spends the whole his wisdom with her, so that he will lose his mind and he will reach like a lunatic, and he will no longer care for shame and he will behave disorderly and the whole his thinking and cogitation will desire, day and night, her face. Vainly, his benevolent acquaintances, when seeing him, they show him they sorry for him, and they advise him, telling him to get far from that face, for that face it will destroy his soul and it will corrupt his mind. He not only rejects their advice, but he rather wants to be beheaded than to part with that girl's love. But, if the mindless people give on themselves, for a little deceiving comforting, and for that destroying of soul love, even to their death, what could we say about the ones who have become friends with God, and whose hearts have been ignited and made fiery by His love? All their feeling and thoughts have been blunted and they have been killed in what regards the beauties of the present world, and their mind has been totally illuminated and it is being sweetened by the sweetness of that limitlessly beautiful Lord. And they are no longer conquered by the beauties of the present era, but they even are disgusted when seeing those. And if happens to them, to be brought in their mind, by the cunning devils, the sweetness produced by the temporary things, they not only reject that from their mind, but they are even disgusted by that sweetness.

But the ones who love these things, namely the temporary and deceiving sweetness and earnings, and they dare to force themselves praying with the mysterious pray, by using the craftsmanship which they heard about, that, together with inhaling and exhaling the air, namely to introduce, by using that craftsmanship, the cold, and to get out the warmth, striving with much toil and with the whole their zeal to find the place of their heart, let them know that the whole their striving and toiling are vain. This is because, until their mind is still darkened by the worries of the present life, the breathing forced by the ones striving with this craftsmanship, it will be in vain. This is because, until their mind will be darkened by the worries of the present life, that breathing too, which the ones who toil they force it, with craftsmanship (with method), withing their heart, it will be like a bellow blowing upon some quenched charcoals.

So, only after the mind has been delivered from the slavery of the worrying for the present life, the heart will need that craftsmanship of the breathing; and only then, that breathing will warm up and it will ignite that little spark towards loving God.

And the true sign of the love for God, it is this: the humble cogitation and that love having mercy on all people, and on all the creatures created by God, and the consummate renunciation to earn the temporary things[1383]. This is for, the ones who hated the earnings and all the beauties of this temporary age and all the deceiving realities of the present world, through right-reckoning and through good-proving, in a consummate manner, they have fallen in love with God and they have been found worthy of His mercy, so that, from here onwards, they no longer love nothing amongst the beautiful realities of the present world. This is for, they are satisfied with the love for that limitless in beauty Lord. And regarding the things necessary to the human nature, not only that they no longer take care of them, but they even feel a displeasure for them and they reckon those things as superfluous, for they have known that all things are temporary and deceitful and they impede the soul's salvation.

Words Gathered Up from Holy Writings

Regarding the Prayer to Jesus and the ones who want to start this holy prayer, they first must keep the work of the holy commandments, and to be without thought and without worries and without own opinions: they also must have brotherly and passionless love, equally for every soul, and towards God with the whole their soul; then they must have the humble wisdom and to be peaceful with the people and with all the creatures of God; finally, we must clean up, on ourselves, of pride, and instead of pride we must dress up, on ourselves, in humbleness and with all the good deeds. And only after that, we will accomplish, with the work, all the things mentioned above, we will dare to star saying the Prayer to Jesus. And one must keep the Prayer to Jesus like the Holy Fathers say: "with the mind, above the heart, looking inside the heart with our mind, and no longer thinking at anything else, but only at the words of the prayer, and keep repeating those words, namely: "Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, have mercy on me". Saint Gregory of Sinai, by thoroughly studying the lives and the writings and the spiritual craftsmanship (method) of all the Saints, more than anyone else did, through the Holy Ghost Who was dwelling within him, he ordered, namely he taught with an all-illuminated wisdom, that it is due one to make all efforts for the mysterious prayer. And Saint Simeon, the Archbishop of Thessaloniki, by having the same ghost and gift, he ordered, advised, and urged to this work of the mind, the hierarchs, the priests, and the monks, and even all the laymen[1384]. But he also frightened the ones who start doing this work carelessly and without guidance. And especially on those ones who are zealous to this work of the mind while still they are passionately loving certain persons, because that love causes corruption and soul's destruction, so that they vainly rejoice, because they do not receive any spiritual comforting. Because this of a real deceit, and not a spiritual joy. This is because, what power will have the darkness when encountering the light? Some people as those ones, if they do not awake themselves and if they do not repent, not only that they won't benefit anything out of that, but they will even suffer insanity. Therefore, one need much watchfulness and taking of heed when starting this holy and spiritual work of the mind, lest by doing it simply and regardless, to be hooked and to be hunted by the cunning devils.

But these things weren't written intending to discourage the workers who still are in the phase of the doing, namely the beginners, but these things were written rather intending to strengthen them and to make them skillful, so that always and in all days, they to study their work, by reading the holy writings and by asking for spiritual advise, in order they to see whether they are right or they are wrong.

This is for, it is impossible not to be stollen what is good by what is evil. This is because the deceit is intertwined with the mind's work, like the ivy grows on trees. This is because the enemy doesn't stop contriving, amongst the natural aspects of our waist, seemingly spiritual manifestations, because he wants to bring amidst the spiritual warmth his heat, and instead of joy he wants to bring the vain pleasure; and he strived making the defiled sweetness to appear as a work of the grace.

The clean prayer is shown in the heart's warmth, which the heart starts jumping to, in the time of the prayer. This is called by Saint Isaac the Syrian as the heart's prayer. So, it is good that prayer accompanies by the heat of the heart and it is being done with a jumping heart. But, in the same time with these, one need his mind to be working too; and the breath to be kept too. This is because the heart, for the comforting coming produced by what is coming within it, it starts jumping to prayer, but the mind still is in dialogue with the thoughts, it will easily tale place, as it was said, the steal of what is good by what is bad. This is because the enemy doesn't stop striving for, instead of the gift, the beginners to receive the deceit. That's why, it is due that, together with the prayer coming out of that comforting of the heart, namely out of the power of the heart's warmth, that one that is maintained by breathing, our mind to be working too.

Question: How and in what mode must the mind be working?

Answer: Like the Holy Fathers said: the mind must keep taking heed upon the heart, and to not think at anything else, but to think only at the prayer's words which to keep saying, namely: "Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, have mercy on me", in order the mind to sink into the heart's depth and not into the lusting part. This is for the only non-deceiving work of the ones who recently have started this prayer, it is to start doing the prayer with their mind within their heart. But the much plotting and seeding division and cunning devil, he strives on all ways to deceive the ones who have recently started the prayer. But he mainly strives to deceive them on two ways, namely to cast a spell upon their mind through hallucinations, and to make them to fornicate through the lusting part. And on the ones who are in the middle of the advancement, and on the consummate ones, he wants to throw them, through disobedience, into the precipice of the self-appreciation and of the pride. That's why, in order you to not get deceived, you will strongly keep the obedience and the humbleness. And not only that, by doing so, you won't be deceived, but you will also break all the craftsmanship and the traps of the enemy, and, with the power of Christ, you will banish away all the camps of the cunning devils.

So, when you feel pain, or movement, of heart from the right side, or within your chest, or under your chest, or under your heart, on in your head, or in your forehead, or between your eyes, or at your ears, or at your hand, on in your back, or at your legs, you won't think at them by any means, but keep your mind looking only at the prayer's words, above your heart, where I have indicated to you. This is for, as Saint Diadochus says, the more the commandments are being worked, the more the grace is being multiplied.

Question: What the commandments are being worked through, and what the grace is being multiplied through?

Answer: Only and solely through the right and true faith, according to the Lord's word Who said to Peter: "You, of little faith, why have you doubted yourself?" (Mt. 14Ş 31). He didn't tell him: faithless, but: little in faith, because many are shown as believers, but they are cold and little of faith.

But when and at what time the Lord said that, because of the doubt and of the little faith of Peter? When, Peter saw the Lord walking on the sea, and he thought that he was seeing a hallucination and he shouted out: "Lord, if that are You, command me to come to You", and the lord told him: "I am, come to Me". And Peter, jumping off that ship, he was walking on the sea as on dry land, but because of seeing a strong wind and the sea's waves arising, and because of having his faith diminished, he was sinking, and because of his doubt and because of his little faith, he was shouting out towards the Lord, saying: "Lord, don't let me, for I am perishing". Then the Lord caught him by the hand, told Peter: “You, of little faith, why have you doubted?”.

Likewise it happens now too, to the ones who have started the spiritual journey, namely the Prayer to Jesus, but because of the diminishing of their faith, they doubt on the way, and they do not advance, because the whole their mind and thinking are focused towards these temporary and putrid earnings, and they rather are conquered by the glory of the vain world; and they don’t care about working the holy commandments. And this happens to them because of their faith’s diminishing. Because of this, they are defeated by the vain-glory and they start taking care of the temporary earnings. And more so, the ones who have been found worthy of the spiritual comforting, if they will have their faith diminished, they will easily consent to the indecent thoughts which defile the mind. Some like these, even if they have been found worthy of the spiritual comforting and they reckon that they walk the right path, they will get strayed on a non-walked path. This is because it is a big sin for somebody to think the indecent thoughts. And, like the little child, by not being nourished by his mother, that little child cannot survive but dies, likewise it is impossible to somebody to be, in the same time, slave to the sin and traveling together with God. This is for God hates the sin.

This is because, for the sin of only one man, there fell into death twenty-five thousand sons of Israel, to the first born of God. Weren’t that people destined by God to go to the Promise Land? But because of their faithlessness and because of the callousness of their heart and because their uncleanness, they wandered for forty years in the desert, on non-walked paths and not on the right path. And they not only that weren’t found worthy to enter the Promise Land, but they didn’t even see it from nearby. Only Moses saw the Promise Land when he was about to die. Then, the Lord told Moses: “Entrust this people to Joshua Navi, because you are going to die”. And God told Moses again: “Behold the Promise Land, see it, but you won’t enter it, for you didn’t honor Me before the sons of Israel and because you didn’t hit the stone, with your staff, in order the water to flow out of it, according to the commandment I gave you, but you hit it with haughtiness and with anger” (Numbers 20: 12).

Can you see, my beloved ones, how much one gets far from God by not working God’s commandments? Moses, whose face was shining more than the sun (Exodus 34: 29), so that the sons of Israel couldn't look at his face, because of the shininess of the gift of the Holy Ghost Who was working within Moses, because of a commandment which seemed not so important to him, he wasn't found worthy of entering the Promise Land. But the getting far from God it wasn't told for Moses, for Moses was full of faith and of the gift of the Most-High. This was told for the faithlessness and for the callousness of the heart of that people who, after they entered the desert, they were speaking against and they were gossiping Moses. That's why, not only that they weren't found worthy of entering the promise Land, but they didn't even see it, but they were roving on non-walked paths, and not on the right-path, according to the Lord's word Who said: "I swore into My anger that they won't enter into My resting" (Numbers 14: 23).

So it is, to the ones who dare starting the Prayer to Jesus. If they have their faith diminished, namely if they are of a little faith, they will take insufficient care while working this prayer, but they will have much zeal and diligence for the earthly and temporary things and earnings. Some like these, even if it seems to them that they travel well, they wander in non-walked places and they do not walk on the right-path. And even the mouth of the Lord tells us: "Do not worry of what you will eat or of what you will drink or of what you will dress yourselves up with. You see the fowls of the sky, that they do not sow, neither they reap, nor they gather in barns, and your Father Who is in heavens feeds them all. But search, firstly, for the Kingdom of Heavens and all the other things will be added to you" (Mt. 6: 31-33).

Therefore, the ones who have been sanctified to God, even from here, if they want to lean little by little, from prayer, towards the earthly thoughts which defile and darken the mind, and if they will consent to them, they will see God getting far from them, and they will be mocked by enemies, namely by the cunning devils. This is because, even to Samson who was a strong man and the most special amongst people, and sanctified to God from his mother's womb, and who was found worthy of much power and of many wonders, and who was announced before his birth, by an angel, like John too, the son of Zacharias, didn't he get far from God because he defiled his holy limbs by leaning towards committing sin, namely towards fornication, and therefore he was left in the hands of his enemies?

Can you see, my beloved ones, how much corruption, both of the body and of the soul, it comes out of the faith's diminishing? Out of this it comes the laziness in working the holy commandments, out of this it comes the leaning towards committing sin, out of this it comes the love for the earthly earnings and for the glory of the vain-world. So, if we love the spiritual realities, let's not love the temporary earnings, which are corruptible and destroy our soul, but let's be zealous and loving the thing of God, serving Him and honoring Him by working His holy commandments and, day by day, let's work in order to increase, by faith and by humble-cogitation, in longing for Him. This is for, this is the true and undeceiving path.

So, the heat is being born out of prayer, but it also comes form devil and from nature. The heat that comes from nature it is born when somebody have a certain relative, living far away, whom he wants to see but he hasn't the necessary means in order to do that. But the natural heat is also born when somebody has a passionate love for a certain person. This is a love that destroys the soul. This love is born when he wants to encounter that person and he hasn't the necessary means to do that. This sort of heat is born also to the ones who love the money and who pursuit their desire to accumulate wealth. This is, according to the word of Apostle Paul, the root of all evilness. This is a pitiful thing and worthy of continuous weeping. This is because, due to this addiction, many threw themselves in the precipice of the perdition. But even now are here, people who are conquered by this addiction, despite hearing these words loud and clear. What are they doing? They are content to think in their heart, saying: Who knows, it might not be like these fearsome words say; it might be differently. And not only that they do not repent, but they even oppress and trouble the people depending on them, by cutting the expenses, in order they to spare the financial and the material means. And this is caused to them because they do not believe in their heart and because they do not understand with their mind, and this is because of diminishing in their faith. This is because, the ill-faithed Judah, he heard the fearsome words of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ Who was saying that if that man hadn't been born, it would have been better for that man who sold the Son of Man for earning money; Judah heard those words but he didn't understand them, neither he believed those words with his heart, because of having his mind darkened with the madness of loving the money. And so, he didn't understand he was earning to himself, his hanging and descending in the hell's precipice.

Likewise in the present time, the ones who are darkened in their mind because of their madness for earning wealth, at their turn, they hear these fearsome words, but the darkening of their mind doesn't let them understand, or to repent, but they strive to oppress and to make suffer the ones who are less important that they are. Some people like these, they earn to themselves the descent into the perdition's precipice. And the ones who understand and who believe in their heart and who repent with true repentance, like the Lord welcomed the publican and the hooker and the profligate son, and He embraced them, likewise he welcomes and embraces and appoint those who repent, in the saint's group. This is for the Lord knows that hooker who truly repented, how to make her cleaner that a virgin. But He doesn't do that to the ones who postpone the repentance, by saying that they will maybe do it tomorrow, or on the day after tomorrow. This is because many end in hell amongst the ones saying that they will repent maybe tomorrow, because we do not know the moment of our death.

And the sweetness is born out of prayer. But it comes also from the bitter healers, namely from the cunning devils. The sweetness coming from devils it causes a disturbance, while that one coming from prayer it brings peace and humbleness.

And the heat coming from prayer and with crushing from the bottom of our heart, it brings sobs and is spring out of our eyes, abundant tears for our love and for our longing for God. And then, the mind shouts out, with a great power: "Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, have mercy on me". And one who prays like this, he sees all the people before him like angels of God. And he sees himself as dust and ashes and he feels the urge to be trampled by all people, for the love for the Lord. And, often, he feels the urge to hide himself from people.

The ones who have reached these measures, they have been found worthy of the mercy of God too, namely of the true and ceaseless prayer. Then, this prayer is always being worked with the mind within heart; this prayer is being worked either in silence, or while sleeping. And it is worker more strongly while awake, when it is found as being worked very peacefully and no little thought touches the mind, but the mind works only the words of the prayer and that sweetens the heart. But this work of the mind, it comes, as it was said, since the beginning, but only together with working the holy commandments and all the deeds. This prayer is helped much, by estrangement.

Question: What is that estrangement like?

Answer: Estrangement means that wherever the worker (of the commandments) is, either to quietude, or amongst friends, or in any place he lives, he considers himself being a worthless (stranger) and the most unimportant one of all. This is for Saint Patriarch Kallistos says that, more than all meanings, the one who lives in ascesis owes to be zealous in understanding the spiritual realities. He owes especially that, in the beginning, the mind's focusing not to be, in the time of prayer, neither in the middle of his heart, nor below his heart, but he must keep his mind above his heart.

These godlike words have been gathered out of the holy writings, ones which have been written using a simple language, and with simplicity, in order they to easily be understood even by the little children. This is for many are the torrents of the godlike teaching, but they are difficult to be understood by little children, namely by beginners. This is because the new beginners are like little children who, in their weak little hands, instead of a fish, they even accept a snake, or embers, because of not knowing what they are doing. The newly beginning ones, they really are like the little children, and the more are so the ones who do not pay attention to the holy writings, neither they benefit of spiritual advising. This sort of works, instead of receiving the good things, they receive the evil things, and instead of a gift, they receive deceit. And they even rejoice themselves, because of not knowing what they are doing and because of reckoning that they are given a gift. That's why, this work of the mind needs much spiritual advising and it need the reading, with much taking of heed, the holy writings, and it must reject the earning of the temporary things, in order us to not be deceived. This is for the enemy doesn't relent attempting to deceive, not only on us the beginners, but also on the ones who are in the middle, and even on the ones who are consummate. This is because the master of this world searches not only for one or for two, to bring them to destruction, but he strives, roaring like a lion, to swallow everybody.

But, as it has been said above, the humbleness, the obedience, and the right-confessing, it crumbles down all the enemy's deceits and traps. This is being done especially by the humbleness, according to the word of the holy angels who told Saint Gregory, the apprentice of Saint Basil the New, when he was kidnapped into vision up to the holy city of the Upper Jerusalem. There, Saint Gregory saw how, following to congregations of righteous, there came and were ordered in the holy city, a great congregation of laymen too. After them, there came a little congregation of monks and they will be appointed to the eternal works. And Saint Gregory, because of feeling shame for the monastic order that is called as holy nation, he looked at the angels who were carrying him – for they are two in number: one was carrying by holding him by his one armpit, and the other one by the other armpit -, and he asked them: "What could be this, gentlemen, that the big congregation of the laymen will be appointed in the city and this little congregation of monks will be appointed to the eternal torments?". Then the holy angels answered him: "Son, at that final time, the whole monastic and spiritual nation will start going towards perdition". And, Saint Gregory dared again and he asked them: "If it is so, my gentlemen, who will be saved?". The angels answered him: "The one who will love the willing poverty and the running and the humbleness, that one will be saved".

So, you who love Christ, let's strive us too, in order to love the humbleness and the willing poverty and the banishing away. This is for our Lord Jesus Christ too, when He descended on earth and lived amongst people, for His love for us, He showed much humbleness and willing poverty, and by being chased away by armed people, He didn't hide on Himself, and He accepted to be beaten and to be spit upon, and He accepted to die of a shameful death by being crucified and killed and His cherished Blood being shed, and through His extolled Resurrection from on the third day, he has given everybody the gift of resurrection and of joy. Therefore, if our Deliverer and Savior Lord received willingly all of those, and he deigned to save us from the curse of our ancestor Adam, then even more strongly we - the sinners - owe to be humbled by all the pains and the sufferings, here in the present era, and to suffer all of them for our love for our Savior Jesus Christ, the all-sweet and loving of people One. By doing so, we will be delivered form that perdition told by the holy angels, and from the eternal torments, and we will be found worthy of the Kingdom of Havens. And let's do that by knowing that all the realities are here changing and fickle, and that our life is short, and that our days are passing quickly, like the shadow of a cloud before the sun and like the flowers of the plains. So, by seeing us all of these that they are real, with much crushing from the bottom of our heart, let's pray the Merciful God, in order Him to give us humiliation and time for repentance. This is for, now it is the time for repentance, now it is the time for working the commandments, not it is the time for getting humble, and now it is the time for weeping. So, let's start weeping now, in order not to weep then, namely there where the weeping and the tears are useless. This is for, itself the Lord's mouth says: "Blesse are you who are crying now, for you will laugh". But He didn't teach us only with His godlike mouth, but He showed us even with His work, for He lived for thirty-three years amongst the people on earth, and nobody saw Him laughing, but many saw Him crying. And what was weeping the Little Lamb of God for, namely the One Who is sinless by His nature and Who has made Himself man without sin, for us? And the One loving of people, He was really crying! And what was Him crying for, even being sinless? Only and solely for us, the sinners, in order to shows us, with the work, that it is due us to cry for our sins and to long for the world from beyond. This is because, here on earth, we are like strangers.

So, let's strive zealously, in order us to get out of foreign land and to go to our country, with piousness and with humbleness and by honoring God. Namely, let's honor God by working His holy commandments, in order us to follow the godlike Fathers from yore, who, by working God's holy and life-making commandments, say and night, with humbleness and with much-love, they served the Lord and they traveled the narrow path. This is for itself the Lord's mouth said: "narrow is the path leading to the Heavenly Kingdom, and wide is that one leading to perdition" (Mt. 7: 13-14). Truly, wide it is the path leading to perdition, but only until leading, for, woe to the ones who reached its end. Who will be able to describe the narrowness and the weeping and gnashing of teeth from there? That's why, every believer and right-worshipping Christian, by hearing about those fearsome torments, it is impossible not to get humiliated and not to weep with much crushing within his heart.

Likewise, the narrow path too, it is narrow until leading to that Kingdom. For, after somebody has been found worthy of entering there, who would be able to describe the delectation and the comforting from there and the unparalleled and non-understood by the human mind joy, of the ones who have been found worthy of seeing the bright and illuminated angels' beauty, or the spiritual fragrance of the Paradise's flowers?

For the prayers of the holy angels and of the people pleasant to God, may us, the sinners, be defended against the enemies' traps. And with the prayer of the Birth Giver of God and All-Holy our Master, Virgin Mary, may us be found worthy of Her Son and our Lord Jesus Christ, the Word of the Father Whom we owe the glory and the honor and the worshipping to, together with His Father and with the All-Holy and Good and life-Maker His Ghost, now and for ever and ever. Amen.

Let's unveil a little further, about the people who weren't found worthy of entering the Promised Land, and who wandered in non-walked places and not on the right-path. Those ones didn't find the path towards the inhabitable city, and they souls were dying within them, because of hunger and because of thirst. That was because those people weren't found worthy of entering the Promised Land despite the fact that God crossed them through the Red Sea through Moses's staff and God brought them into desert, delivering them from Pharaoh's slavery. Those people not only weren't found worthy of entering the Promised land, but they bones remained into desert, according to the word of the Lord Who said: "I swore into My anger that they won't enter into My resting, because of their faithlessness and because of their heart's callousness" (Numbers 12: 7).

Only two members of that crowd were found worthy of entering the Promised Land, namely Joshua Navi and Halev, the son of Aaron. These ones brought the people in the land promised them by God, namely the people born after they entered the desert, for they were forty thousand with those born in desert.

And God spoke to Moses: "Take you staff and call the assembly, you are your brother Aaron, and speak to them near to the stone and the stone will give its waters and you will pull out water from stone and you will water up the assembly and the beasts". And Moses took the staff form before God (Numbers 20: 8). But there were forty thousand only in a tribe, and all the tribes numbered sis hundred thousand people together with their descendants. So, Moses and Aaron gathered the people in front of that stone and told them: "Listen to be, you, the disobedient ones! Will I pull water out of this stone?". And raising his hand, Moses stroke that stone for three times, and plenty of water came out of it, and the assembly and their beasts drank their full. And God told Moses and Aaron: “Because you didn’t believe Me, and because through your faithlessness you didn’t honor Me, namely you didn’t want to sanctify Me before the sons of Israel, you won’t lead the assembly to the land I have given them”. And this people was guided, with the help and with the benevolence of God, by Joshua Navi and by Halev, to the Promised Land.

And after God gave the city to their mastery, Joshua Navi orders that all the people living in the city to be killed with the sword. And the Lord’s commandment was fulfilled, namely God ordered the lord of that land to be hanged on the cross. And that commandment was fulfilled with the deed, for they hanged him on a wood. And on Joshua Navi, for his faith and for his heart’s cleanness, God extolled him, by appointing him the lord of the city and of that whole land.

And this wasn’t written for something else, but only and solely in order to allow us to understand and to luminously see how much God love and strengthens and makes worthy on the ones who love His commandments and who His commandments with the deed. And again, by this, it is shown how much God hates and punishes the faithless ones and who disobey His commandments. This is because, by not working His commandments, he gives people punishment and sends them in hell, as it was done to that emperor of the Promised City, who was punished by God, through Joshua Navi.

Likewise in the present time, the faithless ones and the ones who disobey God’s commandments, even if they live in abundance, the punishment from God and the descent to hell wait for them, as yore, on the day of temptation, the tempters of God were eating and drinking but, while the food still was in their mouth, the God’s anger climbed upon them and it killed the most of them. And, the ones who love God’s commandments and who work those commandments, they follow to ascend to Upper Jerusalem, and to be comforted to and extent non-comprisable with the human mind.

Blessed is the monk who dies to this world, for he is alive to the world from beyond, And the monk who hasn’t died to this world yet, he id dead to the world from beyond and he is alive to the eternal torments, where there is not breathing or alleviation because of the pains from there. The monk is the ones who has parted with all things and who has united himself with all things, namely he separated himself from the temporary things and he united himself with the eternal things.

Blessed are the young little monks, who have dedicated themselves, from their childhood, to be soldiers of Emperor Jesus. Blessed are they who guarded the whole virginity, for they are the well-received firstfruits of the Lam od God, and they are closer than everybody, to the godhead's chair. Blessed are the old monks too, and even the ones who were married and who left their wives and their children and followed to the Holy Gospel, for those too, they will be virginal too, and dwelling places of the Holy Ghost, if they will only fulfill with the deed, what they promised before receiving the honored and angelic schism, through which, the gift of the Most-High to be overshadowing us and to guard us against the whole evilness that is called evilness, forever and ever.

Blessed is that monk who likened himself to a little dove that lost its pair. This is for, after loosing his pair, because of much grief and sadness, it no longer drinks water, but it firstly stirs that water up and makes it muddy and only then it drinks it; neither that dove sings on a green branch, but it sits on a withered branch, weeping and mourning its beloved pair. The monk who really is a monk, likewise this pitiful and weeping dove, for the monk, after he has put on the honored and angelic countenance, he is always burning in his heart and wanting, with much grief, The One about Whom Philip was shouting out about, with a loud voice: "Come and see that I have found the desired One, namely the Little Lamb of God, the Savior of our souls" (Jn. 1: 46, and the followings). And amongst the temporary realities of the present era, he doesn't rejoice anything, because he knows that all of them are changing and temporary, but he rather saddens himself for his sins; this is because the human being, even if living on earth for only one day, it is impossible not to have sin (Job 14: 5). And no sinner will be able to go towards the desired One, if the sinner hasn't washed up his sins firstly, through the real repentance and through the true confessions.

And about the mercifulness of God, we know that, because of it, Jonah was running away from the face of God, and he didn't want to preach to the City of Nineveh its perdition, for he was saying: "Lord, I know you are merciful and by seeing their weeping and their tears, and You will have mercy on them and You won't destroy the city, but You will forgive our sins, and my preaching will be proven as a liar one" (Jonah 4: 3). This is for, the weeping and the tears not only that they deliver the ones who weep from death, but they even make those as dwelling places of the All-Holy Ghost, as happened to the great Saints who, with the flowing of their tears, they transformed the desert in fertile land, and with their deep sighs, they made the desert bringing forth hundredfold fruits, and so they illuminated the world with the brightness of the wonders they did.

The saying number 90, belonging to Saint Nilus: "Even if it seems to you that you are with God, guard yourself against the devil of the fornication, for he is very deceitful and as envious as one can be, and he wants to be quicker than the move and the watchfulness of your mind, in order to pluck off your mind from God when your mind stays next to god with awe and fear" (Evagrius, Heads about Prayer; The Romanian Philokalia, volume I, p. 85).

The head number 91, belonging to the same Father: "If you take care of the clean prayer, prepare yourself against the rushing in of the devils, and suffer, manly, their beatings. This is because of their rushing in upon you, like the wild beasts, and they will injure the whole your body" (Ibid, p. 86.)

And the one of little faith, they get scared by hearing the coming of the cunning devils and about the wounds caused by them, but they doubt about the necessity of occupying themselves with the prayer. But the right-believers, they not only don't doubt and don't get scared because of the rushing in of the cunning devils and about the wounds caused by them, but they even arm themselves with an even greater joy against them, by occupying themselves with the clean prayer, and all the devils' camps are set in running and are banished by them with the power of Christ, our All-Merciful Lord and Savior. And the monks become, through the clean prayer, like the angels are.

The clean prayer is the heart's warmth and if the heart's warmth is true and undeceiving, the sign that is undeceiving will be this: that it gathers the whole mind were the warmth is, namely in the deep of the heart. But if the warmth is brought within heart by the cunning devils, the mind won't be working, namely the mind won't be gathered within heart, but the mind is tossed away, as a blind one, all over the place, through all the lies. One must understand from here, therefore, that this will be the sign of the deceit: the non-working mind.

And these things haven't been written in order to discourage the ones who occupy themselves with the heart's prayer, but they have been written in order to offer them experience, and for their benefit, namely in order to show them that they must make their mind working and to gather their mind where the warmth is, namely in the depth of their heart.

The righteous one who is wise too, that one is nigh to God. And the sign of the wisdom is this: the wise one is good adviser to everybody. The wise never speaks harshly, neither he gets angry, but all his words are smooth and welcoming and they gladden the heart of the listeners. The wise one, even if he is on a high position, he will never get haughty, nor he will get proud, but he will rather be humble, following to the Little Lamb of God, our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and fulfilling His commands with the deed. The wise righteous, even if he is on the dignity as judge, he never believes immediately the things he is said, neither he decides, in a hurry, the punishment, but he firstly researches that complain and the proofs, and only then he will establish the sentence, for he keeps the Lord's words Who said: "With what judgment you will judge, with that judgment you will be judged and with what measure you will measure, with that measure it will be measured to you" (Mt. 7: 1-2); likewise, by keeping the words of the Apostle too, who says: "If somebody mistook, you, the ones whoa re spiritual, correct him with the ghost of the gentleness" (Gal. 6: 1). And so, the wise one who is on a position of mastery, he does all his things with good-reckoning and with great wisdom, striving and toiling for making himself pleasant to the Master of the whole creation, namely to our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

The righteous doesn't fear what he hears evil (said about him), neither he gets troubled, nor he gets disgusted in everything is told against him, but he says: Even if a camp will be risen against me, my heart won't be scared; even if against me will be waged war. I hope in this: "One I have asked from the Lord, and that I will search for, to dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life". His Beatitude Peter Damascene said: "What owes to do, the one who is defeated by any sort of passion? It is due, to one like this, to resist that passion with a great zeal, if he wants to escape the eternal torments and the anger of the unquenchable fire and to be found worthy of the mercy of God. Let's talk, for instance, about the passion of the fornication. If somebody is tempted by a certain person, he must get far from that person, avoiding to touch that person's clothes, or even to avoid smelling that person's perfume. This is because, in all of these, he commits his passion and his fornication and he becomes dwelling place of the devils. And this thing is pitiful and worthy of continuous crying, for the darkening of the mind it brings to someone like that, so that they no longer remember the thought they had when they left the vain world and when they started making this spiritual journey and this angelic living, so that they no longer remember the zeal they had when they entered the gate of the monastery, and so that they no longer remember the promise they made when receiving the honored and angelic countenance. This is because, ones who are defeated by that passion are present here right now, and they hear very well about the fearsome torments. And for the ones who repent, not only that all the angelic group rejoice for them, but even the Lord waits for them with His arms open, welcoming them, and embracing them. But, on the one who pass carelessly and who do not repent, they are waited for, by the descent into hell's precipices and by the sleepless worms.

His Beatitude, Patriarch John Chrysostom said: "That man who mistakes and who commits sin before God, and later he repents and is disgusted in his sins, he will leave that sins and he will cease doing them before God and he will start repenting with much fear and with hunger and with thirst and with weeping and with daily shading of tears, withering his body and drying up his bones, but one like this won't achieve anything until he will confess all his sins to his spiritual father, in order to take from that one, forgiveness of his sins. This is for, to the spiritual father it has been given the power for forgiving the people's sins, as the Lord says: "First you tell and confess your sins and then you will get correction and forgiveness and alleviation of the heavy burden of your sins".

But the one called as the ancestral evilness, our enemy the devil, because he knows that by telling and confessing your sins to your spiritual father, you will take forgiveness and alleviation of the heavy burden of your sins, he strives very, in order to deceit and to blind and not to allow the man, by any means, not even to think at confessing his sins. That's why many left this deluding world, without confession and without their sins – which they commit during their life on earth - to be forgiven. And this is an awfully dreadful thing, very pitiful and worthy of continuous crying. This is because, due to this disorderedly and painfully parting, they haven't achieved not even a minimum alleviation of the heavy burden of their sins.

The ones who truly confess their sins and who repent for their sins very zealously and who execute the canon given them by their spiritual father, at the time of their leaving from the deceiving world, namely at the time their will yield their soul, the angels will welcome them and will comfort them and will make them high glory, by welcoming them with much love and by gladdening themselves as for some very desired friends of theirs, and they will travel with much love together with them, to the Upper Jerusalem. With whose prayers may us be found worthy too, we the sinners, of that all-extolled happiness and holy comforting. Amen.

Blessed are the young nuns, who have consecrated themselves, since their childhood, to be brides of Bridegroom Christ. Blesses are the ones who, on all days and on all moments, they adorn and beautify their faces, by washing them up with their tears, mourning and desiring their heavenly Bridegroom. Blessed are the old nuns too, or even the ones who were married before, and who left their husbands and their children and who followed to the Holy Gospel, for they will be made pure and brides of Christ, if they only fulfill with the deed, what they have promised when they received the honored and angelic countenance. May His all-high gift to overshadow them and to guard them against the whole evilness of the one who is called as the ancestral evilness.

- VOLUME IX -

“The pride is closure towards God, it is self-sufficiency, and as such it is cause of depriving the existence. Nobody and nothing can exist by itself. All realities are connected in communication. And they last only by that. That’s why the pride is also the cause of the general disharmony; because of the pride all the things go squeaky, all of them suffer of a general illness because of the pride. They cannot totally separate from one another, but they neither are fully and healthily articulated with one another. I say this thinking at creation. This is because God doesn’t suffer this disharmony within Himself, but He suffers for the sufferance of His creation, of His work. The creation opposes His attention also in order to blame Him for the sufferance the creation endures as His work. The denial of the own will it is the denial of that will that opposes God’s will Who wants to keep all realities in harmony. The humbleness means to be content with the own framing into the general whole, in the whole’s harmony, that as such is also in harmony with God.”

Introduction

A

The Author and the Content of the Writing

The author of the writing called The Ladder, which we are publishing in a new translation in the present volume, he was born shortly before the year 579 and he lived until around the year 649. So, he was contemporary to Saint Maximos the Confessor[3]. The author of Saint Climacus's Life, Monk Daniel from Raith Monastery, he declared that Saint John Climacus's country of origin was unknown, but Melethius, Archbishop of Athens, in The Churchly History, he said that Climacus would have originated from Palestine. According to Daniel from Raith, the young Climacus entered Sinai Monastery at the age of 16. Out of the fact that until he was 16 Climacus achieved a solid education in all the sciences of that time (εγχυχλίφ σοφία), Veniamin Costache deduced that Climacus must have been born in a rather wealth family[4]. His exquisite education in the sciences of that time brought him the name John the Scholastic; and for he lives at Mount Sinai he was also given the name John the Sinaite. But as the time passed, the name Climacus that he was given after he wrote his book The Ladder, it was the one that lasted.

In the monastery, Climacus has as adviser the old Martyrius, for 19 years. After Martyrius died, John withdrew to an isolated place, called Thola, situated at five miles from the monastery, where he consecrated himself to the life of appeasement for 40 years. Towards the end of his life, he was begged to accept the office as hegumen of Sinai Monastery[5]. During the time he led and guided the monks from the monastery on the road of the consummation, he composed his writing The Ladder, after he was asked to do that by hegumen John of Raith Monastery, a monastery situated by the Red Sea, at the place of the 12 springs and of the 70 palm trees, where the Israelites set their camp for a while, after they got out of Egypt[6].

[3] It was though before that he was born around the year 525 and that he died around the year 600. But F. Nau published in Oriensis Christianus II (1902), pp. 58-59; III (1903), pp. 56-90, as series of accounts about the Sinai Fathers, told by a monk, Athanasius, on the basis of which accounts it has been possible to establish that John Climacus lived between the years 579-649. See: F. Nau, Note sur la date de la mort de S. Jean Climaque, in: Byzantinishe Zeitschrift 11 (1902), pp. 35-37. According to Otto Bardenhewer, Gesichte der altkirchichen Literatur, V Band, Freiburg im Breisgrau, 1932, pp. 81 and 46.

John of Raith asked John Climacus to give the monks a written rule, so that by living according to that rule the monks to ascend to heavens on a ladder similar to that seen by Patriarch James in his dream. But the author of The Ladder, by describing the climbing as crossing through thirty staged, he mainly thought at the thirty years of life of the Savior before He started His public activity[7]. That's why The Ladder is divided in 30 Words.

The first three Words are like an introduction which is described in the monk's rejection of the world by entering the monastic life, his souly detaching from the world (the removal of the passions), and his estrangement from the world. In the Word IV is described the first monks' virtue, that is the obedience. The Words V, VI, and VII are consecrated to the repentance, namely: the Word V is consecrated to the repentance by and large, the Word VI is consecrated to the creaseless thinking at death as upholder of the repentance, and the Word VII is consecrated to the ceaseless crying for sins as cause of a high joy. Right from these Words one can see that John Climacus did not reckon the steps of the climbing as some states which can be left behind, but as some permanent states. These souly states compose a whole and that whole must be deepened continuously during one's entire life. Or, each of these states must be maintained and deepened, for, as it is deeper it increasingly more comprises the other states as well. So, about obedience the authors said: "They who obey themselves, with simplicity, into the Lord, they walk the good road, by not experiencing within themselves, through detailed reconnoiter, the devils' cunningness" (Word IV, chapter 12). That's why, almost about each step the authors said that he who maintains that step and who consummated that step, he will be able to consummate himself even through that only step. Thus, the author almost did not treat any step of the ladder without mentioning the other steps as well, upon which he followed to treat in detail in the ulterior Words, or on which he treated in previous Words. Speaking about obedience, he spoke also about humbleness and he criticized the vain-glory (Word IV, chapter 4; Word IV, chapter 39), which he followed to talk about, in detail, in the following Words (Word XXV, Word XXI).

[5] Frome here one could deduce that he lived more than 70 years, as Bardenhewer mentioned (579-649).

This is why, though by and large the writing contains the eight passions and the mode for withering them and for replacing them for the contrary virtues, the author still did not describe them in the classical order, neither did he reduce them only to their general character, but he treated them in an order changed to some extent, and under diverse aspects. The spiritual growth has the character of a climbing rather in the sense of an intensification in the total spirituality, and the character of a climbing on diverse steps of the ladder in the sense of a gradual highlighting here of ones and there of others from among the diverse aspects of the virtues potentially comprised in the total state of the soul who moves towards God.

One could say that the author reckoned that the main preoccupation of the monk regarding his past must be his repentance for his sins, and the monk's care in the present and for the future must be the obedience, the sole that shuns him from other sins.

The sins represent the lowering of the spirit to world and to body, and the falling off the connection with the godlike Subject Who is endless in life and in love; namely, the spirit's falling to the preoccupation with the objects and the spirit's narrowing and burial according to the object's limitation and thickness. In the whole writing is expressed a great faith into soul and a valuing of the bodily restraints and pains, including the death, as means of the spiritual growth. Detaching from the past sins and avoiding the future sins constitute the foundation which the whole man's spiritual growth will be built up on. That actually consists of a souly and bodily cleanness that makes the man transparent to God and capable of the connection with God.

After the 7 Words which tackle with the rejection of the world, with the obedience, and with the repentance for the sins, there follow a few words treating about the virtues related to obedience and to repentance: about not getting angry and about gentleness (Word VIII), about not keeping in mind the evil (Word IX), about slandering (Word X), about much-speaking and about silence which stay in positive or negative connection with the slandering (Word XI), about lie that stays, at its turn, in connection with the slandering and with the much-speaking (Word XII), and finally about idleness (Word XIII) that is as some sort of cause of the much-speaking, of the slandering, and of the lie. All of these are opposed to obedience and to repentance for sins, are cannon balls chained to the feet of those who attempt walking towards their spiritual cleaning, spiritual cleaning that can be positively achieved through the humbleness of the obedience and through repentance.

In the usual order of the passions, after the covetousness of the belly is placed the fornication, and after that comes the love for money, and then comes the anger, the sadness, and the idleness, and then comes the vain-glory and the pride. In The Ladder, as we have ascertained it, the idleness is placed before the covetousness of the belly and before the love for money, likewise the anger (ant is opposite: the non-getting-angry) for they are seen in their negative connection with the disobedience that is the chief virtue of the monks. When taking in consideration the Christians in general, one can list first the covetousness of the belly, and then the fornication, the love for money, and the anger for being impeded from satisfying the mentioned passions, and the sadness for the lack of those passions' materials and then the idleness caused by discouraging consequently to unsuccessful attempts to satisfy those passions.

In The Ladder, therefore, only after idleness is placed as effect, the covetousness of the belly (Word XIV). Immediately after it, it is treated about cleanness understood especially as a bodily cleanness, given the fact that the covetousness brings after it the debauchery (Word XV).

The following Word XVI trats on the love for money and also about giving alms that must be opposed to the passion of covetousness for money and for wealth. The love form money does not oppose, in its quality as love for material objects, only to God as Person consummate in love, but it also opposes the unhindered connection among the human subjects, with our fellow humans. Here the author shows that the rejection of the world and the harsh restraint and joyfully enduring the hardships does not mean despising the people, not even the world, but it means a clean relation with the people and a clean look at the things, as creatures of God, in the horizon of their infinite sense and of their imperishable value into God. "The non-gathering-of-wealth man is clean in his prayer. But he who loves the earning he will pray to the material images". The last one does not enter with an unlimited mind the connection with the unlimited Subject, into His power and love, but he limits himself inside the objects' borders and he attracts everything within is egotistical limitation, by creating walls and enmities between himself and his fellow humans. The love for money is the gate locked up against any spiritualization understood as loving relation with God and as deep and loving penetration in the sense and in the reality of all creatures, persons and things. "The love for money is and it is called as the root of all evil (sins). This is because it caused hatred, stealing, envy, separations, enmities, strife, keeping the evil in mind, lack of merciless, and killing" (Word XVI, chapter 23).

Immediately after the love for money and after its opposite, the giving of alms, the author speaks in the Word XVII about insensitiveness, or about the death of the soul. This is because the love for money actually makes the soul callous, it petrified the soul, it takes away the soul's mobility of the feeling of mercy, of understanding, of flight into the love for God, and of openness towards the fellow humans, and also towards other actual or potential springs of the love. Not uselessly, after this locking up into insensitiveness the author treated about a means for overcoming the insensitiveness, and that is "the churchly singing together with others" (Word XVIII). This helps to taking vigil (Word XIX). The love for money associated with the passionate attachment to the world, to the life of pleasures, if not restrained, it will give birth to cowardice, or the cowardice gives birth to that one. That why the author treated about cowardice in right in the next Word XX.

One can say that until here has been treating about 2 themes, or better said about two groups of themes: in the first place on the general detachment from the world regarding what the world has sinful; on the repentance for the sins committed because of the attachment to the world and on the obedience in order to avoid committing future sins; and as well on the string of only partial sins which oppose the repentance and the obedience. In the second place, the author treated about the bodily mode of the attachment to the world, namely about the covetousness of the belly, with the love for wealth, with the non-mercilessness and with the insensitiveness, which are caused by the first ones, and with the giving of alms and with the singing in common to God, which resist the bodily egotism of the mentioned passions.

There follows a third theme, of a group of themes, namely the enchanting of the man about himself: the vain-glory, the pride, and the blasphemy (Words: XXI, XXII, XXIII), which are a more subtle, a more devilish form of the egotism, of the detachment from the connection with God and with the fellow humans as springs of the lover and therefore springs of the life. Tho these are opposed the gentleness and, on a higher step, the simplicity and the innocence (Word XXIV), and especially the humble cogitation (Word XXV).

Are treated at the end, as a fourth theme of group of themes, about the gift of discernment or of the right-reckoning reached by the freed of passions man (Word XXVI). This is a clean intuition of the good that must be done in each situation and of the bad that must be avoided and that is often camouflaged into good. This intuition is born out of the fact that the soul has gained a state of dispassion, of balance and objective judgment, and so the soul no longer can be deceived by who knows what hidden passionate preference when judging and choosing the deed that must be done. The discernment stays, due to that, in connection with an appeasement of the soul, with the fact that the soul will not be disturbed by some temptation or passion (Word XXVII). Only in that serenity the soul can maintain himself in a clean and prolonged prayer (Word XXVIII). This serenity is an aspect of the dispassion, and the dispassion is, at its turn, a flooding of the soul with the heavenly light and cleanness (Word XXIX). Now come in plain sight, with the whole their power: the faith, the hope, and the love, as soul's culminant connections with God (Word XXX). Especially the love represents the step which the ladder leans with, on the opening of the sky, which Christ received through, them who have cleaned themselves and who have repented, in His arms, or at the bosom of His infinite love. This is for into love, they are fully and forever united with Christ.

So, the last five stapes of the ladder represent the filling up of the soul with the light, with the peace, with the power, and with the love of God, as fruits of the efforts undertook on inferior steps, which the soul has detached himself, by and large, from the world, from the attachment to the world through all sorts of greediness, as also from the locking into himself through pride. About the love, the author of The Ladder says: "He who attempts speaking about love, he actually attempts to speak about God Himself. But speaking of God through words it is dangerous and wrong to them who do not take heed. The word about love if known to the angels, but even to them through godlike illumination. The love id God. And he who wants to define God, he will be like he who, while being blind, he attempts counting the sand from the dep of the ocean" (Word XXX, chapter 2). And about dispassion he says: "He who has been found worthy of dispassion, he has God Himself within himself while still being into body, as Helmsman in all his words, deeds, and thoughts. That why he feels within himself through illumination, the will of God, as he would hear a voice, and he is elevated above any human teaching" (Word XXIX, chapter 15). "The love, the dispassion, and the adoption differ from one another only by names. Like the light, the fire, and the flame are united in a sole work, so you have to understood those ones" (Word XXX, chapter 4). So, the dispassion is "the earthly heavens" (Word XXIX), namely the earth filled up with the light and with the heavenly work of the Holy Ghost, it is the transfigured human being, as the Lords' body of Tabor. The dispassion is the "endless consummation" of the consummate ones; the dispassion never reaches an edge, for it ceaselessly increases in the dispassion and in the lack of passions or in the endless cleanness of God's kindness and love.

In a word, the believer's climbing towards God is like a climbing towards the endless gentleness and sensitiveness of the human from within himself.

While in the other spiritual writings of the Holy Fathers the advices referring to the cleaning of passions are, by and large, scattered in sentences mixed up with thought on the height God's power and love, on contemplating God into nature, and on the sweetness of the union with God, The Ladder mostly (in 27 Words) consists of a systematic ordering of those advices, according to the believer's spiritual climbing and it also consists of a very concrete description of theirs. The Ladder is, due to that, a concrete guide to him who wants to spiritually grow up. Maybe that's why it gives the impression of a very rigorous guidance, and it really is like that. Still the Ladder does not lack a wide understanding of the human helplessness and of the wide variety of the degrees of power which the human beings are endowed with. Let's give here an example: "Some people bless them who have rejected the world, with a feeling of eunuch due to their nature, as one who have been delivered from under the tyranny of their body; but I bless them who make themselves as eunuchs on each day, namely they who circumscribe on themselves with their thinking as with a knife" (Word XV, chapter 167); namely he blessed them who are constantly tempted and who always overcome their temptation, more than on them who no longer feel the temptation. Or even more: "I was some people falling unwillingly and I saw other people wanting to willingly fall and not being able to. And I deplored these ones more than them who fall daily, because these ones want to feel the stench but they cannot feel it" (Word XV, Chapter 18). The Ladder reassures the laymen as well, that they can be saved by living a moderate life, but an honest life: "All the good things you can do, you do them. Do not defame anybody, do not steal from anybody, do not lie to anybody…, commiserate with the needy, do not offend anyone… If you do so, you will not be far from the Kingdom of Heavens" (Word I, chapter 38).

By and large, The Ladder is a combination between the harshness of the advices destined to theme who are strong and spiritually advances, and the contrary gentleness destined them who are less strong and to the beginners. This combination can be seen also in the paradoxical expressions very craftily composed by the author. Thus, he spoke in the Ladder about "the crying causing of joy" (Word VII), about the "dispassionate hatred" of the world (Word III, chapter 19), about the "harsh, restrained, and easy ascesis" (Word I, chapter 18), about the "sad and bright humble cogitation" (Word I, chapter 3), about "the fearless feeling of the death" (Word VI, chapter 16), about the "repentance as non-sad depravation of any bodily comforting" (Word VII, chapter 5). By and large, the author proves himself to be a subtle connoisseur of the complicated souly states reached by the diverse people's natures. The description made by him is an extraordinary rich analysis of all those states; it surpasses all treaties of the French moralists, by its richness, y the profoundness of its analyses, and especially by the power of engaging the souls on the path of the betterment and consummation.

The practical, precise, complex, and by and large harsh and efficient character of the recommended remedies, it determined The Ladder to be reckoned as the most appropriate ensemble of rules for norming the monastic life. IN most of the practices of the monastic life can be identified the prescriptions of The Ladder.

Let us specify here that to the 30 Words addressed to the monks, the author added also a Word towards the Shepherd, namely to the guiding father of the monks especially concerning how he ought to guide the beginners, given the fact that in all the 30 words addressed to the monks it is supposed that they would be guided by such an advisor, or by the monastery's hegumen. This word can be, in many regards, a pastoral guide for the priest as well. "He is not a worthy of admiration teacher, he who makes wise the taught children, but he who makes wise the unthought and the unwise children" (Word V). "If you have eyes capable of foreseeing the storms on the sea, you tell that clearly to them who are on that ship. And if not, you will cause the sinking of that ship, once all of them entrusted you with that ship's whelm" (ibid.).

The last part of this word is a praise brought to John, the Raith's hegumen, who asked the hegumen from Sinai such a rule for the monastic life to be written.

Behold who Veniamin Costache, the Metropolitan of Moldavia described the value of The Ladder for the monks' life, as also the polyvalence of the senses hidden in its words, in his Foreword to the Romanian translation printed by him in the year 1814: "The composition of the book is a very crafty and a very high and a very subtle in meanings one. That is for, its birth-giver was consummate in all aspects in the teachings of the external philosophy, and he also became himself alike in all the working good deed (virtue), and to the seeing deed as far as it is possible to the human nature, after he consecrated himself to the hesychastic life. And from there he experienced with the deed all the wars and all the cunningness and of the craftsmanships and of the crafts of the devils and all the works of the passions both bodily and souly. Likewise, the whole state of the good deeds (of the virtues) and its skills and clumsiness, and the people's customs in very details and in very subtlety. Due to that, as an all-highlighted and all-skilled one in both of those, he all-skillfully wrote his so subtle and difficult to understand teachings, following in composing his rhetoric to Saint Gregory the Speaker about God, as also it was noticed by them who composed the scholia to many doubtful places: "It seems to me that the father says this". Because of this, by seeing how difficult it is and how non-facile is to anyone to understand it, we have been striving in any possible way to interpret it as clearly and as unveiling as possible, by wielding the language of the time and of the Romanian people".

"For it contains so many and much adorned images and such a multitude of meanings and themes, which is can straighten the inward man and the outward man through, to him who will use it zealously and attentively, so that we can say: it is easier to count the stars of the sky than tell all of these in details. This is why we dare to say: as the bread is more needed for the body than all the other foods, so it is this book to him who desires his salvation that all the other parental books. And like the moon overwhelms the stars likewise this book overwhelms all the other books. And like the sight is more useful than all other senses of the body, likewise this book is more efficient than all the other book for salvation. This is for this book tells us all the all-holy will of God more than any other books and more clearly. And this book is not only to the monks but also to the laymen an all-good guide and very detailed canon, that advises everyone towards the all-pious things. And this book brings them who read it, through its right teachings, towards humiliation and towards that crying that cleans up all the soul and bodily defilements. For it is not the human language worthy enough to tell all this book's wonderful gifts which it rewards its readers and with".

"And you read it often and attentively, for this book unmistakingly is a mosaic-like staff, which you will be able to separate this life's sea with, and the sea of the fierce passions, and you will cross that sea without putting you in any danger, and the thought-pharaoh, namely the devil, you will see him sunken into that sea as the yore Israel saw the Egyptians. This book is manna to the soul's feelings which are bittered by the passions and by the waves of this world; this book is shore that delivers them who escape by reading it and it liberated them from sinking into the much-surrounding sins, and it makes them swimming without any danger across this life's waters, which are much-troubled, towards the promised land, where they who love God can enter and harvest the everlasting happiness; that ladder seen by the ancient Jacob, has its top reaching the sky, which is upheld by the power of God, which the angels descend on to them who want to inherit the salvation, while the soul of them who are saved by it climb and God welcome those soul in Hid Kingdom; and that ladder is a heavenly escape that can pull the soul out of the deep of the sins, and top place those souls cleaned of all darkness, in front of God".

The importance The Ladder had in the monk's and laymen's lives, it determined that fragments of this book to be read also at the churchly services, specially during the Lent. This custom originated at holy Mount Athos. That's why the Books of Triodon used there are scattered with fragments from The Ladder. Later on, this custom was extended to the Romanian monasteries as well. Reading these fragments was reckoned as so important that their texts has been included in time also in the collections called as "Prologues".

"But The Ladder recently exited the churches and the monasteries in order to enter the houses of the clergymen and of the believers", says His Eminence Metropolitan Nicolae Corneanu, first in Greek and Slavonic manuscripts and then in Romanian translations. "The old Slavonic manuscripts, dating from around mid XV Century, some of them very artistically adorned, they present a special importance"[8].

From here one can see that The Ladder has been zealously copied in the monastic world, but it had also a wide spreading among believers worldwide.

B
The Copying, the Translating, and the Paraphrasing of The Ladder in diverse Languages, including the Romanian Language

1) The Ladder was copied, in the first place, extensively in the Greek language, and since a moment in time it started to be translated in other languages as well. In the IX Century it was translated in Syriac, in the year 1280 it was translated in Latin by Angelus de Cingulo, and in the year 1420 by Ambrosius Camaldulensis and then after my many others. The first to print the Greek text accompanied by a Latin translation was Matthäus Raderus S. I., Paris, 1633. This text was reproduced in Migne, G.P.[9] LXXXVIII, col. 634-1210.

A new printing of Raderus's text from Migne, with a parallel translation in Italian, was done by Pietro Trevisan, under the title: S. Giovani Climaco, Scala Paradisi, vol. I-II, Torino, 1961; that version was translated in Romanian by Metropolitan Tit Simedrea. A translation in the old Italian appeared in the year 1875, at Bologna, in Collezione di opere inedite o rare dei primi tre secoli della lingua, t. 31. And even long before, in the year 1532, it was printed also a translation from Latin to Spanish, in Mexico[10].

In Slavonic the Ladder was translated ever since the X-XIII Centuries. On the territory of the Romanian Countries the Slavic manuscripts of the Ladder has been preserved ever since the XV Century.

But very early The Ladder was spread in Greek manuscripts[11]. And it might be that no longer after that it was also translated in Romanian and it circulated in Romanian manuscripts as well. His Eminence Metropolitan Nicolae Corneanu speaks about the widespread circulation of The Ladder among Romanians, ever since the XV Century. But even though His Eminence says that relatedly to the Slavonic manuscripts, it is not excluded that the monks, the hierarchs, the literates who were reading the Slavonic and Kre manuscripts attempted to write down The Ladder's sentences in Romanian as well, form Grek and Slavonic texts, which they of course understood and translated din the minds in Romanian words they used in their daily speaking as well. His Eminence Metropolitan Nicolae Corneanu says: "Bishops and monks, voivodes and high dignitaries, merchants and villagers, men and women, all of them read with the same thirst the steps climbing towards heavens of The Ladder. For instance, in the advices gave to his son Theodosius by voivode Neagoe Basarab, at the beginning of the XVI Century, who built the famous Curtea de Argeş Monastery, it mentions John Climacus for several times. Thus, we know about a manuscript preserved in the Library of the Academia of Popular Republic of Romania, with the number 494, who stayed for several generations in the same family[12]. Knowing The Ladder on the territory of the Romanian Countries during the XVI Century, as also its popularity in the wide circles of the believers, it is proven also by the painting of The Ladder on the external walls of the Monasteries from Suceviţa (painted at the end of the XVI Century) and Râşca (painted in the middle of XVI Century) – where The Ladder was combined with the Final Judgment.

2) The First known Romanian translation of The Ladder was that made by Metropolitan Barlaam[13], while he was a monk at Secu Monastery, previously to the year 1618. It is the first work of Barlaam and its beneficial influence upon Barlaam's Cazanii[14] can be seen in the fact that Barlaam presented in his Cazanii a purely Orthodox theology, one in Patristic spirit (for instance, in his teaching about salvation as a transforming work of the man), for Barlaam remained uninfluenced by the Catholic or Protestant theology, unlike many Greek or Russians theologians at that time[15]. Pandele Olteanu argues, contrary to the opinion we have just presented, according to which Barlaam would have translated The Ladder by using a Slavonic text, we think that his translation was made according to a Neo-Greek text that paraphrased with explanations the original Greek text; the Slavonic text that Barlaam placed it on the right columns of the Romanian text it is a Slavonic text copied in many manuscripts from a translation of The Lader probably made during Century XII at the Holy Mountain[16]. But Barlaam also used a Slavonic translation of a Neo-Greek version, a paraphrased one, in a Ukrainian-Carpathian version[17]. During [15] Barlaam declared that he based his works on the Homilies of Kallistos, the Patriarch of Constantinople (P. N. Șerbănescu, „La 300 de ani de la moartea Mitropolitului Varlaam al Moldovei" ("At 300 Years after the Death of Metropolitan Barlaam of Moldavia"), in Biserica Ortodoxă Română (The Romanian Orthodox Church) Review, 1957, no. 10, p. 1025). But some other time he says that he translated "from many scriptures, from Slavonic language" (Ibid, p. 1027). The mentioned Patriarch could be Kallistos I, the disciple of Saint Gregory Palamas; Kallistos I was patriarch between the years 1350-1354; another more probable variant could be Kallistos II, Patriarch of Constantinople, for 7 months in the year 1397, the author of several ascetic writings from The Greek Philokalia, published by us in the Volume VIII of the Romanian Philokalia. But Pandele Olteanu, quoted work, pp. 548, 568, he brings proofs that the Cazanii is mostly made on the basis of the Slavonic translation of the writing called Comoara (The Treasure) wrote by Damascene Studites, first printed at Venice in the year 1558.

[14] Cazanie is the transliteration in Romanian of a word from Slavonic meaning a religious book containing sermons or stories commenting texts from Gospels. Here we have the plural Cazanii. (E. l. t.'s n.)

The Orthodox spirit of the Cazanii can be seen, for instance, in the understanding of Christ's cross as power transforming the man, helped by the man's efforts as well, as it is understood in The Ladder too, and not as a simple juridical equivalence to people's guilt. Thus, in the following paragraph as present in the Cazania to the Sunday of the Renunciation to Eat Cheese, it is said: "That is why the fasting is useful at any time… especially among these fasting days is important the Lent, in order us to prepare ourselves and to clean up ourselves towards the holy Impartation and towards the day of our Lord's resurrection, by killing our own bodies towards the toils and towards the death of His Holiness… as all Christ's believers live in ascesis all over the world, except the Calvinists and the Lutherans who are the heretics of the present time, the connection of the good things (deeds) they do not want it, in the strength of their body and in their resting, that sweetens the body. And they hate Christ's cross too, which they do not dare to give themselves any toil or ascesis with, because of fearing to damage their wellness here in this world. Without toil and without fasting and without tears and without patience, they want to reach the heavens by waling the wide path that leads to perdition, and they do not remember Prophet Daniel that after he fasted for ten days, he was more beautiful and fatter than he who eats expensive meals at Nebuchadnezzar's table" (Cazania, editor J. Byck, Bucharest, 1943, pp. 28-29).

[17] Idem, quoted article, p. 555. Barlaam himself declared that he translated The Ladder "was brought out from Slavonic and made understandable to any Romanian language knower" (Manuscript of Romanian Academia no. 2511, f. 3 v.). "Out of the book anyone can understand – said Barlaam – the detachment of the human soul from the earthly things and the ascension of the mind among the heavenly ones", "in order the human being to be able to escape from being prey to the worldly waves and worries, and to go up into the quietude of Barlaam's life there were circulating several Neo-Greek paraphrased versions[18]. A s Pandele Olteanu proved, Barlaam used the Neo-Greek paraphrased version of Maxim Margunios (1542-1602), a version that was first printed at Venice and it has a wide spreading and it was translated in Italian, Spanish, and Slavonic. The fact that Barlaam used also a Slavonic translation of Margunios's text was deduced by Pandele Olteanu out of the fact that Barlaam's translation includes some Ukrainian-Carpathian Slavic influences[19]. Pandele Olteanu even gave an example which we can se out of, the fact that Maxim Margunios introduced two of the scholia from the Word IV of The Ladder which are placed in the edition comprised in the G.P. at the end of the word IV, in the text (acholia VI-VII; G.P. quoted col. 729). But out of Margunios and out of Barlaam's translation of the mentioned paragraph as given by Pandele Olteanu, one can see that Margunios widened the phrase of The Ladder even more than the mentioned scholia did[20].

There is another aspect to be studied: how many of the scholia from the G.P. or from other Grek manuscripts of the Ladder were introduced in the text of Margunios's "paraphrase", and therefore in the Barlaam's translation as well. Another aspect to be researched would be also that of to what extent the Answers to the Calvin Catechism written by Barlaam are influenced by the answers written to Jeremy II of Constantinople by the theologians from Tübingen, answers seemingly composed with the help of Maxim Margunios. Margunios wrote himself works against Reformate[21].

The Ladder translated by Barlaam though it was not printed, it had a wide spreading as copied manuscripts[22].

[22] His Eminence Nicolae, the Metropolitan of Banat, quoted article, p. 151, mentioned the following manuscripts existing in the Library of the Romanian Academia, which contain only the Ladder: no. 493 written for Probota Monastery, when Barlaam was still living; no. 494, written by Hieromonk Ghenadie in the year 1669; no. 2511 and 2512 written by Vlad Grămăticul for Hieromonk Ilarion who was hegumen of Bistrița Monastery in Oltenia, and who was latter on ordained as Bishop of Râmnicu-Vâlcea; no. 2650 written by Iosif the hegumen of Hurezi Monastery, around the year 1740, after an exemplary copied by Vlad Grămăticul; no. 2665 by the same one; no. 2952 written by Monk Meletie from Râșca

His Eminence Nicolae Corneanu mentioned, in the quoted study, in notes, also a series of ulterior Romanian translations of The Ladder, first in Slavonic and then in Greek.

3) Translations from Slavonic:

a) The translation made by Archimandrite Vartolomeu Măzăreanu from Putna Monastery. This translated dates from the year 1766 and it is contained in the manuscript no. 2959 from The Romanian Academia. This translation intended to bring to the content of The Ladder closer to the monks and to the people living at that time, as also did the Russian translations which modernized the Paleo-Slavic text.

b) Another version is that contained by a manuscript form the XVIII Century preserved in the Library of the Romanian Patriarchy, wit the number 5, originating from Căldărușani Monastery, after being preserved for a while at the Faculty of Theology from Bucharest where it received the number 224. This translation followed its Slavonic model, so that "it is structurally different from the Greek original", says His Eminence Metropolitan Nicolae Corneanu. Actually, the "Words" of The Ladder are in this manuscript transformed in Homilies, namely they are widely paraphrased in sermons which are, on the other hand, very faithful to the original text. Each expression from the original text is here explained in detail. And each Homily has a very long title. Having a preaching character, each of these Homilies is introduced with: "Bless, father". We are not aware of the fact that there was identified the Russian or the Slavonic text which this Romanian text was translated according to, and if it did not have a Greek paraphrasis at its basis. If such an origin could not be identified, these Homilies would represent a Romanian Philokalian writing. This manuscript, though it mentions in Pinax (the content placed at the beginning of the manuscript) all the thirty titles of the Words of The Ladder, it ends at the f. 228 v with the Word (Homily) no. 22. The rest is missing.

Monastery, between the years 1797 and 1798ș no. 1746 written at Neamț Monastery for the community of Paisius Velichkovsky.

The same Metropolitan Nicolae Corneanu also mentioned the manuscript no. 2983 from the Library of the Academia of the Popular Republic of Romania, dating from the XVII Century, and that contains in addition to The Ladder also other writings. Pandele Olteanu*, quoted article*, p. 563, note no. 92, he mentions also from the Library of the Academia of the Popular Republic of Romania, the miscellaneous manuscripts which include The Ladder or parts of it: 2959, 163, 3543, 2569, 2315, 3318 etc.

We are going to present in the following a few examples illustrating the mode which this paraphrase widens the original text like:

The Greek edition: the end of the Word II, chapter 17 and 18: "in order the last things not to become worse that the first ones (Mt. 14: 45). The shore becomes causing of salvation and of dangers. And this is known to them who sail on the understanding sea. And it is a pitiful sight to see them who escaped on the sea but they drown in the harbor."	Manuscript no. 5 from the Romanian Patriarchy: "in order their last things not to become worse than the first ones. This is because the quietude and the escape to monastery of the monk causes salvation and praise crowns to them who have a good nature and their deeds can be seen. But to them who are stubborn and who do not think neither they take care of the rebuking from the hell and from dishonor, there their passions will be multiplied more than if they remain in the world. And this was very well known to the old sailors of the monastic life and they wrote us all kind of mediations in their books lest the ship of our life not to wreck in unexpected places. This is because many ships escape the storm but, later on, when they arrive to the shore, because those ships are carelessly anchored, they will break down, and that is really strange and an awful evil and a big sadness, which somebody urges us to ceaselessly shed tears for, because of seeing that ship wrecked in the middle of the harbor, after crossing the sea by enduring the longest dangers."

The Greek edition 1970, chapter 1 and 2 from the Word XXII: "Pride means denying God, a contrivance of the devils, despising the people, the mother of the damnation, the niece of the praises, the sign of the bareness, the banishing away of the help from God, the cause of the fallings, the cause of becoming devilish, the spring of the anger, the door of the hypocrisy, the stronghold of the devils, the guardian of the sins, the cause of the mercilessness, the not-knowing of the mercy, bitter supervisor, inhuman judge, the enemy of God, the root of the blasphemy."	The manuscript no. 5 of the Romanian Patriarchy: "The pride hated by God it truly is a rejection of God and of His mastery. This is because it makes the haughty to reject God and to say that the good things he has, are not from God but from himself. This is a finding of the devils because they were the first to find that out and to crown themselves with it. It is like a mother who do not feel sorry, and it is the cause that sucks glory and pride as they would be maternal milk. It is a sign of the fruitless soul, it is getting far of the godlike help and or the holy gift, the hesitation of the heart, the cause of the evilness, the falling into the impious works, the source of the pride, the idol of the hypocrisy, the strengthening of the devilish work, the persistence into sin, the enemy of the confession of sins, the non-knower of the mercifulness, strongly taking heed at the foreign things, always resisting God and His servants, and a mouth speaking of evil and blaspheming."

c) From the same period, we have the manuscript no. 163 from the Library of the Romanian Academia, copied by Monk Grigorie from Cozia Monastery, in the year 1765. The second is the manuscript no. 3543, from the same library, dating from the year 1796. Both of them are copies after Slavonic texts. The last one originated from Ţigăneşti Monastery, and it comprised only the steps: IV, XXV, and XXVIII, and it was copied by Nun Micdonia. A second copy of the same text, copied by the same nun, it still can be found at Ţigăneşti Monastery.

d) The manuscript no. 2569 from the Library of the Romanian Academia, dating form the year 1773, written by Monk Rafael from Horezu Monastery.

e) The manuscript no. 2315 belonging to the Library of the Romanian Academia, dating from the year 1779, written by Hieromonk Dorotei from The Romanian Country.

f) The manuscript no. 3318, belonging to the Library of the Romanian Academia, dating from the year 1787, written by Hieromonk Dorotei from The Romanian Country.

g) The manuscript no. 22, from the Library of the Romanian Patriarchy, a miscellaneous manuscript dating from beginning of the XIX Century, it contains only a step (f. 72 r – f. 75 v), namely the step XVII, corresponding to the step XVIII from the text published by Veniamin Costachi and in the G.P. But this step is attributed the number XVII also in the Greek edition from the year 1970[23].

But translations of The Ladder from Russian have been continued to be made until these days. His Eminence Metropolitan Nicolae Corneanu says: "Until today have been circulating numerous translations, most of them made after the edition of the Optina-Cozelesc Hermitage and then printed in Serghieva Lavra from Zagorss. The Metropolitan Gurie Grosu, then, starting from a Russian text, he produced in the year 1930 a shorter version which he printed as well"[24].

Among these translations we have read that one from the manuscript no. 154 from the Library of the Romanian patriarchy, translated after the Russian version printed in the edition from the Optina-Cozelesc Hermitage, in the printing press of Saint Serghie, in the year 1901. This manuscript was written between the years 1961 and 1962 in two volumes (volume I in 219 pages, volume II in 112 pages), at the Sanatorium House of the Romanian Patriarchy from Dealu Monastery, by Protosyncellus Gherasim Negulescu, who came there from Cheia Monastery. This manuscript does not mention the translators from Grek to Russian and from Russian to Romanian. This manuscript was written with beautiful handwriting and ordered as a printing press copy, it does not always convey enough faithfully the Greek text (and that shows, maybe, that neither the Russian text did convey very faithfully the Greek text), but it stands out by its modern, fluent, and fully intelligible character of the Romanian wording, despite it uses the word of the tradition churchly language, with few exceptions (for instance, the syntagm: properly-said, or the word: especially etc.).

One can see that the Romanian and the Russian translations had at their basis the Greek text, but the scholia are given at the end of all Words – the scholia are fewer than in the G.P. LXXXVIII - are partially taken from the quoted G.P., a fact mentioned on each time by the author of the copy – and partially from the translation in neo-Greek of The Ladder made by Hieromonk Atanasie Criteanul, which he added his interpretations to, and printed by him at Venice in the year 1683. Among the notes which are not taken from the G.P. we are mentioning that quite long explaining the title of the Word VI, which are provided in historical data regarding the existence of that "Monastery of the Repentance" in the Egypt's Thebaid (for instance the witness of Blessed Hieronym) and it is specified that due to the harshness of the canon endured by the monk who fell into sins one must not blame the selectman, for those canons were willingly assumed by those monks themselves.

At the Word I, chapter no. 25, it is given the following note that is neither in the G.P. either nor in the Romanian version published by Veniamin Costachi, neither in the Greek edition from the year 1970: "O monk, writes Rufin, because of often feeling the movement of the anger in monastery, he decided to go to wilderness, for he won't be there anybody whom he to strife with, and so he will be able to find his serenity. But when he went far to a cave it happened that for many times, he spilled the water from his pitcher. And that made him angry. And thus, he saw that the anger is within himself and not in the external circumstances. Therefore, he turned himself back to monastery".

One has to notice the fact that this Romanian translation, and therefore the Greek and the Russian translations as well, it is divided in heads as in the Greek edition from the year 1970 that used some manuscripts from the Dionysiou Monastery from Mount Athos. But the two versions are not divined in the same number of heads. Another difference between the Romanian text and the Greek text from the year 1970, it is that in the Greek edition the Word towards Shepherd is not divided in chapters, but it is divided in heads up to the head no. 100, while in the Greek manuscript staying at the basis of the Manuscript no. 154 from the Library of the Romanian Patriarchy was maintained the division in the XV Chapters, but each chapter is also divided in heads (for instance, the chapter I contains the heads 1-11; the chapter II contains the heads 1-23 etc.), as it is divided in the G.P[25].

3) His Eminence Metropolitan Corneanu mentions then the following ulterior translations of The Ladder from the Greek Language:

a) "The first one that is known ids represented by the Manuscript no. 3024 that can be found in the Library of the Romanian Academia. This translation, that was finished in the year 1775, it belongs to an anonymous monk and it was made after the neo-Greek version of Athanasios of Crete, as it is mentioned right in its title". But this version has scholia as well, and these scholia were used also by the Russian manuscript printed at Optina, or at least by the Romanian version of that manuscript.

b) An attempt "to give as faithful as possible translation of The Ladder belonged to the literate hieromonk Macarie from Cernica Monastery. This translation, that is accompanied by scholia as well, it wanted to be "verbatim, without any useless adding or clarification of mine" … For as clear and as exact rendering of the text, as also in order to enrich the scholia, he resorted to a neo-Greek version belonging to Maxim Marguinos dating from the year 1790"[26].

[25] In the Romanian translation of the Russian text, it is said that in the Russian and Neo-Greek texts staying at its basis, there is after the Word XIII, the indication: "In Greek… in Slavonic triceasen-steps, tremble for three hours. In Greek new translation 1962 is applied (used) when reading the hours I, III, and VI". After this manuscript or after some other manuscript, there circulated a series of copied typed on the typewriter. I have seen a copy at Father Hieromonk Iurașcu from Antim Monastery.

Macarie finished the translation of The Ladder in the year 1782 and, without being able to print it, he made a few hand-copies[27]. Thus, Macarie gave Cernica Monastery – that was being founded at that time under the leadership of Hegumen Gheorghe – the foundation of its ascetic life. The Library of the Romanian Academia possesses the manuscript no. 1913[28] from among the copies written by Macarie. But this translation was copied by others as well, as attested by the manuscript no. 1901 form the Library of the Romanian Academia[29].

c) Another translation from Greek represents the content of the manuscript no. 2324 from the Library of the Romanian Academia. This manuscript was handwritten by Gheorghe the Teacher in the year 1787, for hegumen Dosoftei from Câmpulung Monastery from The Romanian Country.

d) His Eminence Metropolitan Nicolae Corneanu says that "these versions made after the Greek text stood at the basis of The Ladder in Romanian, imprinted in the year 1814, at the [26] Nicolae, Metropolitan of Banat, quote article, p. 154, who quotes - at the note no. 27 - Emile Legrand-Louis Petit, Hubert Pernot, Bibliographie Hellénique des ouvrages par des grecs au dix-huitième siècle, tome II, Paris, 1928, pp. 195-196.

[27] Nicolae, Metropolitan of Banat, ibid. Hie Eminence says that before translating The Ladder, Macarie translated the scholia, at the year 1785, citing Fr. D. Furtună, the disciple of Hegumen Paisie from Cernica and Căldărușani Monastery, Bucharest, 1928, pp. 16, 66. We think that the manuscripts need to be further researched; the manuscript no. 50 from the Library of the Romanian Academia contains an interpretation of the Scholia to six Speeches if The Ladder done by Hieromonk Macarie (and not the text of The Ladder). And that manuscript really dates from the year 1785. But it may be that Macarie himself made a copy in at the year 1785 after a previous translation. The manuscript dates from the year 1821. On the title-page is written: "The interpretations of The Ladder from Greece, translated in the Romanian language by impious Kir Macarie, the hieromonk, the teacher of the Gospel 1785, August the 4th". But the scholia interpreted by Macarie to the six Words are fewer in number in comparison to those form the G.P. as well as in comparison to those contained by the translation done by Veniamin Costache who, by and large, he gave the same number as in the G.P., but under many of the numbers he gave more scholia (for instance: at the Word VI Macarie gave only three scholia, but in the G.P. and at Veniamin Costache there are seven scholia). The translation of the scholia at Macarie does not correspond either as content to those from the G.P. and from Veniamin Costache. But Macarie gives also an interpretation to the scholia from The Life of Joah Climacus, written by Daniel of Raith, unlike in the G.P.

[28] Nicolae, Metropolitan of Banat, ibid. Pandele Olteanu says that the manuscript no. 1905 is not a translation done by Macarie after the text of Margunios, but it is another version (quoted article, p. 565, note no. 94).

[29] Nicolae, Metropolitan of Banat, ibid, says that also the manuscript no. 58 from the Library of the Romanian patriarchy contains this translation, and not only the scholia which we are talking about.

printing press of the Neamț Monastery, by another famous metropolitan of Moldavia Veniamin Costache. He did not translate, but he improved an existing translation by correcting it"[30].

This ascertainment must be placed in accord with what Metropolitan Veniamin Costache said, namely that the translation published by him differed from the translations mentioned before. This is for, in the Foreword Metropolitan Veniamin Costache found unsatisfactory all the previous translations, and he said that at establishing the Romanian text published by him he took as basis the printed Greek-Latin text (it is very probable that it is about the text published by M. Raderus, later on published in the G.P.); but he corrected the mentioned manuscript by using other two manuscripts of The Ladder in old Greek. In addition to that, he reckoned that the criticism that could be formulated against the text published by him could be directed against himself: "in the book printed in Greek-Latin, because of being may mistakes and lacks and mismatches on many places, both in word and in scholia, those have been corrected and added and completed out of the other two Greek manuscripts which have been used for translation together with the printed one (that one of Raderus, o. n.), that in many places was better and identical to one another". So, Veniamin Costachi affirmed that the versions form the two Greek manuscripts used by him, they were on one hand better than the version from the G.P., while, on the other hand, they were consistent to one another, and that assured him that the text contained by them was very good.

"By reckoning us that those can somewhat unveil and illuminate the understanding of the book, and in order not to be us blamed by the knower readers, as we would have added something from ourselves among the holy and by God instilled scriptures of the Holy and Great Father, we have added them (that information) at the beginning of the book, so that each reader to know that we translated the book with the whole thoroughness and attention.

Therefore, welcome it with love, oh all-beloved readers, this book that has appeared now, not as before in poor and mudded and dirty and foreign clothing, by the previous translators (here we did not refer himself only to the translation made by Barlaam, o. n.), but this book is dressed up with golden tassels, adorned and colored in its natural purple, and as an all-luminous and much-shining sun, lightning the understandings of its meanings through a new language that is easy to understand and by rejecting all its burdens and dark places and the bewilderments which were darkening - as some dark clouds – its natural beauty and the beauty of its words.

Some researchers reckon that the Greek versions which Veniamin Costache said he used, would have been brought from Mount Athos. In addition to those, Veniamin Costache would have used also some neo-Greek versions, as for instance: that one belonging to Jeremy of Sinai printed at Venice in the year 1774[31].

A special merit of the version printed by Veniamin Costache is that, on one hand, it tries to render the text as non-paraphrased and as pure as possible of The Ladder, while, on the other hand, it added to the end of each Word numerous scholia explaining that word, namely a gibber number than those form the G.P. It could be very probable that Veniamin Costache took these scholia from the Greek manuscripts which he used.

e) "Another translation probably made after the Greek original as well, towards the end of the Century XVIII, it belongs to one of the greatest and most zealous translators of the old Christian literature. It is about Samuel Micu Clain (1745-1806). He left us 27 titles of translations from the holy fathers, containing almost 7500 pages of manuscript, some of them translated for 2-3 times". In a miscellaneous manuscript containing several Philokalian writings, it is contained also "the translation of one of the steps of The Ladder and it is probably that Samuel Clain translated other few steps". A manuscript coming from the library from Blaj, the manuscripts section, bearing the number 96, pages 160-169, it contains The Word towards Shepherd belonging to John Climacus[32].

f) A translation of the Ladder has been made also by His Eminence Metropolitan Nicolae of Banat, out of which he published the biography of Saint John Climacus in the Biserica

g) We have mentioned the translation dome by Metropolitan Tit Simedrea, after the text of Raderus form the G.P., reprinted by Pietro Trevisan at Turin, but without scholia. We have seen this translation. It stands out by its remarkable literary beauties, but it often renders the original text more freely and it does not use consistently the tradition Philokalian Romanian terms which need to be preserved, as means of communication between those who practice the ascesis recommended by The Ladder and the Philokalian writings by and large, as terms imprinted in the use of this communication.

That is why we could not decide in favor of any review of this translation or to include it in the collection of The Romanian Philokalia (as we could neither decide to simply revise other translations – a thing that we could not afford and that it would have implied a more difficult work than that of undertaking a new translation) – but we have preferred to proceed to render our own translation, one that was actually mostly finished when we received, for a short while, from Father Archimandrite Benedict Ghiuş, the translation made by Metropolitan Tit Simedrea, or when we become acquinted to the manuscripts of other newes translations (the Russian translations).

In comparison to the translation made by Metropolitan Veniamin Costache, his translation being faithful to the original text even in wording the phrases similar to Greek topic – and that makes his translation very difficult to understand to the today's reader – and also in comparison to the translation made by Metropolitan Tit Simedrea that, as we have mentioned it, it is not always faithful enough to the original text, we have strived ourselves to produce a translation that to be, on one hand, as faithful as possible to the original text, and on the other hand, in a Romanian phrase worded according to the rules of today's syntax of the Romanian language but, in the same time, in a terminology as traditional Philokalian as possible. This also for preserving the style unity of the entire Romanian Philokalia. Of course, we do not claim that we have succeeded to render a translation that is totally faithful to The Ladder. The richness of meanings of each word, or the density of each phrase, they make impossible and even unavoidable the existence of several translation modes, which can be reckoned – up to a point – as many interpretations. But we hope that from among these possible translation modes, we have chosen one of the most faithful as possible to the original text.

We to made a new translation also due to the fact that we have had available to us a Greek text published din the year 1970 by "Astir" House from Athens, a translation that is a reediting of the text published in the year 1883 by Hermit Sophronius, at Vrettos printing press from Constantinople, based on several manuscripts from the Dionysiou Monastery from Athos, one that has a parallel text the paraphrase to The Ladder made by Jeremy Sinaite from Crete, for the first time printed in the year 1774 at Venice, and which, according to E. Legrand, was used by Veniamin Costache as well. We have used the paleo-Greek text published in the year 1883 by Sophronius the Hermit and reedited in the year 1970 at Athens, a text that does not contain the paraphrase of Jeremy Sinaite because, being established on the basis of several, manuscripts from Dionysiou Monastery from Mount Athos, and by giving on the side of the page, when necessary, also the diverse variants differing form those chosen in the text, we have reckoned it as the closest to the original text of The Ladder. In addition to that, we have made our translation according to the Greek edition from the year 1970 and for the fact that in it the Words are divided in heads, and that makes more easily to identify the diverse citations which are going to made of it. Though, we have consulted also the text from the G.P.

C
The Scholia to The Ladder and the Text that We Have Translated and Framed into the Present Collection of The Romanian Philokalia

His Eminence Metropolitan Nicolae of Banat has been preoccupied with the scholia to The Ladder at his turn[34].

[34] Nicolae Corneanu, Contribuţia Scoliaştilor la înţelegerea "Scării" Sfântului Ioan Climax (The Contribution of the Scholia Writers tot eh Understanding of „The Ladder" of Saint John

Because of the lacunary briefness of some sentences of The Ladder and due to their richness of meanings, or because of simply allusively hinting at some Biblical events, or because of using some symbols known only to the readers close to the author, it occurred very early the need for explaining those throughs scholia, as it was done also with other writing of the Holy Fathers.

Even John the hegumen from Raith, who asked John Sinaite to compose this book, he felt the need for writing a commentary to it, probably using the dialogues which he had with the author of The Ladder[35].

A few hundred years later, Metropolitan Elijah of Crete, who lived between the second half of the Century XI and the beginning of the Century XII, and who was also known for his commentaries to the speeches of Saint Gregory of Nazianzus, he wrote an extended work containing commentaries to The Ladder[36]. His work has remained almost inedited up to these days; only a few words taken from it are gives as scholia at the end of the diverse Words of The Ladder. This work is entirely contained by the manuscript Pluteus IX, codices XI from Florence (Century XII), in codices Marcian 128-130 from Venice (Century XIV), in codices 868 form the Greek fund from the National Library from Paris, and in codices Coisl. 87-98 from the same Library.

But most of the scholia to The Ladder belong to anonymous authors. Almost all copyists and translators of The Ladder added their own scholia. Sometimes, these scholia consisted of abstracts taken from diverse Church Fathers as: Saint Diadochus of Photice, Isaiah the Hermit, Evagrius, Saint John Chrysostom, Saint Basil the Great, and to saints like: Saint Maximos the Confessor, Saint Isaac the Syrian, Saint Mark the Ascetic, Saint Gregory the Theologian, Saint Gregory of Nyssa as so on

[36] About the work of Metropolitan Elijah of Crete wrote: A. d'Andilly, Echelle sainte out Les degrés pour monter au ciel, par S. Salaville, art. Elie de Crete, in: Dictionnaire de Théologie Catholique, tome IV, 2 (Paris 1942), Col. 2331-2333.

A minutious research of the scholia which do not represent abstracts form the mentioned fathers undertook Byzantinologist Erik Petersen[37]. He indicated the sources of a few dozens of those scholia[38].

In the present edition of The Ladder in our own translation, we have not used either the entire multitudes of scholia contained in addition by the edition belonging to Veniamin Costache in comparison to that from the G.P., or all the scholia from the G.P. We have omitted those scholia from the G.P. which do not represent direct clarifications of the expressions from the text which referred to also by many of the scholia which repeat in the edition made by Veniamin Costache the same clarifications from several Holy Fathers to the same expressions from the text. Because of the shortage of time, we did not always attempt to always identify where the scholia attributed to certain fathers were taken from. Many of them can be found in the previously published volumes of The Romanian Philokalia, where the readers can easily find them.

Instead of the scholia omitted by us from the two mentioned sources, we have added some of the scholia from the Greek edition from the year 1970, or some of the scholia slightly differing form the shape of the scholia from the G.P. We have added many own explanations, either in continuation to the scholia take by us from the G.P., from Veniamin Costache, and from the Greek edition dating from the year 1970, or independently from those, to other expressions from the text. Our commentaries are attempts to make the thinking of The Ladder accessible to the way of understanding and of speaking of the today's believers. We have introduced and ended the scholia take form the G.P. by using the quotations marks; we have done the same with those form Veniamin Costache and from the Greek edition from the year 1970, and he have mentioned, in addition to that, the sources. Our explanations are not given between quotation marks.

As one can see, the present Introduction is far from solving the multitude of problems posed by the history of the copies, of the translations, of the paraphrases of The Ladder in diverse languages and especially in Romanian, and of the scholia used differently in some of the copies. The solution to the many problems of the reports between diverse translations and the paraphrases among themselves and especially with the original text will need a long time because it requires each manuscript to be individually studied. But this theme does not enter the preoccupation of our Introduction because of not being necessarily tied to the interest that led us to translate and publish The Ladder in the present collection of The Romanian Philokalia. We have only wanted to show in this Introduction what great was like the interested granted to The Ladder in the spiritual life of the Romanian monks and of the believers, as well as in the life of the Orthodox monks and believers from everywhere.

Fore-Looking at the Holy Ladder

He reckoned well he who presented us the climbing similar to the bodily age of Christ. For he composed for us a ladder of the consummation imagining the thirty years of Christ. For, by reaching ourselves as well this full age of the consummation, we will be as they who verily fulfilled the whole law and we will no longer fall. And he who has not reached that yet, he still is a little child and he won't be received by the whole witness of the heart. But we have reckoned as necessary that, before presenting these thirty steps of the understanding and godlike Ladder, to place first thew life of its all-wise writer. This, for by seeing his toils, us not to read the written things with mistrust. Then, by placing before the actual writing also the holy letters of the Holy Father who commanded the Ladder him who wrote it, we are going to start with the Words from The Ladder.

Brief Presentation of the Life of Him Who Is Really Among Saints, Abba John, Hegumen of Saint Mount Sinai, Called the Scholastic, Written by Monk Daniel from Raith[39]

I cannot tell in full conscience and with certitude which was the city that sprouted out the godlike man before his living consecrated to fight and ascesis. But the city that now accommodates him and nourishes him with ambrosia it was made know to us by the great Apostle Paul. This is for he lives, doubtlessly in that heavenly Jerusalem where the Church of the firstborn is (Hebr. 12: 23), "whose living is in heavens" (Phil. 3: 20). There being satiated[40] with an immaterial feeling of the things which never can be satiated of, and by looking at the unseen beauties, he receives the worthy rewards of his sweats. And by receiving there as inheritance the gift of the non-toiling for his previous toiling, he lived together with them who are there "whose foot is from now into righteousness" (Ps. 25: 12[41]). But how the forever-remembered blessed saint achieved this happiness, I am going to tell you now.

At the age of seventeen he brought himself as well-pleasant and received sacrifice, to Christ, in the Mount Sinai. And by taking the yoke of the monasticism he is[42] advised and guided by living in this seen place, towards the unseen God.

[39] We are translating this Life according to the Greek edition of The Ladder from the year 1970, where some phrases are slightly different from those in the G.P. The edition from the year 1970 is according to a manuscript from Dionysiou Monastery from Mount Athos. In exchange this edition has scholia unlike the text from the G.P. The Romanian translation made by Veniamin Costache has scholia as well. Then only the versions from the G.P. and that belonging to Veniamin Costache mention the fact that they were copied by Daniel.

[40] The translation of V. Costache: "The satiation of the immaterial ones is a spiritual feeling, one that has the seeing power, as the light of the bodily eyes, of those who have in them the sensitive light. The sight of the understanding knowledge". (Many of the scholia added to the Life we are going to give them as taken from the translation of V. Costache).

[41] As we did in the previous translation of Philokalian volumes (I-VIII) we are going to give, comparatively, the verses from the psalms as they are in King James Bible (KJB) and in the Romanian Orthodox Bible (ROB), because in the two bibles the numbering and the content of the Psalms differ, sometimes even saying opposite things. For instance, here we have: KJB: 26: 12: "My foot standeth in an even place: in the congregations will I bless the Lord."; ROB: 25: 12: "For my foot stood into righteousness; into assemblies I will bless you, Lord."

[42] As traductological assumption we are going to preserve the tenses from the original version if they do not transgress too blatantly the grammar's rules. For instance, here we have used the simple present as in the original Romanian text, though we are speaking about a person dead long ago.

And he embraced the estrangement as a defender of the understanding youths[43]. And by that, by rejecting all the impious daring and by impropriating the pious humbleness, he banished away from entrance, from himself, that devil that plants the self-appreciation and the self-trust. And by bowing down his head and by entrusting himself into the Lord to his spiritual father whom he received as a good helmsman, he crossed without danger the short and difficult storm of his life. Thus, he totally dies to the world and to his wills and he has his soul as speechless and deprived of will and totally delivered from the natural features[44], despite he gained the all-kind external wisdom, before this heavenly simplicity[45].

Living thus for nineteen years and adorning himself with the fruits of the blesse obedience, after the holy old man who guided him he passed away from this life, at his turn he went out to the stadium of the appeasement, by having in his hands as some powerful weapons the godlike prayer of that one, towards tearing down the satanic fortifications. By shocing the palce of his fight at around five miles from Monastery (his name was Thola) he spent there forty years without hesitation, being burnt by a hot fire and by his love for God. But who could made know and to praise by words his toils he endured there? Hos could one show these ones, since his toil was being built in an unseen way and without witnesses? But let's hear, despite all these, the living of the all-pious form a few signs and small showings.

He ate out of all foods allowed by the monastic oath, but very little, in order him to tear down also by that in an all-wise manner the haughtiness and the horn of the self-appreciation. Through fewness he restrained and narrowed on all ways the so furious belly-master, shouting at it: shut up, shut up! And by eating from all meals, he enslaved the tyrant vain-glory[46]. In [43] "The understanding youths are the souly states which the estrangement knows how to defend them locked up in its house as some daughters of his, hidden and known to nobody. So, he appropriately called the estrangement as defender, as one that defends the virtues."

[44] "Natural feature he calls the work of the soul, or of wanting this or that."

[45] "It is wonderful he says, how, by being him partaker to the external wisdom, he obeyed a simple and untaught teacher."

[46] "Eating somebody form all foods he is served with and drinking from all drinks poured him, by thanking God, it is by no means contrary to the rules of the knowledge. This is for all things are very good. And getting far, with love, from the much eating and from eating sweet foods it is characteristic to right-reckoning and to knowledge. And the love won't let us addition to that he quenched, by living in loneliness and by avoiding the company of other people, the heat of this oven, so that he transformed, until the end, its embers in ashes and he totally appeased that. And the manly pious manly ran away from worshipping the idols, by the mercy of God and by the fewness of the necessary things[47]. And the each-time death and the drowsiness, he removed it by pricking it through with the pin of the death[48]. And he untied the tie of the sadness by killing the addiction, or maybe by feeling the immaterial realities[49]. Before that he killed the tyranny of his anger by the spear of his obedience. And by not leaving his monastic cell and by not speaking, he killed the leech of the vain-glory, that one that resembles to the spider[50].

And what else? The victory upon the eighth one[51] was the fullest cleanness of the pride that is enemy to God. From that started this Veseliil[52] through obedience, his building being defame the sweet foods placed in front of us, if we do not fully and into the whole our feeling taste out of God's sweetness."

[47] "He calls as worshipping the idols the love for money, or the love for tasty meals, out of which is born the acceptation of the passions, or even the dreams as well. And against that one can defend himself only by the mercy of God."

[48] "The each-time death is the idleness that comes closer to the monk on each moment. This is called by him as the each-moment death, and drowsiness, and weakening. This one being killed by him with the pin of the thinking at death, he resurrects his soul by stirring his soul up towards the zealous fulfilling of the godlike commandments."

[49] "The addiction to something means death. And the addiction will be scattered away if a greater love is instated. And by killing the addiction, or also by feeling the immaterial realities, it will be undone the tie of the sadness."

[50] "By the leech of the vain-glory resembling to a spider he means the vain-glory itself. This is because as the leech sucks, without getting satiated, the blood of the bodies, likewise the vain-glory sucks the virtue and the knowledge". Another: "The spider stretches its thin web and its catches the helpless flies. But is something heavier is caught in that web the web will break. The vain-glory is likewise: by spreading out it will overcome all of them who have weak thinking; but it will not be able to defeat them who have a strong thinking and who are healthy in their mind but those ones will rather break it off and they will fly to heavens."

[51] "The expression 'the eighth one' stands for the pride. This is because it was placed as the eighth passion, by the Holy Fathers, among the eight thought or passions. And the top victory upon the pride they reckoned the cleanness or the dispassion, that one that is accomplished through obedience and through the dwelling of the Holy Ghost. Before it they placed: the estrangement, then the restraining, and then the abstention from the belly's covetousness, from idleness, from bearing the evil in mind, from dispassion, and from the vain-glory".

[52] "As Veseliil, by making the tent through patience, God dwelled in that tent in order to give answers, likewise this one, by adorning his soul and by making his soul luminous, he showed himself as all-beautiful dwelling place of the Holy Ghost". We will know that God dwells within us when we hear his answer to our prayer, of His call to answer Him by living us a made consummate by the Lord of the heavenly Jerusalem, through His coming and through raising his humbleness against the pride. This is because, without This One, the devil and the whole his army won't be defeated.

Where will I place, in the present intertwining of his crown, the spring of his tears? This is for such a thing cannot be found at many. The place he worked his tears can be found even today; it is a very small cave, situated at a mountain foot, so far from his monastic cell and from any other monastic cells, so that he was able to close his ears to the vain-glory, and he reached through his weeping and callings and all the other things like these, up to heavens, as it is appropriate to them who are pierced with spears and with the hot iron and to them whose eyes are plucked off[53].

He slept only so much that his mind not to be damaged by his long vigils. And before going to sleep he prayed a lot and he composed writings. Only this was his rein to idleness. Besides that, the whole his road was his ceaseless prayer and his unimaginable love for God. He imagined God during day and night in the clean mirror of the righteousness, by not wanting to get ever satiated by that, or better and more appropriately said, he could not get satiated by that.

Urged by the zeal of this father bearer-of-God, somebody among them who lived a lonely life, called Moses, he begged him a lot, using also the strong mediation of the fathers, to be accepted as his disciple, in order to be guided by him in the true philosophy[54]. Being forced by that one begging, the blessed one accepted him to be his disciple. And once the father commanded him to bring some fertile soil needed for cultivating their vegetables, Moses reached the place that he was told to go and he accomplished, without hesitation, what he was asked to do. But being the time of the full noon and the heat making the surroundings as an oven (for it was the last among the pleasant to Him life, in our conscience. (We think Veseliil is a transliteration in Romanian from Slavonic, and in English could be rendered by the word blessed (E. l. t.'s n.))

[53] As living in a harsh ascesis he stood in a dark cave, in order him not to be able to see any beauty and the shouting out caused by his pains inflicted consequently to his self-pricking, not to be heard by anybody, so that not to bring him vain-glory, but to be heard only by God from heavens.

[54] They called the monastic life as philosophy, namely as love for wisdom, for it was a teaching and a practice which the monk was guided through, his being, to the true knowledge and tot eh eternal happiness.

months[55]), Moses got tired and heavy and he thought to rest for a little while. So, he laid himself on a large stone and he fell asleep. But the loving-of-people God by not wanting to allow his servants to be lost through something, and Moses being on the verge of the danger, God helped Moses. And look what God did for Moses:

This great father of ours, John, while spending his time into his monastic cell as usual, and being occupied with God, himself was engulfed by a very slight nap. And in that state, he saw somebody with a pious face waking him up and telling him: "John, how can you sleep carelessly while Moses in in a great danger?". So, John woke himself up quickly and he armed himself with the prayer for his disciple. When his disciple came back in the evening, he asked his disciple if there happened some bad thing to him or some despair. And that one said: "O very big and heavy stone almost rolled over me while I was deeply asleep under it, but I woke up and jumped away from that place, in a hurry, for it seemed to me that I heard your voice. And immediately after I saw that stone coming off and falling to the ground". But the father, because of being truly humble in his thoughts, he did not unveil anything to his disciple of what he saw, but he gave thanks to God with hidden shouts and with toils and with love.

This man of God was also a healer of the unshown wounds. A certain monk called Isaac, strongly pressed upon by the devil of the love for body and not knowing what to do because of the discouragement that he was engulfed by from all quarters, he run to this great man and weepingly confessed the was he had within. The godlike father wondering of that one's faith and humbleness, he told him: "Brother, let's stay together at prayer and doubtlessly, our good and merciful God will not overlook our request". While they did that, even before they finished their prayer, and while the tormented one was still laying on his face to the ground, God fulfilled the will of His servant, in order Him to show prophet David saying the truth in this regard as well (Ps. 144: 20[56]). And the body's snake ran away, being whipped by the hits of the prayer, and the sick one,

[55] Namely August.

[56] In KJB we have: Ps. 145: 20: "The Lord preserveth all them that love him: but all the wicked will he destroy."; in ROB we have: Ps. 144: 20: "The Lord guards all of them who love Him and He will destroy all the sinners." (E. l. t.'s n.)

bye seeing himself as healthy and untroubled, he wondered and he raised thanks to God Who glorified His servant, together with the servant glorified by Him.

The always remembered father, by richly using the word of the grace towards the present ones, and abundantly letting out of himself rivers of teaching, some evil people, because they got envious and they started to fight against the great benefit conveyed such, they called him talkative and much-speaking[57]. But him, by knowing that he could do everything in Christ Who was strengthened him, and for he wanted to teach not only with the word them who came to him to benefit of him, but much more through silence and through the wisdom (philosophy) out of deeds, he avoided the case of them who were searching for a reason to strife; and he kept his silence for a while, by stopping the flowing of the honey river of his teaching word. He reckoned that was better them who love the good things to be a little deprived, who might have benefited also out of his silence, then to stir up even more them who were ingrate judges and to infuriate them towards evilness. By that those ones too, by being ashamed by the lenient and measures way of that man, and by understanding what spring of benefit they covered up and who much loss they caused to everybody, they started begging him together with others for teaching words, in order they not to lose anything because of the father's silence, as they were searching for their salvation in his words. So, the father who did not learn how to refuse anyone immediately conformed himself and he again started his work that he previously interrupted.

[57] Belonging to Saint Maximos: "The upset of the envious you will appease it with difficulty. This is for that one reckons as danger (for himself) what he envies in you. And you will not be able to appease his upset but if you hide out what he envies. But if that upsets only him while it is beneficial to many, what party are you going to disregard? You must cherish more the benefit of the many, and therefore you must do everything you can, and you must not be lazy, neither must you let himself be overcome by the evilness of that passion, for by doing so you will be beneficial not to the passion but him wo is dominated by that passion. But you must also use the humble-cogitation, so that anytime and anyplace you will give priority him who speaks evil of you. And you will be able to appease your own envy if you rejoice yourself together with him whom you envy, of all things which he rejoices himself of, and if you get sad about all things which he gets sad of. Thus, we can fulfill the apostle's word: 'Let's rejoice with them who rejoice and cry with them who cry'".
Another, belonging to Saint Thalassius: "The envious mind is blinded out by the Lord, because of unjustly getting sad about the good things of the neighbor".

Thus, all the present ones wondered about him, as one who surpassed them in all the good things, as of some new Moses, so that they who knew those things by experiencing them, they elected him forcedly to lead the brothers, namely they put the candle in the advising candlestick. And they were not disappointed for he climbed the mountain and he entered the non-crossed darkness at his turn, and he received the ruling and the seeing of God imprinted, that one which the one climbs up through understanding steps. And he opened his mouth to the word of God and, by attracting the ghost, he brought out good word from the good treasury of his heart.

Thus, he reached the border of his earthly life while guiding the Israeli monks, and he was unlike Mose only in that that he doubtlessly entered the Jerusalem from above. This is because Moses, as we know, he did not reach the Jerusalem from below. To the things we said bear witness all of them who rejoiced, though him, the Lord's words. This is for many of them got saved and many are still getting saved by his teaching. But the bets witness of that one's salvation and wisdom, he is the new David[58]. Witness is also our goof shepherd John[59], whom great man was asked by, so that he descended to us with his thinking and he showed us, as another seer of God, the tablets written by God, which externally comprise teachings about deeds and which internally comprise teachings about seeing God.

About Abba John the Hegumen of the Mount Sinai, of Climacus

Coming once Abbat Martyrius and Abba John to the great Anastasius, and Anastasius seeing them, he told to Abba Martyrius: "Tell me, Abba Martyrius, where this young man comes from? And Who tonsured him?". And Martyrius answered him: "It is your servant, father, and I tonsured him". And Anastasius told him: "Woe to you, Abba Martyrius, who told you that you tonsured the Abba of Mount Sinai?". And the saint [58] We do not know who he was. The V. Costache translation has in addition: "whom our word is about". It may be that the author of this Life though at the one who gave him the data he needed in order to write the present Life.

[59] This must have been John the hegumen of Raith Monastery, who asked John Sinaite to write down The Ladder.

didn't lie. For, after forty years, Abba Johns reached to be our hegumen. Again, some other time, John being taken by his adviser – Abba Martyrius -, both of them went to the great John the Savait who was living at that time in the Gudda Desert. When the old John Savait saw them, he got up and took water and the washed Abba John Sinaite's feet and kissed his hand, but he did not do the same thing to Abba Martyrius. When asked by his disciple Stephen why he did so, he answered: "Believe me, son, I do not know who the young man is. But I know that I received the hegumen of Mount Sinai and I washed the feet of that hegumen". And, also Abba Strategius, on that day that Abba John was tonsured, at the age of twenty, Strategius foretold of John as he followed to be a great star. It happened that immediately after Abbad John reached to be our hegumen, being present here six hundreds of strangers, while they were sitting and eating, there was among them some man having a short haircut and dressed up in Judaic fashion with a togue[60], running around all over the place and commanding to the cooks, to the administrators, to the warehousemen, and to the other servants. After the multitude left, the servants sat down to eat, and they searched for him who was previously organizing them but they did not find him anywhere. Then the servant of God, our pious father John said: "let him alone, Lord Moses did not do a strange thing by serving in this place of his".

The Epistle of Abba John, the Hegumen of Raith Monastery, towards John, the Wonderful Hegumen of Mount Sinai, called as the Scholastic, and Later on, after His Writing, Called as Climacus

To the all-wonderful and identical-to-angels father of the fathers and teacher of the All High,

I the sinner, John hegumen of Raith Monastery,

Wish you joy!

Due to the fact that we, the humble ones, know your indiscriminate obedience and above all into our Lord, your obedience adorned with all virtues, and especially the need for multiplying the talent of the truth given you by God, we use this need for need having in mind what was written "ask your father and he will tell you" (The Second Law 32: 7). That's why, through this letter we bow down before you as to the general father of everyone and as to one who is older than anyone in ascesis and in skillfulness ands as to the best teacher, and we beg the crown of your virtues, you to send us who are untaught, the things you saw like Moses from yore, who saw God on that mountain, for us to place the honored your writing like some tablets written by God before the new Israel, namely before them who have recently existed from Egypt and from the sea thought with the mind.

So, you by using like a staff your speaking-of-God tongue, you have done miracles in the sea, likewise now, you do not disregard our prayer and lay down on paper, as a great teacher, unhesitatingly and clearly, according to a good order, the duties of the monastic life, towards the salvation of them who have chosen this angelic living. Please do not reckon as flattering something said by all of us, but please understand it like something that is seen, thought, and plainly said by everyone. That's why we are entrusted into the Lord that we are going to receive and embrace soon the things honored and hoped by us, written in tablets, which to truly guide them who want to follow those unmistakingly and to be those rules them like a ladder leaned on the doors of the heavens, which the one who want to climb on, unharmed and undamaged, being helped by your writing to unimpededly cross over the ghosts of the evilness and over the worldly dominions of the darkness and over the chieftains of the sky. This is for, if James, who was a sheep shepherd, he had such a vision in the image of a latter, all the more the protos of the speaking sheep could not him show to everyone, and not only through a vision, but also into truth, a non-wandering climbing towards God?

The Answer Epistle. John, to John, Joy

We have received your honored letter, batter said your urge and commandments above our power, but appropriate to your pious and dispassionate life and to your clean and humble heart, that you received to us the poor and deprived in virtues. This is for it was really appropriate to you and to your soul to ask from us, the untaught ones both in word and in deeds, word of teaching and of advising. For it is a custom of yours to always give us an example of humble cogitation.

But we are going to say that, if there was not within us the great fear and danger to throw away from ourselves the yoke of the pious obedience, which is the mother of all virtues, we would not dare to start doing, without judgment, the things which are above our power. This is because you should, o, wonderful father, to try and find out the answers from them who know such things. This is because of us still being on the stage of those who learn from others. But because the God-bearers from our time and the partakers to the true knowledge establish that the obedience consists of somebody to obey without choosing to them who command them the things which are above-power, behold that we have attempted to do, daringly, those things which are above ourselves.

By this, we do not describe to you something useful to yourself, neither we show you something that you actually know better than we do, o, you godlike and sanctified chieftain. For I am entrusted, and maybe, together with myself, each of them who have right-cogitation, that you have cleaned up your eye of the understanding of all the earthly and dark mist, and you ceaselessly look at the godlike light and you are illuminated by that light. But as I have said, because I feared that death brought by disobedience, and being I pushed by this fear towards obeying your request, I have taken heed, out of fear and love, at your commandment, as a grateful listener and as a worthless disciple of a wonderful painter. Thus, I sketched, through a poor and humble knowledge and through the uttering of my weak voice, by ink, as some shadows, the words of the life, letting it to you, o, all wonderful teacher and chieftain of the congregation, to beautify my sayings and to complete them with what is missing, as a fulfiller of the spiritual law. We do not send you this attempt of ours. God forbid that! This would be a proof of ultimate stupidity. This is because of being there enough people who are able to not only strengthen others, but also to strengthen ourselves in the godlike behaviors and teachings. But we send this to the congregation called by God, who are learning from you together with ourselves, o, you almighty among teachers.

Unburdened by their prayers, as by some understanding hopes, into my nescience, by stretching the sail of my pen and by surrendering the helm to the hands of our Good Helmsman,

Christ, together with the whole prayer, I am starting this word addressed to them through you. I ask all of them who will read this Word that, if somebody ever find out something useful in it, to gratefully surrender its fruits to the Good Adviser, and for us him to ask from God to be us given only the reward of the attempt. Let him not to look at the said things because of truly being poor and full of all nescience and simplicity, but let him look at the zeal resembling to that of the widow and to The One Who received, as it was said, her gift (Lk. 12: 24). This is for God does not reward according to the multitude of the gifts and toils, but according to the warmth of the intention.

THE LADDER OF THE GODLIKE CLIMBING

The present book clearly shows the best way them who want to inscribe their names in the book of the life. This is for, by reading this book, we will find it as guiding, unmistakingly, them who follow its advices, and it guides them unharmed by any hindrance. It presents us a strengthened ladder leading from the earthly ones to the Holy of the Holies and it shows us God of the love sitting on the top of it. I reckon that this ladder was also seen by James who stepped over passions, when he was resting himself after his toils. But please let us start, zealously and with faith, this understanding and ascending to heavens climbing whose beginning is the rejection of the earthly one and whose end is the God of the love.

THE BOOK ABOUT ASCESES

Of Abba John, the hegumen of the monks from Mount Sinai, which he sent to Abba John, the hegumen of Raith Monastery, by whom he was urged to write it down.

It is divided in thirty Words, like some steps of a ladder, which elevated them who follow it, from the lower ones to the upper ones, from where the book was called as Ladder.

WORD I

About Rejecting the Vain Life and about Withdrawing[61]

1) The King and above kindness and all-kind God and our Emperor (for it is good to start the writing towards His servants from God), He honored all creatures built by Him with the dignity of a rational freedom[62]. That's why, from among these ones, some of them are his friends, others are true servants, other are worthless, others are totally estranged, and others – though helpless – still are against Him.

2) And we have found out as His friends, o, you sanctified chieftain, that are the understanding and bodiless beings from around God; true servants, all of them who tirelessly accomplished and are accomplishing His will; worthiness servant, they who reckon themselves as being found worthy of baptism but they did not truly guard their oaths towards Him; we reckon as strangers and enemies them who are either unbelievers or ill-faithed. Finally, enemies are they who not only that rejected the commandment of the Lord and they denied it from them, but they even wage a strong war against them who fulfill Lord's commandment.

[61] "The First renunciation of the deliverance from things; the second and the third are the deliverance form passions and from nescience. He who wants will easily deliver himself from things; but it is required not little toil for delivering oneself from the passions towards the things."

[62] "The freedom is, according to Gregory of Nyssa, the will of the rational soul ready to move towards wherever he wants. Let's persuade this to be ready to move itself only towards good, in order us to always melt away the memory of the evil through good things."

Another: "The freedom is the understanding movement, master upon itself, of the soul. That's why the irrational animals are not free, for they are rather carried away by their nature than they bearing their nature. That's why the animals neither resist their natural lust, but immediately that they are engulfed by lust, they rush in towards satisfying that lust. But the man by being rational, he rather leads his nature than being him led by it. That's why, even when the man wants something, if he wills, he will have the power to restrain his desire, or he could just follow his desire. That's why the speechless animals are neither praised nor rebuked, while the man is both praised and rebuked". The man is the being who disposes himself of himself, by freely taking heed at laws, but not totally being submitted to a law, as there are the animals and the things which constitute the nature. In se certain sense, the man is above nature and he makes the nature instrument of his will and he can fill up the nature with the godlike Ghost and with His totally superior freedom, a freedom that strengthens our freedom. Only when the man makes himself slave to passions, he will become a simple piece of the nature, or below nature, though, on the other hand, he has willingly made himself as such.

3) But each of them mentioned above requires a special word appropriate to him, and to us the untaught ones it won't be beneficial if we present those in details in this writing. That's why, by stretching with unskilled obedience, our unworthy hand towards the true servants of God, who piously forced us and who faithfully obliged us to this through their commandments, and by receiving from their knowledge the reed of the word and by dipping it in the sad and luminous humble cogitation[63], we are going to touch this (the reed) on their smooth and white hearts[64] as on some sheets of paper, better said like on some spiritual writing boards, and we are going to describe in them the godlike words or better said seeds, by saying thus:

4) God belong to everyone; He is the life of anyone who want that; He is everyone's salvation: of them who believe and of them who don't believe; of the righteous and of the unjust; of them who honor God and of those who do not honor God; of the dispassionate ones and of the passionate ones; of the monks and of the laymen; of the wisemen and of the untaught ones; of the healthy and of the sick; of the young and of the old[65]. This is for it is like the spreading of the light, like the showing of the sun, and like the changing of the hours. And it cannot be otherwise. "This is for at God there is no looking at the face" (Rom. 2: 11). Non-honoring God is him who is partaker to the rational (speaking) and mortal nature who willingly runs away

[63] "He called the humble cogitation as sad and luminous: sad, for suffering and enduring the troubles experienced by them who are humble in though; and luminous for the glory and the extolling caused by it to them who have achieved it. Or sad to the lazy ones who do not want at all to endure it for God; and luminous for them who are perseverant and manly with their souls, and who endure all things for God and they know how great its benefit is". The humble cogitation is sad because of being accompanied by the remembrance of the sins and by the conscience of our own insignificance; and it is luminous for it has the comforting conscience of the greatness of God and of His life-giver-mercy.

[64] Αναπαύσαντες - resting (the reed or the pen) on the smooth and white hearts". This is for these hearts by not having hidden folds, but by receiving everything with simplicity and with trust, the pen or what the pen writes will be received by them, and not rejected, and it will be imprinted in those hearts.

[65] God belong to everyone, but He is called here, in a narrowed manner, "of them who want that". That's why, He is to these towards salvation. This is for any man is partaker to free will and he can decide to had Him as his life, so that ell the people have the possibility to have God as their salvation, and therefore as life too. By and large, only those who are conscious and free can have God as life, because of only they can experience the life through their conscience.

from the life and who reckons his eternally existing Maker as inexistent[66].

5) Transgressor of the law is him who misinterpret the law of God with his twisted mind and him who reckons that be believes, but he heretically resists God.

6) Christian is him who follows Christ as much as it is possible to the humans by words and by deeds and who believes with right and unblemished cogitation in the Holy Trinity[67].

7) Loving God is him who makes himself partaker to all the natura and sinless things and who do not hesitate to do the good things according to his power[68].

8) Restrained is him who, by leaving amid temptations and traps and disturbances, he strives to imitate with the whole his strength the behaviors of him who is elevated above disturbances.

9) Monk is him who, while being in his material body, he lives on the level, on the order, and on the state of the bodiless beings. Monk is him who always, everywhere, and in all things, he keeps himself only within the borders and the words of God[69]. Monk is him who submits his nature to a ceaseless toil and his senses to an uninterrupted guarding[70]. Monk is him

[66] "Lawless is he who pleads allegiance (who confessed the faith) and then he rejected it. But lawless is also him who did not plead allegiance because of his insanity, according to the word: 'The mad man said into his heart: there is no God' (Ps. 52: 1; in KJB we have Ps. 53: 1 (E. l. t.'s n.)). That one honors the creatures more than he honors God."

[67] The faith is not only a sentiment, or only an act of will, but the faith is a right-cogitation about the God in Trinity. It is the faith founded on Revelation and of the Church's teaching. Believing in an aberration is a contradiction in itself. Believing into a so-called God Who would be one with the immanent world, it means actually not believing. Believing into a so-called God Who is not supreme love founded into a supreme person, better said in three supreme persons, it means not believing.

[68] The natural things of the man are his aspirations to surpass though free effort the things chaining him to body and to world. By doing so, he shuns himself from sin.

[69] Keeping himself "within the borders of God" means keeping himself in the order that is not-narrowed by the natural laws of the body and of the world, in the freedom of the Ghost and of the love. That one keeps himself also in the unlimited order of the words or of the rationalities of God.

[70] Scholia no. 7 from the Greek text published in the year 1970: "he called as toil the tiring of the bodies, that is willingly endured by the disciples of Christ by denying their own will and by renouncing to their bodily resting, in guarding the commandments of Christ". Through this forcing the monk proves that the man can ascend with his body above the nature calloused by sins, and that he can overwhelm the bad habits which have become laws of the nature, and that he can become free of them. The monk is on the extreme contrary to passions, for in passions one can totally lose his freedom from his body and from the world. God created the who made his body unblemished, his mouth clean, and his mind enlightened. Monk is that soul burdened with pain and who lives, both while waken and asleep, into ceaseless remembering of the death.

10) Withdrawal from the world means willingly shunning oneself away from the praised matter and it means also denying the nature for achieving the things from above nature[71].

11) All of them who willingly left the things of the life they doubtlessly have done it either for the future Kingdom, or for the multitude of sins, or for their love for God. And if they haven't had in their sight any of the mentioned purposes, their withdrawal is reckless. But regardless the target we reach, the Good Organizer of our ascesis is waiting for us.

12) He who has exited the world in order to lighten himself from the burden of his sins, let him follow the example of them who seat before the tombs from outside the city; and let them not cease shedding hot and fiery tears and the voiceless weeping until they see Jesus come and rolling away the callous stone of their heart and untying their mind as on another Lazarus from the ties of the sins and commanding to the angels: "Untie him from passions and let him go towards the blessed dispassion"[72]. And if they do not do like this, they will have not benefit from it.

man with a mix of freedom and necessity. The man can develop himself either towards the full reigning of the freedom, or towards being totally dominated by necessity. Through the last one the man reached under the state of the passionate nature. Through the first one he gets closer to angels.

[71] "Because: in the cogitating part of the nature there are the ties; in its wrath there is the will for mastery; in its lust there is the sadness; - he who has elevated himself above these ones, he has denied the nature". So, it is not about an abolishment of the human nature, but it is about a liberation of the human nature form under the mastery of the created things and it is about elevating the human nature at the state of truly mastering them. The mastery upon these realities can be had only by him who has become partaker to the godlike power which are above nature.

[72] τον λίθον την πυρώσεως. It could mean also warmed up stone, namely soaked in the tears of the repentance. Like the close relatives cry near to the tombs for those who are within those tombs, let's us too cry for our dead soul because of being buried under sins, under the impassive stone of theirs. Only by softening this indifference through hot tears, we will receive Jesus and we will make fully rolling away this stone which our soul is buried under. But this stone can also be reckoned as our heart intertwines petrified by the sins imprinted in our heart with their insensitiveness. This callousness comes by the condensations of the sin in passions, as in a cement. The passions have totally chained the soul's freedom. The angels, as created beings whom the strong freedom irradiates from - for they preserved their freedom – they awaken and strengthen within us the freedom that means dispassion. The dispassion as absence of passions that makes us free, it allows us to move ourselves towards what is good, towards the love for God and for our fellow humans, unlike the passions. In scholia no. 9 and 10 placed under the Greek text, it is said: "He speaks about the ceaseless crying. This is for, according to the holy old man who speaks, the crying works and guards. But behold what he says like that the crying also causes the blessed dispassion. This is for Abba Isaiah says too: "Let's live in ascesis, brothers, let's break apart from upon us the veil of the darkness, that is the forgetfulness, and let's see the light of the repentance. Let's become like Martha and Mary, which are the living in deep ascesis and the crying which cry before our Savior, in order they to rise Lazarus up, or that mind tied with the many ties of its will".

13) All of us who want to get out of Egypt and to run away from Pharaoh[73], we too unmistakingly need a certain Moses (Exod. 15), as mediator towards God and according to God, a Moses who by standing for us in the middle with the doing and with the seeing (contemplation), to stretch his hands towards God, in order us to cross, guided by him, the sea of our sins ands to set Amalec, the chieftain of the passions, in running away from us. So, they who trusted in themselves and who reckoned that they did not need an advisor, they were wrong[74].

14) They who left Egypt had Moses as their adviser, and they who ran out of Sodom had an angel as adviser. And the first ones are alike them who are healed of the souly passions by being cared by doctors. These ones are those who left Egypt. The second ones want to disrobe themselves of the uncleanness of the miserable body. That's why they need an angel or, to put it that way, they need somebody equal to an angel who to clean them up. This is for in order to clean the body up of its wounds, we need a very skillful doctor[75].

[73] "The Fathers say that Egypt is the bodily will that bows us towards the bodily resting and that makes our mind loving of pleasures". "The Egypt thought with the mind is the darkness of the passions, which no one go down to, if they do not reach the hunger".

[74] Scholium in the Athens edition form the year 1970: "He calls as souly passions: the vain-glory, the pride, the sadness, the idleness (acedia – boredom), the envy, the keeping in mind of the evil, the cunningness and the other ones born out of these ones. And bodily: the greediness of the belly, the fornication, the love for money and the other ones likewise. So, he says that they who are disturbed by the souly passions need a man as ruler and adviser, who to allow the body a little of what the body asks for, in order the soul not to get haughty because of too zealously restraining the body. These ones are alike them who exited the land of Egypt and are guided by Moses, who was a man. This is for the Egyptians too are rebuked for their pride and not for their fornication. And they who are troubled by the bodily passions they need an adviser who, though a humble man, he has been elevated to the angelic and incorporeal life through restraint and dispassion, so that by fasting to kill the flesh's impulses. And these ones are alike them who exited Sodom".

[75] "One must know that he who has rejected (the world), if he is in a community, let him persevere there; if he is not in a community, let him obey an adviser in order him to learn how to discern among thoughts and ghosts. We can understand that out of the advising of Israel and of Lot by Moses and by Angel. This is for, as another father told too (Saint Gregory of

15) They who started to ascend to heavens with their bodies, they really need ceaseless forcing and pains[76]. Especially at the beginning of their rejection, until they pass from their loving of pleasures habit and from their painless[77] heart to the love for God and to cleanness through their manifested crying.

16) Real tiredness, tiredness and much sorrow and difficult to endure, are especially required to us because of being us careless, until we will transform our mind - this loving of slaughterhouses and greedy for food dog – in lover of cleanness and of watchfulness through simplicity, deep gentleness, and zeal[78]. But let's dare, we who are addicted and helpless, to dare and bring to Christ, with unhesitating faith, by confessing our souly weakness and helplessness. And thus, we are going to unmistakingly receive His help above our worthiness, if we lower ourselves ceaselessly into the deep of the humble cogitation[79].

17) Let all of them know, them who have come to the good, harsh, narrow, and easy fight, that they have come to Nazianzus), if in other craftsmanships is difficult to learn something without an adviser, all the more we need a teacher in order us to get accustomed and to learn how to discern among thoughts and ghosts – this craftsmanship being the craftsmanship of the craftsmanships and the science of the sciences."

[76] He talks for many times about forcing, as for instance when he says: the monk is him who submits his nature to a ceaseless forcing. This is for it must be said that the accustoming by getting stronger as customs and by becoming, so put it that way, our nature, we need forcing in order to change and to transform the long habit. That's why the Lord as well said: "The Kingdom of Heavens belongs to them who take it by force" (Mt. 11: 12).

[77] "The painless heart" is that heart that does not suffer for its sins. The coming of the soul to God is not done through theoretical reflections, but through the sufferance for the committed sins.

[78] The mind detaches everything in pieces like a dog that, in searching for meat, it chops in pieces everything that is unitary, and it wants to swallow as much as possible. The mind must be made simple and clean and gentle, in order the mind to understand the things in their unit, by respecting the things, by not getting greedy of tearing the things apart, or of spying them. This is because if this is the case, the mind won't understand the whole and the essential and the life.

[79] Our helplessness confessed to Christ is a gift brought to Him. Or, only by that, we give on ourselves to Him, not keeping anything for ourselves as something that would satisfy us. And only when we are totally given to Christ, we will open ourselves for His gift that is endlessly richer than everything we can have by ourselves. Otherwise, we will reckon that we do not need Him. Even our hand or our deed that brings those ones to Christ, it will be strengthened by the right hand of by the powerful deed of Christ. If we are ceaselessly in this state of humble cogitation equal to bringing ourselves to Christ, the gif of Christ will ceaselessly descend upon us. Our self-giving and the receiving of the help from above are thus combined in a sole ceaseless dialogical act.

jump into the fire, if they receive to dwell within them the immaterial fire[80]. Let each of us study on himself and only after that to eat this bread mixed with bitter herbs and to drink this cup mixed with tears, so that his fight not to bring him condemnation (I Cor. 11: 29)[81].

18) If no every baptized one will be saved, I will keep my silence upon what follows[82]. They who come (to monasticism) will must renounce to everything, to despise everything, to laugh at everything, in order they to lay a good foundation.

19) The good foundation has three layers and three pillars: the non-evilness, the fasting, and the righteousness. Let all of them who are children into Christ to start from them, taking as example the children with the body. No evilness, not cunningness ever finds its room in these ones. One cannot find at them insatiable satiation, hot or wild body. This is because only after they grow up through the increase of the food there come to them the lust and the heat.

20) Really ugly and dangerous thing is a fighter to get drowsy since the start of the fight, by giving everyone the proof about his stabbing.

21) Out of the strength of the beginning we are going to doubtlessly benefit during the time of the drowsiness that will come. This is for the encouraged and then drowsy soul it urged by the memory of his zeal from the beginning, like by a needle. That's why some ones often got winged out of this too.

22) When the soul, by surrendering himself (to idleness), it will lose the blessed and worthy to be loved warmth[83], let him search zealously to find out why he was deprived of it and let him start again the war and the zeal against drowsiness. This is

[80] "He said that the fight is harsh for guarding the senses, narrow for the restraining of the soul and for bitterly rejecting the long-lasting habits. But it is easy as well, for the trust in God and for the advancing that follows and for the hope of the future goods". They who persevere in this fight, they jump into the fire of the love for God, if they accept to inhabit within that fire. Only through this kind of fire they can persevere in they fight and obtain victory.

[81] This is made a connection between ascesis, the azyme ate and the cup drank by Jews on that day that they existed Egypt (the world of the sins) and between the bread and the wine of the Holy Impartation. Through all of these one gets the power to bear his cross, through which one can reach the sinless life.

[82] "If not everyone who is baptized is saved, but only him who does the things of God, it is obvious that neither all of them who are tonsured (in monasticism) will be saved but only him who guards the things appropriate to monks."

[83] The soul got drowsy when he surrendered himself to the enemies (evil ghosts and temptations assaulting him) and when the soul has lost the warmth of the love for God.

because the soul cannot turn himself back (to that warmth) except through the gate he went out[84].

23) He who has got his rejection (of the life within world) out of fear, he is like the burning incense, but then he ends in smoke. And he who has done that due to his hope for the reward, he is like a millstone always moving the same way. But he who has chosen the withdrawal out of his love for God he achieved fire immediately since the beginning, and that fire thrown into matter it will ignite an ever-bigger flame[85].

24) there are some ones who lay down the bricks over stones. There are others who erect the pillars on the ground. And again, there are others who by walking a little and by getting their muscles and their joints warmed up, they walk even quicker. Let him who understands, to understand this meaningful word[86].

25) Being us called by God and the Emperor, let's run zealously, lest having a short life to be found on the day of our death as fruitless and so we will die from starvation[87]. Let's

[84] He went out through a sin, so he must defeat the same sin in order him to be able to go back again.

[85] The godlike fire thrown into the matter of the human nature it will warm up the human nature with the enthusiasm of the love for God; likewise, when thrown upon sins, it consumed them. Scholia from Edition 1970: "The fear is understood in twofold manner: one is beginner and another is more consummate. Here he speaks about the beginner fear. This is because, when somebody who swirls himself into sins, when coming to his senses, he rejects those (sins), he fears not to be taken again into slavery by passions, so that he shows great ascesis. But when he stops mistaking, and when he escapes a little from the habituation to sins, he will live more carelessly. And he who does this for reward, he takes care as well, according to his power, of the work, because he reckons that if he gets a little lazier the payment will be diminished to him. But he who rejects the sins due to his love for God, if he will find a zealous adviser, by being fiery ignited by love, he won't weaken in his zeal until he reaches, according to the saint who wrote these, in front of God" (Ps. 41: 2 (in KJB we have Ps. 42: 2, E. l. t.'s n.)).

[86] "I reckon that he speaks about them who have rejected the world. They who lay down bricks over stones are they who started erecting the building of the virtues without obedience; and because of being untried in the humble asceses of the obedience, they have been defeated and their building diminishes and weakened. And they who erected pillars, are them who enter the lonely life since the beginning, and therefore, lacking a foundation, they are defeated. And they who walk slowly advancing on the road of the obedience that lacks any pride, they become invincible, as ones who have the experience of the wars."

[87] If at our death we are fruitless, we won't have what to feed ourselves with, in the future life. Then we will souly "die" totally, because of lacking our food. This is because we are going to feed ourselves there only with the fruits which we have accumulated in this life, by the grace of God and due to our zeal; of course, God will multiply hundredfold that grace in the future life. We helped others, we are going to be helped. We have seen God through our cleaned heart, we are going to see Him endlessly more when we are going to be fed by seeing Him.

make ourselves pleasant to God as the Emperor's soldiers. This is for, after joining the army, we are required to do our job with the greatest heed.

26) Let's fear the Lord as we fear the beasts. Because I saw people who went to steal and they did not fear God, but they heard dog bark in that place and they immediately turned back; and what the fear of God didn't do, it did the fear of beasts.

27) Let's love the Lord as we honor our friends. Because I have often seen some people upsetting God but extolling them whom they loved for an unimportant thing and using any means, contriving any thought, enduring any trouble, making them any declaration (of honoring), themselves or through the mediation of their friends, or sending them any kinds of gifts, to turn them back.

28) Let's work the virtues since the very beginning of our rejection, with tiredness and with pain. And by advancing, let's feel ourselves into virtues without sadness, even though we are a little sad[88]. But when our mortal thought is overwhelmed and mastered by the zeal from within us, we are going to work these virtues with the whole joy, zeal, desire, and godlike fire.

29) As worthy of being praised are them who work the virtues and fulfill the commandments immediately since the beginning joyfully and zealously, as worthy of being cried for are them who, though they have been living in ascesis for a long time, they still work those with tiredness, even though they are working them[89].

30) Let's neither despise nor condemn the rejections (of the world) done in fortuitous circumstances. This is for I have seen some ones running away and unwillingly encountering the Emperor Who was coming on that way and, by being them take Otherwise, we are going to die from starvation; but we are going to be aware of this "death" of ours. We are going to suffer because of a dreadful conscious void in our soul and around us.

[88] Without sadness, for we have advanced into virtues; but a little sad because we have a long way to keep advancing on; because of not being us totally liberated from the temptations towards sin.

[89] They who, though they have been living in ascesis for a long time, they haven't reached yet to work the virtues easily and joyfully, but they still work the virtues forcedly and with difficulty, that means they do not have love for God and they haven't yet put their soul in their work.

in Emperor's guard they entered the palace together with the Emperor and the sat at the table together with Him[90].

31) I have seen the seed unwillingly falling to the ground and bringing much and well grown fruits. But I have seen also contrary things.

32) I have seen somebody entering the hospital for another reason and held by the doctor and healed with much benevolence and, by that, he escaped the fog that was covering his eyes. Thus, the unwilling things have become him, unwillingly, ground and more useful that the willing things.

33) Let nobody reckon himself unworthy of the monastic promise, justifying that by the heaviness and multitude of his sins. He let him not believe that he is humble if, because of not wanting to deprive himself of the sweet addiction, he brings as motifs right his own sins for persevering into sins. This is because of being needed much medicine where there is much puss, in order the defilement to be rejected[91]. This is for not the healthy ones come to the hospital[92].

34) If, when the earthly emperor calls us and wants us to become soldiers serving him, and we do not hesitate, neither we search for reasons to disobey his call, but we leave everything and we quickly go to him, let's take heed at ourselves, lest when being called by the Emperor of the emperors and by the Lord of the lords and God of gods to this heavenly service, to reject His call because of our laziness and carelessness and to find ourselves defenseless at the Great Judgment.

35) It will be possible somebody to walk while he is tied with the life's things and with the iron worries; but it will be [90] "Rejections in unwilling circumstances" he calls those rejections made because of some happenings or misfortunes came upon some ones. And through them who run, he understands they who were wanted in their counties for some mistakes, the so-called fugitives. It could happen that while someone like that lives in some place, and the emperor passed by that place, the fugitive is announced to the emperor as plotting against the emperor and he is brought before the emperor forcedly. But after being trialed and found innocent, he is brought out of his fugitive state and he is honored with all sorts of good things. Or he is even invited to sit at the table with the emperor. This parable fits Paul too, and many others, who encountered Christ unwillingly, and then after they entered and reigned with Him."

[91] "Where there is a heavy burden, there is needed a big help as well; and where there is mud in the soul, there are needed tears as well" in order toc lean up that soul.

[92] "The health of the soul is the good fragrance of the godlike (accomplished) will. And on the opposite, the falling off the good will (of God) is the sickness of the soul that end into death". The soul is healthy only when living in conformity with the will of God, in connection with Him. The sickness spreads around a stench, the stench of the bodily decomposition, caused by losing the soul, by the disorder that doesn't thrive in the soul's harmonious rationality.

hard. This is because they whose feet are chained with iron chains often walk, but they stumble often and hurt themselves.

36) he who is unmarried in the world, because of being tied only by things, he is like him who is shackled. That's why, when he wants to run to the monastic life, he won't stumble. But he who is married he is like him who has both his hand and his feet tied.

37) I have heard some people who live carelessly into the world telling me: "How could we, for we live together with our wives (of husbands) to pass to the monastic life?". I answered them: "All the good things you do, do them: do not defame anybody, do not steal from anybody, do not lie to anybody, do not boast yourselves to anybody, do not hate anybody, do not separate yourselves from the assemblies from the churchly services, suffer together with the needy, do not offend anybody; do not get close to what belong to somebody else; be satisfied with what your wives prepare for you. If you do so, you won't be far from the Kingdom of heavens".

38) Let's wage joyfully and fearfully the good fight, while not fearing our enemies. This is because, despite those are unseen, they look at the face of our soul[93]. And if they see this one changing with fear, they bitterly arm themselves against us, because the cunning ones understand that we got scared. So, let's arm ourselves with courage against them. This is for nobody wages war to him who fights assertively.

39) The Lord have eased – due to His oikonomia – the wars against them who are recently planted (in t e monastic life, o. n.), so that they not to immediately turn into the world since the beginning. That's why, you always rejoice into the Lord, you who serve Him, by knowing that this is the first sign within them, of the love of the Master for you; and that Himself has called on us.

40) But God often makes Himself known by working this too: when He sees manly souls He allows them to enter the wars since the very beginning, for He wats to crown them up quickly.

[93] "The face of the soul he called the soul's powers. This is because out of the sings of our souly states a and of those imitated by us, our enemy devils see our inward disposition. This is because they do not know out of our cogitation, but they only sow their cunningness and they wait to see what disposition we will receive their cunningness with. And while they do not see, we make them seeing because of our carelessness". Namely we give them the signs which they can see through what is within our soul, as we give signs to other people as well.

41) The Lord has hidden from them who live into the world, the difficulty or better said the easiness of the fight from the stadium. This is because if they knew that difficulty, he wouldn't reject the world neither their body[94].

42) You give to Christ, zealously, the toils of your youth; and you will enjoy at your old age of the richness of your dispassion. The things gathered during youth it will nourish and save the tired ones at their old age. Let's tire ourselves, you the young ones, with zeal; let's run with watchfulness. Because of not knowing when our death comes[95].

43) We have really evil enemies, dreadful, cunning, masters in plotting, powerful, non-sleeping, immaterial, who hold the fire in their hands and who want to set the church (the dwelling place of God) in fire, through the flame from within them[96].

44) Let nobody, while young, to accept what his enemy devils tell him: do not break your body, or you will fall into sickness and helplessness[97]. This is because barely can be found somebody, especially in the present generation, who wants to kill his body, even if he would avoid the many and [94] Scholia from the Edition from the year 1970: "What to many seems to be the difficulty of the fight, to me, he says, it doesn't seem as difficulty, and that means that only apparently that is a difficulty, but in reality, it is easiness. Still, God has hidden this difficulty from them who live within world because if they looked at the difficulty of the fight no one would reject the world. This is because, according to the Apostle: "the bodily man doesn't receive those of the Ghost, for they are insanity to him" (I Cor. 2: 15). And wanting those of God is characteristic to the spiritual man. They who live according to the world, how could they reject the characteristics of the shame if God did not call them through His craft? This is because "body and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God" (I Cor. 15: 50). Scholia from G.P.: "Many, by seeing the difficulty of the stadium, they say: If Christ calls the yoke as gentle and light, why they who take that yoke upon themselves are submitted to a displeasure? Because they do not know that that was told for them who look at the countenance of the hope for resting and comforting; but to them who crawl themselves on the ground, those things are harsh and difficult to cross through. This is because him who detaches himself, with difficulty, from the lower things, he must force himself towards climbing. Likewise for the young man (from the Gospel), who declared that he did everything, but he mistook towards the most consummate thing. But he who detached himself from everything, he flies easily through this sky".

[95] "The good of the man is when he takes the yoke since his youth".

[97] "By reading these simply and without right-reckoning, and by surrendering themselves to a too harsh ascesis, they showed themselves opposite to this advice. This is because the father does not give this advice to anybody, but to the strong ones who have a healthy body and who have received a grace towards that. The other must enslave their body according to their power so that the care they take for their body not to be cause towards stirring up the lusts."

sweetening foods. But the purpose of this devil is to make our entrance to the stadium (to fight) drowsy and full of carelessness, so that the end to be according to the beginning.

45) They who have decided to sincerely serve Christ, they will search for and they will make before all, this: to choose, among the spiritual fathers and through their conscience, the places, the times, the types (virtues), and the occupations fitted to themselves[98]. This is because do not match everyone the coenobitic monasteries, because of the covetousness; neither the hermitage, because of their wrath. Each of those will be thought for the ones who is fitted to.

46) Of these three types of life consists the whole monastic living: either in withdrawn and lonely ascesis, or in appeasement with one or two, or in patiently living in community. The Ecclesiastes says: "Do not deviate from your path either to the right or to the left. But you walk on the imperial path" (Parables 14: 27), and this is for that type from the middle is the most appropriate from the mentioned ones. This is for he says: "Woe him who is alone" (Eccl. 4: 10). This is because he falls into idleness, or into sleeping, or in carelessness, or in despair, there is no man to wake him up. And "where are two or three gathered in My name, I and there as well amidst them" said the Lord (Mt. 18: 20)[99].

[98] In the G.P. is give a text after Codes Augustanus, the scholium: "They who lack guidance they fall like the leaves, and they who toil without being advised, generally they get lost. And they who run with hope they will be twofold rich". Another scholium: "Do not refuse to learn, even if you would be very wise. This is for in God's oikonomia learning is more useful to us than our wisdom". Another: "Do not reckon that is good what seems to you that you do well, but what is recognized as such by pious men". Itself the will to work according to our own judgment, without asking others for advice, it hides pride within, it is shepherded by sin. Asking for advice is an occasion for humbleness and for strengthening the communion which, when clean and true, it is the true good.

[99] "It is easy to lose the good things but achieving them is not easy. This is because the sin has to helpers which it dreadfully wages war to the virtue, being born out of a side or another: by crossing the measure and by lack. And the virtue because it springs out only in the middle, it strives to resist each of those two, which wage war to it". Another scholium: "And again: If to will accept (Mt. 18: 19), namely he who commits sin and he who advises him to part with his evil deeds; and the rebuked one will listen to him who rebukes him for every sin, it will be given to them, from God, what they ask, namely the forgiveness for the sin committed by him who sinned. And again: "If two will agree in good deeds, anything good they will ask for, it will be given to them from God. For God will accomplish the will of them who fear Him and He will deliver them from many troubles". "For where there are two of three gathered in My name", namely united in a good decision, a decision according to the will of God, He is in the midst of them as well providing His help. In their power multiplied by the momentum of the communion and of the will for good, it will be overpoured also the power of God.

47) Who is, therefore, the faithful and wide monk? He who has been guarding his heat unquenched and who has not ceased to add until his exit (death), on each day, fire to fire and warmth to warmth and zeal to zeal.

Behold the first step: you who have stepped on it, do not turn to the previous things.

In the Edition from the year 1970: “Because he has said above that living in community is not appropriate to everyone, because of the covetousness, and living as a hermit is not appropriate to everybody, due to the wrath, after he has presented the two extremes, he presents the middle path praised also by the godlike Scripture and by himself. This is for he quotes the Lord saying: “Where there are two or three, I am there amidst them” (Mt. 18: 20).

Word II

About the Removal of the Passions

1) He who truly loves God, he who truly strives to reach the future life, he who truly has pain for his mistakes, he who has truly achieved the remembrance of the eternal damnation and judgment, he who has truly received the fear for his death, he will no longer love neither will he take care of money, either of wealth, or of parents, either of the life's glory, or of friends, either of brothers, over all of anything earthly[100], but by rejecting and hating any connection, any care for these ones, and even before these ones his own body, he follows emptily[101] and without worry sand without hesitation, to Christ, by always looking towards the sky and by waiting for the help from there, according to the saint who said: "My soul stuck to You" (Ps. 62: 8[102]), and to forever remembered another who said: "I have been tiring myself to follow You, and I have not lusted for the day and for the resting of the man, Lord" (Jer. 17: 16).

2) It is the greatest shame that, after we have left everything mentioned before, after the calling which the Lord

[100] The scholium from the G.P.: "The great Basil said too: he who really wants to follow God, he must untie himself from the ties of the addiction to life. And this can be achieved through the consummate withdrawal and by forgetting the old habits. This is because, if we do not estrange ourselves from our bodily kinship, and from sharing the same life, by somehow moving ourselves through attaching ourselves to a different life, according to his who said: "For our living is into heavens" (Phil. 3: 20), we won't reach the goals of being pleasant to God. This is for our Lord said decisively: "Anyone among you who does not reject his wealth, he could not be My disciple" (Lk. 14: 33). In the Edition from the year 1970 this is continued with: "By clarifying this in another place, he says the same: The Lord's purpose with these words is not that of not giving somebody power to be or not to be His disciple, but He showed that that soul who is within the things that scatter him, it won't be able to be pleasant to God. And that soul even endangers himself in these, by making himself easy to be caught in the devil's traps, and that soul proves himself to be worthy of mockery and of being laughter stock, because of the non-consummation of those who seem zealous. By praying for that not to happen to him, the Prophet said: "For never my enemies to rejoice of me. And they spoke with haughtiness against me, when my feet wobbled" (Ps. 37 (in KJB we have Ps. 38, E. l. t.'s n.)).

[101] "The first thing due by the Christian who wants to empty himself it is that of emptying himself of the passions of the evilness, which are many and diverse, which his soul is getting dirty by. Secondly, he must empty himself of the addiction to wealth."

[102] In KJB we have: Ps. 63: 8: "My soul followeth hard after thee: thy right hand upholdeth me."; in ROB we have: Ps. 62: 8: "And into the cover of Your wings I will rejoice. My soul has stuck onto You and your right hand has supported me." (E. l. t.'s n.)

and not a man called us, us to take care of something else that will do nothing good to us in the hour of our narrowing, namely of our death[103]. Because this means somebody turning towards the past things, as the Lord said, and not to be straightened into the Kingdom of Heavens (Lk. 9: 62).

3) Our Lord, by knowing the easiness of our sliding, of us who are beginners, and how easily we live together with the people from the world and how easily we turn back to the world, he answered him who asked Him: "Allow me to go and bury my father", "Let the dead to bury their dead" (Lk. 9: 60).

4) The devils, after we have rejected the world, they urge us to bless the merciful and lenient laymen and to deplore on ourselves because of depriving ourselves of that virtue. The purpose of our enemies is that, through a pretended humbleness, to make us turn back into the world or, while remaining monks, to throw us into despair.

5) One can look at the people from the world with indifference because of pride, and one can defame the people from within world when they are not present, in order to get rid of despair and in order to achieve the hope.

6) Let's hear our Lord who said towards the young man who fulfilled all the commandments: "You miss one more thing: sell your wealth and give them to poor" (Mt. 9: 21) and make yourself a poor who received alms[104].

7) Those among us who want to run zealously and quickly, let's attentively cogitate at how our Lord reckoned all of them who live within world as some dead ones, saying to [103] They cannot help our soul, in the hour of our death, to enter the life, those things which are submitted to corruption at their turn. Only if the soul tied himself to the incorruptible God during his earthly life, God will help him to further advance in his life. Only is the soul has learnt how to love God, the soul will continue to live growing up in this love. He who has sunk himself, during his earthly life, in the egotistic loneliness, he will totally sink in this dark and tormenting loneliness, at his death.

[104] "Our Lord commanded to the young man to sell his wealth and to give it to the poor, and to take up his cross and to follow Him. By this He showed us that being us saved means to cut off our will. And that one hearing that, he became very sad and he left. Because of finding out that there is no toil and there is no virtue in giving to the poor, and that the man does that by bearing his cross. And the cross stands for stopping any sin and it gives birth to the love, and without love there is no cross. This is for by cutting off his will somebody gains the dispassion, and from dispassion he comes with God to the consummate dispassion". By renouncing to all his things, the monk fulfills three commandments: a) he puts God above all corruptible and non-savior things; b) he does a great deed of love; c) he enters a state of full humbleness, by willingly accepting to need others' help.

somebody: "Let the dead from the world to bury the dead with the body"[105].

8) That young man was not impeded by his wealth to come to be Baptism. So, they who say that the Lord commanded that young man to sell his wealth in order to be baptized, they proved themselves to be wrong. Let that be enough, towards the full entrustment of the glory of our promise (monastic) that witness.

9) They who live within world by melting themselves down in vigils, in fasting, in toils, and in fierce sufferings, after the withdraw themselves form within people into the monastic life, or to the trials' stadium, they no longer occupy themselves with their liar and pretentious ascesis from before[106].

10) I have seen very many and diverse plants of the virtues, planted by the people from within world, but because of being those plants watered by the muddy moisture from underground of the vain-glory and because of being those plants weeded by the desire of the self-showing and fertilized by praising, when they were planted in desert land, a land non-walked by the people from within world and deprived on the stinking water of the vain-glory, those plants immediately withered. This was because the moist plants were unable to prosper in the places of the harsh and lacking of moisture ascesis.

11) He who hates the world he will escape from sadness; and he who is addicted to something from among the seen things he has not got rid of sadness yet. This is because of how will not him be sad for the absences of what he loves?[107]

[105] The scholium in the G.P.: "He speaks about a twofold death, sensitive and spiritual. Is dead him who died, because he is motionless and unworking; and he is dead him who is dead with his soul, for he does not follow the Life (to God, translator's note). This is for as the one who has exited the features of the world will die, likewise him who does not fulfill the commandments of the Life will die to the life. And as we say that the living is dead because he has become motionless and unworking, likewise he is and he is said spiritual dead because of not following to the Life by denying his own wills".

[106] "It is called as pretentious and liar that practiced for the glory from the people. But that practiced according to the advice of the (spiritual, translators note (in continuation t. n.)) fathers is real, according to Him Who says: "I do nothing from Myself" (Jn. 8: 28). This one, in addition of being consummate, it guards us free from the vain-glory".

[107] World he calls here not the persons and the things created by God, but the lusting for those as the unique realities, or the pride for possessing those, and the quarrel with the people for those. "The lust of the eyes, the vain-glory, and the haughtiness of the life are not from the Father", but they are from the world takes in itself (I Jn. 2: 16).

12) We need much watchfulness in everything. But let's take heed especially at this one, before all others: I have seen many who cut loose the boat of their boy by worries, occupations, and sleepless nights because of the worries of their lives; and those ones when coming to the monastic life and rejecting all worries, they have been pitifully defiled by their bodies' moves[108].

13) Let's take heed at ourselves, lest, while saying that we walk the narrow and full of troubles path, to get ourselves lost by keeping the other wide path (Mt. 7: 13-14)[109]. The narrow path it will be caused to you by the sadness of your belly, by standing up the whole night, by drinking with measure, by the fewness of the bread, by the cleaning drink of the dishonoring, by the mockeries, by being taken as laughing stock, by cutting off your own wills, by enduring the rebuking, by silently accepting to be despised, by being cursed, by steadfastly enduring the injustice, by enduring without getting upset to be slandered, by enduring without getting angry to be overlooked, and by accepting to be rebuked while remaining humble. They are blessed who walk the mentioned path, for the Kingdom of Heavens is theirs[110].

14) No one will enter the imperial wedding room by wearing a crown, if he has not committed the first, the second,

[108] The Scholium from the edition from the year 1970; that one from the G.P. is a little changed: "This happens because of carelessness, of lack of attention, and out of pride, out of the will of living according to the own rule, out of not admitting to take advice from a protos". Consequently, not any worry is bad, but only that one for worldly earnings and lusts, and not the care for achieving and preserving the cleanness, the virtue, and the prayer. And one will not be saved by the sole fact that he entered the monasticism, neither one will be lost by the simple fact of not being a monk. It depends on how one lives both these possibilities, either for God or for body and vain-glory.

[109] "Paths are what the Scripture calls the virtues like. That's why, the greatest among all virtues is the love. That's why the Apostle says too: "And I am showing you a path above any other path' (I Cor. 12: 21). This path convinces one to despise all the corruptible things taken in themselves) and it does not place the temporary things above the eternal things"". This is for only the eternal Person of God can eternally love us and He can eternally uphold us into life, and so only he can satisfy our thirst for endless love. This is for the love longs for endlessness, and only the person is capable of love towards another person. By this is shown that the persons are for eternity.

[110] The wide path is that path of the love for oneself and of searching for one's own pleasure. This is for the love for the self is not narrowed by taking another in consideration. And "the troubles and the dangers kill the sweet-addiction, and the resting it nourished it and it raised it. That's why, blessed are them who walk the full of trouble path". They narrow on themselves, and in the first place for God, due to the love for Him and for the9ir neighbor, and so they achieve in exchanged their love for themselves.

and the third rejection, namely the rejection of all things, of all people – even of his own parents; the cutting off of the own will; and the third rejection, the rejection of the vain-glory that follows to obedience.

15) "Get out form the middle of theirs and get separated and do not touch the uncleanness of the world, says the Lord" (Isa. 54: 11)[111]. This is because who among them has ever dome a miracle? Who has resurrected the dead? Who has cast devils out? No one. All of these are the rewards of the monks which the world cannot comprise. This is because, if the world could, the ascesis and the withdrawal would be pointless.

16) When the devils make our heat hot, after our rejection (of the world), with the remembrance of our parents and of our brothers, let's arm ourselves with prayer against them and let's burn ourselves with the remembrance of the eternal fire, so that us to be able to quench the inappropriate fire of our heart with the remembrance of the eternal fire[112]. If somebody reckons that he does not feel any addition to some things, but his heart is sad for missing that thing, one like this is totally deceived.

17) Those young people who are addicted to the bodily love and to delectations but they want to take upon themselves the monastic life, let them strive to live in ascesis with the whole their watchfulness and with the whole their taking head and let them strive to restrain themselves from all delectation

[111] "The world's uncleanness is the love for pleasure, the love for material things, and the love for glory. And the man is said unclean not because of being created, but because of deviating through his wills, according to what was said: "Unclean is before God everyone who is pride in his heart" (Prov. 16: 4). The love for pleasure and the love for material goods they actually are love for oneself and for the corruptible things. The love for glory is likewise. And no one can reach the endless life helped by himself and by the corruptible things.

[112] "Inappropriate fire (inopportune, t. n.) of the heart" he calls that fire that is ignited within us out of the longing for our kindship and out of the addiction to the things of the world, which make us hot in order us to persevere even more in getting addicted to those. This is for he who is ignited by the love for God, which he reckons all the things from here as unworthy to be take heed at, and he is ignited only by the love for God and he only wants the eternal goods, he could rightly be seen as ignited by an appropriate fire". Remembering the eternal fire, on one hand it burns us, or it burns out our addiction to the worldly things, and on the other hand, it quenches this fire or it warms us up for the heavenly realities and it quenches the heat of the evil passions. This remembrance does not let us cold in either regards; it is not a indifferent remembrance of the eternal fire, neither is a cold thinking at the possibility of the eternal life. It ignites our zeal for getting rid of the eternal fire and our seal for achieving the eternal happiness. The dispassion of the Christian is not an indifference, but it is a burning, it is a passion against the evil things and for the good things.

and from all evilness[113], lest "not to be them the last things worse than the first things" (Mt. 12: 45)[114].

18) The harbor of case for salvation but also of dangers. This is known by them who sail of the sea though with the mind. But it is a pitiful sight to see those who escaped the waves that they drown into the harbor.

Behold the second step. You, who are running, do not follow the example of Lot's wife, but you follow the example of Lots himself.

[113] The scholia from the Edition from the year 1970: "Let them restrain on themselves from delectations, which uphold the love for the self, the love for the material things, the covetousness of the belly, and the passion which are born out of these; and from evilness, that upholds the despise for others, and the laziness, and the pride". G.P.: "From delectation, because of fornication and of the darkening of the mind; from evilness because of despising".

[114] The scholia from the Edition from the year 1970: "To them who take vigil and who strive themselves to fulfill the commandments, their usual harbor or the monastery are causes of their salvation, and to the lazy and careless ones, those are causes for danger".

Word III

On Estrangement

1) The estrangement stands for living, without turning back, all the things from the place of one's origin which work against the target of our piousness[115]. The estrangement is non-daring behavior, it is unknown wisdom, it is unshown skillfulness, it is hidden life, it is unseen target, it is non-unveiled thought, it is desiring for fewness, it is lusting tot narrowness, it is cause for the longing for God, it is the abundance of the love, it is rejection of the vain-glory, and it is deep of silence.

2) This thought uses, at the beginning, to always and for a long time upset those who are endeared by the Lord, as a godlike fire[116]. This is because the getting far from their ones drives the ones who are endeared by the Lord towards Himself, through fewness and troubles. But as great and worthy of praising this estrangement is, as much right-reckoning it requires. This is because not any estrangement from the world is good[117].

3) If no prophet is honored in his country, as the Lord says (Lk. 4: 24; Mt. 13: 57), let's take heed not to become our estrangement as a cause of our vain-glory. This is for the estrangement is the separation from in order to make our thought unseparated from God[118]. The estranged one is the lover of the worker of the ceaseless crying. Stranger is him who [115] "Namely of our kinships, of our goods, or the foods, of our wills, of the passions, of the distractions, of the places, of the glory, and of the others which impede us from reaching the target of our piousness". Another scholium: "Stranger is him who is with his though outside all life's things". Another: "Stranger is him whom the world's things are stranger to". Another: "If you estrange yourself for God, do not try to mix yourself with the things from a place, neither to mix your rationality (your word) with those. This is because otherwise it is almost more useful to be with your kinships according to the body".

[116] Although the estrangement thought is like a godlike fire that clean us up of the passionate connection with the things which were closer to us, this thought won't impose within us the estrangement easily and at once. That's why the will for estrangement cause us, in the beginning, some annoyances as well.

[117] "When the ones who estranges himself starts unveiling to others that he is of a good origin and he starts requesting respect and to be proud, this estrangement is not good."

has existed from any connection with his own and with the others[119].

4) If you hurry yourself up towards estrangement and towards loneliness, you won't search for those souls who are endeared by the world. This is because of the thief coming unexpectedly. That's why many, by attempting to save together with themselves others who are careless and cumbersome, they got lost together with those ones, because the fire of their soul got quenches in time[120]. If you have received the flame, you will run[121]. This is because of you not knowing when the flame will get quenched and it will leave you into darkness.

5) Not all of us are asked to save others. This is because the godlike Apostle says: "So, each of us will be held accountable to God for himself" (Rom. 4: 12). And again: "Teaching another, won't you teach on yourself?". But, unmistakingly, all of us are required to save on ourselves.

6) Estranging yourself, you guard yourself against the devil of the fickleness and of the love for pleasures. This is because the estrangement gives that devil occasion for working.

7) Good is the removal of the passions, but its mother is the estrangement[122].

8) He who has estranged himself for the Lord, let him no longer have any connections, so that he won't show himself strayed because of his passions. You who estrange yourself from the world stop touching the world. This is because the passions like to turn back into the world.

[119] "Through his won he understands his will sand the will regarding the people from around him. Through the others he understands the outside things, namely money and wealth, which if one estranged himself and escapes from, he will walk on the blesses and thought road leading towards salvation".

[120] The scholium from the Edition from the year 1970: "You rebuke the postponing that always put to sleep the movements towards the good things".

[121] This is an allusion to the Olympic torch. But here is about the flame of the love for God, as received from another older monk, a flame that you must bear further on.

[122] "If we have cut off for a little while the causes of our passions and if we occupy ourselves with the spiritual sights, let's always live into these ones by having this as our work. This is because if we turn ourselves again back to the body's passions, we won't gain anything out of that living or it will remain a simple knowledge mixed with the self-appreciation having as end the fact that we will imagine that we know something, and having as another end the darkening and the total deviation of our mind towards the corruptible things. The knowledge out of the spiritual visions will become, to those who do not always persevere on the step of these visions, as a simple theoretical knowledge or an imagining of the knowledge, without having the power for retaining them from living into sins".

9) Eva was banished yore, unwillingly, from Paradise, and the monk leaves the world willingly. This is because of Eva would have lusted to taste again from the tree of the disobedience, and the monk would suffer, unmistakingly, because of his relatives according to the body.

10) Run away as from the whip from the places of your fallings. This is for, by not being the fruit present, we won't lust that fruit often.

11) Let not this way and this craft of the thieves remain hidden from you: they advise us not to part with the good things from the world, by telling us that we are going to gain a big payment if, by seeing a woman, we restrain on ourselves. We must not listen to these ones, but rather to do the opposite.

12) When we part with our things for a shorter of for a longer time, and so we gain a little piousness, or pricking (humiliation), or restraint, the thoughts of the vanity[123], by occurring, it urges again to leave for the world, towards building many, like, for instance, towards provide an example and benefit to them who knew our sinner deeds[124]. And if we are also skillful in word and in the simple knowledge[125], these ones urge us to return ourselves to the world as saviors of souls and as teachers, so that what we appropriately gathered while in harbor to waste at sea[126].

[123] We are giving this scholium not according to the order of the sentences from the G.P., but according to the order from the Edition from the year 1970 which, as usual, it is better: "He calls as thoughts of the vanity those thoughts of the self-appreciation which determined those who think at them to love the showing up of themselves and the glory. This is because of imagining that you are something will not allow you to actually be that. That's why the vanity is an it is called as inexistence". Imagining that you are something occurs when you are not what you imagine that you are, or when you want to hide the fact that you are not what you try to show that you are. The vanity is always intertwined with the insincerity and with the lack of humbleness. And one cannot build anything with these ones. Because of not admitting your real ground which you must build on, or the fact that only God is that steadfast ground which you can lastingly build on.

[124] The ties with her own things transformed Lot's wife in a pillar of salt. The ties with the stranger things deprived Essau of his firstborn rights. The chains of the own wills let the people's houses empty. The chain of the wealth killed Isabel. And he who was delivered from those he truly found the loving-of-stranger tent and the life of Abraham who estranged himself. Of all the earthly things, which seem to be us a steadfast house for resting, we musth detach ourselves from those, in order us to find our eternal resting in the tent of Abraham who estranged himself from his birth place.

[125] The simple knowledge is that knowledge unaccompanied by the example of the life so that it has no power to change in good them who listen to it.

[126] "You notice that there hasn't happened a turning towards things, but only the cogitation floated towards the rationalities of the things. That's why it has been condemned. This was

13) Let's strive to follow not the example of Lot's wife but the example of Lot himself (Gen. 19). This is because the soul, by turning back to where he has got out, the soul will be degraded like the salt and the soul will remain motionless (unworking)[127].

14) Run away from Egypt without turning back. This is because of the souls who turned back there did not see the Jerusalem, or the land of the dispassion.

15) It is possible that at the beginning as well, if we left the state of childhood, namely our own things, and if we have been consummately cleaned, to turn ourselves towards those with benefit, on the purpose that, after we have been saved, to save some other people. Though, even Moses the seer of God, by being him sent for the salvation of his nation, he endured many dangers in Egypt, or in the darkness of the world.

16) It is good to upset our parents and not the Lord. This is for This One built and saved; and those ones often lost them whom they loved and they surrendered them to the eternal damnation.

17) Stranger is him who sits as one of another language among those of foreign languages, into knowledge[128].

because not in Egypt but in the places around Egypt descended the people's mind". The scholium from the Edition from the year 1970 adds: "Likewise, you monk, do not think that you have estranged yourself while sitting into the mountain and into the monastery you let your cogitation wandering and your mind joining intertwining with the useless things of the life and with the life's pleasures and with the addiction to the world; but you rest yourself in the remembrance of God".

[127] The motionless or unworking soul is the dead soul, petrified as Lot's wife was, incapable of life, incapable of changing himself towards better, incapable of advancing towards higher steps. The salt which Lot's wife was transformed in, it had not even the power to season the foods, because of becoming a totally unfruitful and petrified pillar. Only if moving ahead as Lot, the soul will truly move himself and it will be consummated.

[128] "Stranger is that one who, among those speaking the same language, he behaves like he would be of a foreign language. And he sits into feeling, meaning that he does not reckon himself as worthy to say something to others". Into knowledge could mean also that he is aware of needing him to remain a stranger, namely he must not search for getting along with others. It seems that here is affirmed something contrary to the "confession of a thought", namely to the catholicity of the Church (referring to the Eucharistic assembly and not to being Roman catholic; from Old Church Slavonic съборьнъ (sŭborĭnŭ), E. l. t.'s n.). It actually is affirmed here only a total gathering into God. But he who estranges himself like this he will find everyone into God and he will pray for everyone. And if all of them do the same, they will meet into God. The catholicity is not limited to the relationships among people btu it advances into the deeper ties of all people in the common God, according to the same faith and to the same love for God.

18) We do not withdraw ourselves (from the world) because of hating our people or the places. Let's not be that! But we attempt to get rid of the harm coming from those[129].

19) As in all other aspect, likewise in this one the Lord is our Teacher. For Himself often left His bodily parents. This is for, when He heard some people telling Him: "You Mother and Your brothers are searching for You" (Mt. 12: 47), our good Teacher immediately showed us the dispassionate hatred, by saying: "My mother and My brothers are they who do the will of My Father Who is in heavens".

20) Let be your father him who can and who wants to live together with you in the lightening the burdens of his sins; mother, the pricking of your heart that can wash you up from defilement; and brother him who toils together with you and who challenges you on that road that leads above. Earn as your unseparated wife the ceaseless remembrance of the death; let be your all-beloved children the sighs of your heart; earn your body as your servant; and as friends, the Holy Powers who at the time of the exit (of your soul) could help you, if they will become your friends. "This is the nation of them who search for the Lord" (Ps. 23: 6[130]).

21) The longing for God has quenched the longing for parents. And he who tells you that he has both of them he actually deceived on himself. This is because let him hear: "Nobody can serve two masters" and the other things (Mt. 6: 24)[131].

[129] "The hatred is a hidden disposition of disgust towards something of those which upset us. Or the hatred is the estrangement from something unpleasant and the turning away from them who upset us. The monk's withdrawal from their own things is not done for any of the mentioned reasons". He is being done a fine discernment between hatred and hatred. The monk – and the Christian by and large – does not hate the existing realities, but the monk hates the sin which he attaches himself willingly to creatures. And given the fact that the sin weakens and crooks the existence, the monk or the Christian, by hating the sin and by shining himself against sin and against sin's occasions, he loves the existence more than those who approve the sins and let themselves to be caught by sins, for the monk wants to defend the entire existence or he wants the existence always increasing into God and shunned against the crookedness and the weakness coming from sin, or from the egotistic and pride existing form the connection with God who is the Source of the life.

[131] "If you are a layman, you will live among the realities from the world. And if you are a monk, you will live in the deeds which the monks are improved by. This is because if you

22) I haven't come, says the Lord, to bring peace on earth and the love of the parents for their sons and of the brothers for their brothers who decide not to serve Me (Mt. 10: 34), by fight and sword; namely to separate them who love God from them who love the world, them who love the material goods from those who love the immaterial realities, them who love the glory from them who are humble in thought. This is for the Lord rejoices for the union and for the division born out of the love for Him.

23) Take heed lest not to be dome to you, you who love the addition to your own people, all filled up with the waters of the sins and you to be lost in the deluge of the love for the world. Do not let yourself persuaded by the tears of your parents and of your friends. Otherwise, you will eternally cry.

24) When your kinships will surround you as some bees or, better said, as some wasps, crying for you, you quickly and without turning back aim the eye of your soul towards your death and towards your (evil) deeds, so that you will be able to remove your pain with pain[132].

25) Our ones, who are not ours[133], they promise to do everything is pleasant to us. But their purpose is that of impeding us in our all-good road, and then to attract us towards their purpose.

26) Let's us withdraw from our places to those most-uncomfortable parts, which are the most-lacking of vain-glory and the humblest. If not, we will fly (off the world) together with our passion.

27) You hide your live as nobleman and you cover your good glory, lest you will be showing yourself in your words differently from your deeds[134].

want to live into the foreign realities, you will fall off both of them". Neither the laymen must neglect his good duties imposed him by living into the world and by having a family.

[132] "He who wants the all-great things he will disregard the unimportant things". Another: "You endure the pain with the useful pain, in order you to be able to escape the vain pains, which do not save you (the Parable of the two thieves).

[133] "Our bodily parent are ours according to the kinship of the nature; but they are not ours according to the will, because of not being helpful to our honoring of God purpose".

[134] The scholium from the G.P.: "Lest your inappropriate deeds to show as liar your good origin". Another: "Do not lean yourself on your bodily noblesse because the bodily one does not receive the realities of the Ghost" (I Cor. 2: 14). The Edition from the year 1970: "Do not show through your external countenance, due to estrangement, the monastic humbleness, and in reality, you to have the vain-glory".

28) Nobody surrendered himself to estrangement as did that great (patriarch) who heard: "Go out of your land and of your kinship and of the house of your father" (Gen. 12: 1), despite he was called in a foreign land of another language and barbarian[135].

29) On occasions the Lord glorifies him who estranged himself like that great (patriarch) even more than he did with that one. But even if the glory is given by God, we better shun ourselves of it because through the shield of the humbleness.

30) When the devils, or our fellow humans as well, they praise us for the great deed of the estrangement, let's think at Him Who estranged Himself for us, by descending from heavens on earth, and we will find ourselves as not being able to totally accomplish our estrangement for eve and ever.

31) If it awful us to be defiled by somebody close to us, or even by a stranger. This is for that defilement could attracts us back into the world and so to totally extinguish the fire of our repentance (pricking).

32) As it is impossible an eye to look at the sky and an eye to look at the earth, likewise it is impossible not to endanger his soul he who hasn't estranged himself with his thought and with his body from all the things which are his or which do not belong to him.

33) With much tiredness and pain, it is enthroned within us the good and well settled habit. But what we achieve with much tiredness we can lose in an instant. This is because "the good habits are broken by the bad discussions" (I Cor. 15: 33), worldly and unworldly.

34) He who walks, after he rejected (the world), with the people from within world, or who is close to those people, he doubtlessly either will fall in their traps, or he will defile his heart by thinking at them, or, if the does not defile his heart by doing their things, he will still defile his heart by condemning them.

[135] "When you heard the Lord saying: "if somebody does not reject all the things which are with him, he won't be worthy of Me" (Pk. 14: 33), he won't understand that is only about money, but it is also about all the things of the sin. This is for "nobody, he says, while serving in the army, will he remain intertwined with the things of the life" (II Tim. 2: 4). This is because he who wants to defeat his passions while remaining intertwined with them, he will be like one who attempts to quench a fire by covering it with husk. Of course, he who starts fighting his passions, he is not yet totally clean of passions. But he still is not as him who half approves the passions and half fights against passions. This means the intertwining with the passions.

About the Dreams Which Accompany the Beginners

35) It is impossible to hide the fact that the meaning of our knowledge is totally non-consummate and full of all nescience. Like our throat identifies the foods, the hearing the meaning, and the sun proves the weakness of the eyes, likewise the words expose the soul's nescience. But the law of the love forces us also toward the things which are above our power. That's why I reckon (because of not being able to decide by myself) that after the words about estrangement, or rather together with them, it will be good if I say something about dreams too, in order us to know something too about this cunningness of the cunning ones.

36) The dream is the motion of the mind during body's motionlessness[136].

37) The hallucination is the deceit of the eyes when the cogitation sleeps. The hallucination is the getting out of the mind when the body takes vigil. The hallucination means seeing something without hypostasis (support, object)[137].

38) The reason why, after the things we said before, we have wanted to speak about dreams it is obvious. When leaving, for the Lord, our houses and our kinships, we sell ourselves to the estrangement due to our love for Christ, and the devils will attempt to disturb us through dreams, by showing our kinship crying, or dying, of in jail, or destitute suffering of us. So, he who believes his dreams will be like one who chases his shadow attempting to catch it.

[136] This scholium is according to Basil the Great: "You will understand like this the difference between vision and dream. The vision is what one sees in his dream almost as through his senses, while the dream is what one hallucinates (imagines) in his sleep. Sop he calls here motionlessness the appeasement. This is because the motion being understood in six ways: namely of the birth, of the corruption, of the growing, of the changing, of the diminution, and of moving in another place, the body doesn't seem to be lacking any of these. While sleeping, the body rather moves itself; and by moving it still is motionless. In the first one the body is by nature; and the body suffers the second one".

[137] Here are given as scholium the heads no. 38-39 from the One Hundred of Heads of Diadochus of Photice, from The Romanian Philokalia, volume I, pp. 349-350.

39) The devils of the vain-glory as prophets in our dreams. The cunningly imagine the future things and herald those to us. When the visions come to completion, we will wonder ourselves and we will extol ourselves as we would have had the gift of the prescience.

40) In them who listen to this devil, the devil often made himself a prophet. And them who despise this devil he always lies to. This is because the devil being ghost, he sees the things from within this air and when knowing that somebody is dying, he prophecies that in dreams to those who have a weak mind.

41) The devils do not know anything about the future things from a foreknowledge. This is because even the doctors can predict our death in advance.

42) They often transform themselves in angels of light and in images of martyrs and show those martyrs coming to us in our dreams[138]. And when we wake up, we will plunge into pride and joy.

43) But let this be your sign of deceit. This is because of the angels showing us condemnations and judgments and separations. And once we got up, they make us tremble and getting sad.

44) When we start believing the devils in our dreams, they mock us even when we are awake. He who believes the dreams is totally inexperienced. And he who does not believe either of them, he is a philosopher.

45) You believe only those heralding eternal damnation and judgment to you. If these make you despair, they are from the devil too.

Behold the third step identical in number to the Trinity. He who has step on this one, let him no longer look at the right or at the left.

[138] The same thing happens in spiritism as well.

Word IV

About the Blesses and Always Mentioned Obedience

1) For our word has been advancing in good order, we have reached at the fighters and at the athletes of Christ. Rightly so, any fruit is preceded by the flower and any obedience is preceded by the estrangement either of the body or of the soul. This is for with these two virtues, as with two golden wings, the pious soul ascends to heavens unhesitatingly. It might be that about that sang a certain bearer of the Ghost: "Who will give me wings as of a dove and I will fly into humbleness?" (Ps. 54: 6[139])[140].

2) We are not going to overlook the presentation in words, if you wish, of the countenance of these valiant fighters: how they hold the shield of the faith in God and in the Upholder of the faith, rejecting by that, to say so, all the thought of the faithlessness or of the displacement; how they ceaselessly stretch forwards the sword of the ghost so that they kill all their own will that comes close to them; how, by being dressed up in the iron plates of thew patience and of the gentleness, they reject through those the whole reproachment and stinging and arrow of the word. But they also have the helmet of the salvation, the cover of their protos through prayer. And they do not stay with their feet close to one another, but they stretch one foot towards serving, and they have the other foot motionless into prayer[141].

3) The obedience consists of totally denying somebody his own soul, and that is obviously shown through the body[142]. Or

[139] In KJB we have: Ps. 45: 6: "And I said, oh that I had wings like a dove! for then would I fly away, and be at rest."; in ROB we have: Ps. 54: 6: "And I said: Who will give me wings as of a pigeon, in order I to fly and to rest myself?"

[140] These are the three main stages of the spiritual climbing: the doing (the cleaning of the passions and the achieving of the virtues), the contemplation (the spiritual view), and the consummation.

[141] They unite the prayer with the serving. Through serving they are in motion, through prayer they stay motionless, united with God.

[142] The scholium from the Edition from the year 1970, which organizes differently the scholium from the G.P.: "By denying the soul he means the fact that somebody leaves his natural wills, according to the word: "If somebody wants to come after Me, let his reject himself" and the followings. This is because, even one left the contrary to nature things he would not leave anything that is pleasant to God; for those do not belong to him. But him who it might be, on the opposite: the obedience is the killing of the limbs through a living cogitation[143]. The obedience is a non-understandable motion, a willing death, a non-spying life[144], accepting the danger non-worryingly[145], unsearched-for-answer in front of God, fearlessness in front of death, non-dangerous sailing on the life's sea, and traveling while sleeping[146].

leaves the natural things, he denies on himself". The scholium from the G.P.: "The obedience belongs to him who is capable of it, and not the obedience of him who is not (capable of it). This is because we won't name the irrational being as obedient or disobedient". So, that is not about an abolishment of the soul, but it is about placing the soul in the hand of God. The obedience is death of the death and affirmation of the life, the affirmation of the spirit towards the body, in order to stop the body from the eternal death. And it is neither only about renouncing to the evil wills, but it is about surrendering the good will, namely of the whole will in the hand of God; it is a rational surrender, for the liberation from a passion, a renunciation to the egotistic existence in isolation, by putting it in accord with the rationality of God. This surrendering to God of the own wills somebody shows it through the acts manifested in his body, by fulfilling through his body only those deeds which are pleasant to God.

[143] Only a powerful cogitation, or a living conscience can restrain the deeds manifested through body. This killing of the unrestrained movements of the body's limbs coincides to a great power of the ghost.

[144] Non-understandable motion because of seeming contrary to rationality; willing death because it continuously coexists with the will, unlike the physical death that once produced there will no longer be any possibility to manifest the will through the body; as such it is a supreme and continuous act of will. Life in simplicity is that live without complexities and inutile questions that would diminish the life as living out of love.

[145] "He does not speak about the danger of the soul, but of the body, that is endured by him who obeys himself, haphazardly, either he would sail on the sea or he would fall among thieves; and thus, he dies of a death that does not worry him at all, for he knows well that the haphazard death is a witness and he fulfills his obedience without choosing what he obeys or not".

[146] All the responsibilities are thrown upon the souly guide appointed by God. He who obeys has only one responsibility: to obey his spiritual guide. By obeying his spiritual guide, he will obey God Whose wills become manifest through and they are interpreted by the spiritual guide. That's why the disciple is not worried about what he will answer to God at judgment, and he sails on the life's sea without endangering his soul, and he does not fear the harm of his body or even death. The disciple travels like a sleeping child borne in his father's arms. Better said, he sees all the things well, because of not seeing any danger. At the basis of all these deeds of own non-will, there is a great and continuous will or assertiveness to strongly overcome any difficulty, and to face even death for willingly fulfill the wills of God, as concretized in the wills of his protos; and there is a fundamental light as well: that he who commands he represents God, and the disciple's salvation consists of fulfilling the will of his spiritual guide as it would be the will of God. The scholium from the Edition from the year 1970: "Or the tireless and worriless path towards virtue. This is for he who has surrendered himself to his protos and he who placed his soul in the hand of his protos, he has delivered himself from any worry and he is like he would sleep".

4) The obedience is tomb to will and resurrection to humbleness[147]. The dead does not resist and he does not choose between the good things and the seemingly bad things. This is for he who has killed his soul due to piousness, he will answer for everything[148]. The obedience is the rejection of the own judgment due to the richness of the judgment[149].

5) The beginning of the killing of the body's limbs and of the soul's will is done with pain. The middle is here with pain and there without pain. And the end is shown motionlessness and in non-feeling the pain. This happy living-dead only then he feels tiredness and pain when he sees himself fulfilling his own will, so that he will fear the burden of his judgment[150].

6) All of you who started disrobing yourselves for entering the stadium of the understanding confession[151]; all of you who want to take the yoke of Christ on your neck; all of you who search for placing your burden on somebody else's neck; all of you who hurry up to willingly record your gains (consequently to your toils) and you want to be written down to you your freedom in exchange of those gains; all of you who sail on this huge sea while floating erected on somebody else's shoulders – you know that you have started to walk a short and harsh road, one having on it the possibility of a sole straying: that one is called the self-ruling (idiorrhythmic). He who totally rejected

[147] The individual searching for doing his own wills will die on every moment, and the person resurrects, or the new man, through the power of the communion that he throws towards that one who represents God.

[148] "Better said his protos. This is for this one, once he received the will of the obedient and he has made, to say so, his soul without will and dead (scholium G.P.: "and he almost killed it"), he himself will answer for his disciple".

[149] "The rejection of the judgment (of the discernment, of the own choice) consists of obeying the seemingly evil things, as they would be good, as Abraham fulfilling the commandment to stab his son, he enriched, without judging, the obedience he had from the beginning". The obedience to God comes out of the richness of the true understanding of what must be done for the own accomplishment and it enriches this understanding through the continual experience had by him who obeys regarding his prosperity after being liberated from pride.

[150] "The virtues as the sins as well, they make the mind blind (insensitive, t. n.). The fist ones, in order the mind not to see the sins (not to feel their temptations and not to se others' sins, n. t.); the second ones not to see the virtues". So, only that man who fight for virtues, but he hasn't totally escaped from sins yet, namely the beginner or the one from the middle, he feels the pain for he fears the eternal damnation.

[151] The understanding confession is that made not with the mouth but with the deeds and with the mind. "The stadium of the understanding confession is the living of the brothers together, according to the great Basil who says: "The stadium of the fight and the good-fragrance of the advancing and of the ceaseless accustoming of the thinking to God's commandments, are the living of the brothers together"".

this one in choosing the things seeming him as good and spiritual and pleasant to God, he has reached the target even before hitting the road[152]. This is for the obedience consists of not believing to yourself in the good things, until the end of your life.

7) Intending to bow our neck into God and to obey somebody else, on the purpose of the humble cogitation or of the salvation from the Lord, before entering (the stadium), if there is withing us some mistrust or some thought (doubt), let's first study the protos and judge and, to say so, to try him, lest by entrusting ourselves to the sailor as to a helmsman and to the addicted one as to a passionless one and to the sea as to the harbor, we to cause to ourselves a sure shipwreck. And we enter the stadium of the piousness and of the obedience, let's no longer judge the good guide of our fight in any regard, even though we see in him, as in a man, some slight mistakes. This is because otherwise, by judging him, our obedience will be useless[153].

8) It is totally necessary that they who want to have an always doubtless faith into their advisers, to preserve their victories always remembered and undeleted within their heart, for when the devils will sow within then the disbelief in their advisers, they to shoot the devil's mouths up with the memories they have about their advisers' victories. This is for, the more their faith flourished within their heart, the more their body will strive into serving. But when one stumbles on disbelief he will fall: "For everything that is not out of faith, it is sin" (Rom. 14: 20).

9) When your though advises you to judge, or to condemn your protos, you will jump away from that as from fornication. Do not give lenience to the snake: neither place, nor entrance,

[152] "Obedient is that man who has rejected the self-ruling and he obeys his teacher. He is among the deeds of the consummate ones, even though he hasn't traveled yet through those deeds. Because the cunning one uses to disturb them who are in obedience and to disregard their toil as ones who have neither purpose nor ascesis, neither clean prayer nor the other things, which belong to them who appease themselves, this father says that these ones are nothing in comparison to the true obedience. This is for the true obedience keeps the place for those ones and it make the obedient to be amidst those even before he has come there through them."

[153] "This is because he who judges and takes heed at all details he will despise. And he who despises will no longer obey. Or even if he does not fall into disobedience, he won't fulfill faithfully what he is commanded". "And everything that is not out of faith it will be sin", according to the Apostle.

neither beginning. You say to this dragon: o, you the deceiver, not I have not accepted to judge my adviser, but he has received to judge me. Not I have been made his judge, but he is my judge.

10) The fathers call the singing as weapon; the prayer as wall; the righteous tear as bath. And the blessed obedience they reckoned it as confession (martyrdom)[154], without which no one among those who are addicted will see God[155].

11) He who obeys he issues a decision regarding himself. This is for if he perfectly obeys himself for the Lord, even though it seems to him that he does not do that perfectly, he will be delivered from his damnation. And if he fulfills his will regarding certain things, even though it seems to him that he obeys, he will bear his own burden himself[156]. His protos does the right things by not stopping to rebuke him. And if he keeps his silence, I have nothing to say about that[157].

[154] "This is for not only they who received their death for Christ are martyrs (witnesses, t. n.), but also they who die for keeping His commandments".

[155] "One must question how without obedience no one will see God? Because, Mary the Egyptian and some others who did not obey somebody, will they not see God? But let's say that he does not talk only about the bodily obedience but also about the souly obedience. This is for we will not find any of the saints who did not obey his body to the Ghost. So, it is obvious that he who does not have the souly obedience together with the bodily obedience, he won't see God. This is because many while obeying their bodily parents they submitted their souls to pleasures. That's why they did not benefit anything out of that obedience. So, they must achieve together with the bodily obedience the souly obedience as well in order they to become dispassionate. This is because, if they remain addicted, they won't see God". Our Lord is dispassionate, and only those who are kindred to Him in this dispassion will be able to see or feel Him.

[156] He who obeys, he will judge on himself and he will condemn on himself as not being able, because of his sinfulness, to understand and to fulfill as it is due, through himself, the will of God. And by judging on himself, he will be delivered from the judgment of God.

Scholium from the Edition from the year 1970: "He who fulfills the obedience with a clean conscience and he does nothing according to his will, even if because of his nescience and forgetfulness something misses from what he owes to do – and that's why it seems to the outsiders as worthy to be judged – he still won't be judged by God. And if he strives himself to understand the commandments according to his will and to fulfill the commandments according to his pleasure, though he seems to the people as perfectly obeying, he will be condemned by God because of fulfilling his pleasure". By doing his will, he bears his burden by himself.

[157] "By the words: "I have nothing to say about that" he expresses the fact that the disciple and the adviser deviate together because the adviser does not rebuke his disciple for his deviation, and so it is shown the fact that the protos is accountable for that too. This is because the protos who does not tell to his disciple the mistakes the disciple does, that protos will be condemned together with his disciple as himself would have committed those mistakes."

12) They who obey with simplicity into the Lord, they walk the good road, by not moving within themselves by spying, out of curiosity, for details, the devil's cunningness[158].

13) Before anything let's confess ourselves to our sole judge. And if he commands us that, let's confess ourselves also to everyone. This is for the unveiled wounds won't grow bigger, but they will be healed[159].

About the Repented Thief

14) I went to a congregational monastery and I saw the fearsome judgment of a good judge and shepherd. For, when I was there, it happened that one who belonged to a thieves-gang to enter the monastic life. To that former thief the all-good physician and shepherd commanded to enjoy for seven days the whole resting, in order to have upon that place only an external perspective. After the seventh day past, the thief was summoned by the shepherd, individually, and the shepherd asked the thief if he enjoyed living with them. And after he saw the thief admitting that with the whole his sincerity, he asked him again what inappropriate thing the thief committed when living into the world. And after the thief confessed in words, assertively, everything he had done, the shepherd asked him again, for he wanted to try him: "I want to unveil these things before all brotherhood". And the thief – for he hated his sin – overcame the whole his shame and he promised to do that unhesitatingly. “If you wanted that, I could do it even in the middle of Alexander’s city” (Alexandria).

[158] "He who obeys is lot allowed to discuss the deeds of his shepherd. This is because, if that was the case, the evil devils which stir up the cogitation to inquiring thoughts out of curiosity, they cunningly would advise him to make the simple road in a twisted way". The questions, the analyses, the searching for contradictions in the advises he is given for fulfilling all the good, are all sort of pretexts for postponing or for refusing to fulfill what he is told to do. The good is simple and it can be seen with a simple mind. The twisted mind covers the good with all sorts of contrived complications.

[159] Scholium given in the translation made by Veniamin Costache, regarding the confession: "Confessing the sin is like showing the bodily illnesses. So, like the bodily illnesses are not shown by the people to everyone, either to each one, likewise confessing the sin must be done in front of them who can heal those sins. This is for it is written: "You the strong bear the helplessness of the weak" (Rom. 15: 1). And to bear stands for removing and healing those, as it is written: "For He took our helplessness and He bore our illnesses" (Isa. 53: 1). Not because He took those in Himself, but for He healed them who were suffering". We have here a reason for the confession to be done in front of a spiritual guide and not in front of a multitude, or in front of everybody, for those could be offended or they could misjudge the sins of them who confessed.

Then the shepherd gathered in the church all his shepherded, 230 in number. And by being officiated the godlike Liturgy (for it was Sunday), after reading the Gospel the shepherd brought inside the righteously condemned one, dragged by a certain brother and slapped measuredly, and having his hands tied to his back and dressed in a sack made of hair and having ashes on his head, so that everyone got afraid by seeing him and they started shouting out and crying, because of nobody knowing what happened; then, when they reached close to the church’s doors, that holy chieftain, who was a loving-of-people judge, told him: “Stop, for you are unworthy to enter here!”.

Because of being afraid of the voice of the shepherd that sounded out of altar (because the thief believed, as he confessed later on under oath, that he did not hear a human voice but a thunder), the thief immediately fell on his face, trembling and totally shake with fear. And laying on the ground and watering the earth with his tears, he was again commanded by the wonderful physician - who was working all those things for his salvation and for giving everyone an image of salvation and of obvious humbleness – to tell everyone the things he had committed. And that one confessed his sins, fearfully, one by one, so that everybody’s hearing got horrified: not only according to the bodily sins committed against nature and those according to the nature, with the speaking and with the speechless creatures, but also the witchcrafts, with the killings, and with all others, which we are not allowed to hear or to write down. After the thief confessed all of those, the shepherd commanded to be tonsured and to be reckoned among the brothers.

15) And I, by wondering of the wisdom of this pious, I asked him apart, why did he do such a strange thing? And that true physician answered me: “For these two reasons: first, in order to escape him who confessed from the present and future shame. And that happened, for he did not get up, brother John, from the ground, until he gained the forgiveness for all his sins. And you better believe it. And this for one of the brothers who were there dared to tell me: “I saw somebody holding a written piece of paper and a reed (a pen); and when the one who was laying on his face confessed a sin, that one erased that sin with his reed". And rightly so. "For I told, he says, my lawlessness to my Lord and He forgave the lawlessness of my heart" (Ps. 31: 6[160]). And the second reason for which I did that it was because I have some monks and brothers bearing unconfessed mistakes and by doing that, I urged them too to confession, which nobody will earn forgiveness without".

16) And I saw many wonderful and worthy of remembrance things to that always remembered shepherd, and in his community, things which I am going to try make you know of, as many as possible. This is for I stayed not a short time with them, watching their living and much wondering myself of it, namely what the earthly ones were following like, the example of the heavenly ones. An impossible to be undone tie was tying them and even more amazing was that they were delivered from all daring and vain-speaking. They strived, in the first place, not to harm the conscience of some brother in any regard[161]. And is someone manifested hatred on others, the shepherd locked him up in the separate monastery as a condemned prisoner. Once, the all-pious ordered one of the brothers to be immediately banished away because of gossiping to his neighbor, in order not to allow a seen and unseen devil to live in the monastery.

I saw truly useful and wonderful things at those pious ones. There was a brotherhood gathered and coagulated according to the lord, and they have the wonderful work and the contemplation (the seeing) of God. Insomuch they accustomed themselves to strive in the godlike deeds, that they almost did not need the urge of their protos, and they were waking up one on another towards the godlike vigil. For there were established among them some holy and godlike toils, well-thought and steadfast. That's why, if there happened sometimes that a brother to start - while the protos was not present – gossiping and condemning, or overall to speak vainly[162], by a sign unseen

[160] In KJB we have: Ps. 32: 5: "I acknowledged my sin unto thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid. I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord; and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin. Selah."; in ROB we have: Ps. 31: 5-6: "I knew my sin and my lawlessness I did not hide, against myself. // I said: "I will confess my lawlessness to the Lord"; and You forgave the lawlessness of my sin."

[161] The scholium from the Edition from the year 1970: "Through many deeds can the brother's conscience be harmed: by despising, by reckless disregard, by keeping in mind the evil, and by the things sprouting out of these".

[162] Everything happened with a great gentleness, without offending that one who needed to be corrected.

by the other brothers, a brother urged the gossiper to shut up. And if the gossiper did not take heed at that warning, he who drew his attention bowed before him and left[163]. And if they needed to tell something, they were allowed, at the end and ceaselessly, to remember their death and the thought at the eternal judgment.

17) I am not going to overlook either the wonderful victory of the cook. By seeing him always with his mind gathered into his service and with tears, I asked him to tell me how he was found worthy of such a gift. And him, because of being forced by me, answered me: "I have never been thinking that I serve to the people, but to God. And while reckoning myself as unworthy of any peace, I bear always in my memory the place of the future fire".

18) Let's hear another wonderful victory of theirs. They do not stop from the mind's working not even when in refectory, by through a worthy to be recorded habit and through a non-understood tendency, they happily remembered about the prayer from within soul. And if some of them suffered a falling, he had received the most numerous asks from his brothers for him to let them the worry and the responsibility for that in front of the shepherd and they to be rebuked by that one. That's why, the shepherd who knew the work of the disciples, he gave smaller punishments, as one who knew that whom he rebuked was not so guilty; and he not even searched for him who truly fell in that mistake[164].

[163] "The question of Great Basil: To what words reached the vain-speaking?" Answer: "By and large, every word that is not useful to our need for the Lord, it will be a vain-word, and the danger posed by that word is of such a manner that, even what is said is good but it is not useful to building up the listener, he who utters that word is not endangered by the fact of speaking that word but by the fact of not using that word for building up his listener. Then he upsets the Holy Ghost" (Eph. 4: 29-30). Of the same one: "What the empty-word is?". Answer: "Confessing the faith without having deeds. When somebody believes in Christ and he confesses Christ, but he does not do what Christ commanded. There is another vain-word: When somebody confessed but he won't correct himself, and when somebody says he will repent but he commits sins again. But also, the gossiping is a vain-word; and when somebody hears a gossiper but he keeps his silence about that. This is also because him who does not rebuke courageously, he will gossip. This is because what that one says has no foundation. And he who contrives lies, he will be vain-speaking, because of telling what did not happen or it was not seen. But him too who teaches others to do the good, but himself does not do the good, he will be vain-speaking".

[164] "From the Great Basil about not to hide the brothers' sins, or the own sins. All sins must be made known to the protos, either by him who committed that sin himself, or by those who know about that, if they could not heal that sin by themselves, according to the Lord's

Where to find at them vain-speaking of jokes? And if some of them started some strife with his neighbor, another came and bowed before him, and so the anger was scattered. And if he felt them as keeping the evil in their minds, he immediately heralded that to him who the second in command after the protos and that one made them reconcile before the sunset. And if they were stubborn, they either were punished not to eat until they reconciled, or they were banished away from the monastery.

And they kept that worthy of praising rule, carefully and not vainly, for it brought and showed many fruits. This was for many among those pious proved to be doers and seers, having the gift of discernment (of the right-reckoning and of the humble-cogitation). One could see at them also a terrific countenance of angelic greatness. One could see people of a great veneration and holiness, living in obedience as some children and having as their greatest praise their humbleness.

19) I saw there some men living in obedience for fifty years. I asked those to teach me what comforting they found out of so many tiredness. Some of them told me that they found the deep (abyss) of the humbleness, which they banished away from them with, the whole war.

I saw there among the always-remembered who live there, who had a grey hair and angelic countenance after achieving the non-evilness and the spiritual simplicity that they reinforced with their will; I did not see any of them reckless or unwise, as the old men from the world who are usually reckoned by people as insane. Buy I saw all of them, gentles in the outside things, luminous, unpretending and unskilled, having nothing contrived, neither in their words not in their behaviors, a thing that cannot be found at many; and internally they were breathing God with their souls, and by looking at their protos as they would have been some innocent children, commandment. This is because the untold sin is a sickness hidden within soul. We won't call as benefactor him who locks up the corruptible things within body, but we will rather call as benefactor him who brings those corruptible things, by harshness and by pain, to showing, as either by vomiting, to throw up what is harmful, or by unveiling the sickness to be made known the way to heal it. Likewise, it is proven that to hide the sin means to cause the death to the sick one. "This is for the sin is the pin of the death" (Rom. 6: 25), say the apostle. The courageous rebuking is often better that he hidden friendship. No one to hide his sin. In the first case, one makes himself killer of his brother; in the second case, each one makes himself his own killer. This is because, he who does not heal on himself, he says, through his deeds, he is brother with him who harms on himself".

and by having the eye of their mind daring and strong against devils and passions.

20) But the time of my life won't be sufficient, oh, you glorious and living of God chieftain to tell the virtues of those blessed and their living alike the heavenly one. Although, it is better us to beautify our word addressed to you and to wake you to the loving-of-God zeal, with the sweats of their zeal, than with our helpless urges. This is "for, without any doubt, what is smaller it will be adorned with what is bigger" (Hebr. 7: 7). But please do not cogitate that I am writing you something contrived by myself. Because it is a habit of the disbelief to attempt to hinder the benefit.

About Isidore

21) But let's turn back again to what we said before. Some man called Isidore, descendants of a noble family from Alexandria, he withdrew himself from the world before these years, in the mentioned monastery, where I met him. Being him received by that all-pious shepherd, and because the shepherd saw him bond to do evil things, and cruel, and harsh, and daring, the shepherd taught in an all-wise manner to defeat the devils' cunningness through a human rule. And he said to Isidore: "If you have decided to take on the yoke of Christ, I want you, before all, to get accustomed to obedience". And that one answered him: "As the iron surrenders itself to the blacksmith, likewise me, your holiness, I am surrendering myself to you". The shepherd, rejoicing of such an example of humbleness, he immediately gave to Isidore the rule of his ascesis and told him: "I want you to stay, brother, at the gate of the monastery and to kneel down before any soul that enters or exist, saying: "Pray for me, father, for I am mastered by an evil ghost". And the newcomer obeyed him as the angel obeys the Lord.

And by doing him that for seven years and reaching so the deepest humbleness and crushing of heart, that always remembered one, after the seven years ruled by the law[165] and according to the unimaginable patience of that man, he wanted to enumerate him, as being more than worthy for that, among the brothers, and even to ordain him. But that one directed many asks through other and through myself, the unworthy, towards the shepherd, to let him finish his road while obeying the same rule. He heralded by this word, in an overshadowed manner, his near end and his calling (to God), a fact that soon took place. This was for, by being him allowed by the teacher to live according to the same rule, after only ten days he left through dishonoring in an honored way to the Lord, and he took at him, on the seventh day from his death also the doormen of the monastery. For the blessed one told the doorman that if he achieved daring towards the Lord, the doorman was to come where he was, after a little while. And that happened, towards the greatest proof that his following-to-God obedience and humbleness were accepted without rebuking.

22) I asked that great Isidore, while he was still alive, what work did he have in his mind while sitting at the door? And the always remembered did not hide that from me, for he wanted that to be useful to me. So, he told me that at the beginning he had this work: "I reckoned that I sold myself as slave, because of my sins. That's why I repented with the whole bitterness, with forcing and with blood[166]. And after a year passed, I no longer had sadness in my heart, for I was waiting for the rewards form God for my patience[167]. After one more year passed, I reckoned myself unworthy, into the feeling of my heart, of living into monastery and of seeing and of speaking together with the fathers and of the impartation with the godlike Mysteries and of looking someone in his face; but, by looking down, but even lower with my thought, I ask4ed them who entered and exited to pray for me".

[166] From Issac the Syrian: "A little trouble endured for God is greater that a great deed committed without trouble. This is for the willing trouble proves the faith and the love. And the deed of the resting is born because the conscience is getting lazy. That's why in troubles were proven the saints into the love for Christ and not in resting. This is because the deed without toil is the deed of those who live withing world, who give alms from the outside things and who do not gather within themselves". It is a greater thing to endure a pain than to easily make a good deed. The last one will not be inscribed so deeply in the own being so that to change the being.

[167] "He who accepts the troubles from the present time while waiting for the goods from later, he has found out the knowledge of the truth and he will easily be delivered from anger and sadness". He knows better the complexity of his nature him who endure troubles, than him whom everything flows smoothly to, because of remaining on the surface of his being that has not been tried by deep troubles.

About Laurentius

23) Once while we were sitting at the table, that great adviser whispered in my ear: "Do you want me to show you godlike cogitation at old age?" And I asked him to show me that and he called someone who was sitting at another table, a certain Laurentius, who had been living in monastery for around forty-eight years, and who was the second in order priest serving at altar. That one came and kneeled in front of the hegumen, and the hegumen blessed him. But after that one stood up, the hegumen did not tell him anything, but let him stand in front of the table without eating (and it was the beginning of the dinner). That one remained like that for an hour, or maybe for two hours, so that, I finally got ashamed to look at his face; for he had a totally white hair, and he was eighty years old. Remaining without an answer until we finish eating, that one was sent by the pious to say the beginning of the Psalm 39[168]. But I did not overlook, for I am all-cunning, to tempt the old man. That's why I asked him what was he thinking at, while sitting in front of the table? And he told me: "Representing to myself the image of Christ next to the shepherd, I reckoned that not the hegumen commanded me, but God did it. That's why, father John, I stood praying not like in front of some people's table, btu like in front of the altar of Christ, while rejecting any evil though related to the shepherd, due to my faith in his and due to my love for him. For it was said: "The love does not count the evil" (I Cor. 13: 5). But you know this one too, father, that if somebody willingly surrenders himself to the simplicity and to the non-evilness, he won't give to the evil any place or time against him".

About Administrator

24) Like the righteous one was truly – through God – the savior and the shepherd of his sheep, likewise he had from God

the administrator of the monastery as well, more than any other, gentle as very few can be. Against that one the abbot started with a great anger – in order to benefit the others – in church, commanding to be the administrator cast out of the church without any reason. And I knew that the administrator was innocent of the guilt which the shepherd blamed it for, so that I defended the administrator. But the wiseman said at his turn: "I know as well that he is innocent. But as it is a condemnable and unjust thing to stole the bread from the mouth of a starving children, so will damage on himself the protos and he will damage the worker too if the protos does not cause the worker so many crowns[169], as many as he knows as he knows that that one can endure on every moment, either through rebukes or through dishonor, either by despising him or by mocking him[170]. He makes himself the cause of these three very big damages:

In the first place, that one will be deprived by the payment itself that comes from being him rebuked by the protos; secondly, because of wasting the possibility to benefit the others as well by seeing the virtue of the rebuked one; the third and the most difficult thing is that even they who seem to be bearers of toils, by becoming careless for a while and not being rebuked by the protos, as ones who would be, allegedly, virtuous, those ones will lose the gentleness and the patience they owe to have. This is for the lack of water covers even the good and fertile soil with the dishonored weeds and it make that soil to sprout out the brambles of the pride, of the cunningness, and of the non-fearing. By knowing that, the great apostle wrote to Timothy: "Persevere, rebuke, urge, timely and timeless" (II Tim. 4: 2).

[169] This is the text from the Edition from the year 1970. The text from the G.P. is: "Likewise the protos of the soul will not harm on himself and neither he will damage on himself, by causing crowns to that one".

The scholium: "The fighters are tempted to increase their wealth. Those who are drowsy, to guard themselves against the things that harm them. The sleepy, in order they to wake themselves up. The ones from far, to get closer to God. The familiar ones, to become even more familiar by daring".

[170] "Notice here what they who have climbed are given like, not uselessly, occasion for humbleness. This is because if they become consummate in the things which they started in, they will become even worthier of praise".

If they who work well are only praised by the protos, they will start to boast themselves with pride and they will be harmed and their protos will be harmed as well because of not taking care to guide those correctly.

And I resisted this true adviser and I brought before him the weakness of our generation and that many could, because of being rebuked without motif, or even with motif, they break up with the shepherd, but that dwelling place of the wisdom answered me again: "That soul that is tied to Christ, through the faith and through the love of the shepherd, that soul won't part with the shepherd to the blood, and especially him who was on soke occasion healed of a certain wound, for that one will remember him who says: "Neither the angels, nor the principalities, neither the powers, not any other creature will be able to separate us from the love for Christ" (Rom. 8: 38). And he who is not tired like that and who is not well planted and stuck, I wonder if he does not vainly spend his time in this place. That is because he is accompanied by a liar obedience". And this truly great adviser did not deceive on himself, but he guided and perfected and brought to Christ righteous sheep.

About Avachir

25) Let's listen to the wisdom of God place in clay pottery, and let's wonder of it. So, wondering I, while I was there, about the faith and the patience and the steadfast perseverance of the newly-planted, despite all rebukes and reproaches and sometimes even persecutions, not only from the part of the protos, but also from the part of those who were much lower that the protos (in the chain of command[171]), so that I asked, for my benefit, somebody among the brothers who by then lived for fifteen years in the monastery, a brother called Avachir, whom I saw that he was wronged by almost everybody, and sometimes he was even banished way form the table form among the servants; and he was very little talkative by nature.

So that I told him: "Brother Avachir, why am I seeing you banished away from the table almost every day to that you often go hungry to sleep?". And he answered me: "Believe me, father, that the fathers try me to see whether I am a good monk. But they do not do that without love[172]. And I, by knowing the purpose of the protos and of the others, I endure those without difficulty. Behold that for fifteen years out of the age of thirty, as they told me when I entered (the monastery), I have been tried to be seen if I have rejected the world. And rightly so, father John, because without cleaning the gold won't be purified".

By remaining that valiant man, Avachir, for two more years after my arrival to that monastery, he was moved to the Lord, and he said to the fathers shortly before he passed away: "I give thanks, to the Lord and to you. For, by tempting me for my salvation, behold I have remained non-tempted by devils for seventeen years". For that reason, the protos, as a righteous judge, he ordered that one to be placed, according to his worthiness, as a confessor (martyr), together with the saints asleep there.

About Archdeacon Macedon

26) I would do injustice, without any doubt, to the zealous for the good things, if I buried in the tomb of the silence the fight and the victory of Macedon, the first deacon from there. He, being in the taking care of the Lord, he once asked the shepherd two days before the celebration of the Holy Theophanies[173], to leave for the City of Alexandria, for a certain personal need, and he promised to quickly return from the city in order to prepare himself for the religious service of that holiday. But the evil, the enemy of the good, he impeded the archdeacon to turn back at the time decided by the protos. The archdeacon arrived a day after, and therefore the protos took his deaconship and placed him with the newest beginners. The good deacon of the patience and archdeacon of the steadfastness accepted the decision of the protos without getting sad, as somebody else would have been punished and not himself. After the deacon remains in that state for forty days, the protos appointed him again as archdeacon. But one day after being reappointed as archdeacon he asked the protos to allow him again in that state of rebuking and dishonor he experienced before, because he said that he committed an unforgivable sin.

[172] "Not only those who die by the sword and those who confessed the Lord before tyrants are crowned by the Lord, but as well they who proved their love into ascesis. This is for, like those ones endured the pricks for the Lord, likewise these ones endured the persecutions and the ascesis for the Lord".

[173] The Feast of the Birth and of the Baptism of the Lord, which seem they were still celebrated together or in close connection when The Ladder was written.

But the pious knew that the archdeacon did not say the truth by the asked that out of humbleness, so that he accepted to fulfil the good desire of the servant and since then one could see the venerated grey fair living in the beginner state and asking everybody to pray for him because, he said: "I have fallen into the fornication of the disobedience". But to me the humble, that great Macedon dared to confess why he willingly ran to that humble living. "I have never felt, he said, such a relief from any war and I have never seen the sweetness of the godlike light within me, as I do now"[174].

27) It is characteristic to the angels not to fall; or even being incapable of falling, as some people say[175]. But it is characteristic to the people to fall and then to rise again every time a falling takes place. Only to the devils is characteristic that once fallen they will no longer be able to rise again[176]. This was confessed to us by him who was entrusted with the

[174] He who willingly takes the state of the humbleness and the most difficult toils, he won't suffer the coming upon him of some unwilling humiliations and hardships. Those ones won't make him sad, and he won't even feel those, but he will rejoice of those. This is for those will find him prepare for them. He will no longer feel those as temptations and as war. Those will no longer cause him sadness and discontent. He will see within himself the godlike light, for he will see the benefactor role of those ones.

[175] The established teaching is that now the angels no longer are capable of falling.

[176] "There are three orders, says Saint Maximos: angels, people, and demons. Not falling is characteristic to the angels, but not according to their nature, but by free choice. This is because of not being the angels by nature as unmoved towards evil. If that had been the case satan would have not fallen, because by nature satan would have not been able to experience that. But the angels are difficult to be moved towards the contrary, as Gregory the Theologian says. So, not according to the nature but according 6to their choice they achieved the feature of not falling. This choice the devils strengthened towards evil and so they remained, because of being incapable of turning back, in apostasy. And the people, due to their capacity of turning back, are better than the demons. But the angels are above both orders, because of their incapacity to change themselves". But the question is: Why God made the angels and the devils as impossible to be moved towards evil or vice versa, after the angels chose the good or the evil? Is not their decision something so decisive than the change has become impossible to them? We thing that one must search for an explanation here. The angels have some kind of absolute in their decision. They want something in a definitive degree and in a definitive form. They live in a clearer ambience of the absolute and their decision has something from totally conscious acceptation of the absolute, while the man gradually grows towards absolute, being on an ascending or on a descending road, a road that gradually detached from the total evil or form the total good.

administration of the monastery. Being I young, he told me, and taking care of the monastery's cattle, it happened to me a very heavy falling of my soul. By having I the custom of never hiding the snake within my heart, I caught that snake by its tail and I immediately showed it to the healer. But the healer, with a smiling face, he slightly slapped me on my cheek and told me: "Go, my son, do your job as you have been doing it before and fear nothing"[177]. And I, by being convinced through my fiery faith that after a few days I was to be given the proof of my healing, I continued running on my road trembling and rejoicing myself in the same time.

28) The whole organization of the creature have, as some people say, many differences. Therefore, in the brothers' living into community as well, there are some advancing and opinions. Because of that, the healers too, when they notice some of the brothers as desiring to encounter the laymen when those come to monastery, the healers covered those brothers up in reproaches and in less honorable tasks, so that those brothers quickly withdrew when somebody from the world arrived at the monastery. And thus, one could see happening something above-nature: the vain-glory banished itself and ran away from people[178].

29) For my Lord did not want to deprive me of the prayers of a pious father, one week before my departure from that monastery, the Lord took to Himself him who was serving as helped of the shepherd, as a wonderful man, called Mina, who was fifty-nine years old in that community and he crossed through all jobs in that community. Son, on the third day when we were officiating the religious service of the burial of the pious, suddenly the whole place where his body was laid it was filled up with a good fragrance. That's why the great shepherd allowed us to uncover his body and all of us saw flowing from his soles as from two springs the good fragrance of the chrism.

[177] Scholium from the Edition from the year 1970: "Do not suspect that father of anything, because he left the one who confessed to him without any rebuking (penance). For he knew the brother from his youth as spending much time in toils and that's why he did not add another burden to that. Besides, there was not so much reason as the brother thought, for a harsh rebuking, because otherwise the father would have not let the brother to go smiling, but the brother would have gone from the father by having given a canon for penance".

[178] The vain-glory itself was running away from people, because they who were mastered by vain-glory avoided to appear in front of the people, because of being compelled to inglorious jobs. And thus, they learnt how to avoid showing themselves with haughtiness in front of the people.

Then the teacher told to all of us: “Do you see the sweats of his feet and of his toils, those really have been brought and have been accepted as a chrism!”.

But the fathers from there told me other many stories about the all-pious Mina. They told me that once, the protos wanted to try Mina’s by-God-gifted patience, when Mina came to where the abbot was and kneeling in front of the abbot and asking for forgiveness as usual, the abbot let him kneeled until the hour of the canon came. And only then he allowed him to stand up while rebuking him as on a lover of vain-glory and as on an impatient. And that was for all the father and the brothers to see it as an example. And the disciple of pious Mina told us about his teacher: “I asked him if he was not tempted to get asleep while kneeled down before the abbot, but he assured me that while he was kneeled there, he uttered the whole Book of Psalms by heart”.

30) I am not going to overlook my duty of adorning the crown of my word with the following emerald: I invited once to a word about quietude some of those full of manhood old men. And those, smiling and with their faces full of gladness, told me: “We, father John, being material, we also have a living tending towards the material things. Because we reckon that we have to wage this war according to the measure of our weakness, we reckoned that it is better to fight the people who are furious, but some other times they repent, and not with the devils who are always started and armed with fury against us”[179].

[179] The scholium form the Edition form the year 1970 shows in addition, beside the G.P., the first sentence as belonging to Mark the Ascetic, and the rest sentences as belonging to Evagrius: “Abba Mark says as well: “It is better us to be tempted by people than by devils. But he who is pleasant to God, he will defeat all of them”. But Saint Evagrius says at his turn: “The devils fight the hermits openly. And they fight those who live in coenobitic communities or who commit the virtue accompanied by others, by arming the most careless brothers against those. But the second war is easier than the first war, because one cannot find on earth people so bitter than the devils are, even though one suffers from people of all sorts of plots”. The people have mercy as well, or the people can be more lenient, but the devils do not. Anyway, you can be equally strong as the people who fight you or who disturb you, you can find a weakness in the temptation their bring to you, and so you will be able to defeat them more easily.

In the G.P. is added one more scholium, one that is in the same time a method of defeating the temptations from the people and from the devils: “He who prays for the people who do injustice to him, he will trouble the devil; and he who resists the first one will be defeated by the last ones”. The people’s fight against us is not separated from that of the devils. But through people, the devil’s fight is weaker. This is because the people get soften by our prayer for them, by our good words, and by the help we give them.

31) Again, some among the always-remembered ones, by having for me that love and that daring according to God, he told me benevolently: "If you achieved, you all-wise one, the work of him who said into feeling: "I can do all things into the One Who strengthens me, Christ" (Phil. 4: 14), if the Holy Ghost came upon you as a cleaning dew, if the power of the patience of the Highest overshadowed you (Lk. 1: 35), you girdle like a man (as Christ God) your waist with the towel of the obedience and by standing up from the dinner of the quietude, you wash the feet of your brothers with a humble ghost[180]. Better said, you roll yourself under the feet of your companions with increased thought; you place a relentless and watchful doorman at the gate of your heart; keep your difficult to be kept mind[181] without your body that is submitted to scattering' you keep the quietude of your mind within your limbs which move and wabble, and that is the most wonderful things of all; make your soul undisturbed amid disturbances, and stop your infuriated tongue that is ready to jump to opposition[182].

You fight this master daily for seventy times seven. You stick in the wood of tour soul, as in a cross, your mind, as an anvil that is struck, it is rebuked, it is laughed at, it is done injustice to it as by a hammer strikes, but it won't get mellowed, it won't suffer any crumbling, but it will remain whole, smooth, and steadfast[183]. You reject your will like a coat of the shame [180] He who advances in obedience with assertiveness, he proves to be on one hand a strong man and on the other hand in state of humbleness; he is strong in the serving humbleness. He girdles himself with power, but with the power of the humbleness. He renounced to the quietude that rests him and he takes upon himself the care for helping and for the work of escaping his neighbor form the sins which burden that one.

[181] "κράτει νουν αχράτητον" it is a paradox. The mind that is always in motion must be kept with its thought at God.

[182] In all these recommendations is asked a paradoxical thing (translated by us as "wonderful"), and therefore all the more difficult. The body's limbs move under the power of the temptations, but the mind must guard its quietude and so the power of not getting disturbed and of not letting itself be carried away by temptations. The mind must remain steadfast as a rock amid the waves assaulting it.

[183] The mind, as an organ of the thinking, it has as foundation our whole soul, or our subject. If the disposition of our soul is firm like a wood, the mind at its turn won't be shake by temptations. The steadfastness of our subject takes his strength by being imprinted with the thought at the cross of Christ. The mind must fixe itself in the subject strengthened thus, like Christ did, and by enduring all the spikes like Christ did.

and enter the arena naked[184], even if this is a rare and difficult to be found thing. You put on the breastplate of the faith that cannot be broken of crumbled by the disbelief in the leader of the fight. You keep in the rein of the righteousness the sense of the touching that shamelessly jumps forwards. You restrain with the remembrance of the death your eye that wants to spy on every moment the greatness of the bodies and their beauty. You bring your curious mind to silence, by taking care of your mind, because of wanting to condemn your brother for being careless, so that you will be able to manifest in an undeceiving manner the whole your love for and mercy on your neighbor. By that everyone will know, your most beloved father, that you are disciple of Christ: if we have in our community love among us".

"Come, come", said again my good friend. "Come and live with us. Drink on each moment the mockery as a living water. This is for David, after he tried all the pleasant things from under the sky, at the end of all of them, by confessing his nescience, he said: "But what is good? Or what is pleasant? Nothing else but dwelling the brothers together (Ps. 132: 1[185]). And if we have been found worthy of such a patience and obedience, it is good that, after we have known our weakness, not to enter the stadium of the fight but to congratulate them who fight and to with then patience"[186].

And I was conquered by the beautiful words of that father and of that all-good teacher who live in ascesis together with me in an evangelical and prophetic manner, or better said in a friendly manner. That's why I have decided to give myself unhesitatingly to the blessed obedience.

32) But before I exited as from a Paradise and before writing down my words as some ugly and useless brambles, I will mention another useful virtue of those blessed ones[187].

The shepherd noticed that often while we sat as prayer, some of us used that as encounters and as occasions of [184] "Your will" is that will contrary to God, the individualistic will, or the egotistic will. You will dress the man up in a countenance unpleasant to God and to the fellow humans, as in a reproachable countenance.

[185] In KJB we have: Ps. 133: 1: "BEHOLD, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!"; in ROB we have: Ps. 132: 1: "Behold now what is good and what is beautiful except the brothers dwelling together!" (E. l. t.'s n.)

[186] Here is being praised the patience in community, as cohesion force, as power upheld by the communion and that upholds the community. This was accentuated also by Gheorghe, the abbot from Cernica Monastery, in the spiritual life he sown in his community.

discussions. He commanded those ones to stay for a week in front of the church and to bow before those who entered and exited the church, regardless they were clergymen or priests[188].

Seeing some brother standing at singing with a deeper feeling than of many and especially seeming that brother that, by uttering the worlds accompanied with the countenance of the being and of the face, that he was discussing with some of the brothers, I asked him to tell me the meaning of his blessed habit. And him, for he knew that it was useful not to hid that from me, he told me: "I got accustomed, father John, to gather my thoughts and my mind, together with my soul, from the beginning, by calling them to shout out together: "Come to bow and to fall before Christ, our Emperor God".

And by spying I the cook, I caught him doing this: seeing I that he had a tablet[189] at his girdle I found out that he took notes on that tablet on each day about his thoughts and then he confessed those thoughts to the shepherd. And not only him were doing that, but I saw many doing the same thing. This was because the great shepherd ordered them do to so, as I head[190].

Some brother was once banished by the shepherd because of gossiping his neighbor to the shepherd, that that one was chatty and much-speaking. But the gossiper stood at the gate of the monastery for one week, begging for being let in and for being forgiven. When the loving-of-souls shepherd found out that and when he heard that the gossiper did not eat anything for six days, he sent somebody to tall him: "If you want to make your dwelling place entirely into monastery, I will put you in the [188] "When one's mistake spreads to many, one must not show the long-suffering, neither must him search for his own benefit but for the benefit of many, in order those to be saved, for the virtue of the man and the virtue of many kinds is more useful than the virtue of only one and of only one kind".

[190] This is a method for preserving the soul in a full sincerity or transparence, by not having the soul anything hidden within, nothing covered by the darkness of the lie, not shadow, not stain, but everything in full light.

Scholium from G.P., attributed to Photius: "Willingly unveiling his mistakes to the spiritual fathers, it is a sign of the life that is being straightened, while hiding those mistakes it is a sign of the addicted soul. This is because nobody by helping the thieves, or by taking the side of the fornicators, will he unveil his thoughts (will him give up those). This is for the dispassionate one, who has mercy of the addicted by telling the sin of the brother, he does that for two reasons: either for correcting that brother, or for the benefice of another brother. But if he tells that without these reasons, he will either do that for condemning that brother, or to gossip him, and that's why he won't escape the godlike forsaking and at his turn he either will fall in the same mistake or in another, so that he will be condemned and shamed".

group of those who repent themselves". And for he who was repenting accepted that joyfully, the shepherd ordered him to be taken to the monastery appointed for them who were crying for their sins[191].

33) But for we have been speaking about the mentioned monastery, let's say something briefly about that monastery as well. It was a place situated at one kilometer far from the big monastery. It was a miserable prison. It never was seen there any smoke, or wine, or oil for food. There was nothing except bread and a few vegetables. In this place were locked in without possibility of getting out those who stumbled after they were called (to monasticism); not together but isolated and separated, or at most two together, until the Lord heralded him (the shepherd) about each of them. The shepherd appointed over them a great deputy, called Isaac, who asked them who were surrendered to him an almost continuous prayer. In order to prevent the idleness, there were many fig leaves (destined to weave baskets and mattresses). That was their life, that was their state, that was the living of them who were truly searching for the face of God of Jacob (Ps. 23: 6[192]).

34) it is a good thing to wonder about the toils of the saints. But it is a thing offering you the possibility to be save by coveting to do the same. But wanting to immediately follow their way of living is a reckless and impossible thing to do.

[191] A scholium belonging to Chrysologus: "Tis up him who has committed sin, in order to make God merciful. Do not untie him, in order him not to be tied even tighter by God's anger. If I do not tie him up, his tied will remain untied. "Because if we judge on ourselves, we won't be judged" (I Cor. 11: 31). Let nobody reckon this as cruelty or inhumanity, but the greatest gentleness and the best medicine and much taking of care. "But they suffered that punishment for enough time", will somebody say. For how long? You tell me! For a year, for two, or for three? I am not interested in the time but in the straightening of the soul. You show me, therefore, if they have achieved a pricked heart, if they have changed on themselves, and then everything will be accomplished. And if this thing hasn't taken place, the time will be useless. This is because of not being us interested in the fact is the wound has been ties for many times, but if the tie was beneficial. If it brought benefit in a short time, the tie will no longer be kept. And if that was useless in fifteen years, let it no longer be kept. Let the untying of the tied one to be decided by the benefit". Being the one who has mistaken tied by the spiritual father, God won't tie that one. This is for that one feels more manifestly the disapproval and he will correct himself, while the tie from God is not obvious and the man will continue sinning, because of reckoning that if his confessor did not disapprove him, his sin is unimportant. And the canon is oriented, as duration, according to the result brought in straightening.

35) When we are being bitten by reproaches let's remember our sins, until the Lord, by seeing our striving, He will erase our sins and He will transform our pain that bites us by the heart, into joy[193]. "This is for according to the multitude of my pains from within my heart, he says, Your comforting has gladdened my soul at the due time". (Ps. 93: 19[194]).

36) Let's not forget about him who says towards the Lord: "As many troubles and evil things You have shown to be and You by turning me back You have made me alive and from the deeps of the earth You have brought me out again after I have fallen" (Ps. 70: 23[195]).

37) Blesses is him who has forced himself to be defamed and rebuked on every day for the Lord. This one will dance with the martyrs and he will be present with the angels, full of daring. Blesses is the monk who reckons himself on all moments as worthy of dishonoring and of defamation. Blesses is him who has killed his will all the way to the end, and who has surrendered the care for himself to his teacher into the Lord. This is for he will stay on the right hand of the crucified One[196].

[195] In KJB we have: Ps. 71: 20: "Thou, which hast shewed me great and sore troubles, shalt quicken me again, and shalt bring me up again from the depths of the earth."; in ROB we have: Ps. 70: 23: "Many troubles and evils You have sent upon me, but by changing Your mind You have given me live and from the deeps of the earth You have brought me out again." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[196] "Abba Zosimus said that he who wants to walk the true and right path, when he gets troubled, he will hit on himself, saying: Why are you getting angry, soul of mine? Why are you getting troubled, as they who get foam at their mouths? Right by this you are showing that you are sick. This is because if you were not sick you wouldn't suffer. Why, by ceasing to rebuke on yourself you blame your brother for showing you your illness with the deed and with the truth. Take heed at the commandment of God: "When He was rebuked, He did not rebuke; when He was suffering, He did not menace" (1 Pt. 2: 23), but He suffered all those things. And Abba Zosimus said that if somebody lived up to the age of Metusalem but without walking of that right path that all the saints walked on, namely the path of being dishonored by people while they were loving them and manifesting a manly patience with the people, that one would not advance either a little or much, and he would spend his years vainly".

He who endures he will stay on the right hand of The One Who was crucified and Who resurrected Himself after crucifixion, for he allowed himself to be crucified as well and for he

38) he who has rejected from himself the just of the unjust rebuking, he as well rejected his salvation. And he who accepts that rebuking painfully or painlessly, he will soon receive the forgiveness of his sins[197].

39) You show in an unseen manner (with your mind) to God the faith and the clean love you have for your father and That One will urge your father in an unknown manner to attach himself to you and to bring you closer to him, according to your feelings towards him[198]. He who nails any snake on the pillar, he has shown a proven faith[199]. But he who hides the snake, he will still wander in untrodden places[200].

40) If somebody wants to know whether he has the love for his brothers and the true love, he will be entrusted about that when he will see on himself crying for the mistakes of his brothers and getting gladdened for his brother's advancements and gifts[201].

41) He who wants to remain victorious with his word in a discussion, let him know that he suffers of the devil's illness, even if his word is true[202]. And if one does that in a discussion surrendered his care for himself to his teacher, as Christ did to the Father. By totally killing his egotistical will, he resurrected into the love of Christ.

Abba Zosimus is that one whom spoke with great veneration also Abba Dorotheos about. He was a hegumen living near Gaza around the beginning of the VI Century. We have here a proof about the influence of the "Speeches" - belonging to Abba Dorotheos - upon John Climacus.

[197] The rebuking makes you pay attention to yourself; it makes you realize that there is something evil within you, or something that give another the impression that you are not as you should in some regard. Consequently, you will force yourself to get healed in that regard too, and so you will gain your salvation. It is a cross that make you perfect. Itself the acceptation of the rebuking causing somebody to repent for the own mistakes, it will bring the forgiveness of those mistakes.

[198] Do not show your humiliation and love sentiments towards your seen spiritual father, but tell those with your mind to God. And God will unveil that to your father for what it is impossible not to see what is sincere, on a certain way.

[200] You nail on the seen pillar, by confession, any snake that moves within you and so you will kill that snake. But if you keep that snake hidden within you, you won't walk the right way but on crooked ways covered by darkness.

[201] "That one has put his soul for his brother". This is for he suffers for his brother and he rejoiced of his brother's gifts as those gifts were his own. His soul live and dies for that brother and together with that brother.

[202] He who wants to make his word victorious, he actually wants to overcome the others. Of course, he could say that he does not want to impose on himself but the truth. But about Christ's truth it is enough you to bear witness by living and by dying for Him. Christ's truth is not imposed with arguments of the rationality whose skillfulness you want to prove that you have. "It is not characteristic to the Christian living to defend itself, and defending oneself is with his pairs, he may be healed by the rebuking of his superiors. But if one does that also in front of his superiors, or in front of wiser people, his illness cannot be healed by anybody.

42) He who does not obey the word he won't obey the thing either. This is because he who is faithless in what is little, he will be faithless and unbent also in what is bigger. That one toils vainly, because of not earning by his pious obedience anything but his damnation.

43) he who has made his conscience clean to the max, in obedience towards his father, that one, by waiting for his death on a daily basis as for a sleep, or better said waiting for his death as for his life, he won't be scared for he knows that at the moment of the departure not him but his protos will be held accountable for him[203].

44) He who by unforcedly accepting a task from his father into the Lord he experienced in fulfilling that some unexpected impediment, let him blame not him who has given him the weapon but let him blame him who has received that weapon. For himself has received the weapon in order to fight the enemy, but he directed that weapon towards his own heart. And if he forced himself for the Lord and he previously unveiled his weakness to him who has given him that task, let him dare for, even he has fallen, he has not died[204].

not mentioned in the teaching of Christ". Or: "Resisting in word shows the stubbornness and the disobedience". That proves rather the haughtiness and the contempt, and not the humbleness and the obedience in all things. The method recommended here would truly bring peace among people.

[203] That one did and he thought just what his protos asked him to. Therefore, his protos will be hold accountable for his deeds and thoughts. Of course, that doesn't make the monk innocent, but he answers for he defeats himself on each moment, by obeying his protos. And that is not an easy thing to do. He always renounced to his will, to his impulses towards pleasure, and to his pride. He always gathers the disordered waters of his impulses into the narrow and increasingly deeper riverbed of a free of passions living, of a consummate cleanness.

[204] "There is a difference between falling and falling. That's why the falling will be according to the kind of the obedience. Therefore, you do not reckon as banishing from God that falling that happens while accomplishing some task". Another scholium of the Great Basil, one that is not present except in the translation dome by Veniamin Copstache: "In addition to the said things, it is characteristic to the monk's live another danger too. The first one and very big is that of liking of himself. This is because of not having anyone who to verify his work, so that it seems to him that he has accomplished the commandment. And then, by making of his lack of skills a habit, he won't know either the shortcomings of the advancing into work. This is because of lacking any help from around, which he would know through where he is with his working of the commandments. This is because, how will he manifest his humble cogitation by not having anyone whom to show on himself as humble? How will him know the

45) I have forgotten, oh, friends, to place in front of you also this sweet bread of the virtue: namely, I saw there also obedient monks who were crushing on themselves through insults and they were defaming on themselves for God, so that to prepare themselves not to get sad because of the dishonoring brought to them from outside[205].

46) That soul that thinks at confessions is hold by that as by a rein, not to commit sins. On the opposite, those sins which we do not intend to confess, we commit those fearless, as in darkness.

47) When the protos is absent but we imagine ourselves as standing in front of him and, by reckoning that he stands in front of us, we avoid any encounter, or word, or food, or sleep, or something else which we know he does not like, we will truly fulfill a non-liar obedience. The step sons reckon the absence of their teacher (father) as an occasion for joy, but the real children reckon that absence as a loss.

48) I once asked somebody of the most experienced, asking him to tell me how one can achieve the humbleness through obedience. And he told me: "Even if the grateful obedient would resurrect the dead, even if the gained the tears, even if he delivered of wars, he doubtlessly reckons that he did those by the prayer of his spiritual father. Thus, he will remain stranger to the vain-self-appreciation. This is for, how could that one be proud with those ones, he who tells that he had done them by the help of his father and not by his zeal?"

49) He who appeases on himself (the hesychast) does not know the work of the things we have just said. This is for the self-appreciation has gained mastery upon him, by reckoning that the mentioned deeds are committed by himself due to his zeal. But him who is under obedience, by defeating two tricks, he will remain the ternal servant of Christ[206].

mercifulness while he is separated from others? How will himself get accustomed to the long-suffering while nobody stands against his wills? And if somebody says that is enough to him the teaching from the Scriptures towards correcting his bad habits, he would be like him who learns the carpentry but he won't ever work… our Lord Himself washed up the feet of His disciples. But whom are you going to wash up? Whom are you going to serve? Whom you will be the least while you are living alone?"

[205] By accustoming not to reckon on yourself as a big deal, you won't get sad either when others won't reckon you as a big deal.

[206] Here the author wants to show that the obedience of him who lives in a community is greater than the appeasing done in loneliness. By this he does not despise the quietude but he

50) The devil wages war sometimes to defile the obedient ones, with filthiness, in order to make them callous in heart; some other times, to disturb them from the rule; and some other times to make some of them dry and fruitless, idle and heavy to prayer, sleepy and darkened, so that they to no longer benefit anything from their obedience, and even to change their minds and to get out of obedience. This is because of not allowing them to understand that the withdrawal by oikonomia of the good things which seems to us as being within us, it becomes to us a cause for the deepest humble cogitation[207].

51) The mentioned deceiver was often rejected by some by long-suffering. But then, while still speak about that, another "angels" showing himself, that deceiver will again attempt after a short while to delude us[208].

52) I saw obedient who reached much humiliation, gentle, restrained, zealous, non-warred, hot under the cover of their father, and the devils coming close to them sown within them the thought that they are by now strengthened for appeasement (hesychasm), or for the consummate fight and through that they can reach dispassion. And those being thus deceived, they left the harbor for the open sea, and then the storm caught them and they had not helmsman, and so they were miserably endangered by this filthy and salty sea.

53) It is necessary the sea to get stormy and to get savagely infuriated, so by that to again throw on the shore the whole its content and the whole its garbage and the weed which were brought into the sea by the rivers of the passions[209].

54) He who sometimes obeys himself not some other times he disobeys his father, he is like him who sometimes puts reckons that one must reach that only after achieving the humbleness by living in obedience in a community.

[207] Therefore, it is good that they who reach by the temptation of the evil one in some defilement, or in some disturbance, or they got lazy to prayer, to not renounce to obedience because of that, but to understand that those things happen to them out of the godlike oikonomia, in order to lead them to the deepest humbleness.

[208] There happen also things like these: somebody by rejecting the temptation from a demon, the same demon appears to him, or another demon, with a countenance of an angel, helping the monk, allegedly, to reject the first demon. But immediately, by that new countenance, the demon will deceive the monk to fall into the sin of self-appreciation.

[209] The monk who existed the non-dangerous harbor of the obedience in the community, while still having his passions not totally blunted, those passions will be stirred up in loneliness. But by that, he will see that it is better for him to turn back into the non-dangerous harbor of the community.

in his eyes medicined while some other times he put in his eyes some caustic substance. This is because: if one builds up and other tears down, what will be the benefit, except the tiredness?" (Eccl. 22: 28).

55) Do not let yourself to be deluded, of, you obedient to the Lord son, by the ghost of the self-appreciation, and tell your sins to your teacher, as another person would tell those sins. This is because you cannot be delivered form shame without shame[210]. The devils often use to convince us not to confess our sins, either to defame others as they would be accountable for our sin.

56) Unveil your wound in front of the physician and do not be ashamed. "This wound is mine, father, mine is this wound. It has been caused to me by my carelessness and not because of another. No one else is the causer of this wound: neither man, nor ghost, neither something else, but my carelessness!". You made yourself when confessing your sins in what regards your behavior and your countenance and your thought, as a condemned one, by bowing yourself to the ground and, if possible, by wetting with tears the feet of your physician and judge as those would belong to Christ.

57) If all things depend on habituation and they follow the habits, all the more so, doubtlessly, the good things which have God as together-worker. You won't toil for many years, son, until you will find the blessed resting[211], if you surrender yourself, since the very beginning, to the reproaches, with the whole your soul.

58) Do not reckon as unworthy of you to confess your sins, humbly, as you were in front of God, before your helper[212].

[210] You must confess your sins without sparing yourself, as you would not be spared if somebody else unveiled your sins. Of course, by telling your sins yourself, you will cross through moments of awful shame. But you won't escape the shame without you crossing through shame. You will hit with your shame your sins which cause you your shame, and so you will remove the ac use of your shame. The shame caused by your confession is passing, but the objective shame cause by your unconfessed sin is durable and it gets ever deeper.

[211] The resting from passions. You can easily reach that resting by defeating your own pride and your impulses towards pleasure, and to that through obedience. There is a great strength in obedience; the obedience is the spring of the strength for overcoming all passions.

[212] Your confessor has been given to you as your helper in the good things. God took heed at our human level and He has given us a helper who is close to us. The confessor (and the priest) could be reckoned in this sense as a helper used by God for our benefit. Like God does not baptize by Himself, but He has sent His apostles and their descendants to baptize, in order to give us the surety that we are baptized, likewise God does not accept our confession

This is for I saw condemned mellowing the harshness of their judge by adopting an all-sad and an all-deep confession and so they changed the judge's anger into compassion. That's why also John the Forerunner asked before he baptized the people to confess their sins, and not because himself needed that, but in order him to occasion their salvation.

59) Let's not get scared if we are warred after confession as well. This is because it is better to fight our thoughts than to fight our pride[213].

60) Do not run after the things told by the stories about the hesychasts and about the hermits, neither you raise yourself towards those things[214]. This is for you advance together with the army of the first martyr (Stephen).

61) You won't leave your battle station not even after you have fallen[215]. If him who had a helper still stumbled upon a stone, him who was deprived of helper he would not only stumble but he would even die.

62) When we fall, the devils immediately come close o to us and present us as blessed cause, or better said as non-blessed cause, the quietude. The purpose of our enemies is to add to our fall, in this way, a new wound.

63) When a physician confesses his helplessness, we need to go and see another physician. This is because of rare are they who get healed without seeing a physician.

64) So, who is him who will reckon that he could resist us when we tell that, if any ship having an experienced helmsman without being our confession mediated by a seen man, but God uses a seen helper according to our measure. God gives power to the human work of our confessor, for the Son of God Himself used the human word that resounded in the hearing of the listeners, and He gave the word godlike strength and he made the word as means of the godlike power. This is for the word grows out of the Word.

[213] If we were not warred by tempting thoughts, after we confessed our sins, we would boast ourselves, as ones who no longer are submitted to temptations and, if that was the case, we would ought to fight our pride and fighting our pride would be much more difficult.

[214] "Do not raise yourself towards those stories" attempting to imitate the things told by those stories, or by reckoning that you have some of the things mentioned by them.

[215] Of the Great Basil (About the Perseverance of the Monks, chapter XXI): "Like the body's limbs are connected by the tie of the nature could not be detached form the body, or if some of them were detached they would die, likewise him who lives in ascesis united with the brotherhood, if he was cut off from them whom he is living with, and if he was deprived of the help from his father by disregarding the tie with him, he would die with his soul. One like this should be condemned as cause for offence to many… This is because once the soul got accustomed to uprise, that soul will be filled up with much lack of restraint".

can reach in a danger of sinking, but without a helmsman that ships will surely be lost?[216]

65) Out of obedience will be born the humbleness, out of humbleness will be born the dispassion, for "into our humbleness our Lord remembered us and he delivered us of our enemies" (Ps. 135: 23[217]). Therefore, nothing will impede us from saying that out of obedience will be born the dispassion which the peak of the humbleness will come through. This is for the dispassion starts with the humbleness, as the law started with Moses. But the daughter consummates the mother, as Mary does to the Assembly[218].

66) The sick ones, after they receive their treatment from a physician and after they have got better, they will leave this physician in order to choose another physician, before their consummate healing, they will be worthy of the whole punishment from God.

67) Do not run away from the hands of him who has brought you to the Lord. This is for the whole your life you won't get ashamed of somebody else as of that one[219].

68) It is not without danger to any soldier to separate himself from the multitude of the army in order to fight alone[220]. And it is not without danger to a monk to start of the road of the appeasement before much experience and toil in his fight against his souly passions. The first one endangers on himself bodily, and the second one souly. "Better are, the Scripture says, two than one" (Eccl. 14: 19). Namely, it is better to the son

[216] If any ship can sink even while having an experienced helmsman, any ship will surely sink without a helmsman.

[217] In KJB we have: Ps. 136: 23: "Who remembered us in our low estate: for his mercy endureth for ever:"; in ROB we have: Ps. 135: 23: "For into our humbleness the Lord remembered us, for forever is His mercy."

[218] "The obedience is the beginning of the humbleness. This is because he who hasn't known on himself yet as lacking the virtues, that one won't be able to stay under another's command. And the self-knowledge by gathering the soul it will bring the soul to obedience, and the obedience mastered by the fear of God it will give birth to love and to humbleness. And the consummate humbleness banishes away the self-appreciation. And he who has been cleaned up of this one and of the other ones, he will become house of the dispassion, as one can see".

[219] Your gratitude for that one will help you more than anything else, not to fall into and not to persevere in sins.

[220] This is a continuous pleading for the beginners to persevere in living in community.

him to fight together with his father against the thoughts taking him into mastery even before he notices that[221].

69) He who deprives the blind of his guide, the flock of their shepherd, the wandering of his adviser, the child of his father, the sick of his physician, the ship of her helmsman, he will cause everybody dangers, and he who tries to fight the ghost without a helper, that one will be killed by those.

70) They who come to the hospital let them make their sufferings known from the very beginning. And they who come to obedience, let them show their humbleness as due. To the first ones, the alleviation of their sufferings, to the second ones the adding of the self-awareness, will be shown to than more than anything else as an undeceiving sign of their healing.

71) Let your conscience be the mirror of your obedience and that will be enough to you[222].

72) They who obey their father in their life of appeasement[223], they will have only the devils as working against them, but they who are in community they will fight both the evils and the people. The first ones keep God's commandments more thoroughly, by ceaselessly being watched by their father. The second ones, often because they lack a teacher, they transgress the commandments a little. But if they become zealous and loving of tiredness by enduring the stumbling and the rebuking, they will fill in that absence abundantly, and they will gain twofold crowns.

73) Let's guard on ourselves by taking heed at ourselves with the whole guarding. This is for the harbor that is full of [221] "προς τας προλήψεις". There are thoughts or temptations suddenly occurring within our mind before noticing them. But there are also "pre-judgments", ready-made ideas, before we judge.

[222] "Look at yourself, he says, into your conscience, as in a mirror, and you study your thoughts. And if your conscience doesn't blame you of anything, but it bears witness of your unhesitating obedience, do not search for greater reassurance". Your conscience is your inner mirror, which you see as you really are in. Other people can tell us good things about us; but they do not know us as well as we know on ourselves by looking at ourselves into our conscience. Or those people can delude us by praising us for who know which interests. Our conscience is a mirror of an untold finesse, limpidness, and sincerity. Our life will never reach not to show any stain in the mirror of our conscience. That's why, our conscience ceaselessly urges even the saints to repent.

[223] Even they who entered a live of appeasement (hesychia, t. n.), they still must have a spiritual father as role-model and as adviser.

ships it could easily crush those ships; especially those ships rotten hiddenly by anger, like by a worm[224].

74) Let's get ourselves accustomed to the fullest silence and with the nescience towards protos. This is for the silent man is the son of the wisdom, and so he will always gain much knowledge[225]. I saw one who were under obedience kidnaping the story from the mouth of the protos, and being despaired because of his obedience. And I saw that one gathering not humbleness but pride.

75) Let's take vigil with the whole vigilance and let's take heed carefully sand let's pay attention with watchfulness, when and how must we give priority to the serving and not to the prayer. This is because such thing must not take place always. Take heed at yourself when you are with your brothers and do not hurry up to show yourself, by any means, as more righteous in something. This is because you would commit two evils: you will wound those ones through our liar zealousness, and you will cause pride to yourself by behaving like that.

76) Be zealous with your soul, while not showing that at all through your body: neither through countenance, nor through some hinting word. You will do that, if you have ceased to despise your neighbor. And if you tend towards that, you will make alike to your brothers, and not different from them through your self-appreciation[226].

77) I saw an inexperienced disciple boasting on himself in front of others with the feats of his teacher. But by reckoning that he would achieve glory to himself out of other's fruits, he

[224] It is a great danger also in a big community because they who live in that community could crush into one another by colliding with one another. That can happen especially when those ones are internally weakened by the worm of the anger. Even in the harbor of a life in community one needs a lot of quietude. It is needed much self-control and patience from everyone in order the ship not to get wrecked and not to get shattered.

[225] Another paradox: Let's show ourselves as silent and nescience before our protos. But so, we will prove and achieve the moist knowledge. This is for our mind by not being scattered in much-speaking, it will record more attentively within itself everything that notices and finds out.

[226] "He speaks about those who fulfill their assignments in the community. If, he says, you do not tend to despise and disregard others, you will work your virtue in itself and in your mind, and you won't show that either by openly speaking about it nor by alluding to it (allusion). And if you tend to condemn others, let you not have within your soul a greater work than theirs; but you be like them in all regards. And work of the soul is called the ceaseless praying and the crying and those like these. So, he says, through those you fall into self-appreciation, leave those and make yourself as your brothers. This is for, by following others, you will gain your humbleness".

rather received dishonor. For all of them told him: "But how a good tree grew a baren branch?".

78) Do not reckon ourselves as patient when manly enduring the mockery from our father, but when we are despised and wounded by another man. This is because we endure our father because we have shame towards him and because of being indebted to him.

79) Drink with a good heart, as a water of the life, the mockery from any man who wants to water you with that water that cleans you from unrestraint. This is for then will spring up the deep cleaning within your soul and the light of God no longer will be absent within your heart.

80) Let nobody boast in his thoughts by seeing the multitude of the brotherhood resting under him[227]. This is for the thieves stay around.

81) Remembering, you remember of him who said: "When you have done all the commanded things, you will say that unworthy servants we are, that we have done what we owed to" (Lk. 17: 10). And the judgment of the toils we are going to know it at the time of our exit (death).

82) The coenobitic community (the congregational monastery) is earthly heaven[228]. Therefore, like the angels liturgize to the Lord, let's make our heart feel like so. Sometimes, they who are in this heaven feel themselves as having a stone heart. Some other times they are comforted by humiliation. This is in order they to get rid of the self-appreciation but also to be they comforted in toils through tears[229].

83) A small fire melts down much wax. And a small dishonoring that often comes to us, it melts down, it sweetens, and it banished away the whole savageness, insensitiveness, and petrifaction.

84) A saw one time two individuals seating hidden and taking heed and listen to the sighs and to the toils of them who lived in ascesis. But one did that for he craved for those, while the another did that because of wanting to unveil those with [227] Resting of passions and of disturbances.

[228] This is for the monks too are like some angels into body: lacking any passion and outside any egotism, and looking with their mind only at God from Whom they have everything.

[229] Those are tears of love for God which comfort the heart that is tired in ascesis. But in order they not to boast themselves, after that a dryness will come to them, like they would be petrified.

reproaches, at the right time, and to stop the worker of God from his good work.

85) Do not be silent uselessly, causing to others disturbance and bitterness; neither be you idle in your living and in your stepping, when you are commanded to strive yourself[230]. And, if not, you have become worse than the furious ones, and then those who cause disturbance.

86) I often saw, as Job says too (Job 16: 2), souls who suffered for their idle behavior, while other souls suffered from their skillfulness, and I wondered what diverse the evilness is like[231].

87) He who is in the middle cannot gain out of singing as much as he gains out of praying[232]. This is because the scattering into singing brings disorder into soul.

88) You ceaselessly fight your cogitation, by gathering it from its scattering, towards yourself. God doesn't ask the obedient ones to have an unscattered prayer[233]. That's why do not be discouraged when you are robbed (by some though while [230] "The father rebukes the reckless silence, and he corrects the idle living. The first one is a sign of the lack of attention, especially when somebody is among multitude. And the second one make him who has it, as one who is difficult to move towards spiritual toils and towards hard works. This is because some people reckon that by non-speaking, they prove themselves as being on a special level. But they do not have a level different from the level of the obedient, if they are true obedient. And the things which are contrary to these ones show the watchfulness of the mind and the love for others".

[231] In the Edition form the year 1970: "By having one an idle behavior by nature, or by being one enterprising in something of the bodily things, that could seem to many as not being such. But the illness by nature is reckoned also a certain quality of the soul and a virtue. And so, the idle one is praised as being gentle and humble; and he who agitates himself disorderly, it could be reckoned as zealous and nimble and he would be admired by them who do not know to judge. And that one by enjoying the praises he won't know on himself but, because of taking in account the wrong judgment of the many he will become addicted with his soul to the self-appreciation, or he will be overwhelmed by pain. That's why the fathers too he spoke about many sorts of the evilness". The purposeless silence is actually caused by a laziness of the mind, or it is the sign of the stupidity, while the purposeful silence is the sign of an intense work of the mind which the mind noticed through the deepest mysteries of the existence. In this silence the human mind encounters the intense work of the Holy Ghost Who communicated to the mind mysteries which are above word. Such a silence is the sign or an intense work of the person, and therefore of God as well Who attracts the mind in His mysteries. Only the person can be silent in this intense way of thinking.

[232] He who is on the second spiritual level, a level that follows after the cleaning of passions and that consists of contemplating Go in creatures, this one must pass from singing to praying.

[233] We must no wait to pray only when our mind is gathered together. But we must fight to gather our mind together by praying.

praying), but encourage yourself by gathering your mind each time, because only the angel is not robbed.

89) He who has mysteriously convinced himself not to leave the fight until his last breath, even though he would have to endure thousands of deaths of his body and of his soul[234], he won't easily fall into any of these. But the doubt of the heart and the mistrust into places[235], it uses to always cause stumbling and dangers.

90) They who easily move themselves from a place to another, they are totally inexperienced. This is because of nothing is causing so much the fruitlessness as the impatience does[236].

91) If you have entered an unknown hospital and you have met a physician, you be like a passerby and like one who searches for knowing, without being noticed, the craftsmanship of all of them who are there[237]. And if you feel some benefit from the physicians and from the nurses regarding your illnesses, especially in the swelling of your soul which you visit the hospital for[238], you will rest there and sell yourself for the gold of the humbleness, through the contract of the obedience and of the serving, strengthened by the witnesses of the angels.

92) You tear apart together with these the contract of your will. This is because, by often changing the places, you have lost the price which Christ redeemed you with[239].

93) Let this place to be your tomb before your tomb. And nobody leaves his tombs before the general resurrection. And if some ones left, take heed that they died before doing that. Let's pray our Lord not to experience that ourselves.

[234] "The death of our soul is the sin. Even though one sinned in many concerns, he says, let him repent and let him never withdraw himself from the monastery. That's why he told previously that even one would fall, let him not leave the battlefield". This is for if he remained into monastery, his fallings into sin wouldn't be so grave.

[235] "The doubtless decision gives birth to the perseverance in places and in communities, while the doubt works the disbelief and the falling and the moving elsewhere, both of the shepherds and of their flocks".

[236] "Like the bird when leaving its eggs causes those eggs to become barren, likewise is the monk who changes the places often". This one too, he makes his soul barren.

[237] "If you go, he says, to see some physician in an unknown hospital which you have never found out anything of, neither by experience nor by hearing, you firstly find out the science of that physician and only after that you unveil him your illness. Then you spiritually obey that physician, by following his commandments and by having as witnesses the angelic groups".

[238] "Namely you thought gets humbled and the swelling of your soul and the face of your souls descends. This is for that is what one searches for".

[239] You have easily or with fickleness lost your value imprinted into you by Christ.

94) When they who are lazier feel that the commandments are difficult, they will try to give priority to prayer. and when the commandments are easier, they will run away from prayer as from fire.

95) There is one who, while fulfilling a task, he leaves that when asked for in order to rest (comfort) some brother; and there is one who leaves that task because of his idleness. And again, there is one who does not leave that task because of his vain-glory. But there is also one who does not leave that task for the zeal of his soul[240].

96) If you have engaged yourself by negotiations (by promises) and you see the eye of your soul as non-increasing, do not avoid the parting; but he who is experienced he will be experienced everywhere, and likewise the opposite[241].

97) The worldly defamations cause many separations, and the greediness of the belly satisfied in companies give birth to all sort of fallings and of law transgressions.

98) If you master this master, any place will occasion you dispassion; but if she masters you, you will be endangered anywhere, except in your tomb[242].

99) Our Lord lightens the blind eyes of the obedient ones through the virtues of their adviser, and if those virtues are absent, their eyes will be darkened. But the hater of the good (the devil) does the opposite.

[240] "He who leaves his work for resting a brother, he shows love and humbleness". The Edition form the year 1970 adds: "But him who does not leave his work due to his zeal, when he is asked by somebody, he has not been discouraged in his work, but he occupies himself with that work out of zeal. Both of these are worthy to be praised. But they who are in the middle are worthy to be rebuked".

[241] "If you indebted yourself, he says, to live together with the flock or with others, but you see that the together-living is not beneficial to you, you will part with that. This is for is better not to keep your word than to be barren of (spiritual) children and damaging your soul. If you are experienced, you will remain in the together-living, for there is the possibility that you will improve those who live together with you, by your word and deed".

[242] The "master" he is speaking here about is the covetousness of the belly. In the Edition from the year 1970: "Namely, as long as you live, or before you die, you will everywhere be in danger". The G.P. gives a scholium belonging to John the Carpathian: "I would wonder if somebody satiated himself with foods and still would be able to achieve the dispassion. And I call dispassion not the avoidance of committing a sin with the deed (because this one is called restraint), but that one that plucks off the passionate thoughts – their roots included – from the cogitation, and that is also called as the cleanness of the heart. In the Edition of Veniamin Costache there is one more scholium: "The dispassion is the payment for restraint. And it gives birth to the right reckoning".

100) Let be to us image of the best obedience, oh, friends, the so-called quicksilver. This is for, by descending the quicksilver below everything, it still will remain clean of any defilement. They who strive themselves, let them all the more take heed at themselves, lest, by judging the lazy ones, to be themselves condemned more than those one[243]. I reckon that was why Lot was justified, because while being among those ones, he never judged them.

101) Let's guard the quietude and the non-disturbance in all things, but especially in singings. This is because the devils' purpose is that of banishing the prayer away through disturbances.

102) Servant is him who stays with his body in front of the people while he is knocking with his min on the gate of the heavens[244].

103) The curses, the reproaches, and the ones alike, they cause into the souls of the obedient ones a bitterness resemblant to absinth; and the praises, the honors, and the goof fame, they give birth to a sweetness like that of the honey, within those who love the sweet addictions. So, let's take heed at the nature of both kinds. The first ones use to clean up all the inward defilements; the second ones make the puss grow abundant[245].

104) We must non-worryingly trust them who have received the care for us into the Lord, even when some of the [243] G.P. from Singlitica: "It will be dangerous one to proceed teaching others if himself hasn't strived to reach what he teaches, by doing that. This is because, like somebody having a rotten house he will harm the strangers he accommodates, because of that house's collapse, likewise these ones, if they haven't built up on themselves in a sure manner, they will lose those who come to them together with themselves. This is because of calling them to salvation by words, but they rather damage the ascetics by their living style". They who are zealous are more tempted to judge the lazy ones. But because of judging those, they will be more condemned than those ones because the pride is a graver sin than the lack of zeal is.

[244] We have here a good clarification of the connection between the "horizontal" serving of people, and the "vertical" connection with God. G.P." "He does the thing of the deacon, he who anoints (prepares) his mind for the holy ascesis and who banishes away from him the passionate thought. He does the thing of the priest, he who illuminates towards the knowledge of the creature and he banishes away the liar knowledge. And he does the thing of the bishop, he who consummates through the Holy Chrism the knowledge of the Holy and Worshipped Trinity".

[245] Any evil passion is sweet. It produces a "sweet addiction". Any useful passion is hard, or painful, or "bad" (χαχοπάθεια). The praises nourish the "sweet addiction", and that has as result the pride's venom, of an evil passion. It is better the cleaning absinth of the rebukes than the sweetness of the praises that fills up the soul with the venom of the pride.

things they command to us seem us to be opposite to our salvation. This is for, especially then our faith in them is probed, as in an oven of the humbleness. And this is the sign of the truest faith, that by looking at those which are opposite to the hoped things, we unhesitatingly obey them who command us.

105) Out of obedience will be born the humbleness, as we said before. Out of humbleness will be born the right-reckoning, as the great Cassian showed all-beautifully and all-highly in his "Word about the Right-Reckoning"[246]. Out of the right-reckoning will be born the understanding, and out of understanding will be born the foresight[247]. And who will be that one who will not run this good road of the obedience, if he sees before himself the good things prepared to him? About this great gift the good psalmist said: "You have prepared into your kindness, to the obedient poor, God, Your Comin into his heart" (Ps. 67: 11[248]).

106) Do not forget for the rest of your life about that great ascetic who did not hear with his ears, during all those eighteen years, from his adviser, except the wishing: "Oh, if you only be saved"; but with the ears of his heart he did not only hear from the Lord the wishing: "Of, if you only be saved" (because of this showing a desire, and not something certain), but: "You have been saved", and that shows something decided and sure[249].

107) They will deceive on themselves, those obedient who feel their adviser be lenient towards their desires, and so they ask him tasks according to their own will. This is because, by receiving those tasks, let them doubtlessly know that they have fallen off the crown of the confession (martyrdom). This is for [246] The Romanian Philokalia, volume I, p. 124: "Word about the Gift of Discernment.

[247] The Edition form the year 1970: "One must know that he is not speaking here about the prophetic foreseeing, but about the foreseeing of the evil things which come out of a certain cause, in order us to avoid those."

[248] In KJB we have: Ps. 68: 10: "Thy congregation hath dwelt therein: thou, O God, hast prepared of thy goodness for the poor."; in ROB we have: Ps. 67: 11: "You creatures inhabit it; into your kindness, God You have been taking care of the poor." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[249] It seems to me that he alludes to an obedient known by the addressee by experience. That's why he told him as to somebody he knows: "Do not forget about that somebody". This one, by serving for many years his father who was sick and who was lying all the time on his bed, he never heard from that father for the things he was doing, as wishing and prayer: "Of, if you only be saved!". But God reassured him on every day, for his obedience, telling him: "Behold, you have been saved". So, for his obedience, though he did not hear from his adviser a wishing or a prayer, he received reassurance from God. The more he was humiliated by his adviser, the more God reassured him. This is taken from Paterikon".

the obedience is the estrangement of him who fulfill it from hypocrisy and from his own desires.

108) Somebody received the order and because he feels that him who ordered has no pleasure in being his order fulfilled, the recipient of the order won't fulfill it. And another who also feels that, he will fulfill that order unhesitatingly. The question is who of the two ones worked more piously?[250]

109) It is impossible that the devil resists his own will. Let yourself be convinced about that by them who live in laziness sand by those who persevere in a hermitage or in a congregational monastery.

110) Let the war given withing us, in order us to get far from certain places, to be us proof that there we will be pleasant to God[251], if being warred is a sign that we fight[252].

About Pious Acacia

111) I won't be someone who unjustly - and because of his inhumane parsimony - hides that what is not allowed to be hidden. The Great John the Savait[253] told me some worthy to be [250] It is given also the example of Abraham, who would have fulfilled the commandment of God. "He speaks here about two who received the order. Of those, one not feeling pleasure for the ordered work that would have led to a contrary purpose, he avoided fulfilling that thing. The another, despite himself knowing the same thing, he obeyed. Who, he asks, did better? Let's say that both of them will be worthy to be praised, if we take in account the spiritual levels they were. The beginner, doubtlessly, will work better if he obeys. This is because of being among those who are still tested. The another, after he proved for a long time his obedience, he will better not obey. He will obey better by disobeying. This is for he no longer will fulfill the verbal will of his father, as a slave, but he will guess as a son and as a friend, the will his father thought. This is for Jonah as well, by seeing that was not the ultimate will of God to destroy Ninevites, given His kindness, he postponed to herald that. The other though, they started to do what they were ordered to, for they did not doubt about the commandments. And Saul, despite being him announced the will of God regarding Amalec, he willingly did not obey that".

[251] When we leave a place with difficulty, it will mean that there we do not fulfill our pleasures. Let's therefore not become attached to a certain place. Let's easily leave any place, but let's fulfill the will of God and not ours. And the easily living of a place, we must do that only when ordered that to us. When the monk leaves a place by his own will, that won't be good.

[252] "If they who fight are troubled and they trouble others, and if the devils wage war to us, they still trouble us and they are troubled by us. "And if I trouble them, he says, they won't be able to stay" (Ps. 17: 39; unidentified by us). And again: "They who trouble me and my enemies got weak and fell" (Ps. 26: 2).

heard things. And you, pious, find out of his experience that he was a dispassionate man and clean of any liar word and of any cunning deed. And he told me the followings: “In my monastery from Asia (for this righteous started there) was a very lazy and unrestrained old man[254]. I am saying this not judging him but in order that, by showing that, I to tell the truth[255].

This old man, I do not know how he got a young disciple called Acacia, who was behaving simply, but who was wise with his thought. And this disciple was enduring so much from that old man, so that it could have seemed as hard to believe, to many. This was because that old man was tormenting him not only with reproaches and dishonoring, but also by beating him on a daily basis. But Acacia’s patience was not reckless.

So, I by seeing him tormented, daily, to the peak, as he would have been a bought slave, I asked him: “What is it, brother Acacia? How is you day?”. And that one immediately showed me his black eye, or some other time his neck, or his head wounded. But I knew him as a worker of the obedience, so that I told him: “Well, well, you endure that and you’ll be saved”.

So, by serving that old man for nine years, he went to the Lord. Being buried in the cemetery of the fathers, after five days, the adviser of Acacia went to a great old man from those who were there and told him: “Father, brother Acacia died”. That old man answered him: “Come and see”. The old man quickly stood up and went with the adviser to the tomb of the blessed ascetic and he shouted out as to a living one who was really alive into his sleeping, and told him: “Brother Acacia, did you die?”. And the all-wise obedient, by showing obedience even after his death, answered to the great old man: “How could be that possible, father, that a man who works the obedience to die?”[256].

[254] “Some people understood the unrestraint only related to fornication and they called fornicator somebody who is unrestrained. But this writer called as unrestraint any thought, namely he called as unrestrained him who did not strangle his first evil thought and who does not punish as he owes all the irrational impulses of his soul, but he allows those to advance into deed. That old man let free rein to anger and to irrational impulse”.

[255] “I am telling the truth, he says, and I’m not condemning that man. Not condemning by contriving, but showing the manifested movement of the passion and unveiling that to everyone”.

[256] He who exercises himself in the clean and unhesitant obedience, he will sharpen his spiritual sensitiveness to hear the voice of him who asks him for something, insomuch than he won’t cease to vibrate even after his bodily death. He continues living through that

Then the old man, the formal so-called adviser of Acacia, by being filled up with fear, he fell on his face in tears. And he asked the Lavra's hegumen to give him a monastic cell near to Acacia's tomb, and since then he lived there, and he was always telling to the fathers: "I have committed killing". And it seems to me, brother John, that himself this great John is him who spoke to the dead.

But his blessed soul told me also something else regarding some other father. But this father was himself, as I was able to find it out later.

About John Savait of Antioch

112) "There was a disciple, he told me, some other one in this monastery from Asia (maybe from Syria), to a certain monk who was gentle, mild, and peaceful. And because that disciple saw himself honored and rested (not submitted to hard toils)[257] by the old man, because of reckoning that that was dangerous to many, he asked that old man to release him. That was because that old man had another disciple as well and that's why he did not troubled to much this disciple. So, the brother left the old man and he went and settled down, recommended by a letter given to him by the old man, in a congregational monastery from Pont. And in the first night since he entered that monastery, he saw himself in his dream as held accountable by some people and after that reckoning ended, he was found having unpaid one hundred liters of gold. When he got up, he interpreted that hallucination to himself and said: "You poor Antioch (for that as his name) it really is huge the amount of the debt that we have to pay".

sensitiveness. This prepares him also for his resurrection with the body. His sharp responsibility keeps him spiritually alive.

[257] "Rested" is in the Edition form the year 1970. In the G.P. is "despised" (περιφρωνούμενον). The scholium from the G.P. explains this paradox: "honored and scorned", but it suspects that instead of "despised" there could be "overlooked" (περιφρωνούμενον). Another scholium explains this alternative too: "The despised one are not honored. How could be, therefore, "honored and despised", except he is bodily honored and souly despised? This is because him who sweetens himself with passions, he won't be partaker to the hard toiling". Namely, him who is not be submitted to the bodily toils, he won't be souly cared for, so that he is despised.

Another: "Namely overlooked for his sins and unrebuked by his adviser, as it is due".

"Therefore, he said, after I lived in that community for three years in without-choosing obedience, humiliated and oppressed by all from there as I was a stranger (because of not being in that monastery another stranger monk), I saw again in my dream somebody giving me a receipt proving that I paid the ten liters of gold of my debt. Waking myself up, I understood the hallucination and I said: "Only ten? When will I have paid the whole my debt?". Then I said to myself: "You poor Antioch! You need more toil and dishonor". So, I started to play dumb, but without ceasing at all to do serving. That's why, the merciless fathers by seeing me in this state and zeal, they made me do all the hard jobs in that monastery.

By persevering in that living for thirteen years, I saw those who appeared to me before, coming again to me and writing me the proof of the total payment of my debt. This was for, when those from the monastery persecuted me in something, I was manly enduring that by remembering my debt". I was told these things, father John, by the all-wise John as he would have been telling me about somebody else.

113) But let's hear to what gift of discernment (of the right reckoning that pious reached by patience. By living him in Saint Sava Monastery, three younger monks came to him for they wanted to be his disciples. He welcomed them and he immediately gave them, joyfully, to eat and to drink, for he wanted to alleviate the tiredness of their journey. But after three days the old man told them: "Brothers, I am fornicator by nature and I cannot receive any of you". But those ones were not offended, for they knew the work of the old man. So, after they begged him much for persuading him, and they were unsuccessful, they threw on themselves at his feet and they begged him to at least tell them where and how they must settle down.

Therefore, the old man was persuaded and for he knew that they will humbly and obediently accept to the advised, he said to one of them: "The Lord wants you, my son, to settle yourself down in a peaceful place, with a father, into obedience". He told to the second one: "Going, you sell all your wills and given them to God, then you will take your cross[258] and persevere in the brotherhood and on the community of the brothers, and you will doubtlessly have a treasure in heavens". The old man told to the third brother: "Take upon you inseparably the word of Him Who says: "He who endures to the end he will be saved" (Mt. 10: 22). And by going, you chose, if possible, him who you reckon that there is no other among people to hit you harder and harsher, so that to accustom you into ascesis[259]. And by persevering in that, you drink daily the mockery and the derision, as you would drink honey and milk. And the brother told to John: "And if that one lived into carelessness, what should I do". And the old man answered him: "Even if you saw him fornicating, you wouldn't part with him, but you would say in your thought: "My friend, what is the purpose you have come here for?". And you will see perishing from within you your pride and your furious callousness".

114) Let's live in ascesis with the whole our power, all of us who want to fear the Lord, in order us not to achieve, instead of our ascesis for virtue, rather the cunningness, the evilness, the harshness, the deceitfulness, the evil habit, and the anger. This is because, it is not to be wondered that as long as the man is simply citizen, or a sailor, or a plowman, the emperor's enemies do not arm themselves so harshly against that simple man. But then they see him as he has taken the seal (the soldier insignia), the shield, the sword, the bow, and he has dressed himself up in soldier vestments, then they will gnash their teeth against him and they will strive themselves on all ways to kill him. That's why, let's not sleep.

115) I saw innocent and very good children coming to school for wisdom, for teaching, and for benefit, and learning nothing but savageness and evilness from living in school. But let him who has mind to understand. It is impossible that they who learn with the whole their soul a certain craftsmanship, not to daily advance in that. But some of they know about that they advance, while others, because of oikonomia (for their benefit), they do not know that.

[259] "The father appoints the brother to the without-choosing obedience, that one without cunningness and without evilness". He asks the brother not to expect the troubles coming from his adviser to be less harsh than those coming from other people. If that was the case, he wouldn't think with evilness at any man who torment him, but he will reckon each of those as helping him in his ascesis towards consummation. And also the vice-versa: even though his adviser will behave towards him with a harshness by no means less harsh than that of any other man, he will reckon that as beneficial for his consummation.

116) A good moneychanger calculates, without any doubt, on every evening, the daily loss or earning. But he won't be able to clearly know those, if he does not record them hourly in a notebook. This is because the counting of each hour will show us that of the day[260].

117) He who is mindless, when he is condemned or rebuked, he will feel himself pricked or tempted to speak against, or he immediately bows before him who rebuked him, and not for he would be humble, but because he would want to stop the reproaches[261]. You, by keeping your silence when you are hit, you shut up and receive also those who apply the hot iron on your soul (they cauterize your soul), or better said they bring into light your soul's cleanness. Only after the surgeon has finished his surgical procedure, you will bow down before him. This is for while he is angry, he won't accept any bowing down.

118) Let's fight on each hour against our passions, but maybe more against these two affecting us who live in community: against the unrestraint of our belly, and against the impulse towards anger. This is because these ones find abundance of food in multitude. Them who live in obedience, the devil sows within them the lust for same virtues above their power; and them who live in isolation are urged by the devil to the things which are inappropriate to them[262].

119) You research the mind of the inexperienced obedient and you will find there a wrong aspiration: the lust for appeasement, for unmeasured fasting, for unscattered prayer, for the fullest lack of vain-glory, for not forgetting about remembering the death, for ceaseless pricking of the heart, for consummate lack of anger, for deep silence, and for overwhelming cleanness[263]. That's why, because of not having

[260] "Namely the good moneychanger of his deeds is that one who counts and judges on himself hourly and who live his live carefully. The hourly counting stands for tireless taking of heed". In the Edition from the year 1970: "Him who ceaselessly takes hid at himself, he won't experience deviations or robberies because of the darkness. The Sun Christ, our God, will keep luminous the whole day of his life".

[261] The Edition form the year 1970: "Hypocritically bowing down before somebody, it is an undignified bowing down. See what he is going to speak like, about the dignified bowing down, in the followings, by saying: "And when the physician stops" and the followings".

[262] "Let us who live in community to value more the obedience than the ascesis. The last one teaches us the pride, while the first one teaches us the humbleness".

[263] "There is also an undeceiving aspiration towards these ones: when somebody commits those at the right time and in an appropriate manner, namely for the good itself and in their

those from the very beginning, due to a good oikonomia, they jumped at them too early and they got strayed. This is because the enemy deceived them to search those too soon, lest, by enduring, to find those at the right time[264].

120) The deceiver whispers within them who appease on themselves (hesychasts) the praising of the taking care of strangers of the obedient ones, the serving of those, the love for brothers, the together-living, the taking care of sick people, in order to determine them – the deceiver – to become impatient these ones too, as those mentioned before[265].

121) Truly rare are they who occupy themselves with the right-reckoning appeasement. They are only those who have achieved the godlike comforting of the easing of toils and of the help from God in their ascesis[266].

122) Let's discern among tasks those tasks which fit us, and let's choose them in a due manner according to the characteristics of the passions from within us. Because you tend to the covetousness of the belly, let be your adviser a relentless ascetic in what concerns the food rather than an adviser performing wonders and rather than one who is ready to receive and sit everyone at the table. While to you who are stubborn, let your adviser to be harsh and non-lenient rather than one who is gentle and loving of people[267].

true feeling, by fulfilling them in details and with the advice of those who have already experienced them, and by avoiding in all things the own pleasure as straying and deviation".

[264] There is a law in the spiritual growth. He who is non-strengthened in the lower virtues he won't be able to ascend to the higher virtues. You won't be able to imagine within yourself an inward humbleness before you have been accustomed into obedience through the external deeds. You won't be able to pray yourself ceaselessly while you still are too tight to the world's things.

[265] Like on those who are on the beginner level of the obedience, the deceiver tempts them with the higher virtues of those who are on the higher level of those who appease themselves (the ceaseless prayer, the ceaseless thinking at death etc.), likewise those who are on the level of the appeasement are tempted by the deceiver with the doing virtues of those who are on the lower level of the obedience. By doing that, the deceiver attempts to impede all of them from truly advancing spiritually. All of them need patience for strengthening themselves in the virtues of the levels which they are on, in order they to be able to pass to the virtues of the higher level.

[266] The easing of toils doesn't mean avoiding the toils because one gets cleaned of passions through the struggle against them, but by really getting delivered of passions. But then too, the easing of toils is given only by the help from God in the fight against the temptations which can occur. These ones can really appease on themselves. This is for they do not start working the appeasement recklessly, without preparation.

[267] G.P.: "Good will be to you if you endure next to a harsh teacher up to the end and if you do not search one who is ready to lenience and to get loose the rein". G.P. and the Edition from

123) Let's not search for adviser among knowers, neither among foreseers, but let's search for and adviser who is, in the first place, humble in thought and fitting our illnesses by their living and souly structure.

124) Let be good role-model for your obedience the righteous Avachir, that one whom we have just mentioned before, so that if you always reckon that your protos is testing you, you won't ever be wrong[268].

125) When, while you are ceaselessly rebuked by your protos, you have more faith in him and more love for him, the Holy Ghost is dwelling within your soul in an unseen manner and the power of the Highest is overshadowing you. But do not be proud, neither rejoice yourself for you are enduring the reproaches and the dishonor. But you rather cry because of doing something that was worthy to be rebuked and because you have troubled his soul against you.

126) Do not wonder about what I am going to tell you. This is for I have Moses as my witness. It is less damaging to sin against God than to sin against our spiritual father[269].

the year 1970: "It is a dangerous and disciples destroying thing, the disciples to choose an adviser according to their own will. This is for such advisers lead to precipices and in perdition places". These advices can be used also by the laymen who search for a spiritual adviser, and by the spiritual advisers in their relationships with their spiritual sons.

[268] "The scholium belonging to Isidore of Pelusium: "The ascesis, oh my beloved one, it is the consequence and the vessel of all Christ's commandments; the ascesis makes you non-angry, non-haughty, non-proud, non-loving of money, non-loving of yourself, and loving of that obedience that serves to anyone, loving of general estrangement from your body, and it makes you house of the Ghost alone. The ascesis have a giving-of-thanks tongue, used towards prayer, non-budging towards speaking against; the ascesis obeys, and it does all things with the approval of the adviser given you by the time, by the place, and by the godlike decision; this is for the ascesis knows and prevents the attacks of the ghosts".

[269] In the Edition form the year 1970: "By saying the father that is less damaging to sin against God, it shows the easiness which God and His mercy can be reconciled. By the symbol of the word, he shows how awfully sometimes suffer even the most virtuous and the most spiritually superior people because of our mistakes. Let's confess our mistakes to our fathers, when we mistake". G.P. and the Edition from the year 1970: "Actually, when the Israelites sinned to God by forging a calf and they were condemned by God to perdition, Moses stood for them and he told God: "If you forgive their sin, you forgive it. And if not, you erase me too from the book that you have written". And God immediately had mercy on them, due to Moses, and they escaped the punishment. But when they mistook to Moses, they who were around Aron and Aviron and his system Mary, they endured a merciless punishment (Exod. 32; Numbers 16: 32). "This thing can be understood as thus as well: God forgives more easily the sins committed directly against Him, because He is not endangered to be destroyed by that. But he does not forgive the lack-of-love towards people, because the people could be destroyed by that.

127) Let's take heed, let's wight in, and let's take vigil, for sometimes to endure the reproaches of our shepherd with thanks and in silence, but on some occasions to let him know what he is doing. I reckon that in all cases which cause us dishonor we must keep our silence. For on those are moments of earning. But in those things done to another person, let's say a word of defense, for the connection of the love and of the peace that must remain unabolished[270].

128) They who exited the obedience, they will find the obedience's benefit, for they will know than what heavens they were in.

129) He who runs towards dispassion and towards God, each day which is not rebuked on, he will reckon that he suffers a great loss.

130) Like the trees shaken by winds will deepen their roots, likewise those who live in obedience they will achieve strong and steadfast souls.

131) He who, while living in quietude, he knew his helplessness and he has surrendered himself to obedience, he, while being blind, he tirelessly looked towards Christ[271].

132) You stay, you stay, and I say again you stay, while running[272], you my fighter brothers, while you hear shouting out to you that wiseman: "The Lord tried them into oven, better said in community, and He received them as some burnt offerings in His bosoms" (Wisdom of Solomon[273] 3: 2). Whom the [270] Let's endure the unpleasant things unjustly done to us. But let's defend those who are unjustly persecuted. Like we must not commit sin against them, likewise we must remain impassible to the injustice done to us.

[271] He who, while occupying himself with his appeasement and seeing that he is not strong enough for that, and he moved to a live in obedience, because he knew that he need to obey in order to reach Christ, that one saw Christ despite he was blind in the state of appeasement that he was in and he did not see Christ while he was in that state. This one descends to obedience due to his humbleness, and not because of his fickleness as that one mentioned before (Head. no. 95 of this Word).

[272] According to the word of Gregory of Nyssa (The Life of Moses), only him who ascends will truly stay. He who stays without ascending, without the straining of the climbing, that one will rather fall.

The Word V

About that Repentance Done Carefully and Completely Shown, which We Are Told in about the Life of the Condemned Saints and about Prison[274]

1) John ran yore before Peter (Jn. 20: 3) and the obedience was placed there before repentance. The first one, by arriving before, he symbolizes the obedience, while the another symbolized the repentance[275].

2) The repentance is the bringing back (the refreshing) of the baptism. The repentance is the covenant with God for a second life[276]. The repentance is buying the humbleness. The repentance is the ceaseless renunciation to the hope for any bodily comfort. The repentance is the thought of the self-condemnation and the worriless taking care for the self[277]. The [274] I have omitted some stronger phrases.

[275] In G.P. this head is given as belonging to The Word IV. John reaches by obedience to the knowledge of the resurrection, quicker than Peter, who, after he denied Christ, he had to cross through repentance.

[276] "The repentance is the turning back from the opposite-to-nature state to the according-to-nature state; and from devil to God through ascesis and pain". The baptism is, at its turn, such a turning back, but without ascesis or pain.

Another: "The repentance is the turning back from sin. But there is not only one sin, but the whole former ma is called sin.". The sin is imbued like a poison in the whole man's being. Therefore, the repentance is a total and existential movement, a movement for cleaning up the whole human being, in all her or his thought and bad habits.

Another: "The repentance is the leaving of the previous things and getting sad for having done those things".

[277] Getting worried for your eternal life and taking no care for the passing pleasures. The taking care for the true life and not for the superficial life. The taking care for the true being and not for the apparent one. "He who takes care of himself he condemns on himself as well. He condemns on himself for he wants to be saved. He no longer cares for the world's things and that's why he will become non-condemned by his good thought, by ceaselessly pricking on himself and condemning on himself in advance to the punishment from the / and to the unquenchable fire". Or, in other words: "He is worriless for he no longer takes care of any repentance is the daughter of the hope and the denial of the despair[278]. He who repents he will condemn on himself but he escaped unrebuked[279]. The repentance is the reconcilement with the Lord through tears and by working the good things which are opposite to sins. The repentance is the willing enduring or all troubles. He who repents will be the cause of his own punishments. The repentance is the harsh oppression of the belly and the hitting of the soul through a deep feeling.

3) You run and get closer. You come, listen, and I will tell to all of you who have angered the Lord. You gather together and see how many he showed to my soul towards building. Let's show ourselves and let's honor first the story about the dishonest workers who were honored.

4) Let's obey, let's guard, and let's to this all of us who experienced an inappropriate falling. You stand up, my brothers, at my word. You give your ear you who want to again reconcile God by a true turning of yours.

5) By hearing I – the helpless – that there is some state of life and of humbleness which were great and unusual, at them who lives in a special monastery, called also a prison, I begged that righteous man to facilitate me to reach there. And the great man agreed my request for he did not ever want to upset my soul by anything.

So, by arriving I there in the monastery of those who were repenting on themselves and in the place of theirs who truly were crying, I truly saw – if it is not too daring to say – "the things which the eye of the careless man did not see and at the heart of the idle man did not ascend" (1 Cor. 2: 9), namely words and things which can force God; occupations and ways of living which can quickly bend His love for people.

A saw some of those innocent people[280] staying the whole night outside, in fresh air, with their feet standing still, earthly thing. But he takes care of himself, as one who only takes care of himself and of his salvation".

[278] He who repents he won't ever lose the hope that there still is forgiveness for him. But by this hope, he will no longer hope for passing pleasures and praises.

[279] He who sincerely condemns on himself, he won't be condemned by God, for he will awaken God's mercy on him, by seeing the pain had by him who sinned, because of upsetting God, and by that the sinner proves that he wants to come back to the love for God.

[280] "Guilty" because they sinned; but "innocent" for by their repentance they have achieved their forgiveness from God. "About the "sinless sinners" talked also Luther, but in another sense: namely that they are forgiven by God but they continue sinning. At him there is no repentance to the man.

wabbling miserably because of being sleepy, by forcing their nature, and not giving to themselves even a little resting, but hitting on themselves and waking on themselves up with reproaches and rebuking; I saw other looking at the sky and begging help form there mournfully, while weeping and shouting out.

Again, I saw others staying at prayer and tying their hands at their back as some condemned. They kept their sad face bowed down to earth and they were condemning on themselves, reckoning themselves as unworthy of looking at the skies, and even incapable of saying something of or praying to God, because of being dominated by the lack of understanding of thei5r thoughts and of their conscience, and not knowing how and from where they must beg for help[281]. They were only presenting their soul to God, without words, and they were presenting to God their mind voicelessly and full of darkness and full of a thin wave of despair[282].

I saw others sitting on the ground dressed up in sack and ashes, and covering their faces with their knees and beating their foreheads against the ground. I saw others continuously hitting their own chests and calling back their soul and their lives[283]. Some among those were wetting down the ground with their tears. Others, because they had no tears they were hitting on themselves. Some of them were mourning for their souls, as for some dead ones, because of not being able to endure the distress of their hearts[284]. And others mourned with their [281] G.P. Scholium belonging to Isaac the Syrian: "Not doing anything else but to throw on himself before the cross of Christ, day and night, having their hands tied at their back. You try not to cool down your warmth and not to run out of tears, but you to live in ascesis in these ones; and you will be happy, oh man, if you take care of the said things, day and night, and if you do not ask for anything through them. For then the light will dawn up within you and you will be like a flourished Paradise and as a spring that does not lack its water".

[282] "The ceaseless reproaches of the conscience, even though they do not descend the soul into despair (because this is characteristic to the devils), but those reproaches do not let the cogitation to breathe, by pressing upon the thought and by heating up the thought, so that the though will remain, until the end, in a self-condemnation". The despair is rather a temptation staying at the gate of the soul, as a cunning and thin wave bringing with itself the deluge, but the despair is refused by the thought of him who repents on himself, in a strained effort.

[283] "The soul looking at the spiritual death (with dread), he recalls his eternal life as something that is characteristic to him. This is for those ones recall their soul dead through sin, towards that life through virtue live by their soul before".

[284] "That heart filled up with sadness for its weakness and for its helplessness, because of the shown bodily deeds, it fills up the place of all the bodily deeds". Namely, that heart will melt down those deeds and it will set itself in their place. In the place of each bodily deeds will hearts, but their mouth was stopping the sound of their weeping; but because of no longer being able to keep those sounds inside them, they unexpectedly shouted out.

I saw there some of them as out of themselves in the way they behaved and they thought, lost and darkened because of the much sadness and insensitive to all the things of the life; then sunk in the deep of the humbleness and burning in the fire of the sadness the tears of their eyes. I saw others lying down thoughtful and looking at the ground, and moving their heads as shouting out like some lions, from the bottom of their hearts, and gnashing with their teeth and sighing up.

Some of them, in good hope, they were asking forgiveness for everything while praying. Others, due to an untold humbleness, they were condemning themselves by reckoning on themselves as unworthy of forgiveness and they were unable to defend themselves so that they were shouting out towards God. Some of them were begging to be punished here and for getting mercy there. And others, because they were crushed under the burden of their conscience, they were sincerely begging for not being either tormented (in hell) or found worthy of the Kingdom, for "it is enough to us"[285].

I saw there, humble souls crushed and strained under the heaviness of their burden and who were able to soften even the insensitiveness[286] of the stones with their voices shouting out towards God. This is for they were saying, while falling to the ground: "We know, we know, that we are worthy of all punishments and torments. And rightly so. Because of being our power will be insufficient for answering for the multitude of appear the saddened heart, and it will keep them in balance and it will overwhelm those deeds; or, any bodily deed gives birth to the heart's sadness. Out of the wound caused by a pleasure, it will be born the pain. Out of the satiation with fat foods, it will be born the healing restraint.

[285] "Some of them, untaught, they often pray not to be found worthy of the Kingdom of Heavens, but neither to be they tormented in hell. Of the first one as unworthy, and of the hell's torments by being shown mercy to them. They do not know that he who is outside the Kingdom he actually is inside the torments. This is because except virtue and sin, there is nothing else". There isn't a neutral state, morally or spiritually.

our debts even if we beg the whole world to cry together with us. We want only that: "Not with Your anger You to rebuke us, neither with Your wrath to destroy us" (Ps. 6" 1; 37: 1[287]), nor according to Your right-judgment You to send us to torments. But You spare us and that will be enough to us, in order us to be delivered from Your great menace and from the nameless and hidden torments. This is because we do not dare to ask for a full forgiveness. This is because how could we dare - we who haven't guard our promise unstained but we defiled it – according to Your love for people and according to the previous forgiveness!".

One could see there, oh, my friends, on could see there, in a truly manifested manner, the words of David. One could see there some people enduring torments and bent to the end of their life, walking saddened for the whole day. One could see them as forgetting to eat their bread, and drinking their water mixed with their tears and eating their bread after they rolled it down in ashes and dust. One could see others only skin and bones and dry like the withered grass (Ps. 37: 6; 101: 6[288]). One could hear from them nothing else but these words: "Woe, woe, woe! Ah, ah! It is just, it is just! Spare me, spare ma, Master!". Some of them were saying: "Have mercy on me, have mercy on me!". And others even more pathetically: "Forgive me, Master! Forgive me, if possible!".

Some of them were punishing on themselves by staying out in heat, other tormented on themselves by enduring the cold. Some of them were tasting only a little water, and then they immediately stopped on themselves from drinking; they drank only as much as not to die because of thirst; others, after eating a little bread, they throw away the remaining bread far from them, and they were calling on themselves of the speaking food, as ones who committed the deeds of the speechless beasts[289].

Where could one see among those a bursting out of laughter? Where, a useless much-speaking? Where, some deed of the wrath? Where, a deed of anger? They did not even know any longer that there could be among people some anger, for their crying totally banished the wrath away from among them. Where could one see a resistance by word? Where, any celebration? Where, any daring? Where, some healing of the body? Where, some trace of vain-glory? Where, some hope for delight? Where, the thought of wine? Where, the tasting of some fruits? Where, the comforting with the content of some pots? Where, the sweetening of the throat? The hope for all of these was quenched to them. Where could one see at them the care for something earthy? Where, the thought of judging someone from among people? Nothing of all of those.

These were at them the things they said and thought and shouted out towards God. Some of them, by strongly hitting themselves over their chests, they were shouting out towards God as they would have been at the gate of the heavens: "Open to us, You Judge, open to us, because we have locked the gate to ourselves, and we have remained outside". And others were saying: "You only show Your face, and we will immediately be saved!" (Ps. 79: 4[290]). And again: "You show Yourself to the poor who sit into darkness and in the shadow of the death" (Lk. 1: 79). Another: "In a hurry Your mercies to welcome us, Lord, for we have got lost, because we have got despaired, because we got very quenched" (Ps. 78: 8; 101: 4[291]).

Some of them were saying: "Will the Lord show Himself from now on, upon us?". Others: "Has our soul passed over the insupportable debt" (Ps. 123: 4[292]). Another: "Will the Lord be merciful to us from now on? Will us hear Him telling to us who are in the ties which cannot be undone: "get out!"; and to those who are in the hell of the repentance: "Be forgiven!"? Has it entered our shouting out at the Lord's ears?".

All of them were sitting always looking with the eyes of their soul at the death, and saying: "What will happen to us? What will the decision be like? What will our end be like? Will there be a calling back for us? Is there forgiveness for us the darkened and the humble and the condemned ones? Had our begging power to enter before the Lord, or it has turned back, rightly so, humiliated and ashamed? How much fruits its working has achieved? Starting out of unclean bodies and mouths and not having much power, has it consummately reconciled the Lord, or at least partially? Or, has it healed, at least half of our wounds, which are big and which need great pains and sweats and many toils? Have the guardian angels come closer to us? Or are they still far from us? This is because if they haven't come closer to us, the whole out toil will be useless and in vain. This is because our prayer will not have the power of daring, neither it will have the winging of the cleanness, in order to enter at the Lord, if our guiding angels do not come closer to us in order to take our prayer and to bring it to the Lord"[293].

Some of them often asked among themselves, full of uncertainty, saying: "Will be escape, brothers" Will our prayer be heard? Will our prayer be accepted? Will it be open to us?" and the others were answering: "Who knows (as our brothers from Nineveh were saying), if the Lord will change His mind and so He will deliver us from the much torment? But let's do what is depends on us. And if He won't open the gates to us, let our Lord God be blessed, He Who has rightly left us outside. But let's persevere, by knocking on the gate until the end of our life.

[292] In KJB we have: Ps. 124: 4: "Then the waters had overwhelmed us, the stream had gone over our soul:"; in ROB we have: Ps. 123: 4: "The water would have drowned us, a stream would have passed upon our soul". (E. l. t.'s n.)

[293] That's why we always need the prayer of others, who as mediators are as many "angels: to us, especially when they are cleaner than we are, though we are not spared of our prayers. The mediators only bring our prayers closer to God, and they also add their feeling to our prayers; but they do not replace our prayers. They who have come like the stones are, namely as simple insensitive objects, they won't be saved either through others' prayers. It is especially helpful the mediation work of the priests, having concentrated in itself the work of the whole Church's community, in which surely are in many people better than we are.

It may be that for our much daring and perseverance, the All-God will open the gates to us".

That's why, by urging on one another, they were saying: "Let's run, brothers! One needs to run, to powerfully run, because we have been left outside our good brotherhood. Let's run and not spare our dirty and tending to evil body, but let's kill our body (mortify it), as our body has killed us too". It was what those blessed ones were just doing, because of being dominated by the sentiment of their guilt.

One could see at them as their knees were dry because of the multitude of their kneelings; their eyes were melted down and sunk into their orbits, somewhere in the deep[294]. They were hairless; their cheeks were wounded and burnt by the heat of their tears[295]; The withered and yellow faces, not differing in anything from the faces of the death.

What does it mean the heavy sufferance od the diabolized ones in comparison to these ones' sufferance? Or in comparison to the sufferance of those mourning for their dead? Or in comparison to the sufferance of them who live in exile? Or in comparison to the punishment applied to them who are found guilty for murders? The unwilling torment and punishment of those one is nothing in comparison to the willing ones. And please do not reckon as simple stories what I have been telling you, oh, brothers! These ones were often praying the great judge, the shepherd, and the angel among people, to put their hands and their neck into shackles and into iron chains, and to lock their feet up in wood stumps, as it was done to the condemned ones, and not to untie them until they would be placed in their tombs, and not even in their toms.

But I will not hide either that really worthy of mercy humbleness and that crushed love for God, and the repentance of these blessed ones. When they were seeing that the followed to leave for the Lord, in order to show themselves before That incorruptible Chair, those good inhabitants of the repentance place were begging that great shepherd, through the mediation of their protos, not to find them worthy of having a human burial, but they to be thrown, as some animals, in the river's water, or to be left in that land where the wild beasts were wandering.

[295] "Some of the things burn down while others fatten up. All the tears coming out of heart because of the sin they will dry the body up and they will burn up the body and often even the cogitation feels itself wounded by the coming out of the tears. At the beginning, the man necessarily reached this stage of the tears. And through them it will open to the man the door towards the second stage, a higher stage, that is the joy, which the man will receive mercy in. Noe come the tears springing out of understanding. These tears adorn and fatten up the soul. They com out unforcedly. Through them itself the man's countenance will be changed. This is for when the heart get gladdened, the face will flourish up".

But how fearsome and how pitiful was that view of their last moments? When the together-condemned ones felt him who was leaving before them that he was about to die, they were surrendering him as long as he still had his mind clear. And by crying, and by being full of longing, and by shaking their heads in the most pitiful countenance, they were asking, thirsty, with sad word, him who was dying, saying to him, lit with mercy: "What is it brother and together-condemned? How is it" What are you saying" What are you hoping for? Have you achieved through your toils what you were looking for, or you haven't? Have your reached there, or have you failed? Have you taken the assurance? Or it is your hope uncertain? Have you reached your liberation? Or it is your thought still wobbling and bowing? Are you feeling within your heart some illumination, or it is still darkened and rebuked? Are you hearing within you some voice telling you inside: "Behold, you have been healed" (Jn. 5: 1(, or: "Your sins be forgiven" (Mt. 9: 2), or: "Your faith has saved you" (Lk. 10: 42)? Or it seems to you that you are still hearing him who tells: "Let the sinners to return into hell" (Ps. 9: 17[296]), and: "Tying his hands and feet, you throw him into darkness" (Mt. 22: 13), and: "Let the lawless perish, so he no longer will see the glory of the Lord" (Isa. 26: 10)? What do you say, brother, on short? We pray you, tell us, so that we to know as well the things which we will be into. This is because your time has come to an end and you will never have another time"[297].

To these questions some of them who were dying answered: "Blessed is the Lord Who hasn't removed our prayer and His mercy from us" (Ps. 65: 19[298]). Other, again: "Blessed is the Lord Who hasn't given us towards the hunting of their teeth" (Ps. 123: 6[299]). But others were saying painfully: "Have our soul crossed through the unbearable torrent of the ghosts of the sky?[300] We have not yet the daring, but we are waiting for to see what will happen to that judgment". Other gave a more painful answer than this one, by saying: "Woe to our soul for we haven't guarded our promise unblemished[301]; on those moments and only within him one will know the things prepared to him".

[296] In KJB we have: Ps. 9: 17: "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God."; in ROB we have: Ps. 9: 17: "Let the sinners return into hell; all the nations which forget about God." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[297] Saint Isaac the Syrian: "Question: When will one know that he has achieved the forgiveness of his sins? Answer: When he will feel that his soul consummately hates those sins from the bottom of his heart and when in his external things, he will guide himself into the things opposite to those which he has been until then in. This one has been assured that he has achieved the forgiveness of his sins from God, out of the witness of his conscience that he has gained it, according to the Apostle's word that says: "That conscience that is not condemned, it is its own witness itself" (I Tim. 1: 19).

And I, by seeing and by hearing these things form them, I was close to despair, because I knew my carelessness and I likened it to their heavy suffering.

But what was that place like and what was that place organized like? The sight of that place itself it was urging to repentance and crying. This is because the things which are characteristic to others are hard and difficult to be accepted by those who have fallen off the virtue and off the spiritual richness are easily accepted. This is because that soul who has been deprived of the daring from before and who has fallen off the hope for dispassion, and who has broken the seal of the cleanness, that soul has been robbed of richness of the gifts, he has estranged himself from the godlike comforting, and he has transgressed the deal he had with the Lord, and he has quenched that good fire of the tears, and he is being hit and he is being pricked painfully by remembering those previous things he had, and that soul not only that he accepts with the whole his zeal the toils, but he even strives to kill on himself in a [300] Maybe: ανυπόστατο doesn't mean: "unbearable", but "without substance in the self". This is because the evil has not rationality, as Saint Maximos the Confessor said. The evil is upheld by the evil will and it has something phantasmagorical, or of hallucination, in itself. Phantasmagorical, but not less destructive. This meaning can be had also by the previous place from this chapter, where we are told about the "unbearable debt". The evil drills as a woodworm, or it weakens the being like a minus.

rightly-believing manner[302] through ascesis, if there has remained within him a spark of love for the Lord and of fear of the Lord. So were doing those blessed ones.

This is because, by bearing in mind these things and by thinking at the height of the virtue which they have fallen off from, they were saying: "We have remembered the days from the beginning" (Ps. 142: 5[303]), we remembered that fire of our zeal. Others were shouting out towards God: "Where are Your mercies from the beginning, Lord, which You showed to our soul into Your truth?". Another: "Who will place me in the months of the days from before, which God was guarding me in, when His light shined over the head of my heart?" (Job 29: 1-3)[304].

And then they remembered their previous virtues, which loss they were crying for as some children, by saying: "Where is the cleaning of the heart? Where is the heart's daring? Where is the sweet tear instead of the bitter tear? Where is the hope for the innocence and for the consummate cleaning? Where is the waiting for the blessed dispassion? Where is the faith in our shepherd? Where is the working of his prayer within us?[305] All of those have been lost and they have perished, as they would have been never seen, and they have been consumed and they have left as they would have never existed".

But let's turn back to our word. After I spend 30 days in that prison, because I was unable to endure that anu longer, I came back to community, to the great shepherd. This one, because of seeing me totally changed and troubled to the maximum, the all-wise knew the reason of my change, and he told me: "What is it, father John" Have you seen the sufferings

[302] "And he will kill on himself", namely on himself as subject of the sin, and by unveiling himself as a subject of the good deeds. He who does that, he will have at the beginning the feeling of dying, or that he must dies because of no longer wanting anything of the things he previously did or felt or lusted for. Only by that reaches on himself he who is capable only of doing the good.

[303] In KJB we have: Ps. 143: 5: "I remember the days of old; I meditate on all thy works; I muse on the work of thy hands."; in ROB we have" Ps. 142: 5: "I have remembered the days of old; I have cogitated at all Your things; at the deeds of Your hands, I have thought." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[304] "Who will pose my, he says, and who will place me in the period of those days which God was guarding me in, when I was fulfilling His commandments, and which His light was lighting the mind of my soul?"

[305] If any good deed of another fructified within us when we open ourselves to that deed, all the more the prayer of our shepherd will do so, especially his prayers for us.

of those who are tormented?" And I answered him: "I saw them, father, and I wondered and I blessed those who fell and who cry for themselves, more than those who did not fall and so they do not cry for themselves; this is for those, by falling, they have been elevated to a non-endangered resurrection". And that one said: "That's true".

And his non-liar tongue told me the followings: "Ten years ago we have here a brother who was so zealous and so working, that I, by seeing him so lit with his ghost, I trembled for him and I feared very much the envy of the devil, lest, by that one's much running to stumble his foot on some stone, a thing that is characteristic to them who walk fast. And that actually happened. So, he came to me after a while, on a late evening, and he showed me an uncovered wound and he asked me for a bandage, better said he asked me to cauterize his wound with a hot iron; and he was very troubled[306]. But because he saw his physician as not wanting to use a too big harshness towards him (for he was worthy of mercy), he threw himself on the ground and he grabbed my feet and he washed my feet with many tears and he asked me to be him punished in the prison that you have seen". "It is impossible I not to go there, he was shouting out, it is impossible!".

"So, he forced the mercy of his physician to become harshness, a rare and unusual thing among ill people. He quickly went to them who repent themselves, and he became partaker with them with the whole his zeal, crying, wounding his heart as with a knife with the sadness out of the love for God. And on the eighth day he departed for the Lord, and he asked not to be buried. But I brought him here, as one who was worthy, and I buried him together with the fathers. This was [306] "When the man remembered his first sins and he punished on himself, then God too will take care of him and will rest him. This is for God rejoices of the fact that the sinner punished on himself for deviating from God's path. This is for this is the sign of the dispassion. And as much the more he forces his soul, the more his honoring by God will be multiplied within him".

That brother they are discussing about, he asked himself to be punished, but he asked his spiritual guide for that punishment, namely on one hand he gave to himself that punishment but not without the approval of his spiritual guide, in order him neither to fall off repentance nor to sink himself in the sin of the pride. So, we need the spiritual guide, among other things, also for not adding ourselves to the other sins of ours the sin of the pride too.

for, after a week of slavery, on the eight day the man is set free[307].

Actually, there is one more person who knows limpidly, that he did not get up from my humble and defiled feet before he gained the benevolence of God. And that's no wonder. This is for, by receiving within his heart the faith of the fornicator, he too wet my unworthy feet with the same entrustment. This is for "to him who believes, all things are possible", said the Lord (Mk. 9: 23).

6) I saw the unclean souls as insanely mastered by the bodies' love. But, by taking out of trying the love a reason for repentance, they turned the same love towards the Lord. And immediately, by jumping over the fear, they grafted themselves, insatiably, into the love for God. That's why the Lord too, He said about that fornicator, that she loved much, and she was able to easily change the love for love (Lk. 7: 47).

7) I know, oh, you the wonderful ones, that the sufferings of those whom I told you about could seem unbelievable to some people, hard to believe to some other people, and again causing despair. But the manly man rather gains out of these a pin and a fiery arrow and he leaves bearing zeal in his heart. And he who has less zeal that this one, he will know his helplessness and, by easily gaining his humble cogitation, out of despising on himself, he will run after the first one. But I do not know if that one has reached his target as well. But let the idle one to not even listen to the said things, lets he will waste even the little that keeps him from totally despairing, and so to happen to him that word that says: "From him who has no zeal, it will be taken even what he has" (Mt. 25: 29)[308].

[307] "The week is the present life, and this life is the time for slavery, because the creation serves the corruption. The eighth day if the future age which we will be liberated in from the slavery of the corruption". Another: "The week of the slavery is called the life from now, and the free one is called the future life. This is for him who shakes off his mistakes which happened to him, during the seven days of the life from now, he will be moved, on the eighth day, to the free life."

[308] In order those who do not repent on themselves so powerfully as the described ones did, the author of the writing reassured them by telling them that even the little they do it is useful to them. "In the house of My Father there are many places", or rewards, as the Lord said (Jn. 14: 2). Even by the secondly mentioned one, who follows after the first one, not with his manhood but with his humble cogitation that is aware of its helplessness, the author does not know if that one too reached in the same place as the first one did. "This is the manhood, that the man to fight against his previous sins, which he prays to be him forgiven of, in order him not to allow himself to be defeated by those sins, either in his heart or in his deed and in his

8) We who have fallen into the pit of the lawlessness we won't be able to get out of there by ourselves, if we haven't sunk ourselves into the deep (abyss) of the humbleness[309].

9) Other is the sad humbleness of them who cry and other is the reproach done us by the conscience that is close to despair, and that is characteristic to them who still commit sins; and other is, the blessed richness of the humbleness occurring into the consummate ones through the work of God[310]. Let's not hurry us up to find out about the third one by words. This is because we will run vainly. And the sign of the second one is the consummate enduring of defamation[311]. This is because the previous bad habit[312] often torments even him who is crying. And that's no wonder.

10) The word about God's judgments and about fallings is darkened and ununderstood by any soul. We do not know which are the fallings happening to us because of our feeling". Another: "The heart's manhood is another helper of the soul according to God, as the laziness is a helper of the sin". Another: "The love for God banishes the carelessness away. And the lack of fear stirs the carelessness up". It is constantly affirmed the synergy or the need for together-working of man with God.

[309] There are two deeps. The deep of the sin, a deep called here as pit, because of being a deep of the insensitivity, a pit which the conscience is buried in. And there is a bottomless deep (abyss) of the humbleness, that is an endless depth of the awareness of our own tininess and of our responsibility in front of God. This cannot be experienced except in the same time with experiencing the infinity of God's power. Even from the pit of the sinfulness one can cross into the deep of the humbleness, because the sin itself can make the man to see how unworthy he is of God. But this crossing being made through the awakening of the conscience, it is a passing from a deep into another deep. Only the feeling of the deep will be maintained in that man. Through the deep of the humbleness, it is also made a raising up from the ever-thicker darkness into the endless light of God.

[310] "There is a humbleness form God and there is also him who humbles on himself because he fears God. But there is also a humbleness of him who desires God. Him who humbles himself because he fears God, it will occur to him a temperance of his limbs, with an appeasement of his senses and with a constantly crushed heart. And to him who humbles himself out of joy it will occur much simplicity and a heart that grow up and that cannot be contained". That is a heart growing up into the grace of God, in the ambience of God's love, one that cannot be stopped form its joy and flight towards His endless heights. This is a humbleness that is overwhelming by its richness, a humbleness maintained by ever increasingly experiencing God's endlessness. In this humbleness work preponderantly God Himself.

[311] "The thing of the humbleness is that, if somebody mocks us and banished us away, let's have our soul alike a god soul, that when banished he will leave, and when called he will come back, and let's do that while having within our heart the thought that we are not worthy to be together with that dog."

[312] "πρόληψισ" (the prevention) – of the sin's thought, that masters us and that occurs in our conscience suddenly, sometimes even within those who cry for their sins.

carelessness, which are those happening because we are forsaken out of oikonomia (on a good purpose), and which are the fallings happening to us because Gor turns away His face form us. But somebody told us that the fallings happening to us out of oikonomia, they cause a quick turning back. This is for God Who surrendered us to those fallings, He won't allow us to be held by those fallings for too long.

11) Let's fight, before all, the devil of the sadness. This is because that one, by coming next to us at the time of our prayer, and by remembering us about our previous daring, he wants us to stop praying[313].

12) You won't get troubled even if you fall on each day, neither you will exit the fight. But you will stand manly and, surely, the angel who guards you will cherish your patience. You wound will be easily to be healed as long as still is fresh and warm. But the oldened wounds, uncared and callous, will be difficult to be healed and they need much effort, and iron, a d whip, and the fire accompanying those, towards healing.

13) Many wounds will become, in time, unhealable. But to God everything is possible (Mt. 19: 26). Thew devils say that God is loving-of-people before their falling, but after their falling God will be harsh[314].

[313] The devil of the sadness will whisper us during prayer, if we interrupt the prayer's thread by allowing pauses, that we do not feel in our praying the daring towards God, of the living connection with God, a connection we had before. And that would make us stop praying as one who were not in that state that is appropriate for praying. But we must persevere in our prayer, even if our prayer isn't always fiery and totally gathered in the thought at God. "Take heed, brother, at the devil that brings sadness within man. This is because many are his traps until he will make you helpless. This is for that sadness according to God is joy, by the fact that you will see yourself as persevering into the will of God. But that devil tells you: "Where will you escape at? Because you have not repentance". This devil works with enmity, until he will make the man to lose his restraint. But that sadness according to God doesn't burden the man up, but it tells him: "Do not fear, come again". This is for he knows that God is powerful and that God strengthens him. The power of them who want to achieve the virtues is this, that if they fall, they won't get discouraged, but let them be again careful".

Another: "There is a useful sadness and there is a damaging sadness. It is characteristic to the useful sadness to cry for the won sins; and even to cry for the sins and for the nescience of the neighbor; and this is both for not falling intentionally, and also for reaching to the most consummate kindness. And the worldly ones get sad because of not being glorified and they get melted by desiring the things belonging to others. When they are poor, they will suffer; when they get rich, they will go insane".

[314] "That's why the devil is called as enemy and avenger. This is because, by being enemy of the virtue, after the falling off virtue, he will show himself as avenger". In the Edition from the year 1970: "Before somebody falls, the devils tempt him to sin, they push him and they persuade him, telling him that God loves the people and He will forgive him. By shooting at

14) Do not believe him who says to you after you have fallen in small mistakes: "It would be good if you did not do this. But it is nothing". But often, small gifts tame the great anger of the judge.

15) He who truly repents, he will reckon the whole day which he does not cry on, as a lost day, even if he has sone many good things in it.

16) No one among those who cry will expect the entrustment (of their forgiveness) at the time of their exit (death). This is because what is unshown that will be uncertain. That's why somebody even said: "Let me breathe, through entrustment, so I won't leave from here non-entrusted" (Ps. 38: 18[315]).

17) Where the Lord's Ghost is, the tie has been undone. And where the unparalleled humbleness is, it has been undone, as well, the tie[316]. But they who leave without having these two, let them not deceive on themselves. For they are tied.

18) They who live in the world and only they are stranger from these entrustments; and especially about the first entrustment (about the presence of the Ghost). But some of them by advancing through mercifulness they will know at the time of their exit, the benefit.

19) He who cries for himself, he won't occupy on himself with the crying, with the falling, or with rebuking another.

20) That dog that is bitten by a wild beast, it will get even angrier on that wild beast, because it will get angrier in an unparallelled manner on that wild beast, because of the pain caused by the inflicted wound.

him the arrows of the thoughts of the pleasure tied to the sin, and by weakening him and by leading him to that pleasure, and by persuading him to do their will, and after that wanting to throw him into despair and to sink him in the consummate perdition, they whisper them these things: "Woe to you, what have you done? For God is just and He won't forgive you".

[315] In KJB we have: Ps. 39: 13: "O spare me, that I may recover strength, before I go hence, and be no more."; in ROB we have: Ps. 38: 18: "Let me rest myself, before I go and be no more." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[316] "Through humbleness enter all the good things, among which there is the compassion as well, through which enter also the entrustment of the forgiveness". It could be possible also the vice versa: any sin is accompanied by the carelessness of the pride. But between humbleness and the Holy Ghost there is a tie. By being the humbleness an accentuated conscience about God, it will also be an experience of God's presence. This conscience makes the man reckon on himself as nothing, and reckoning that God is everything, for God is within him with His endless size. And God is not present except through His Ghost.

21) Let's take heed if not, because of our uncleanness, but due to our worsening, out conscience stopped biting us[317].

22) The sign that your falling has been forgiven consists of reckoning yourself always indebted[318].

23) There is nothing alike to God's lenience, or greater than that. That's why he who despairs, he has stabbed on himself[319].

24) The sign of the careful repentance consists of reckoning on ourselves as worthy of all seen and unseen troubles happening to us, and of even more than those[320].

25) Moses, after he saw God in a pyre, he went again back to Egypt (understood as darkness), to produce bricks for the thought pharaoh. Then Moses climbed again where the pyre was. And not only there, but even on the mountain. He who has been partaker to seeing he will never despair of himself. The great Job get poor, but he will get twofold rich again.

26) Dreadful are in the idle ones the fallings after they have been called to monasticism. Those falling will trample the hope and those falling will convince them to reckon ad a blessed thing even only one rising form the pit[321].

[317] Abba Isaiah: "If you see at the time of your prayer as non-condemned by any sin, you will be truly free and you will have truly entered His holy resting, according to His will". Thalassius: "The clean conscience is produced by the toils of the ascesis, as the fasting, the taking of vigil, the patience, and the long-suffering".

[318] John Climacus uses here too, as for so many times, the paradox: You will know that you will have been forgiven, when you reckon yourself always indebted. So, the sign of the forgiveness doesn't consist of a careless quietude, but it consists of a worry that you are always be indebted to do something for deserving your forgiveness. The committed sin becomes thus a pin for continually advancing in the good things. The sin can be thus a force of continual spiritual stabilization.

[319] He who loses his hope in God's mercy, he has souly killed on himself. That is because of him no longer doing anything for getting himself up from the sin's evilness and for advancing into good.

[320] G.P., from Mark the Ascetic: "The work of the repentance is woven out of these three: the cleanness of the thoughts, the ceaseless prayer, and the enduring of the troubles coming upon us. These three things must have not only a manifested work, but also an understanding work, in order they to make them who perseveres in these three works as dispassionate. This is because without these three virtues one cannot do the work of the repentance."

[321] "Speaking about the idle ones, the father instituted a differentiation of them from those who are non-idle and zealous. And this is obvious. This is for rightly so; the idle ones reckon as a difficult the raising again after they have fallen in some mistake. This is because of being they burdened by their idleness, they no longer hope for dispassion, because they no longer want to surrender themselves to more toils. That's why they reckon as a big deal even to be them delivered of their present mistake, because they are gravely ill. But the zealous ones

27) Take heed, take heed! We won't necessarily go back on the way which we have got lost on. But on another way that is shorter.

28) I saw two individuals advancing towards God in the same manner and in the same time. One of them was old and advanced in toils. The other one was a disciple and he was running quicker than the old man and he was the first to reach the sign of the humbleness.

29) Let all of us take heed, but all the more those of us who have fallen. Let's not have a heart sick with that illness of the disbeliever Origen[322]. This defiled teaching is easily accepted by them who love the pleasure, by giving as reason (pretext) the love of God for people[323]. In my cogitation, better said in my repentance, the prayer's fire will be ignited and that will consume the matter of the sin (Ps. 38: 4[324]).

30) Rule and image, example and icon of repentance to be you the forementioned condemned saints and you will never need at all any book in your life, until Christ lighten you, into the resurrection of the careful repentance. Amen.

Through repentance you have climbed the fifth step. Through repentance you have cleaned up your five senses and you escaped the punishment and the unwilling condemnation through the ones chose by yourself.

even if they fall for tens of thousands of times, they won't despair regarding the possibility of the consummation, but they run towards it with even more zeal."

[322] There are many those days, even among theologians, who would want a rehabilitation of Origen. They do not realize that the Origenism leads to the devaluation of the movement, or of the personal effort, of the importance of the time for salvation, and therefore of the person. Everything would automatically lead to happiness. And one can fall off that happiness again. The Origenism is a theosophy or an anthroposophy or pantheism. The Origenism doesn't know the eternal value of each person and the possibility of persons' eternal resting into the infinity of the personal love of God. Although Climacus, by praising the harshness of the deeds of body's mortification, he seems to manifest contempt for the life into body, he did not think as Origen did, because Origen reckoned the life into body and the movement in the life within body a falling off the preexistent pleroma of the spirits, but he attributes a great value to that, by the fact that the deeds of the life into body - even if the body has no value in itself – will gain the salvation.

[323] "That one admitted the sinners to be punished for a while, in order they to be cleaned up of the defilement of their sin in the fire of the torments. After that, he reestablished those in the Kingdom of Heavens together with the righteous, and so he wrongly pretexted the love for people of God".

[324] In KJB we have: Ps. 39: 3: "My heart was hot within me, while I was musing the fire burned: then spake I with my tongue,"; in ROB we have: Ps. 38: 4: "My heart got hot within me and in my thought will be ignited a fire." (E. l. t.'s n.)

The Word VI

About Remembering the Death

1) Any word is preceded by a thought. To the crying and to the weeping it precedes the remembrance of the death and of the mistakes. That's why these ones are placed together in this word of ours.

2) Remembering the death is a daily death. Remembering the death is a sigh of each moment.

3) Fearing death is a characteristic of the nature that entered our nature by disobedience. And trembling because of death is the sign of the unrepented sins.

4) Christ feared the death, but He did not tremble, in order to limpidly show the two characteristics of the death.

5) Like the bread is the most useful among all foods, likewise remembering the death is the most useful of all works (of cleaning of passions).

6) To them who are in the middle (of the community), Remembering the death causes them toils, fulfilling of tasks, and dishonor. To them who are outside the noises, it causes them the rejections of the worries, the ceaseless prayer, and the guarding of the mind. Remembering the death is to those both mother and daughter[325].

[325] "Thinking at death, he says, it will make those who are under obedience to love the toils more, and it will help them to feel pleasure when dishonored; only those who live in appeasement are made by the remembrance of the death to be careless and to always occupy on themselves with the prayer".

Another: "To them from the middle of the world, who live in carelessness and not according to God, the thought of death causes them pains and vain toils, useless occupations and words and stupid much-speaking, the sweetness of the dishonoring and the sweetening by dishonoring; and to those who are outside noises, it causes them the rejection of the worries, the prayer, and the guarding of the mind, for working those means the keeping of Christ's commandments and the turning back to Christ". To them who live within world without changing their life, the thought of death gives them the feeling that their toils and dialogues are vain, that the dishonoring they are submitted to isn't a true dishonoring. A contrary, to those who change their life, the toils will sweet, and the dishonor will be no dishonor to them. Climacus used very often the paradox, that results out of the different perspective which one looks at life from: either being satisfied with the worldly and passing things or searching for the eternal and spiritual things. There is so, a dishonored honoring to him who brings it and to him who receives it, when such an honoring is the product of flattering him who rejoices that because of his vain-glory; and there is a honoring dishonoring when, for instance, it is brought by him who lack any cunningness to him to is innocent up to naiveness. Likewise, there is a body's pleasure that is a pleasure of the soul.

7) As the tin differs from silver, even though at the first glance they resemble, likewise to them who have the gift of discernment, the natural fear of death differs obviously form that fear against nature.

8) The true sign of them who remember the death into the feeling of their heart, it is the willing dispassion from the whole creation and the total leaving of their will. He who waits for death on each day he is an experienced man. He who want his death on each moment he is a saint.

9) Not all desires for death are good. This is because there are some people who by ceaselessly mistaking because of the force of their habit, they desire their death out of humbleness. And there are, again, some people who do not want to repent on themselves and they ask for their death out of despair. And there are others who do not fear their death, because they reckon on themselves as dispassionate, but out of their pride. Finally, there are some people who ask for their living from here through the work of the Holy Ghost.

10) Some of the right-believers ask with bewilderment: what for, if the remembrance of the death is so beneficial to us, our Lord has hidden its knowledge from before? They do not know that God works to us, by that, our salvation in a wonderful manner. This is for no man, if he knew from before his death, he wouldn't immediately come to baptism, or to the monastic life, but he would spend all his days in lawlessness and he would rush towards baptism and towards repentance only at the time of his exit. But because of achieving the quality of the in out of the long habituation to the sin, he would remain totally uncorrected[326].

11) When crying, do not ever tolerate that dog that sneaks into you the thought that God loves the people. This is because its purpose is that of banishing from you the crying and the fearless fear[327]. This thought is good for you only when you see yourself being dragged into deep despair[328].

[326] "ποιωθεις τη χαχία" (what are you doing) – receiving the quality of the sin. The whole being of the man receives by his way of living a certain quality, a certain scent, good or bad. The sin of the good does not stay only in a corner of our being, but like a drop of oil transfers to the water something of its quality, likewise the sin or the good, they modify our being in a sense or in another. And the clean or improved quality of our nature it has a dynamic character. It urges the man to the good or to the bad and it facilitates those. The effort to bring back to the good quality the worsened nature it must fight the nature's impulse towards doing the bad.

12) he who wants to always preserve within himself the remembrance of the death and of the judgment from God, but he has surrendered on himself to the worldly worries and scattering, it is like him who swims while wanting to clap his palms[329].

13) Consciously remembering the death removes the food. And the food removed with humbleness, it removes the passions.

14) The heart's lack of pain will make the mind callous[330]. And the multitude of the food will dry out the springs[331]. The thirst and the vigil will bring the crushing of the heart. And out of the crushed heart will gush out the waters (the tears)[332].

15) the said things are harsh to them who are greedy for food and hard to believe them who are idle. But the doer man will try those things up by his zeal. And he who has known those things by experiencing them, he will smile when thinking at those things. But he who is still trying to know those things, he is sadder[333].

16) Like the fathers say that the consummate love cannot fall, likewise I say that the consummate feeling of the death is fearless.

[327] The fear for the body, fearless for that soul that believes in God. Fear and joyful waiting for the goods from after the death.

[328] Do not lean on the thought that God loves the people, so that by that thought you to weaken your repentance. That thought will help you only when you are in danger to despair.

[329] So, in the Edition form the year 1970 (χροτειν). In G.P.: "To hold his hands together (χρατειν).

[330] That heart that is not pained because of its sins it will make the mind callous, namely it will take away from the man the sensitiveness of his understanding. The man's self-knowledge is, therefore, a matter of sensitiveness. An insensitive man cannot truly know on himself. The scholium from the G.P., by accentuating the intimate connection between mind and heart, it presents the consequences the sin has to the mind and to the heart, alternatively, as being the same: "Forgiving the godlike commandments and the free will's deviation and the painless heart; or inversely: the callous mind and the painless heart".

[331] The multitude of the sins dirs. Up the springs of the tears, namely the feeling of the heart and of the mind. The much drinking taken from exterior it will dry out the internal springs of the tears. He who drinks much, he won't be able to cry anymore.

[332] Namely he won't fear the lessening of the foods, or the thirst, of the heart's pain etc.

[333] "The things which are difficult to others, are actually causing joy and gladness to them who willingly accustom on themselves to those difficult things. By gaining, out of experience, a certain easiness towards those difficult things, the experienced ones reach a certain progress in consummation. But they who still are non-consummate, they occupy on themselves with those difficult things tiredly, if any".

17) Meny are the works of the doer mind. I mention among these ones: the thought at God, the remembrance of God, the remembering of the Kingdom of Heavens, the remembering of the martyrs' zeal, the remembrance of God Who is present, according to Him Who said: "I saw the Lord before me" (Ps. 15: 8[334]), remembering the holy understanding powers, the remembering of the death and of the answer and of the condemnation and of the punishment. We start with the big ones and we will finish with the ones which must not be forgotten.

18) An Egyptian monk told me once that "after the sticking of the remembrance of the death, wanting once, driven by need, to conform his body for a little, I was impeded to do that by this remembrance as by a judge; and it was wonderful that despite I wanted to get rid of it I was unable to do that"[335].

19) Another monk, who was inhabiting here in the so-called Thola, he often went out of himself due to this thought (of the death). And when he was found by the brothers he seemed to be passed out, or engulfed by epilepsy, they carried him as almost dead.

20) I am not going to keep my silence in order to make known to you also the story about Hesychius from Horeb[336]. He was always living in a total idleness, not taking any care for his soul. But he suddenly got bodily ill to the brink of his life, so that it seems to him that he will die in an hour, but when he came again into his senses, he asked all of us to leave him immediately. Then, by building a wall in the door of his monastic cell, he remained locked up inside for 12 more years without even coming out or to have a talk with anyone. He did not eat anything else but bread and water. He was only sitting in there, with his mind targeting (in ecstasy) at what he saw in that exit (ecstasy). He was so gathered together with his mind within himself, so that he never changed this way of living of

[335] The mentioned Egyptian had so well imprinted the remembrance of the death that though he was forced by his hunger during several days, he was unable to banish away from him the remembrance of the death, despite he wanted to do that, and he rather banished aways his hunger.

[336] Living on Horeb, a place inhabited by hermits at the foot of the Mount Sinai; Thola, a locality on Horeb.

his, by always being outside himself and shedding fiery tears, in silence[337].

But when he was about to die, we teared down that wall and we entered his monastic cell. And he begged him a lot to tell us about his experience, but we heard from him only this: "Forgive me! No one while having the remembrance of the death will be able to ever commit sin". And we wondered by seeing him who was yore so careless, how he was transformed so quickly with a happy changing and transformation. And by burying him piously, in that near cemetery of the castrum, a few days later we searched for his remnants, but we did not find those. The Lord assured, on this way too, about that one's full of care and worthy to be praised repentance, on all of them who want to correct themselves after a long idleness.

21) As some people reckon the deep and limitless (the abyss), for they call that as bottomless place, likewise the thought at death is endless both in its cleanness and in its work. And what I have said is reinforced by the mentioned pious. Some like these ones, by ceaselessly adding the fear to fear, they won't rest himself until even the power of their bones will have been melted down[338].

[337] It was, on one hand, "with his mind gathered within himself" (σύννούς – pensive), and on the other hand he was "out of his mind". Only him who is gathered within himself can see beyond himself (and that means beyond the world), namely he will be in ecstasy. The wonder of the realities form beyond mind can be seen only through the mind gathered into itself, for to that mind those realities become transparent, and for their infinity resembles to the mind's indefinite and it is in connection with that mind's indefinite.

[338] "As, he says, the deep of the sea is immeasurable and non-comprisable, likewise the end of the cleanness cannot be reached, namely it has no end within those who have the remembrance of the death within their heart. This is for it is impossible to the humble man, who has the ceaseless remembrance of the death, to say in a Pharisaical manner, that he has reached the end of the cleanness, namely that "I have reached consummate in cleanness". He who said that he wouldn't be humble. So, something strange would happen: him who dared to say that wouldn't be touched by dispassion either with the tips of the fingers. This is because the vain-glory is most awful passion. But the dispassion touched the humble one up to satiation, but due to his humbleness he will reckon that that lacks to him. So, in both of them, manly in both the humble one and in the one who is mastered by the vain-glory, the cleanness in non-comprisable". He who is proud he won't catch it because of his pride, he who is humble he will always feel like not having it, and he actually always has where to advance into his humbleness. As unreachable is God's infinity, as unreachable is the limit or the humbleness, and so it is the sentiment of the non-fulness of the cleanness. He reckons the man's endlessness as an endlessness of the spiritual progress, due to the fact that the advancing has as target to comprise God Who is endless. From here follows that these kinds of endlessness belong to the person and not to the thing / object / substance. The cleanness means the possibility of an infinity in the person's progress, the humbleness means that as

22) Let's be convinced that, in addition to all goods, this is also a gift from God[339]. Because, otherwise, how could be explained the fact that, even by coming at tombs, some of us remain without tears and callous, and, on the other hand, we often are pricked into our heart?[340]

23) He who has died to everybody, he has remembered the death[341]. But he who still is connected to them, he won't stop working himself against himself.

24) Do not want to convince anyone about your love for them. But you ask God to Himself show your love to them in an untold manner. And if not, you won't have enough time for both for connections (relationships) and pricking[342].

well, the kindness as well, the love as well, the getting along as well, and that silence that deepens it means the same thing as well. If there had not been the person, there wouldn't have existed a true infinity, neither the possibility one to advance in that infinity. Better said, if there hadn't been the infinite Person of God Whom the human person infinitely tends towards, there wouldn't have been a true infinite. On the other hand, the perspective of the eternally new infinity of the leanness, of the love, it will be open to somebody after he got bored and tired of the monotony that can be offered by one's exclusive attachment to the world, an attachment that seemingly has its own infinity as well, but it is actually about an infinity in the monotony of the repetition and therefore is actually an apparent infinity, an infinity that will finally become a fainted infinity, together with the thirst for it, a thirst that will had enough of continuously grabbing the same kinds of things offering nothing new, offering nothing to satisfy the spirit's thirst for true infinity. Nothing to satisfy the thirst for the true that consists of the true infinity. The world's apparent infinity will crack down at one given time, to the spirit satiated of it, and through that crack will gush out, from its hiding place, the true infinity that belongs to the order of the Ghost. The aspiration for advancing in that infinity will be helped not only by the longing for it, but also by the continuous fear of remaining chained up in the monotony of this world.

[339] Namely also the remembrance of the death together with the feeling of the heart and therefore with tears too, it is a gift from God. And it is a gift from God also the fact of being open to us the perspective of the infinity through the thought of death, a though opening to our spirit the eternal and infinite horizon, according to the spirit.

[340] We are pricked into our heart and we cry, because it has been breached in front of us the wall that was locking us in the apparent and monotonous infinity of the passionate attachment to the world.

[341] They who have discovered the lack of attraction and the false fulness of all the things form the world they have discovered the infinity waiting for them after they will be separated from the worldly thing by death.

[342] "Proving by words the love for everybody is a difficult thing and it must be avoided. Proving the love by deeds is easier especially to him who strives to commit the virtue. And you listen to me know: somebody came to me to curse me and even to beat me. If I teel him that even if I am able to defend myself, but I won't do that, but, on the opposite, I will fall on my knees, I will be him, I will kiss him, I will give him as gift the things I will be able to, it will be obvious to everybody that I will be doing that out of my love. And I will have done that by deeds. Because, how could one do that by words? This is because by praying I to everybody, I am telling them that I love them, I will appear like a flatterer and like one who

25) Do not delude on yourself, you the mindless worker, that you will be able to replace the (lost) time for another time. This is because the day won't be enough for you to fulfill your days' debt towards the Master[343].

26) It is impossible, as somebody says, it is impossible to cross throughout the present day with good faithfulness, if one doesn't reckon this day as the last day of his entire life[344]. It is truly amazing what the Hellenes uttered this thing like. This is for they too reckoned that is characteristic to philosophy to thing at death[345].

This was the sixth step of the ladder. He who has climbed on it he won't ever commit sins, if it is true that was said: "Remember your last moments and you won't commit sins ever" (Wisdom of Sirach[346] 7: 38).

The Word VII

About the of-Joy-Maker-Crying

1) Crying for God is a soul's sadness, it is a feeling of the pained heart that always madly searches for Him Who the heart thirsts for; and because of not reaching Him, the heart follows Him tiredly and the heart weeps painfully while running after Him.

searches for being pleasant to people, as one who occupies himself with a pretended virtue, and like one who hunts the vain-glory by doing so. This is for the sign of the love for him is the ceaseless prayer. Thus, we are going to fulfill both virtues. This is because if you strive yourself to fulfill the love for people only by words, not even the whole time of your life will ne enough for both connections and humiliation".

[343] The supreme beneficial use of the time it will be conditioned by the understanding of each day as staying at the door of the life from beyond, the door of the eschatological. "Carpe diem" (= use the day intensely), but not in the sense given to is by Horatio as the last day that can bring us a passing pleasure, but as being the last one that can provide us with the eternal life. So, the Christian uses each moment more intensely.

[344] The time if a gift from God, but we have also the duty to fill our time up with deeds we give to our Lord, with our zeal for consummating on ourselves. We must not lose any moment. Even if we use the entire our time it won't be enough to fulfill the whole our duty given us together with our time. This is a strong affirmation of the time's value, unlike at Origen. The continuous thinking at death doesn't mean disregarding the time but, on the contrary, it means using the time well and intensely.

[346] This book is not present in KJB.

2) Or: the crying is a golden pin of that soul that has escaped any pinning down and any attachment, a golden pin stuck by the pious sadness in the work of trying the heart[347].

3) The pricking of the heart is a ceaseless torment of the conscience that causes the refreshing of the heart's fire through the confession made within mind.

4) The confession (within mind) is the forgetting about the nature, when because of that somebody has forgotten to eat his bread[348].

5) The repentance is the non-saddened deprivation of all bodily comfort[349].

6) Them who are still advancing in this happy crying, the restraint and the silence of their lips have become a trait. And them who have accomplished the advancing, is has become such a trait the lack of anger and the non-remembering of the evil. Finally, to the consummate one, it has become a trait of theirs the humble cogitation, the thirst for dishonor, the willing hunger, the thirst for troubles, the non-condemning those who commit sins, the together-suffering that is above-power[350]. The

[347] The crying is the soul's pin keeping the soul no longer sown to anything from the world, btu it is stuck in the heart's sight, and it keeps the soul itself in this work and sowing the soul up somehow to the eternal life. As a pin, it causes pain to the heart, it makes the heat sensitive, it makes the heart to open its folds and its sins from within, to the conscience that researches the heart, and it make the heart to suffer for its sins unveiled to the conscience by doing that.

[348] The crying and the pricking of the heart is a confession of the sins made by mind to God, an unseen, ceaseless, and painful dialogue, which the soul admits its sins in, ceaselessly, in front of God, and it asks forgiveness for those sins. The soul is so focused in this painful confession that will forget to eat, and so it overcomes the needs of the nature.

[349] The sadness of the soul is so deep that he who experiences it will no longer feel the sadness for the lack of comforts or of the bodily pleasures.

[350] The Edition from the year 1970: "He calls compassion the burning for those who commit sins, according to the word: "Who will be offended and I won't burn" (II Cor. 11: 29). It means that somebody makes as his own the difficulties and the miseries affecting others; or it means not to despise in your thought those who suffer, by rising yourself against them".

G.P.: "Many, being deceived by this word, they will show a due compassion to those who commit sins by believing what is inappropriate. Different is the together-suffering above power we are speaking here about. This is because we call as together-suffering the crying occurring within soul and shown for the beloved one, sometimes even without this one being worthy of that crying. This is for somebody compassionately takes care of his beloved one, so that he won't neither commit injustice nor to be injustice done to him. And "above-power" means somebody putting his soul for the salvation of his friend, but not for his own perdition. This is because him who has committed sin wont' be able to get rid of his sin except through a repentance matching his mistake.". So, it won't be a useful compassion that one that escapes the sinner from the hardships of the repentance. "Above-power" means that the spiritualized one lives here too in the ambience of an infinity; he cannot reach the border of the together-first ones will be received; the second ones will be worthy of praise; and they who hunger for troubles and who thirst for dishonor they will be blessed; this is for they will be satiated with an insatiable food[351].

7) When you reach the crying keep that with the whole your strength. This is because, before the crying soaks into you[352], the crying will be easily stolen from you. And it is melted down as the wax, by troubles, by bodily worries, by pleasures, and especially by the much-speaking and by frivolous jokes[353].

8) Despite saying the followings is daring, the spring of the tears form after baptism is greater that the baptism[354]. Because the baptism cleans us up of our previous sins. While this one cleans us up of our sins from after. And by receiving the Baptism as all children do, we have defiled ourselves after baptism; through this one, though, we have cleaned up the baptism as well[355].

9) Our sighs and sadness shout out towards our Lord. The tears caused by fear mediate. And the tears of the all-holy love show us that our prayer has been accepted.

10) While nothing accompanies the humble cogitation as the crying does[356], nothing resist the humble cogitation as the laughter does[357].

suffering with the another, but he is elevated in that rather above his limited powers, by the power of God.

[351] That is a food that satisfies more than any other food, but that doesn't bore them, though they will be ceaselessly imparted with that food. The always desire that food and they always want to have more of that food.

[352] This means: before the crying becomes a quality of your nature, before your entire being has gained the quality of the crying that is not but the intense longing for the life into God.

[353] Scholium belonging to Theodore of Edessa: "Banish away far from you the much-speaking ghost. This is because in that ghost are hidden all the evil passions. Out of that ghost comes the lie, out of him the daring; form one side is the frivolous joke, from another is the laughter, the calumny, the gossiping, the evilness, the stupid word and, shortly speaking, what it was told: "Out of much-speaking the sin won't miss" (Parables 10: 19). And the silent man is the chair of the feeling and the Lord said that we are going to be taken accountable for any vain word (Mt. 12: 36).

[354] "He said that the spring of the tears is greater, instead of saying that is better in comparison to Baptism, for it is worked by us as well. But he did not oppose that to the Baptism. It is better towards us, for it is also cleaning us and it shuns us from the previous sins. Bu in report with the all-holy Baptism it won't be even equal, letting aside greater".

[355] "We are born for three times during out life. From among these births, the first birth is out of womb, while the other two births elevate us from earth to heavens: one is through the holy Baptism, which we also call as rebirth, and the third one is by repentance".

[356] "The humble cogitation is the ceaseless prayer with tears and with pain. This is for, this one by always calling God for help, it won't let the man to insanely trust on himself and in his

11) If you have reached the happy glad sadness[358] of the pious pricking, you will keep that; and you won't rest yourself of the work from it until you will be raised from the things from here and until you will be shown, clean, to Christ.

12) Do not stop always imagining withing yourself and researching the deep (abyss) of the eternal fire and the merciless servants, the merciless and unforgiving judge, the limitless precipice of that heat from underground and the narrow slopes of the fearsome underground places and abysses, and the images of all of these[359]. This is because of the looseness being within our soul to be restrained through trembling and this one to be united with the incorruptible cleanness, by receiving the manifestation of the ever-shinier fire of the crying[360].

13) You persevere, full of trembling, in the ask of your prayer, while standing in front of the Judge as a guilty man, in order you to quench with your external countenance and with your internal state, the anger of the Right Judge. This is for He cannot overlook the deprived soul that stays full of pain in front wisdom, neither will let the man get haughty to others. This is because these ones are awful passions of the pride".

[357] "Of Great Basil: "Bursting someone with intemperate laughter, it will be the sign that he is not yet squeeze the swollen drowsiness of his chest with a harsh thinking. It is not indecent somebody to show the spreading of the light of his soul in a smile, according to the word: "That heart that gets gladdened it will flourish up the face" (Prov. 15: 13). But guffawing with your voice and boiling up with your body is not characteristic him who masters his soul, neither him who restrains on himself. This word is reinforced by the all-wise Solomon who said: "The madman raises his voice, in his laughter, but the wiseman barely smiles tranquilly." (Eccl. 21: 23).

[358] The Edition form the year 1970: "He united well the opposite words: This is for in that sadness for God it is hidden the eternal joy of the dispassion".

[359] All of these, they hide within themselves some spiritual meanings, or also spiritual meanings. These underground slopes and abysses maybe are some chaotic slopes and precipices of some almost sub-creational depths, or of some states which the creation is reduced in, in gradual steps, to a diminishing of their existence, almost reaching the character of some shadows of the existence. These are shadow steps which torment, just because of this extreme addiction to a creation deprived of the spring of its existence that is God. This is also a permanentizing of a loosen souly state, one missing the intensity of the living into the fulness of the life.

[360] The crying, either by being of the repentance or by being of the love for God, it is a hot crying, it is a fiery crying, that, being accompanied by the humble cogitation, it partially proves, paradoxically, an intensity of the existence, while on the other hand it has the clear light of the greatness of God comprised within him who cries. This light shines evermore and it shows its brightness on the man's face. This light makes the crying to be accompanied by joy.

of Him and He will give as gifts toils to him who is tireless[361]. Him who has gained the soul's tear every place will seem appropriate for praying.

14) Like the hidden treasure is more difficult to be robbed than that treasure shown in the marketplace, so we must understand the things I said before.

15) Do not be like them who bury the dead, who weep those and then get drunk for them, but you be like them who are chained in iron and constantly whipped by executioners.

16) He who here cries and immediately after he gets delighted and laughs, he is like him who throws bread at the dog of the love for pleasure[362]; he pretends chasing that dog away but he actually urges that dog to stay near to him.

17) Gather up your mind, do not love to be seen; be gone out towards your heart. This is for the devils fear the gathering up of the mind, as the thieves fear the dogs[363].

18) We are not summoned here, of, my friends, to a wedding[364]. So, He Who has called us here He did that, doubtlessly, in order us to cry for our sins.

[361] The soul, in Greek, is of feminine gender (ψυχή). That soul that repents on himself, that soul ceaselessly asks the Judge for forgiveness, as the widow from the Gospel did (Lk. 18: 3). That soul won't get tired by ceaselessly asking for forgiveness Him Who Gets not tired (Who gets not bored) of hearing the praying soul. God enjoys this dialogue of intense feeling of the soul with Him as lasting forever. The inward state of the soul that repents himself is "the state of prayer, the taking heed with awe, with pricking, and with pain, accompanied by the confession of the mistakes, done with untold sighs". Another: "But the bonded soul cannot run, neither the mind enslaved to the passions can see the place of the spiritual prayer. This is because of being attracted and carries by passionate meanings, so that won't be able to stay still". That's why that mind cannot deepen itself into the godlike infinity. Another belonging to Mark: "The prayer is the rejection of the thoughts (meanings)".

[362] "The loving-of-pleasures-heart is dungeon and chain at the time of the exit (of the death). And that heart that loves the pain has unchained itself from the worldly things, because of these ones no longer providing it with pleasure. And it has been open to it the horizon of the spiritual realities which it has been painfully aspiring to. Another: "Out of the love for pleasure it comes the carelessness, out of carelessness it comes the forgetfulness". Another: "Look and write this in your heart: the love for pleasure and the love for resting are cases of the forsaking (by God)".

[363] Be bent (or be in ecstasy) towards your heart, while forgetting about all things and by looking only at your heart, to see if it is defiled, or it is clean, or if you still have in your heart traces of sins which you must ask for forgiveness for, or if you are able to see God through the transparent cleanness of your heart. The devils fear the mind gathered into heart, for through the heart we then can see God and we live the connection with God, which our heart is so attached to than it won't be possible to be any longer stolen by them.

[364] It is about that wedding, or about that feats of age to come (Mt. 22).

19) Some of us, when shedding tears, they force themselves, at that happy time, in an inappropriate manner, to cogitate at nothing. They do not reckon that the meaningless tear is characteristic to the speechless nature and not to the speaking nature[365].

20) Let your laying on your bad be image of your laying into your tomb and so you will sleep less. Let your delectation at the table remember you about the fact that you will be food to the painful delectation of the worms and you will enjoy less eating. Not even when you impart yourself with the drinking of the water do not forget about that thirst from that (eternal) fire and you unmistakingly will force your nature (to temperance). And when we endure the honored dishonor and the rebuke and the reproaches of our protos, let's think at the fearsome decision of the Judge and we will stab our reckless sadness and bitterness that we have gathered within us, with the gentleness and with the patience, as with a two-edged knife[366].

21) In time the sea gets shallow, says Job (Job 14: 11) and in time and through patience are born and are perfected the things we have said.

23)[367] Let the remembering the eternal fire go to bad with you on each evening and wake up with you on each morning and you won't be mastered by idleness during your singing.

[365] "Some, he says, while shedding tears during prayer, either thinking at their sins, or by remembering their death, or something else, they inappropriately or stupidly force on themselves to banish aways that thought that they started crying from. By hurrying themselves up, they reckon to gain that crying that is without sadness, because of their vain-glory and without understanding that is characteristic to the irrational nature not to know what is crying for, while to the rational nature is characteristic to know the cause for crying. That's why, for they rarely work, they are rebuked and reproached by the father". By affirming the need for accompanying the crying with the thinking at something, Climacus doesn't contradict the affirmation made in other places that the crying must be accompanied by the without-thoughts prayer (Note to The Word VII, head no. 13). He who prays and cries, he must think at his sins and to ask for forgiveness. The man by having rationality, he cannot make anything without thinking. But the thought occasions the feeling, and vice-versa, the feeling gives the thought power of penetration and for intense living of what the man is thinking at. The man talks to God also through crying, for the man tells how much his sin hurts him by being him deprived of God's love.

[366] The mind (νους) is in the Greek language of masculine gender. So that it can be father of the tears. The mind isn't an organ of cold knowledge, but of knowing our relation as subject with God as supreme Subject Whom everything comes from through love, and with the other subjects, a knowledge that is accompanied by the joy of being us in clean relation with them, or it is accompanied by shame and sadness when we are unclean.

24) Let even your coat urging you to cry. This is for all of them who weep for their dead they dress themselves us in black. So, if you cannot cry, let yourself cry for this. And if you cry, you will rather weep because of the fact that form the level of the mind you have descended on the tiring level by your mistakes[368].

25) Our good and just Judge will surely take in account, as in all other aspects, also regarding the tears, the power of our nature. This is for I saw small drops flowing down as blood, shed painfully; and I saw others flowing painlessly. I judge them who live in ascesis more according to their pain and not according to their tear. And I think God does the same.

26) The speaking about God (the theology) does not match them who cry. This is because it will scatter away their crying. The speaker about God resembles to him who sits on a chair as a teacher. And he who cries, to him who sit in garbage dressed up in a sackcloth. This is, I reckon, what David said when crying and answering them who asked him, despite he was a wiseman and a teacher: "How could we sing a song to the Lord in a foreign land", namely in the land of the addiction? (Ps. 136: 4[369]).

27) both in creation and in pricking there is something that moves by itself and there is something that is moved by something else[370]. When even without our zeal, or without us undertaking something, our soul sheds tears and it gets moist and it gets tamed, let's run. This is for the lor has come uncalled bringing us the sponge of the of-God-loving-sadness[371]

[368] Let you be urged to cry even by your black coat, which is put on also by them who mourn for their dead. You cry, because of descending from the tireless work of your mind to the toil of serving the ever-increasing needs of your body because of your sins, which accentuated within you your bodily needs, and which brought your body out of the life of the ghost which was satiating your body, and which was letting to your body only a few bodily needs.

[369] In KJB we have: Ps. 137: 4: "How shall we sing the Lord's song in a strange land?"; in ROB we have: Ps. 136: 4: "How could we sing the song of our Lord in a foreign land?" (E. l. t.'s n.)

[370] In the Edition from the year 1970: "In creation, as self-moving is the Providence of God; and moved by something else is the creation itself". Regarding the humiliation (or the pricking of the heart), sometimes this one moves by itself when we do not undertake anything for producing it. In the last case we mode it. When coming by itself, God has come and He works within ourselves without striving to call Him. That's why, we have the duty to run, namely to do something at our turn. But our effort must rather be for keeping that pricking or the tears which have come to us. This is for they are greater than those produced by us.

[371] The pricking makes our soul as a soft and moist sponge which the water of our tears flows out of.

and the water of refreshing the of-God-honoring-tears, towards erasing our mistakes written within our soul as on a paper[372]. You guard this as the apple of your eye, until it will withdraw from you. This is for great is the power of this pricking, greater than that power coming out of our zeal and cogitation[373].

28) He who cries whenever he wants, he won't reach the beauty (the consummation) of the crying, but there will reach him who cries for he is in the things he wants. But neither the last one will be in these things whenever he wants, but only when and how God wants[374].

29) Often that crying after God is getting mixed with that tear without grace of the vain-glory. And we will know this in a proven manner and with good faithfulness when we see ourselves crying with cunningness.

30) The true pricking is the unscattered pain of the soul that doesn't give to himself any comforting, but he waits on each moment for his detachment (death) and it waits - as for a refreshing water - for the comforting from God that comforts the humble monks[375].

[372] The water of the tears coming out of our soul washes up even the filth of the sins from within our soul, like the filthiness of a coat is washed up after getting soaked in water.

[373] He showed that in addition to the pricking produces (moved) by us through our zeal and through our thoughts, there is also that pricking that moves by itself, or that one that is moved by God. That is greater than that produced by our powers.

[374] Only into God one can cry with a clean crying. But into God cannot cry except him who wants that what God wants. From here we can see also that the encounter with God takes place in state of crying, of deep compassion. The crying if a gift from God, a gift of encountering His love. Here is again proven the character of God as Person. God give us the power of crying by making us feel His love for us. Encountering God is an encounter causing us a feeling down to tears.

"The father discerned well between these two rots of crying. The first crying is characteristic to him who cries whenever he wants and the crying caused by those which somebody wants to cry for. This is for often it happens that somebody wants to cry when rebuked by somebody, or when cursed, of when suffering a loss. Such crying isn't a spiritual crying, but it is a natural crying. This is because such tears are characteristic to that heart that is burdened with the trouble of the rebuking, when somebody cannot defend himself against him who upsets and harms him. The same thing takes place when somebody cries for the things he wants, as for instance because of the death of a relative, for the success of his neighbor, or for other things characteristic to life. But he called as good only that crying that is born as God want. And God wants somebody to cry for his mistakes, for remembering his death, for non-achieving God's Kingdom and, simply speaking, for all the thigs characteristic to the soul. Only this is a crying worthy to be praised.".

[375] "Like the rain entering the ground brings to the plants a quality appropriate to plants, sweet to the sweet one and bitter to the bitter ones, likewise the grace is given as a gift to the hearts of the believers which it penetrates unchanged, the works according to their virtues: him who hungers for Christ it becomes food; him who thirsts it becomes all-sweet drink; him who is

31) They who have achieved the crying into the feeling of their heart, they have hated their life itself, as one that is full of tiredness and causing of tears and pains. And from their body they have turned aways as from an enemy[376].

32) When we see within them who appear to be crying for God, anger and pride, let's reckon their tears as opposite (to God) "For what partaking he has, he says, the darkness with the light" (2 Cor. 6: 15).

33) The fruit of the liar pricking will be the self-appreciation; and the fruit of the true pricking will be the comforting. Like the fire consumes the reed, likewise the tear melts down the whole seen and thought defilement.

34) The word on tears, at many fathers, it is darkened and they say that it is difficult to be found within the beginners. This is because they say the tears are born out of many and diverse causes: out of nature, from God, out of a trouble, out of praising, out of vain-glory, out of fornication, out of love, out of remembering the death, and out of many other things.

35) Out of all of these, by being learnt the virtues with the fear of God, let's gain our clean and non-cunning tears of our detachment (death). This is for in those there is no self-appreciation, or stealing (of the humble thought), but there is rather cleaning and advancing into the love for God, washing up of sins, and dispassion.

36) There is no wonder that some of them who cry they started from the good tears and they have ended with the evil tears. But he is truly worthy to be praised him who exchanges those tears which start out of contrary-to-nature impulses, in spiritual tears. This work is clearly known by them who tend to vain-glory.

37) Do not trust your springs (your tears) before achieving the consummate cleaning. This is because one cannot trust the recently pressed wine from the winepresses. Nobody will resist him who says that all things according to God are very useful. But what the benefit coming from those is, we will know that at the moment of our exit (death).

cold it becomes a coat; to him who is tired it becomes resting; to him who prays it becomes the hope of his heart; and to him who cries it becomes comforting".

[376] They hated their life that was always menaced by sins and full of earthly pains, but not their life as such. They are searching for that transfigured life in the future existence, and likewise regarding their body.

38) He who travels accompanied by his ceaseless crying after God, he won't cease feasting on each day. But he who is in a ceaseless feasting with his body he will be surrendered to the eternal crying[377].

39) The inmates have no joy while imprisoned. The true monks have not holiday while on earth[378]. And it might have been that the reason why that crying one said sighing: "Get my soul out of dungeon" (Ps. 141: 7[379]), in order to rejoice himself in Your untold light.

40) Make yourself as an emperor over your heart, by sitting yourself tall into humbleness[380] and commanding to your laughter: "Go, and it will go", and commanding to your crying: "Come, ant it will come" (Mt. 8: 9); and to our servant and tyrant body: "Do this, and it will do"[381].

41) He who has put on the happy and full of grace crying as a wedding garment, he has known the soul's spiritual laughter[382]. I wonder who is him who, by spending the time of his life with so much awe that he did not lose a day, neither an hour, nor a moment, but he has been given all of these, as gifts, to God, he won't realize that one cannot see the same day twice in his life?[383]

[377] "He abusively calls the non-working as feasting, that is also a beginning to the evil deeds. But the monks who commit the work of God will never be in non-working. This is because itself the continuous dialogue with God will be a celebration to them, and not a non-working; it is a restless serving, that it will gladden them in the likeness of the angels".

[378] He does not contradict in this head what he said in that head from before, where he said that they who cry will be in a ceaseless feasting. This celebration, by being in the same time accompanied by the crying, by a deep longing, it is not the full feasting from heavens, when God will wipe away any tear from the eyes of His beloved ones (Apoc. 21: 4).

[379] In KJB we have: Ps. 132: 7: "Bring my soul out of prison, that I may praise thy name: the righteous shall compass me about; for thou shalt deal bountifully with me."; in ROB we have: Ps. 141: 7: "Get my soul out of dungeon, for my souls to paise Your name, Lord. The righteous are wanting for me, until You will reward me." (E. l. t.'s w.)

[380] "The mind is and it is naturally called as emperor of the parts and of the animalic lusts of the soul. And tall, as one that sits towards the lower passions, into the lowered and humble thought. The mind remains in itself and it rests in the care for itself". The humbleness is the higher place from our being, for in it shines the most luminous conscience. Only from on this height of the humbleness the mind can see God. That's why the fathers spoke about the "height of the humble thought".

[381] Our body can be both tyrant and servant to us. That depends on us.

[382] Happy is him who cries so ceaselessly out of his love for God, so that his crying has become to him a garment of bride of the heavenly Bridegroom, by showing him the brightness of his joy through his eyes and on the whole his face.

[383] He who does not lose any day, but he gives each one of his days to a deed and to a thought about God, he won't have any day alike another for he lives in the infinity of the love for God

42) Blessed ins that monk who can look with the eyes of his soul at the understanding Powers (angels)[384]. But unfallen remains him who ceaselessly rains upon his cheeks with his living waters[385], by remembering his death and his mistakes. But I do not get tired by thinking that one reaches the first state through the second state[386].

43) I have often seen poor and daring beggars, quickly persuading through some crafted words even the hearts of the emperors, towards mercifulness. And I have seen poor and lacking of virtues people, shouting out not crafted words, but non-crafted, without getting ashamed and perseveringly, towards the heavenly Emperor, out of their heart's despaired deep, and forcing through the force they have been submitting The One Who is unforced by nature, towards mercifulness[387].

44) He who gets haughty with his tears and who condemns within himself those who have not tears, he is like him who after have asked from his emperor the weapon against his enemies and he will kill himself with that weapon.

45) My friends, God doesn't need and doesn't want the man to cry because of the pain in his heart; but God rather wants the man to get glad for the love for God, into the laughter of his soul.

46) Kill the sin and the painful tear of your sensitive eyes will be useless. This is because there is no need for a scalpel where there is no wound. There was not the tear within Adam before he transgressed the commandment, as there won't be and of his love for his fellow humans, and that makes him always experiencing this love and its manifestations. It is that "eternal commencement" which poet Charles Péguy spoke about. The eternity is to him a new novelty and therefore a continuous youth. Only the void is monotonous and burdening. Only the existence of the substance, or in front of the substance that would not depend on a person and that would not be filled up with meaning through a person, only that existence would be monotonous. Only the days of the lazy, one who has fallen from the intensity of living and a person down to a plan somewhat of the nature, are monotonous.

[384] At the angelic powers.

[385] The tears are living waters, for they are not produced by nature but by the souly feeling of the person. They give a new life to the person who sheds them. They are the tears of a person in relation with another person. And in this relation, there is life.

[386] The monk cries, in the first place, for his sins, and then he will reach to see the angelic powers.

[387] "The Kingdom of God is being taken by force: (Lk. 16: 16). He who is unforced by nature he allows Himself to be forced by them who insist, for He like seeing their perseverance, a perseverance that increases their spiritual power and it proves their faith in His mercy and in His mercy which are ready to help them.

either after resurrection, when the sin will have ceased, if there won't be "any pain, neither sadness, nor sight" (Apoc. 21: 4)[388].

47) I have seen to some people a crying, and I have seen to some other people a different crying because they couldn't cry. These ones, though having the crying, they feel themselves as not having it and through their good science they will remain unrobbed (of this crying). These ones are those whom it was said about: "The Lord makes the blind wise" (Ps. 145: 8[389])[390].

48) It often happens that the lighter ones are getting proud by their tears itself. That's why the crying is not given to some people in order they to cry because of their lack of crying and because of their unanswered ask, and in order them to condemn on themselves with sights, with sadness, and with the pain of their soul, and with deep upset for their helplessness. These usually fill up the place of the tear, and won't let them in sanger, despite they reckon the useless[391].

49) If we take heed, we will find out that often it occurs within us something worthy to laugh at, coming from the evils. Thus, if we have satiated ourselves with food, the devils will cause us the pricking of our heart, and if we have been fasting, they will make us callous, so that, by deceiving us with false tears to persuade us to surrender ourselves to the delectation, namely to the mother of all passions. Let's not obey these ones, but let's do the opposite.

50) I wonder also when I look at the quality of the pricking of the heart. How, by being called as crying and sadness, it has intertwined within itself, as honey with wax, the

[388] The laughter is tied to innocence, as the crying is tied to sin. And both of them are tied to the report between persons. A world without persons would have been a world without laughter and without crying; it would have been a world unimaginably poor and grey. That's why the children laugh so purely: for they do not know the sin.

[389] In KJB we have: Ps. 146: 8: "The Lord openeth the eyes of the blind: the Lord raiseth them that are bowed down: the Lord loveth the righteous:"; in ROB we have: Ps. 145: 8: "The Lord straightens the hunched over, the Lord make the blind wise, the Lord loves the righteous;" (E. l. t.'s n.)

[390] There are some people who are sad because of not being able to cry for their sins. This sadness is a crying at its turn, though they who have it reckon on themselves as not having the crying. And it may be that they have a more painful crying, more ceaseless, because of their sadness for the lack of crying. That's why they remain unrobbed of that crying of their sadness.

[391] "I have known that one too that he who praises on himself with his godlike gifts (charismas) as those would be his own qualities, he will reach to condemn others. But the crying can be out of the love for God, out of the love for vain-glory, out of the heat provided by drinking wine, out of the devilish plotting, out of nescience, and out of trouble".

joy and the gladness? What do we learn from that? We learn that this pricking actually is a gift from our Lord. That's why the pricking is within our soul as an unpleasant pleasure, God comforting in an unknown manner those who are crushed with their heart[392].

But regarding the too obvious crying and regarding the bringing-of-benefit pain, let's hear an all-tragical and useful to the soul story.

A certain Stehpen, who was living here and who embraced the ascetic and quiet life many years ago, and who spent many years in the monastic battle stadium, adorning on himself with the fasting and, especially, with tears, and being him adorned with the flowers of other good habits as well, he had a monastic cell next to the slope of Saint Elijah the-God-seer, on this holy mountain. This always remembered monk, on the purpose of the most proven and painful repentance, he moved himself at the place of the hermits, called Sidi. After he lived there in the most narrowed and strained living for a number of years, because that place was very harsh and almost unreachable by any man, because it was at 70 miles distance from the castrum, that old man climbed again, towards the end of his life, to his monastic cell from that holy mountain peak. This was because he had two disciples form Palestine, very pious, who were guarding the monastic cell of the old man.

So, after living there for several days, he fell ill and died. But one day before he died, his mind was kidnapped and, with his eyes open, he looked at the right side and at the left side of [392] "Other is the beginner joy and other is that joy produced by consummation. The first one is not non-partaker to imagination; the second one has the power of the humble cogitation. Amid them there is that loving-of-God sadness and the painful tear. This is for in the multitude of the true wisdom there is the multitude of the knowledge, and he who adds knowledge, he will add pain. That's why one must call firstly his soul through ascesis through a beginner joy. Then one must be tested and proven by the truth of the Holy Ghost because of the things he has done wrong and because of the scattering he still suffers. "Because into reproaches, he says, for lawlessness you have rebuked the man and you have thinned his soul as a spider net" (Ps. 38: 11-12), because the godlike rebuking by testing him as in an oven, to gain the work of the unimagined joy in fierily remembering God". At the beginning the man starts with an innocent joy towards ascesis. Then, by increasingly knowing his stains and his difficulties in getting on himself cleaned of those stains, in the same time with this knowledge his pains will increase too. Only after he has cleaned himself through pains, he will reach that joy that is not the fruit of his imagination, but it will be the result of his knowledge and of his real cleanness and of seeing God through those. His toils will get thinner not only with the body, but also with the soul and with the understanding, as one who has been living a life of attentive focusing on the thinnest movements of his souly life.

his bed. And as he would have been held accountable, he said so that everyone who were there could heart it: "Yes, that's true, but I have been fasting for so many years"; another; "No, you are lying, I didn't do this one". And again: "Yes, that's true, but I cried, I served". And again: "You are accusing me unjustly". But some of his answers were like: "Yes, that's true, I have no answer to that; but at God is mercy too". It was a fearsome sight and a holding accountable unsee and merciless. And what was even scarier, it was the fact that he was accused of things he never did. Woe! That hermit answered to some of his mistakes: "I have no answer for that"; he who was a monk for forty years and he had the tears.

Woe! Woe! Let's hear the voice of Hezekiel who says: "In what I will find you, in that I will judge you, said God". That monk truly was unable to defend on himself in either of these. Why? Glory to Him Who is the only One Who knows.

And some told us that story in a non-liar manner, that that hermit was feeding a leopard, by hand, in that desert. And so, held accountable, he left his body. What his judgment was like, or what the decision regarding him was like, or what the end of him being held accountable was like? He didn't make that known.

51) Like that widow who lost her man while having a born son, she has after God only that son to comfort her, likewise the soul that has fallen has no other comforting during his exit except the displeasures of the throat (the fasting) and the tear. They won't sing ever. Neither will they jump in joyful songs. Because those are damaging to the crying. And if you try to call the crying through those, the crying will even get farer from you, because the crying is the pain[393] soaked into a fiery soul. The crying was within man forerunner of the blessed dispassion, by making the matter as easier to be mastered, by cleaning it up and by thinning it[394].

52) An experience fighter of this gift (of the crying) told me the followings: "While I tended for many times to lean myself

[393] "Pain that has become quality of the fiery soul". The entire soul has received the quality of the pain. But this pain is a fire too, a fire that doesn't let the soul tranquil.

[394] The improved soul makes the body's matter malleable, cleaned of the toxins of the evilness, and thinned. It will no longer be heavy; it won't be any longer passively moved under the force of the passions. It has a great rile in in this patient enduring of the pain and of the toils of the crying. The crying for sins is especially a forerunner of the dispassion, due to the pain it maintains within man for the committed sins.

towards the vain-glory, or towards anger, or towards satisfying my belly, the thought of the crying resisted inside me, whispering me: "Do not lean towards the vain-glory, or I will leave you!". Likewise, regarding the other passions. And I was answering to the crying: "I won't cease to obey you, until you will show me before Christ".

53) The deep (the abyss) of the crying saw comforting[395]. And the heart's cleanness has received the enlightenment. The enlightenment is the untold work, understood in an unknown manner, and seen in an unseen manner[396]. The comforting is the chilling down of the pained soul, one that, in the same time he cries and he smiles in himself as the little child. The supporting is the renewal of the soul that has fallen into sadness, by transforming, in a wonderful way, the painful tear into painless tear[397].

54) Those tears born out of the remembrance of the death will give birth to the fear. And after that fear that give birth to the lack of fear[398], there will occur the joy. And out of the endless joy reached to the end, it will sprout out the flower of the pious love[399].

55) You will reject, as one who isn't worthy, the joy that has come to you, with the hand of your humbleness, lest by

[395] The urge to cry increasingly harder, or with increasingly much love for God, it will open as well the perspective of the possibility of a progress of the man into the godlike endless. But into this endless of God there is the man's comforting, who has escaped the unsatisfactory monotony of the repeated movements in the same limited and corruptible things, which have an ultimate meaning and a spring of unperishable life.

[396] "The man will know that his heart has come to cleanness, when he sees all people as good and he doesn't' see anyone unclean or defiled. Then he truly is clean in his heart. This is because, otherwise, what the Apostle's word will be fulfilled like, for he said: "Out of the heart's sincerity he reckons all the people as above him" (Phil. 2: 3), if it is not true the word that: "The clean eye won't see the bad things" (Tit. 1: 15).

[397] The mix of crying and of sweetness comes out of the fact that God Himself works this crying. And where is the feeling of the presence of God, there the joy cannot be absent. When you father rebukes you, or when you strive on yourself for your parents because you love them, your pain will be mixed with joy. God leave the soul into the crying's pain, but also Him comforts and supports that soul.

[398] The fear by upholding the repentance and the toils, it will give birth to the lack of fear, for it cleans the sins.

[399] All the spiritual states, or all the states of the limited man, living into the limitlessness of the godhead, they have a paradoxical character. The man endlessly rejoices himself of the unlimited God. But in the same time that joy passes into love, so that the first one will come to an end and it will pass into a superior stage.

receiving that joy too easily to welcome a wolf instead of the shepherd[400].

56) You won't hurry up yourself towards having visions, until the time of having visions has come, for, by following the beauty of the humbleness you to reach it and you to be united forever and ever with the humbleness, in an all-clean wedding[401].

57) When the little child knows his father, he is wholly filled up with joy. But when his father leaves the home for a while, on good purpose, when the father comes home again the little child will be filled up with joy and sadness. With joy, for he sees the desired one, and with sadness, because of missing so much the beauty of the desired one.

58) The mother hides herself from the little child, but the little child searches her painfully, so that his mother seeing that she gets gladdened. Thus, she teaches the little child to attach himself steadfastly to her and it she ignites within the little child the strong love for her. "He who has ears for hearing, let him hear", says the Lord (Lk. 14: 35)[402].

58) The condemned one who received his sentence to death no longer will be interested in having a good countenance. He who cries will no longer be take in mastery by delectation, glory, or by the boiling of his anger.

60) The crying the pain soaked into that soul that repents himself, by adding on each day pains over pains, like that woman who gives birth and endures the pains of birth.

[400] "Looking without discernment will bring many dangers". When the devil transforms himself in an angel of light, he will often deceive them who do not know their measure. That's why, a certain old man said: "I do not want to see Christ here" (the edition from the year 1970 continues: "namely through senses, because the clean ones see Him in an understanding manner (intelligibly) as in a mirror, here too, as the Savios says: "I will show Myself to him, namely to him who loves Me and who keeps My commandments" (Jn. 14: 21).

[401] "Looking without discernment will bring many dangers". When the devil transforms himself in an angel of light, he often deceives them who do not know their own measure. That's why a certain old man said too: "I do not want to see Christ here" (The Edition form the year 1970 continues: "namely through senses, because the clean ones see Him in an understanding manner (intelligibly) as in a mirror, here too, as the Savior said: "I will show Myself to Him, namely to him who loves Me and keeps My commandments? (Jn. 14: 21).

[402] "He understood by saying "mother" the kindness of God, and by saying enlightenment, he understood the sight. And by saying little child he understood him who still is non-consummated for the clean prayer. The painful searching is the prayer done with tiredness by such a little child. The mother's gladness is caused by perseveringly searching for her, by the child, of by his praying ask".

61) Right and pious is the Lord. And on him who appeases himself with judgment, with judgment the Lord will pierce him, and on him who obeys with judgment the Lord will gladden him daily. He who occupied on himself with each of these in a non-liar manner, he will be deprived of crying[403].

62) You will banish that dog that comes to you when you are in the deepest crying and that whispers to you that God is non-merciful and non-lenient. This is because, by taking heed well, you will hear him saying that before sin God was lover of people and merciful and forgiving[404].

63) The occupation gives birth to continuation. Sand this one reached the feeling. And that what is done with feeling, it will be difficult to uproot[405].

64) Even if we occupied ourselves with great occupations, if we had our heart painless, let's reckon those occupations as some passing and liar winds.

65) They who after taking a bath they will get again filthy they must immediately clean their hands in the untired fire of the heart and with the oil of God[406].

66) I saw to some ones a crying of the greatest strength. I saw them in a feeling manner as shedding blood through their mouths out of their pained and wounded heart and I

[403] In the Edition from the year 1970: "God, he says, He is known as right in His judgments, and on them who occupy themselves in a non-liar manner with the ascesis, God rightly makes them worthy of that crying with judgment, a crying pleasant to God and given by God as a gift to him who cries. This is for on him who appeases himself with judgment, God will penetrate him in a clean and undeceiving manner, and on him who obeys with judgment, God will gladden him daily with that crying after God. But on him who still works in a liar manner in these sorts of lives, or virtues, either the appeasement or the obedience, and not with judgment, that one will be deprived of a true and really undeceiving crying. So, the father shows through these that some live in ascesis with a crying without judgment and that crying is not from God, but it is deceiver and devilish". In the G.P. this scholium is a little different.

[404] Namely you will find out that the devil contradicts on himself. Before you committed the sin, he told you that God is merciful and forgiving, in order to urge to you sin; and after you have sinned, he tells you that God is merciless and non-forgiving, in order to drive you to despair.

[405] "The cogitation and the singing call the mind continuously out of slavery and they make the mind to take heed at crying, and ceaselessly calling the mind it will plant within mind increasingly more feeling of the crying and of the prayer. And by being the mind within the feeling and within the habit of the prayer, it will be difficult the mind to be detached from those ones".

[406] The stains from after the baht of the baptism, they must be cleaned in the fire of the heart and with the oil or with the mercy of God, so with both of them.

remembered him who said: "I was hit like the grass and my heart got dry" (Ps. 101: 5[407]).

67) The tears out of fear have the guarding within themselves. The tears of the love, before the consummate love, they could be easily stollen from within some people, if the fire of the ceaseless remembrance of the sins does not ignite, during the work, the heart with strength. And there is no wonder how the humblest one is the surest during the time of his working.

68) There are matters which dry up our springs. And there are others which have within themselves mud and which give birth to wild beasts[408].

69) There is much evilness at our enemies. They make out of the mothers of the virtues the mothers of the sins, and the means that produce the humbleness they transform them in causes of the pride[409].

70) Often our dwelling places themselves urge our mind to pricking. Let yourself be entrusted about that by Jesus and by Elijah and by John, who were partying into loneliness[410].

71) I saw for many times starting tears also in cities and in noisy places, in order they who reckon that they are not impeded at all by noises, to get closer to the world. Because of this being the purpose of the devils.

72) Often, a sole word scattered the crying. But there is no wonder that a sole word brought the crying back again.

73) We won't be blamed, oh, friends, at the exit of our soul, because of the fact of not committing wonders, neither because we haven't theologized, nor because we have not been

[407] In KJB we have: Ps. 102: 4: "My heart is smitten, and withered like grass; so that I forget to eat my bread."; in ROB we have: Ps. 101: 5: "My heart is wounded and it has died like the grass; for I have forgotten to eat my bread."

[408] In the Edition form the year 1970: "Those matters which dry up within us the springs are the wine, while taken without measure. I reckon that he metaphorically called as other matters: the mastery and the honoring without measure. This is because of these ones easily elevating the thought at pride, which the devil has fallen by".

[409] In the Edition from the year 1970: "I reckon that through the matters which produce the humbleness he shows the modest clothing and the occupation with those deeds and words which, though they sprout out the humble cogitation, they become to many as causes of pride".

[410] "Them who say, because they are inexperienced, that not the place but the mode of living is that counting, the father tells them that the place as well gives beauty to the way of living. So, not only the mode, as some say in simplistic manner, but also the place help very much to work the virtue".

seers, but we unmistakingly will be hold accountable by God because of not crying.

This was the seventh step. He who has been found worthy of it, let him helm me too. This is for he has been helped to wash up, through the seventh step, the stains of the present age[411].

The Word VIII

About Not-Getting-Angry and About Gentleness

1) Like the water being added little by little into the fire, it totally changes the heat, likewise the tear of the true crying will quench the whole heat of the anger and of the wrath. That's why I also placed these ones after the tears.

2) The non-getting-angry is the insatiable desire for being dishonored, as within them who love the vain-glory their desire for being praised is limitless.

3) The gentleness is the motionless state of the soul that remains the same in dishonor as in praise.

4) The beginning of the non-getting-angry is the silence of the lips during the disturbance of the heart. The middle is the silence of the thoughts in time of thin disturbance of the souls. And the end if the serenity pricked into the blowing of the unclean winds.

5) The anger is the bursting up of the hidden hatred, of the keeping the evil in mind. The anger is the lust for causing sufferance him who has upset us[412].

[411] The author appointed the seventh step to the step of the crying. This one corresponds to this passing age, which, symbolically, it has seven days, before eternity, the eternity being the eighth and endless day. In this age we commit sins, so that we also owe to cry in this age.

[412] "The anger is a very fierce passion. This is because wrath is called the boiling and movement against him who has done injustice to us. It makes our soul savage on every day. It especially kidnaps our mind in time of prayer, by making the image of him who upset us appearing into our mind. When lasts longer and it becomes hatred, it will cause us during night disturbances, the melting and the yellowing of our body, and the rushing in of furious wild beats". Veniamin Costache: "There is also an anger against the sin. It guards him wo gets angry, without sin, and it raises him who slipped. But the starting of the anger against him who sinned to someone as against somebody who wounded and tortured merciless on him who fell, it won't make without danger him who get angry".

6) The wrath of the gall is the ignition of the heart, suddenly appearing. The bitterness is the without-sweetness movement hidden within soul.

7) The wrath is the easily-changing movement of the behavior and a lack-of-settling of the soul.

8) As at the showing of the light the darkness withdraws, likewise the scent of the humbleness makes all bitterness and wrath perish. Some people, by easily changing themselves because of wrath, they do not take care of supervising and healing it: "The impulse of the wrath, it is his falling" (Job 5: 2).

9) The wrath is a quick movement of the mill which in an instance it crushes and grinds more wheat and fruits of the soul than on another day[413]. That's why, let's take heed.

10) Under the blowing of the strong wind a flame will be quickly ignited, but if that wind continues blowing upon that flame, that flame will burn and destroy the field of the heart.

11) We must not forget, oh, friends, neither the fact that the devils withdraw for a while, in order us by neglecting some big passions by reckoning them as small, so that those passions to become unhealable illnesses. Like a coarse stone colliding with and being grinded by other stones, it will become smooth and round, likewise the coarse and rashly soul by being mingled in a multitude of harsh and rashly people and by living with those, it will happen to that soul one of these two: either that soul will heal his illness through patience or, by withdrawing and living alone, he will know his weakness, because of that coward running away will show him, as in a mirror, his weakness.

12) That man that is mastered by wrath he will be like a willingly possessed (epileptic) who is pushed by a wrong opinion that unwillingly occurred within him so that he will fall. Nothing is so inappropriate to those who repent as the wrath that disturbs. If the tuning of someone from sin to himself needs much humbleness, the wrath is the sign of the self-appreciation[414].

[413] In the Edition from the year 1970: "Namely a hurried movement of the wrath can damage in an instant and it can crumble the soul more than other that is unhurried and light despite this one lasting for the entire day". A movement of anger or of lac of seriousness can destroy within the soul everything that has been built up for a long time. You manifest yourself, for a long time, as a wiseman and temperate in your talk, and in a few moments so unchaining you will waste away everything you have gathered. The "wrath" Climacus is treating here about in this Word it is that what we call impulsiveness. It drives us to reckless acts, which often cause us all sort of damages. But also, the wrath can be good, when it is a zeal of fulfilling the good things without continuously postponing them. The wrath can be also a gift from God, which we must not use inappropriately. All the things we have within world and within ourselves are gifts from God and they will be useful to us when we employ them well and they will be harming us when we use them inappropriately.

13) If the definition of the highest gentleness is that of remaining serene with your heart and full of love for him who upsets us, the definition of the wrath is that of fighting, through words and movements, him who upset you and to get infuriated with him even when you are alone[415].

14) If the Holy Ghost is reckoned and it is the peace of the soul, and if the anger is and it is called a disturbance of the heart, nothing will stop His coming within us as the wrath does it[416].

15) Very numerous and very awful are the offsprings of the wrath. But I knew a niece of the wrath, only one that is useful, but it is an illegitimate one. I saw some people insanely lit up, as throwing up the memory of the evil piled up within them during a long time[417], and thus they were delivered of

[414] While the turning of the man to his true self after being previously into the self-forgetfulness that led him to commit sin, it needs humbleness, the impulsive deed is the sign of the self-appreciation, namely of the true self-knowledge. He who is impulsive, or that man that lets himself dominated by wrath, he is a man who hasn't accustomed himself either to thinking or to that humbleness that comes out of the real self-knowledge. The fathers tightly connect the anger to the wrath, because the immediate spring of the anger is the wrath or the impulsiveness. The impulsiveness is the accentuated sign of the spirit's lack of power to dominate his involuntary impulses. The thinking reduces to its true proportions, unimportant, the evil done to you by somebody else, and, by and large, all the realities of the life from here.

[415] From Saint Maximos the Confessor: "The long-suffering man is very thoughtful, for he endures patiently the things which upset him. But the end if the eternal life, according to the apostle. Even the brother insists in rebuking you, you won't let yourself to be brought out of your loving mood, when the cunning one disturbs you in your cogitation. And you won't be brought out of that, when, while defamed, you will bless, or, when subject of the plots, you will be benevolent. This is the way of the philosophy (of the loving for wisdom) according to God. He who doesn't walk on this path, he won't dwell with God, because of the keeping the evil in mind, that troubles and darkens, it will banish away and it will lose the serenity and the peace of the thoughts, which the Ghost of God rests Himself in". The disturbance ties the soul to something limited and it limits the soul, by not letting the sight capable of unlimitedly contemplating the God's limitlessness.

[416] That's why the Holy Ghost is symbolized like a dove, the image of the gentleness. In the Edition from the year 1970: "By keeping the evil – that troubles and darkens the soul - in mind, they banished away and they lost the serenity and the peace of the thought, which the Ghost of God rests within".

[417] "The upset is accompanied by the keeping of the evil in mind. When the mind imagines the face of the brother with upset, it will be obvious that it has within the keeping in mind of the evil done by that brother. But the ways of those who keep the evil in mind will lead to death.

their passion, so that, by being tormented by the long sadness, they have achieved, either repentance or reconcilement with him whom they were hating before[418].

16) We have to take much heed at this snake. This is because it has our nature as together-working with it, as also that one that tempts the bodies. I saw infuriated people who because of their own bitterness were disgusted of foods, and through this reckless restraint they were adding venom upon venom.

And I saw others using as a blessed cause, or better said unblessed cause, the wrath, and surrendering themselves to the covetousness of their belly and thus falling from pit into precipice. And I saw others full of sapience, combining both of them (the wrath and the restraint) as some skillful doctors, and using as much as possible the comforting of the measure.

17) Sometimes, the measured singing will scatter the wrath in the best manner. Some other times, when the singing is measureless and at inappropriate time, it will be accompanied by the love for pleasure. So, let's use the singing at the right time.

18) Being I outside for some need, I heard some brothers who were appeasing themselves by rebuking on themselves, within their monastic cell, because of their bitterness and wrath, as some partridges, and jumping towards him who upset them as that one would have been present there. I advised those ones, in good faith, not to remain in loneliness lest they will become devils out of people.

Also, I saw some unrestrained and stinking because of lusting the pleasures, appearing as gentle and flattering, so that one could say they were loving of brothers and having benevolent faces. I urged those ones to use the quietude as a scalpel against the unrestraint and the stench from within themselves, in order they not to fall out of the speaking nature into the speechless nature.

And because some of them said they were carried pitifully towards both sorts of sins I stopped them from freely leading on

This is because everyone who keeps the evil in mind is a transgressor of the law". At Veniamin Costache are given here scholia which are not given in the G.P.

[418] Namely, sometimes the wrath determining somebody to unveil what he thinks of him who upset him, that one will demonstrate that he is innocent or he will ask for forgiveness. And this will lead him who was hating, to peace or to repentance. In this case the passion will be healed through passion.

themselves. And I friendly asked their protos to command those to follow this rule for a while, and on some other times, a different rule. But by doing all of those, they to bow down their neck and to obey him who mastered and ruled them.

19) He who loves the pleasure uses to harm on himself, but maybe on somebody else as well, who is secret friend of his. And he who is dominated by wrath, he often troubles the whole flock, as a wolf, and he upsets many humble souls.

20) It is an ugly thing to disturb the heart's eye because of anger, according to him who said: "My eye was troubled with anger" (Ps. 6: 7[419]). But even uglier if expressing the tendency of your soul with your lips. And doing that with your hands, it is totally opposite and foreign to the monastic, angelic, and godlike living.

21) If you want, or better said, if you reckon to get the ship out of somebody else's eye, do not get that out with a lot, but with the tweezers. And the tweezers are the gentle teaching and the long-suffering rebuking[420]. "Reproach, he says, rebuke, and comfort" (II Tim. 4: 2). But do not hit. And if needed that too, do it rarely and bot by yourself.

22) Let's look attentively and we will see also some other people among those who have their nature dominated by wrath, how they fast, take vigil, and appease themselves zealously. This is because the devils' purpose is to tempt them through the means which make the passion increase, so that they deceive

[419] In KJB we have: Ps. 6: 7: "Mine eye is consumed because of grief; it waxeth old because of all mine enemies."; in ROB we have: Ps. 6: 7: "My eye has been troubled because of upset, I got old among all my enemies." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[420] The scholium belonging to Saint Anthony, Head no. 69; in The Romanian Philokalia, volume I, head no. 16: "We must not get angry on them who commit sins, even if the sins they commit are worthy to be punished. But we must turn back them who did wrong, for the justice itself; and we must punish them, if appropriate, either through themselves, or through others. But we must not get angry, neither must we get upset. This is because the anger works only while carried by passion and not by judgment or by justice. That's why you won't accept to be advised either by the merciful ones who advise you against what is needed. The evil ones must be punished for the good itself and for justice and not because of the own passion of the anger". "One must not correct his brother on the very moment that one wrongs him; but neither on another time, out of revenge". The wise righteous is like God. He doesn't rebuke the man, neither he searches for revenge, towards the evil of the sinner. But in order to correct that man, or in order another man to get scarred. The rebuking that differs from this, it won't be advising".

those with the opinion that they would do that for repentance[421].

23) If a wolf (with the soul), as I said before, can trouble the flock, by taking as helper a devil, unmistakingly that an all-wise brother, full of oil, as a bellows, he can appease the waves and he can save the ship, by having an angel as his helper[422]. The harsher is the judgment the first one will take the greater will be the reward the second one will take from God and he will be useful example to anyone.

24) The beginning of the blesses non-remembrance of the evil consists of accepting the dishonor with a bitter and pained soul; the middle consists of remaining non-saddened when facing those, and the consummation (if there is any) consists of reckoning those as praises. Rejoice yourself, if you are among the first ones; be strong if you are among the second ones; and be happy if you are among the third ones, as one who rejoice yourself into the Lord.

25) I saw a pitiful view when they who are proud without realizing it, they get angry. This is because by getting angry, because of being defeated, they got angry again. And I wondered seeing them how they avenged their fall with another fall; and I felt pity seeing them how they were committing a sin because of another sin; and I got scared by the cunningness of the devils, seeing how the deceived ones almost despaired about their lives.

26) If one sees how he is easily defeated because of his pride, by the gall of the anger, by evilness, and by hypocrisy, and if he thinks to pull out the two-edged sword of the gentleness and of the non-remembering the evil done against them, he will immediately enter, as in a bleacher of the salvation, in a group of brothers, and especially among the

[421] The wrath can serve also to good purpose, as we have seen in a previous footnote. But the wrath sometimes can harm somebody despite that one aspiring to the good things. This is because the wrath makes that one getting haughty. Under the appearance of the harshness, Climacus is a nuanced thinker. He sees all the contradictory appearances of the passion and of the virtues.

[422] In the Edition form the year 1970: "You read, brother, the Hexaemeron belonging to the Great Basil, and you will find out, from there, wonderfully explained the oil and the waves. I reckon that Climacus metaphorically speaks about the savaged sea. The bellows means the body; the oil means the gentleness; the waves and they swell mean the savageness; and the ship means the brother or the brotherhood (the community)".

G.P." He who is gentle causes peace to himself and to his brother. And the anger drowned many of them who were angry".

harshest ones, if he wants to totally disrobe his passions. This is for, by being there under the waves of the reproaches and of the dishonor of the brothers and beaten in an understanding manner, or might than be even physically, and pricked and trampled in an understanding manner, or maybe combed, pricked, and trampled even physically, him to be clean of the stains which are within his soul[423].

Let the voice of the people be itself convincing to you, so that you will make out of being reproached a means for cleaning up your own soul. This is for some people from the world say, when they throw the dishonor in somebody's face: I washed him up. And this thing is true.

27) Different is the non-getting-angry out of crying within the beginners, from the motionlessness (of the anger) from within the consummate ones. The anger is hold back by tears as in a rein; the second one dies like a snake, because of being cut off by dispassion as by a knife. I saw three monks mocked in the same time. One of them felt himself bitten and troubled, but he kept his silence; the second one rejoiced for himself, and the third one, by imprinting within himself the hurting of his neighbor, he shared hot tears[424].

28) Like the fever of the bodies is one, but there are many causes for having fever and not only one cause, likewise the boiling and the movement of the anger, but maybe of the other passions too, they have many and diverse causes and occasions. I rather express my view about the careful zeal which each one must search for a way of healing the passion he is ill with. The first healing would consist of knowing somebody the cause of his passion. This is for, once one has found the cause, we the sick one will find out the healing medicine through God's taking care and through the skill of the spiritual doctors.

[423] It is used here the image of a mill and all the operations done there for cleaning up a fabric. In this cleaning shop the monk must stay under the as harsh as possible work of other brothers. It won't suffice if he fights by himself against his own anger with the sword of the gentleness and of non-keeping the evil in mind. Because he can cut himself too. This is because the gentleness can be lenient to his own sins as well. Here Climacus is harsh, for he is realistic. He knows how difficult a soul can be cleaned though himself. He alternated the harshness with the nuancing.

[424] The third one cries for the brother who reckoned him as for one who loses his salvation, as that one would have been himself. This one fully identified himself to that one. The love no longer knows about any border. The supreme example to us, in this regard, is Christ Who suffered because our sins.

29) For instance, they who want to get in together with us where the Lord is, to the understanding judgment we are going to face, let them enter, so they to be trialed in a shadowed manner, about the passions we mentioned before and about their causes. Let there be, from now on, tied the tyrant anger into the shackles of the gentleness. And let it be stricken with the long-suffering, and dragged by the holy love, so it will stand before this judgment chair of the Word[425] and its things will be studies in details: You tell us, you mindless and shameless one, the name of him who gave birth to you and of her who has given your life towards evil, and the names of your unclean daughters and sons! But not only those, but also the sign of those who waged war to you and killed you! And this one, answering us, it will reckon to say like this: By births are many; and my father is only one. And my mothers are: the love for glory, the love for money, the belly's covetousness, and sometimes the fornication too. And she who gave me birth is called the haughtiness. And my daughters are the keeping in mind of the evil, the enmity, the self-exoneration, and the hatred. My accusers which I am now kept tied, are opposite to the mentioned ones: the non-getting-angry and the gentleness. And she who plots against me is called as the humble cogitation. And who gave birth to that one, you ask her at her turn.

On the eight step it has been placed the crown of the non-getting-angry. He who is covered by that by his nature, he may not be covered by another. But he who has achieved that out of his own sweats, he has crossed through the eight ones forever.

[425] It can be here about the judgment chair of the godlike Word, but also about the judgment chair of the rationality and of our word or about the word of our fellow humans. This is for here is being judged the anger through word, and only beyond it will be the anger judged through the work of eternal condemnation or of forgiveness.

The Word IX

About Not Keeping the Evil in Mind

1) The pious virtues resemble to the ladder of Jacob. And the impious passions resemble to the chain fallen over Peter the administrator (Acts 12: 7). The first ones, by being tied one to another, it elevates to heavens him who wants that. The second ones are born one out of another and they gather on one another[426]. That why I have even heard that keeping the evil in mind is called as daughter of the unskilled anger. Not it has come the time to say something about that one as well.

2) Keeping the evil in mind is the end which we are led to by the anger that is the guardian of the sins, by the hating of the justice, by the losing of our virtues, by our soul's venom, by the worm of the mind, by the shame of the prayer[427], the denial of the ask[428], the estrangement of the love[429], a nail stuck into the soul[430], unpleasant feeling loved as a sweetness of the bitterness, a ceaseless sin, an unsleeping lawlessness, and a daily evilness. One and the same (namely the keeping of the evil

[426] "You notice what the father presents this chapter like. He likens the virtues to a ladder, for they elevate the man. This is for everyone who climb a ladder will obviously be taken towards height. And he likened the passions to a chain because of their burden and for they ceaselessly drag downwards on him who is tied by them, or because they won't let his undertake something in a free manner. And this is not a lie. This is because so much burdening is brought by the passions within heart, that sometimes won't even let that man to feel what is making him sad. And by likening the passion to the fallen chain, he showed how one could reject the chain if he wanted, namely through the fiery faith. And this can be known out of the fact that he mentioned Peter as example and not somebody else".

[427] The shame of the prayer means this: "When we say the prayer: "and you forgive us our mistakes as we forgive too" and by not forgiving, we are embarrassed by ourselves, namely by our conscience, as himself says further on: "Let him be ashamed by the Lord's Prayer etc.". But by and large, our prayer is embarrassed by the keeping the evil in mind, for we ask for the forgiveness from God of for His mercy almost through each of those. Actually, ourselves are embarrassed through our own prayer which we ask God for mercy through, because we do not have mercy on others.

[428] By remembering, mercilessly, the evil somebody did to us, we no longer have the courage to ask ourselves something from God with the whole daring.

[429] The love estranges itself from us, or we estrange on ourselves from the love.

[430] It is a nail which our soul is bloodied by. This is because keeping the evil in mind will maintain a disturbance within our soul. It is curious that we water up the poisoning trees of the evil, which the devastating poison bursts out not only within our soul but also around us, but we do not water up the trees of remembering the good things done to us. If we did that, our soul would become a true well-fragrant garden of the Paradise. And if we all did that, the Paradise would be extended among people.

in mind) is a darkened and ugly passion, among those which are born but which do not give birth[431]. That's why we do not want to say too much about it.

3) He who has stopped his anger he has killed his keeping of evil in mind. This is for as long as the father lives, there will take place the birth of children.

4) He who has gained the love he has estranged himself from the insanity of the anger. And he who wages enmity, he will pile up to himself purposeless pains.

5) The table of the love scatters the hatred away and the clean gifts soften the soul[432]. The careless eating is mother of the daring[433]. And through the window of the love, it sneaks in the covetousness of the belly.

6) I saw the hatred breaking up an old tie of the fornication and the remembrance of the evil strangely impeding that tie to be redone. Wonderful sight: a devil healing another devil. And this can be a work out of God's oikonomia, and not of the devils[434].

7) Keeping the evil in mind is far from the strong natural love. But the fornication easily gets closer to this one. And you will see how unnoticedly the louse sneaked into the pigeon[435].

[431] This is because, as in the case of the other passions too, it is born somewhat unwillingly, but it won't willingly bring forth beautiful fruits.

[432] The gifts one gives to him who has cause us evil they will soften both the soul of him who gives those gifts and of the another as well. And in the softened soul there are growing up the trees nourished with the sap of the benevolence, as long as within that soul that keeps the evil in mind everything will wither because of the poison gushing out of the trees of the keeping the evil in mind. Of course that is about the clean gifts of the love, and not about gifts given as bribe.

[433] The table as occasion to feasting, it will cause all the inappropriate daring. It could be that that table was set out of love, but through the window of the love (and not directly through the door) the covetousness will sneak in.

[434] A paradoxical thing: he who was fornicating before with a certain person he gets disgusted of that person by keeping in mind an evil thing that person did to him, and so he no longer fornicates. Actually, the devils have a weakness and an evilness among themselves too, as representatives of the evil; there is a disorder among them. "And I saw the keeping in mind of the evil totally untying of fornication. This is because the fornication easily sneaks in between those who love one another. But the fornication stays away from those who hate on one another".

[435] For instance, the husbands whom there is natural love between, they no longer remember the mistakes they sometimes did to one another. But when fornication occurred in their love, the keeping of evil in mind will easily appear and in the dove of the peace between them it will appear the louse of the disgust for one another. "Namely the sin has appeared into virtue. Like the louse unnoticedly damages and defiles the dive, likewise the fornication banishes a3way and destroys the love".

8) You remember the evil form the devils and always pay attention to the body's temptations, because the body is an ingrate and cunning friend. The more you serve your body the more your body will cause you more temptations.

9) Keeping the evil in mind is an interpreter of the Scripture, finding out in the words of the Ghost foreign meanings, according to its lust. Let it be ashamed by the prayer of Jesus which, if we keep the evil in mind, we won't be able to tell that prayer together with Him.

10) When despite you deepen your ascesis but you still cannot take the thorn out totally, you bow down before your enemy at least with your mouth, so that by being you ashamed because of your hypocrisy towards him, to love him consummately by being you pushed forward by your conscience as by a fire[436].

11) You will know when you will have been delivered of this rottenness (the keeping in mind of the evil) not when you pray for him who upset you, neither when you reward him with gifts, nor when you bring him at the table, but when you find out that he has fallen into a souly of bodily misfortune and you suffer and cry for him as for yourself.

12) He who appeases himself while keeping in mind the evil he will have locked within himself an adder bearing killing venom. Remembering the Passions of Christ will heal up that soul that remembers the evil, by strongly shaming that soul with His non-keeping in mind the evil.

13) In the rotten wood one can find woodworms, and to too gentle behaviors and peaceful in a liar manner, they have stuck on them the insane hatred. He who has rejected this he will find forgiveness. But he who sticks himself on it he will lose any mercy.

14) Some surrendered on themselves to the toils and to the sweats in order to achieve forgiveness. But he who doesn't' keep the evil in his mind he will surpass those[437], if this word is [436] If you remain rigid and if you do not tell your enemy at least some good words, you will add to the passion of keeping the evil in mind the passion of the pride too.

[437] What Climacus aims at are not the toils or the torments as such, but the transparent limpidness of the soul that has nothing mirky within himself, that has nothing to hide, nothing passionate that narrows him, so that that soul can be through that limpidness open to the godlike infiniteness. This is the clean soul who reflects through his mirror that is not limited by any passion, the whole infiniteness of the all-loving God.

true: "Forgive quickly and it will be plentifully forgiven to you" (Lk. 6: 37).

15) Not keeping the evil in mind is the sign of the true repentance. And him who keeps enmity while seemingly he repents, he will be like him who thinks that he is running but he is actually dreaming.

16) I saw some people urging others not to keep the evil in mind while themselves were doing the opposite. And they got ashamed by their own words and they ended this passion of theirs[438].

17) Let nobody reckon this darkness as an easy and passing passion. This is because of many times it uses to extent all the way to the spiritual men.

This has been the nineth step. He who has gained this he will be able to ask daringly, from God the Savior, for the untying of his mistakes[439].

[438] We can see here again a wide and understanding thinking of Climacus. He doesn't simply condemn them who praise what they actually do not do, but he admits that these ones can benefit from their own words which their deeds do not match to. This is for many times the man's words actually belong to God Who forces the man to speak through his conscience. In such a case, through the words they utter some people preach to themselves, or it is preached to themselves too, or out of their will to warm up others they got themselves warmed up too. Or, the warmth which others receive their words with, it will be extended upon themselves too. The scholium belonging to Saint Nilus: "He must say the good things also him who doesn't do those things, so that, by being him ashamed by his own words, to commit the deed". This annuls the critique that some people bring to the priests who do not always fulfill the word of God which they preach.

[439] He won't be ashamed of saying: "And forgive our mistakes, as we too forgive them who mistake to us". He truly has forgiven, so that he can ask for his mistakes to be forgiven as well.

The Word X

About Gossip

1) Nobody, I reckon, among those who judge healthily, won't deny that out of hatred and out of keeping the evil in mind, there will be born the gossip. That's why it has been placed this after its parents, as in a chain. The gossip if the daughter of the hatred. It is a thin illness, but is it a thick leech, hidden and secret, one that sucks up and it dries up the blood of the love[440]. It is the hypocrisy of the love, and it is the cause of the defilement and of the heart's burden.

2) As there are young women who do the bad things shamelessly and as there are women who do uglier things than those committed by the first ones, but the last ones do those things secretly and while feeling some shame, likewise it can happen in the case of the dishonored passions. Such young women are: the hypocrisy, the cunningness, the sadness, the keeping in mind of the evil, and the heart's gossip. These ones say something but they actually thing the opposite[441].

3) I heard some ones who gossiped that I rebuked them[442]. But the workers of this evil answered in their defense that they were doing that for the love they had and for the care they took for the slandered one. And I told them stop manifesting that love, for it is not a liar him who said: "Him who slanders secretly, you will banish him" (Ps. 100: 5[443]). If you say

[440] Climacus is a great poet too, of the internal world of shadows and lights which are sometimes mixed up, sometimes unmixed, but always different. Besides, all the churchly writers are poets of this world, not in the sense that they imagine what doesn't exist, but in the sense that by living the richness of this life, they succeed in expressing it in as matching as possible ways, which must use images to be conveyed.

[441] "The shameless young women are: the belly's covetousness, the drunkenness, the fornication, and the vain-glory. And the hidden ones are: the hypocrisy, the gossip, the hatred, the envy, which also commit the killings".

[442] "The slandering soul has three thorns: he wounds on himself, he wound his listeners, and sometimes he wounds the slandered one as well". Another: "The hatred for your neighbor is the death of your soul". Another: "Not condemning your neighbor is like a (defense) wall for them who live in ascesis into knowledge. But the slandering of your neighbor will tear down this wall into nescience". Not condemning your neighbor keeps a respect wall between me and him; or, a communication with him into love, with his will. By slandering him I will go upon him forcedly and without love, wanting to roll him down into mud, as he would be an object. But, actually, by doing that, I won't succeed to enter what is more intimate and truer in him. Neither will God accept this liar love, as the slandered one doesn't not accept it either.

[443] In KJB we have: Ps. 101: 5: "Whoso privily slandereth his neighbour, him will I cut off:"; that you love him, you will secretly pray for him, and you won't mock him. This is for such is the kind of love we have received from our Lord.

4) Do not let this thing remain hidden from you and you will wake yourself us, so you won't any longer judge him who mistakes: Judah belonged to the group of the disciples, while the thief belonged to the group of the thieves. And on an instance a wonderful change was made between them.

5) If somebody wants to defeat the ghost of the gossip, let him not blame that one who has mistaken, but let him blame the devil who tempted him to mistake. This is for no one want to commit sin towards God, despite we all commit sins without being forced to[444].

6) I saw one sinning openly and repenting secretly. And I found him whom I condemned as fornicator as reckoned righteous by God, for he truly gained God's mercy by his repent.

7) You won't ever shy of him who slanders his neighbor in your presence. You will rather say to him: "Stop that, brothers! I daily do things which are worse than what he does. How could I condemn him?" By doing that you will gain two things: you will heal both yourself and the slanderer, by using a sole medicine[445].

8) One and only is the shortest way leading to the forgiveness of the mistakes: you won't judge, if the following word is true: "Do not judge and you won't be judged" (Mt. 7: 5). As stranger is the fire from the water likewise to judge is stranger to him who want to repent himself.

9) Even if you see somebody mistaking in the moment of his death, you won't judge him either then. This is for God's in ROB we have: Ps. 100: 6: "He who was slandering hiddenly on his neighbor, I banished him." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[444] In the Edition from the year 1970: "Namely we do not sin forcedly, for we are free, but because of being deceived by devils and attracted by our mind towards the sins of the pleasures and towards passions".

[445] The scholium belonging to Abba Isaiah: "If somebody tells you useless words, you won't want to listen to him, in order you not to kill your soul. Do not be ashamed in front of him and avoid to upset him. Do not be satisfied with the word of those who say: "I do not accept that in my heart". You won't say that. Because you are not superior to the first created man whom God created with His own hand and whom the slandering (by the devil) was not beneficial. So, you will run and you won't listen to slander. Take heed lest by running with your body you still want to know the said things. This is because, if you listen to that word even for an instance, the devils won't let the word you have heard (to be forgotten), but they will kill your soul. That's why, you will run, you will totally run".

judgment is unknown to the people. Some people did big mistakes openly but they did also great things hiddenly. Therefor they who love condemning deluded themselves, by catching smoke instead of sun[446].

10) You listen to me all the evil supervisors of others. If it is true, as surely it is, that: "With the judgment you will judge, with that judgment you will be judged too" (Mt. 7: 5), unmistakingly in what we will slander our neighbor, in those we will fall, either souly or bodily. And there will be no other.

11) The harsh and detailed accountants of the mistakes of their neighbor suffer of this passion, because they haven't remembered even once in a non-liar manner and fully, of their mistakes[447]. This is for, if someone looked at his own sins in details, by removing the cover of the love for the self, he would not take care of any of the life's things. He would reckon that had not enough time for crying for himself, even if he lived for a hundred years, and even fi he saw the River Jordan entirely filled up with the tears springing out of his eyes.

12) I have tried my crying and I haven't found any trace of slander, or of condemnation.

13) The devils force us either to commit sins, or – if we do not sin – to condemn them who commit sins, in order us to stain the first thing by doing the second thing. You know that the sign of the gossipers, or the sign of the envious, it is this: they slander and denigrate with pleasure and easily the teachings, or the deeds, of the accomplishments of their neighbor, while sinking on themselves pitifully into the ghost of the hatred[448].

[446] "The father likens the good deeds to the sun, to the truth, to the light, and the sin to the lie, to the darkness, and to the smoke".

[447] "That is true. If the mind did not exit out of itself, by leaving its own things and laughing at others' things, the mind would not judge." Judging others actually means forgetting about yourself.

[448] The scholium belonging to Photius of Constantinople: "The inquisitive natures want to see the deed of their neighbor and they look with sharp eyes their neighbor's shortcoming. And if they find that out, they will kidnap that and they will inquire that, and if they do not find that out, they will rather want to imagine it and to contrive it than to leave with their curiosity unsatisfied". Another: "The mischievous opinions struggle to crook into evil the good deeds and the useful words". Another: "You will speak carefully before him who is proud and ill with envy, because while you are speaking, he gives, in his anger, to your words, the meaning he wants. And out of your goods, he will take causes to stumble others; and your words will be changed into his cogitation according to the type of illness he suffers of".

14) I saw some people committing hiddenly and unknown to the world all sorts of mistakes and, with their supposed cleanness they harshly condemned them who openly committed some little mistakes.

15) Judging means cheekily stealing a right of God. But condemning means to someone losing his soul.

16) Like the self-appreciation can destroy him who has that even without having him any other passion, likewise judging on others even if is alone and by itself within us, it will be able to totally destroy us, as it was that Pharisee judged only because of that (Lk. 18: 14).

17) The grapes picker eats only ripen grape berries and he doesn't pick up any sour grapes. The skillful and wide mind zealously takes heed at all virtues it sees at others. But the mindless one spies the things worthy to be reproached and the shortcomings. About this it was said: "They spied for lawlessness, they exhausted on themselves contriving ways to spy" (Ps. 63: 6[449]).

18) You won't condemn, even if you see it with your eyes. This is because of the eyes being often deceived as well.

This was the tenth step; he who has defeated it he has become worker of the love or of the crying.

[449] In KJB we have: Ps. 64: 6: "They search out iniquities; they accomplish a diligent search:"; in ROB we have: Ps. 63: 6: "The spied for lawlessness and they perished while spying,". (E. l. t.'s n.)

The Word XI

About the Much Speaking and About Silence

1) I have been showing in the things written until here that that judging is a very dangerous thing, which it sneaks even withing them who seen to be spiritual[450], or rather to be judged and condemned by the tongue[451]. But now we are going to talk a little, at its turn, also bout the cause or about the open door which this one enters or exits through.

2) The much-speaking is the pulpit of the vain-glory, which this one shows on itself and it makes itself known. The much-speaking is the sigh of the nescience, the door of the gossip, the guide of the jokes, the maid of the lie, the scattering of the pricking, the birth giver of the idleness or the cause of idleness, the forerunner of the sleep, the scattering of the gathered-within-itself mind, the destroyer of the self-guarding, the cooler of the warmth, and the darkening of the prayer.

3) The silence into knowledge is the mother of the prayer[452], the deliverance from slavery, the guarding of the fire[453], the watcher of the thoughts, the guarding against enemies[454], the prison of the crying, the fried of the tears, the worker of the remembrance of the death, the painter of the torments, the inquirer for the judgment, the maid of the worry, the enemy of the daring, the company of the quietude, the enemy of that love for teaching, a plus of knowledge, the cause of the views, the unseen progress, and unnoticed ascension.

[450] In the Edition from the year 1970: "He says that even to them who reckon that id a bad thing to judge, or even to the who seem to be spiritual, it often happens, because of inattentiveness or because the drowsiness of their heart, to sneak within them the tendency towards inappropriate things, namely towards sin".

[451] He who judges he will be judged by his own tongue.

[452] The silence into knowledge is the silence of that mind that is occupied with understanding a still unknown world, which the mind tries to understand it. It is not a silence thinking at nothing. When the mind sinks into God and into knowing its own humbleness in front of God, the mind will give birth to prayer.

[453] "The deliverance from slavery" from them who narrow us and who force us to repeat the same things. "Guarding the fire", for it is the discovery of something new, the discovery of new meanings hidden into the godlike infinity. And this will warm us up.

[454] "The silence into knowledge not only that guards us against our enemies, but it won't let them come close either".

4) He who knows his mistakes he will restrain his tongue. And the talkative he hasn't yet known himself as it is due. The friend of the silence gets closer to God[455] and, while speaking with God without knowing how, he is lightened by God[456]. The silence of Jesus ashamed Pilates and the peace of a spiritual man consumes away the vain-glory.

5) After he said a word, Peter cried bitterly, because he remembered him who said: "I said: I will guard my ways, so that not to sin with my tongue" (Ps. 38: 1[457]) and of another who said: "It is better to fall from height to the ground, than because of the tongue" (Wisdom of Sirach 20: 19[458]).

6) I don't want to write down about these things, though the cunningness of my passions urges me to that[459]. But I heard once somebody wanting to find out form me something about quietude, and he was saying that the much-speaking is necessarily born out of one of these: either out of a long living and out of a cunning and unrestrained habit (this is because the tongue, being a limb of the body, it needs what it has learned and what it has accustomed to), or, at them who live in ascesis and especially at them, out of vain-glory; and sometimes, out of the belly's covetousness as well. That's why often, many who restrain their belly, with some effort, they also [455] He who has known himself as it is due, he will know that he is indefinite and he cannot describe on himself. He realizes the human apophatic (the untold). In addition to that, by knowing on himself as reached to humbleness, namely to knowing his insignificance and lack of skills, so that he won't want to say a word. This is for any word aims to teach somebody something, but only in silence one can know on himself, as untold, only in silence one can get closer to God Who is infinitely more untold.

[456] That silence that somebody has got closer to God in, it is on the other hand a dialogue with God, a dialogue above any speaking. He knows God as a subject asking him something, and he answers God through his humbleness. And this is a light coming to him from God. It is the light of God's greatness, God Who lightens man's insignificance but God also fills that insignificance up with God, as dependent on God. "If you guard your tongue, brother, you will be given from God the gift of the heart's pricking, so that you will see your soul in it, and by that you will enter the joy of the Ghost. But if your tongue has defeated you, believe me what I am saying: you will never be able to get out of darkness". Another: "If you don't' have your heart clean, at least keep your mouth clean".

[457] In KJB we have: Ps. 39: 1: "I SAID, I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue:"; in ROB we have: Ps. 38: 1: "I said: "I will guard my ways, so I not to sin with my tongue;" (E. l. t.'s n.)

[458] This book is not present in KJB but it is given in ROB. (E. l. t.'s n.)

[459] "The cunningness of the passions means that we often speak passionately about those things, namely about much-speaking, about silence, and about others, but I do not obey those, because I can't, while speaking about silence, to fall into much-speaking".

lock up their tongue and the tongue's much-speaking, in silence.

7) He who carefully thinks at death he will stop his words. And he who has earned the crying of his soul he will shun himself from the much-speaking as from fire.

8) He who loves the quietude he has locked up his mouth. And he who wants to go around the world he will be banished away from his monastic cell.

9) He who has known the scent of the fire of the Al-High, he will run from the company of the people as the bee runs aways from smoke. This is because the bee is banished away by fire; and to him the company of the people is counterproductive.

10) Only a few people can stop the water without dams, but even fewer can stop the unbridled mouth.

This was the eleventh step. He who has conquered it he has cut off, in the same time, a multitude of evils.

The Word XII

About the Lie

1) The fire is born out of stone and iron. The lie is born out of much-speaking and out of the stupid joke. The lie means the perdition of the love, and the liar oath means denying God.

2) No one among those who are sane in their minds not to imagine that the sin of the lie is a small sin. The Holy Ghost uttered a fearsome judgment against the lie. If David says towards God: "You will destroy all of them who speak lie" (Ps. 5: 6[460]), what would happen to them who strengthen the lie with oats?

3) A saw some people bragging with their lie and weaving with jokes and with vain-words causes for laughter and pitifully banishing away the crying of the obedient[461].

4) When the evils see us trying to get far from hearing jokes as it was a plague, after the beginning done with us by our harsh adviser, they will start alluring us with these two thoughts, whispering us either: "Do not sadden him who explains", or: "Do not show on yourself as loving God more than the present ones". You jump away, don't tarry there! And if not, you will imagine at prayer the thought of some things which stir up the laughter. And you not only run away, but you will also scatter away, with good-faithfulness the sitting of the enemy as well, by bringing into your mind the thought at judgment. This is for it will be better for you if you get out this circumstance even spread with a little vain-glory but to be cause of benefit to many others[462].

[460] In KJB we have: Ps. 5: 6: "Thou shalt destroy them that speak leasing: the Lord will abhor the bloody and deceitful man."; in ROB we have: Ps. 5: 6: "I will destroy all of them who speak the lie; the killer and the cunning are hated by the Lord." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[461] "The obedient are a step of those who come to repentance, which are also called as weepers, standing at the doors of the church and asking through sincere repentance and through crying to be accepted back again. By extending this name he called obedient all of them who repent themselves and who cry for their sins. These ones fall off their work by the word that stirs up the laughter".

[462] He who runs ways it will possible be spread with a little vain-glory, because we may be praised for leaving. "The hypocrite, as long as he can hide on himself, he will hunt for vain-glory, while claiming he is righteous. But when he is exposed, he will spread causing of death words, because of thinking that he can hide his ugliness by calumniating others. This one was likened by the word of God to an adder, springing out venom, and he commanded him to bring fruits worthy of repentance, namely to match his hidden thinking to his seen behaviors".

5) The mother and the cause of the lie is, often, the hypocrisy. This is because some people say that the hypocrisy isn't else but planning and contriving lies, having combined and intertwines with it also the oath. He who fears the Lord he will be stranger to lie for he has his conscience as an incorruptible judge[463].

6) As in all the passions we see diverse damages, likewise in the lie[464]. This is for other will be the judgment of him who lies because he fears the judgment, and another will be that of his who lies while not being threatened by any danger. One lies for delectations, another for his lust for pleasures; another for making the present ones laughing; another in order to set a trap to his brother and to harm him[465].

7) The lie told because of fearing the torments of the rulers it will be erased; but it will be totally abolished by the multitude of the tears. The liar who sets up traps, he often reckons the loss of the soul as justice. The man who is contriver of lies claims that he follows the example of Raav and he tells that by his loss he aims to save others[466].

8) When we get totally cleaned of lie, we will be able to use the lie too, but with fear, if the moment requires that[467]. The little child doesn't not know the lie, neither does that the soul that has been delivered from cunningness. He who is gladdened

[463] "He who loves the glory from the people, he will contrive the lie. He who changes this one into humbleness, he will make the fear of God to be bigger within his heart". Another: "Use your tongue to the words of God into knowledge and the lie will run away from you". Namely, use God's words in their true meaning and you will avoid the lie. This is because the hypocrite too can use the words of God but in a crooked manner.

[464] "According to the differences among the lies their judgment will be done too. This is because one lies either out of pleasure, or out of lie, or out of cunningness, or out of hypocrisy. Or the time required him who tell the truth to change his words, of his behavior, or his motivation, in order him to save his neighbor. You have examples as Raav, or David, or Samuel. One will change the word as Raav did, another will change his behavior as David did, another will change his motivation as Samuel did for the benefit of David".

[465] The liar presents an untrue perspective upon reality, in order to put something in the situation of not working according to reality, and so that one will suffer loses. But sometimes somebody must be spared from finding out the reality in the whole its awfulness, so that he will have time to gradually be prepared for reality.

[466] The hypocrite liar who gets exposed, he will sometimes say: I caused, by lying, the loss of my soul, in order to escape others. So, he reckons even the loss of his soul as a deed of justice. Here is a twofold hypocrisy. Climacus knew in case of the lie too all sort of situations. He condemned in the harshest way only the hypocrisy that aims to harm others.

[467] Somewhat such a man is clean of the ghost of the lie, because he uses the lie because of the real need for escaping somebody.

by wine, he will unwillingly tell the truth in everything. And who is drunk for the pricking of his heart we won't be able to lie.

This was the twelfth step. He who has stepped on it he has gained the root of the goods.

The Word XIII

About the Souly Laziness

1) This one too is one of the branches of the much-speaking and it is its first niece, as I said before. I am speaking here about the souly idleness. That's why I have appointed to it too a place in the evil chain. It is the soul's idleness, a drowsiness of the mind, a disgust for the monastic promise, an impulse to envy the laymen, a defamation brought to God as merciless and non-loving of people, and a boredom of reading the psalms. It is helpless in prayer, but it is strong as the iron in serving the material things, tireless in handworks and skillful in obedience[468].

2) The obedient man won't know the soul's idleness. This is for through the things of the senses he accomplishes the things of the thinking.

3) The life in community is opposite to idleness. But to him who appeases himself, the idleness will be a constant companion. The idleness wont' leave him until he dies; until he dies the he will be warred by idleness. When seeing the monastic cell of the hermit, the idleness smiles. And by getting closer to him, the idleness dwells next to him[469].

4) The physician visits the sick ones in the morning, while the souly laziness visits him who appeases himself at noon. The souly laziness invokes as motif the receiving of guests and it asks to be put at work of the hands in order to give alms. It zealously urges to visit the sick, reminding Him Who said: "I was sick and you didn't come to me" (Mt. 25: 38). It asks us to go to them who are helpless and discouraged. It, the discouraged one, it tells us: "Comfort the discouraged". While staying at prayer it remembers useful things and it contrives all sorts of crafts, itself that is reckless, so that to attract us by some blessed reason, as by a rein, to leave the prayer.

[468] It is harder to pray than to work something outside. That's why, he who postpones the prayer always excuses himself for being occupied with something. "The idleness is strengthened out of praying and out of reading the psalms, but it decreases and it vanishes in serving and in handworks. It makes the drowsy ones daring, warred by it, and it make them whom it defeats to be helpless".

[469] "Being had to defeat, it enarms itself and it gains power against those who pray, sing, and appease themselves. And sometimes it will even defeat them".

5) The devil of the souly idleness brings at noon a trembling that lasts around three hours, together with headaches and with fever and with dizziness. At the nineth hour (around three o-clock at noon), those symptoms recede. When the table is set, it jumps off bed. When the time of the prayers arrives, the body is burdened again. Staying at prayer, if sinks the monks into sleep and it kidnaps the verse from their mouth with inappropriate yawning.

6) Each one among other passion is destroyed by an opposite virtue. But the souly idleness is the all-comprising death of the monk.

7) The man soul resurrects the dead mind, but the idleness and the laziness scatter the whole richness.

8) Being itself one of the eight chiefs of the evilness, we will say about it as we have said about the whole chain of all the others. But we are also going to add here also the fact that, when the psalms are song, the soul's idleness wont' occur. And when the rule of praying is being done, the eyes will remain open.

9) At the time of the idleness are proven them who force themselves (for entering the Kingdom of Heavens). This is because nothing else brings crowns to the monk as the idleness, if he still tirelessly continues to accomplish the work of God. Take heed and you will see it waging war to you when you are standing, by urging you to sit on the chair, and to lean you back on the wall of your monastic cell, or making you to move or to tap your feet[470]. He who cries doesn't not know the soul's idleness.

10) Let this tyrant be tied up with the recalling of the sins and let him be beaten by the manual work. Let him be pulled by the through at the future goods and placed in front and asked about the due things: "You say, you drowsy and idle one, who gave you birth out of evilness? Who your nieces are? Who are they who wage war to you and who kill you?". And him, forced [470] "You persevere in that place where you stay, while resisting the drowsiness. This is because not by moving elsewhere you will appease your passions, but by focusing your mind. We need patience, so that by accomplishing the will of God to earn the promises. And he who is carried away, from place to place, by idleness, he has got far from patience as the sick man from health. So, not in drowsiness will the virtue be known, but in patience. And the renewed patience is strengthened by occupying the mind with the contemplation and with the cogitation at what is expecting us. By these, the mind gets fattened and it gains power, similar to the body when eating the material food".

like that, will answer: "I do not have where to rest my head among those who occupy themselves with the appeasement. And those which gave birth to me are many and diverse. Sometimes, the callousness of the soul, some other times not remembering the above things; on occasions the too much toils as well. And my nieces[471] are those which, despite all moves from place to place, they remain with me: the disobedience to the father, the non-remembering about the judgment, and sometimes even the leaving of the monastic life. My enemies, which I am now tied in chains, are the singing of psalms and the manual work. He who wages war to me is the thought of death. And that one that totally kills me is the prayer united with the sure hope for the (future) goods. And who gave birth to the prayer, ask the prayer for finding that out"[472].

This is the thirteenth victory. He who has gained this one he is really experienced, in the whole good.

[471] "If you take care, with a fiery heart, of commandments, you will know those who trouble you and what they trouble you for. They urge you that, out of boredom, to choose, unsatisfyingly, another place to stand, and then, by changing your mind, to sit down again. They disturb the mind so that the mind to become wandering and lazy. But they who know their cunningness, they will remain undisturbed while thanking God for He has given them the power to endure. This is for the patience, the long-suffering, and the love give thanks for toils and hardships. And the idleness and the carelessness and the lust for resting search for the place where they will be honored at. But out of the much glory the senses will get weakened. And the senses will necessarily be taken into slavery of the passions and they will lose the hidden restraint by scattering and satiation".

[472] "The unscattered prayer is born out of the proven faith into God, by the hope for the promise, and by the perfect love, united with the all-comprising restraint".

The Word XIV

About the All-Praised and Tyrant Belly

1) Following to speak about belly, we have decided to speak in a wise manner (to philosophize) against ourselves as we have been doing in all the others[473]. This is because I would wonder if somebody liberated himself from his belly before being laid in his tomb.

2) The stomach's covetousness is the hypocrisy of the belly. When satiated, he will shout out that it is deprived; and when gorged on and cracking because too much eating, it will shout out that it is hungry. The belly's covetousness is a skillful cook, inventing all sorts of tasty foods. By being a channel clogged up, another channel will be open. By closing this one up too, another will be open. The belly's covetousness is a deceit of the eyes, which by swallowing a few things, it wants to swallow everything.

3) The satiation with food is the mother of the fornication[474], and tormenting the belly will produce cleanness. He who pets the lion will often tame that lion, but he who comforts the body will make it even wilder[475].

4) The Jew rejoices the Sabbath and the feast, while the covetous monk rejoices of Saturday and of Sunday. He thinks long before Easter and prepares the foods days before. The servant of the belly plans what foods will he celebrate the feast[476], while the servant of God plans which spiritual gifts he will be enriched with. If a stranger arrives, the covetous starts throwing a feast because of the covetousness of his belly and [473] "It doesn't depend on us that our would to be attacks and disturbed by all the general thoughts of the evilness. But it depends on us to allow the passion to move and to tarry within us. That's why the saint said that he followed to philosophize against himself. This is because it depends on us not to let ourselves defeated by some of those".

[474] "Like the sheep does not breed with the wolf for giving birth to offspring, neither the pain of the heart with the satiation won't breed virtues".

[475] Belonging to Isaiah: "Out of four things it is multiplied the fornication of the body: out of the enough sleeping, out of satiation with food, out of inappropriate jokes, and out of adorning the body".

[476] "Not by drinking wine the feasts must be celebrated, but with the renewal of the mind and with the cleanness of the soul. But he who is covetous for food and drunkards of wine he rather angers the protos of the holyday", or Christ, or the celebrated saint.

the untying[477] for himself he will reckon it as for comforting that brother[478]. He thinks to untie for wine because of the guests' coming and, by reckoning that he hides his virtue, he actually makes himself slave to the passion[479].

5) The vain-glory often hates the belly's covetousness, and between these two there bursts up a fight for taking that miserable monk under their mastery, as a bought slave. The belly's covetousness strives to loosen up his brakes, while the vain-glory advises him to bring the virtue to victory. And the wise monk runs away from both of those, by shacking off, at the right time, one through another.

6) When our body is in full vigor, let's keep the restraint all the time and everywhere. And when the body has become tames (but I do not believe that that can happen before death), let's hide out our work.

7) I saw old priests mocked by devils, untying with blessing, the young men whom they were not their advisers, to feasts, to drink wine, and to the others[480]. If they are confessed (as being good), let's untie them with measure. But if they are careless, let's not take care of blessing them[481], especially when they are warred by fire[482].

8) The cursed by God Evagrius, he reckoned that he was wiser than the wise ones both in speaking and in understanding. But when he was exposed, the miserable him, he showed himself more mindless than the mindless ones, not only in many aspects, but in this one too. For he said: when the soul lusts for diverse food, let restrain him with bread and [478] "It happens sometimes that he who fulfills the commandment serves to the passions and he will destroy the good deed through cunning thoughts". Another: "God judges the deeds according to the thought. This is for it is said: "May God give you according to your heart" (Ps. 19: 5) (In KJB ww have Ps. 20: 5).

[479] "He makes himself the mockery of the devils he who guides himself according to his opinion and he who wants to rule by himself against the commanded things".

[480] The old priests do not have the right to untie to drink wine and to eat certain foods on them who are not advised by them. Belonging to Isaiah: "The comforting damages the young people, but the untying damages even them who are consummate and old".

[481] Belonging to Abba Mark: "Let yourself be disgusted of anyone who resist the fulfilling of the commandments of God; it won't be good to you if you eat with him at the same table".

[482] In the Edition form the year 1970: "By fire he understood here the bodily heat".

water. He commanded something similar to saying that the little child must climb the whole ladder in one jump[483].

By rejecting his commandment, we say: when the soul lusts for diverse foods, he asks for something characteristic to the nature. That's why we are going to use a craft against this much-crafted passion. And if we are not under a very intense war, or if we are not menaced by the danger of some fallings, let's first cut off those foods which fatten us up, and then those foods which stir us up, and then those foods providing us with pleasure.

9) If possible, give your belly that food that fills it up and it is easy to digest, so that by satiation we will satiate the lust and by quick digestion e will be delivered of incitement like by a whip[484]. Let's study also those foods causing winds and we will see that those too move the lusts.

10) Laugh at the devil advising you to prolong the dinner. This is because, when the ninth hour of the next day comes, you will have transgressed the agreement of the previous day.

11) Other is the restraint appropriate to the innocent and other is that matching the guilty. The first ones have a sign the movement of their body, while the second ones have as sign their struggle to death and to the end against their body, with no lenience and relentlessly. The first ones want to always guard their mind's quietude; the second ones, by their sadness and souly meting down, they want to gain the mercy of God.

12) To the consummate one, the lack of worry in all things is him time for gladness and comforting; and to him who lives in ascesis's toils, the time for gladness is him time for work[485]. And to the passionate one, the time for gladness is the holiday of the holidays and the feast of the feasts[486].

[483] Evagrius was an Origenistic monk, condemned by the Fifth Ecumenical Synod. As Origen as well, he reckoned too that the world is caused by a falling of the soul from the pleroma of the spirits, so that would be evil in its essence. According to them, we must do everything to leave this world as soon as possible. On this purpose, we must weaken our body, but not in order to make is the docile tool of our spirit namely for spiritualizing it, but for destroying it.

[484] "You take heed at what he says: we can be delivered from incitement like by a whip, by not satiating our stomach. So, by satiating our stomach it will be caused our incitement. And not nourishing ourselves because of our pride, it will cause us, at its turn, movements and heats".

[485] "He who is consummate, for he has defeated his passions, he will be worriless in all things, so that he won't take care of anything even in the time of the gladness, for some pleasure of addiction. But he who fight his passions, he will reckon the time for comforting (for eating) as time fighting time, by punishing his lust and by setting borders and limits to his lust. And the

13) In the heart of the covetous there are moving dreams about foods, and in the heart of them who cry, dreams of judgment and of torments.

14) You dominate your belly otherwise you belly will dominate you, and then you will restrain yourself with shame. They who have fallen into the untold pit, they know what I am saying. But the eunuchs remain not tempted by that (Mt. 19: 12)[487].

15) Let's make dead our belly with the thought of the (eternal) fire. This is for, by hearing about this, some people made their limbs dead to the end, and they die of a twofold death[488]. Let's inquire and we will find the fact that the greediness causes all of our fallings.

16) The mind of his who fasts prays with watchfulness. But the mind of the unrestrained is full with unclean images (idols)[489]. The satiation of the belly has dried out the springs. But if the belly itself gets dry, the waters will be born[490].

17) He who takes care of his stomach and fight for defeating the ghost of the fornication is like that one who wants to quench the fire by throwing fuel in that fire. When the belly is restrained, the heart gets humble. And when the belly is taken care of, the thought boasts.

passionate one, by always lusting for pleasures, by always using the feasting as any other occasion, he will wholly surrender himself to pleasures. This is because he asks for always enjoying these".

[486] "The passionate one rejoices on holidays and on feasts. He who lives in the ascesis's toils during the fight time will receive crown according to his toils. And he who is consummate, he will be resting of all of these".

[487] "The eunuchs are those whom our Lord said about, that they have made on themselves eunuchs for the Kingdom of God (Mt. 19: 12), so that they restrain on themselves in an all-comprising manner. This is because the other does not differ among themselves, by falling into the same passions".

[488] One death is that of the restraining to the peak, and the second is the death with the body at the end of the earthly life.

[489] "The mind of the restrained one is a temple of the Holy Ghost. But the mind of the greedy one is the dwelling place of the ravens". The mind of the restrained one is the church of the Holy Ghost, and that is for by no longer sticking with the things which narrow the mind and which make the mind not to contemplate on itself in its indefinite, it will be able to see the godlike endlessness through this indefinite. But the mind of the greedy one is dwelling place to ravens, because that mind has died to itself, namely that mind no longer sees on itself; that man has become only a decomposing body, with his light forever turned off. And the ravens visit the cadavers. Such a mind will no longer see but the narrowed images of the perishing things, namely idols.

[490] "When the stomach is getting moist by satiation, the tears get dry. And when the belly gets dried out by restraint, there will occur and there will grow up the waters of the tears".

18) Take heed at yourself around the first hour of the day (six in the morning, t. n.), and around the middle hour and around the last hour before eating, and you will find out of this the benefit of the fasting. In the morning the thought horses around and wanders; when the nineth hour comes (three p.m., t. n.), it will get a little appeased, and when the sun goes down, it will get totally humbled.

19) Persecute your belly and you will unmistakingly shut your mouth up as well[491]. This is because the tongue gets stronger out of much-eating. You fight your tongue and take vigil upon it. This is for, if you toil yourself even a little, our Lord will immediately help you. The new wineskins will swell up in order to receive even more. But the despised wineskins won't receive that much.

20) He who forces his own stomach (to comprise more), he will enlarge his guts. And he who fight his own stomach he will narrow his guts. And if the guts have got narrowed, there will no longer be needed much food. And then we will reach to be fasting by nature.

21) Often, the thirst puts an end to the thirst. But quenching the hunger by hunger it is difficult and impossible. When your stomach defeats you, you will appease it through toils. And if neither this is possible, due to the weakness, you will fight your stomach by taking vigil.

22) When your eyes get sleepy, you will start your handwork. But if you are not sleepy, you won't start your handwork. This is because it is impossible to present your mind both to God and to your memory, namely to serve both God and your handwork.

23) You know that the devil often places itself in the stomach and won't let the man to get satiated, even if he eats the whole Egypt and drinks the whole Nile. After eating the wicked leaves away, and he will send us the devil of the fornication, announcing him what has happened to us: "Take him, he will say, trouble him"[492]. This is because by getting the

[491] "You consciously take care of this and you persevere, painstakingly, in this, as by persecuting your own stomach, your mouth to get shut up, so that your mouth no longer will jump into discussions and so to get accustomed to much-speaking".

[492] "Devil casts out devil. But that of the belly's covetousness sends after that of the fornication; that on the vain-glory calls that one of the pride; the one of the wrath calls that one of the keeping the evil in mind; that one of the debauchery call that one of the despair. And simply speaking, the following ones come after the first ones".

belly swelled, it won't fight much. And that one will come smiling. And while we sleep, it will tie up our hands and our feet, and they it will do to us whatever he wants, by defiling our soul and body with defilements, with hallucinations, and with leaks. It is a bewildering thing seeing the incorporeal mind defiled and darkened by the body; and again, seeing the corporeal one as cleaned up and thinned up through clay.

24) If you have promised Christ that you will travel on the narrow and full of troubles path, you will restrain your stomach. This is because if you take care of your stomach and you widen your stomach, you will transgress the covenants.

25) You think at and you obey Him Who says: "Wide is the path of the belly that leads to the perdition by fornication; and many are them who travel on it. And narrow is and full of troubles that path of the fasting that leads to the state of righteousness. And only a few are they who enter it" (Mt. 7: 13-14)[493].

26) The chief of the devils is Lucifer, who fell, and the master of the passions is the throat of the belly.

27) While sitting at the table remember your death and judgment. Only thus you will be able to impede a little your passion. Drinking your drink remember the vinegar and the gall drank by our Master. And, without any doubt, you will restrain on yourself or, sighing up, you will make your thought humbler.

28) Do not delude on yourself: you won't be delivered from pharaoh and you won't see the Passovers from above, if you do not ceaselessly eat the bitter herbs and the azyme, and the disgust and the heavy suffering of the fasting. And the azyme is that thought that is not swelled with pride.

29) Let stick to your breath the word of him who says: "When the devils were troubling me, I put on a sack and I humbled by soul with fasting; and my prayer got stuck in the bosom of my soul" (Ps. 34: 12[494]).

[493] "You pray for you to be among the few ones. This is because the good is rare. That's why only a few are they who enter too. Do not reckon that all of them from the monastic cell will be saved, regardless they are good or bed. It won't be like that. This is because many enter the virtuous life but few receive that life".

[494] In KJB we have: Ps. 35: 13: "13 But as for me, when they were sick, my clothing was sackcloth: I humbled my soul with fasting; and my prayer returned into mine own bosom."; in ROB we have: Ps. 34: 12: "And I, when they were troubling me, I out on a sack and I humbled my soul with fasting and my prayer will return into my bosom."

30) The fasting is a forcing of the nature[495] and it is a circumcision of the throat's sweetness, the quenching of the heat, the banishing away of the evil thoughts, and the liberation from dreams[496], the cleanness of the prayer, the enlightener of the soul, the guarding of the mind, the mellowing of the callousness, the door for heart's pricking, the humble sigh, the glad crushing, the stopping of the much-speaking, the beginning of the quietude, the guard of the obedience, the easing of the sleep, the health of the body, the cause of the dispassion, the forgiveness of the sins, and the door and the delectation of the Paradise[497].

31) Let's ask this one too, batter said before all, this one that is chief of all evils waging war to us, the door of the passions, the falling of Adam, the perdition of Essau, the destruction of the Israelites, the sham of Noah, the traitor of Gomorrah, the shame of Lot, the destroyer of the sons of Eli, the guide of the defilements: where is it born at and which are its grandsons, and who crushes it and who consummately destroys it?

'Tell us, oh, you tyrant of all mortals, who bought all of them with the gold of the non-satiation: where have you gained the entrance within us from? And what you have given birth to, after you have entered? And which is your exit from us, or our deliverance of you?" And she, by complaining for the reproaches and by boiling up with anger and by tyrannically and savagely starting against us, it will answer us: "Why do you throw your insults at me, you who are my subjects? What do you strive yourself like, to get rid of me? This is because me to, I was tied to your nature. My door is the content of the foods, the cause of the insatiateness is the habituation, the ground of my passion [495] It is a forcing of the nature fallen into a living too much enslaved, and to too many material needs. But by that the nature is elevated to the natural living in the fullness of the spiritual powers which it received out of God, by which the sweetness and the need for the material things is overwhelmed.

[496] Of those dreams which lower us into inferior bodily pleasures.

[497] "If you master your stomach, you will dwell in Paradise. And if not, you will make yourself food to death". If you strengthen the ghost from withing yourself over your stomach, you will enter through it the living communication with God and you will dwell in the ambience of His love and power, that will keep you, through the dialogue between you and Him, eternally alive and happy. Otherwise, you will eternally be mastered by a body overwhelmed by passions and lacking the light of that ghost that is fille dup by God, or that is in dialogical communication with God.

is your habit you had previously to me, and the insensitiveness of the soul and the non-reminding about the death[498].

And why do you ask for finding out from me the names of my grandsons? I will count them up and they will multiply as the sea's sand. Still, listen which the names of the first born and most beloved of mine are: the first-born son of mine is the servant of the fornication; the second to him is that one of the callousness; and the third one is the sleep. Then out of them starts a sea of thoughts; waves of defilements, deep of unknown and untold uncleanness[499].

My daughters: the laziness, the much-speaking, the daring, the contriving of the laughter, the jokes, the opposition in words, the stubbornness, the non-listening, the insensitiveness, the slavery, the boasting, the love for adornments, which are followed by the defiled prayer and by the scattered thoughts, and often by despairing and sudden misfortunes, which are again followed by the despair that is the most awful of all.

I am warred but not defeated by the remembrance of the sins, and my enemy is the thought of death. But nothing can totally abolish men from among people. He who has achieved the Comforter, he will pray Him against me. And That One, persuaded, won't let me working fruitfully. And they who [498] "He who nourishes within himself the habit, he is like that man who fuels the fire. This is because the size of the power of both of them consists of matter". He who nourished the habit of the belly's covetousness, he nourished that fire that consumes and kills the ghost that is freedom and endless life in communication with God. That one will become the slave of the unfree repetition of some inferior laws which master upon him, and therefore, of the ghost's death, for the ghost through freedom will always be new and therefore it will have power and motif for being eternally alive. Right through the mode of its birth, the habit shows itself as being the power of the unfree repetition that kills the ghost. "If the habit asks once and its request is denied, you will find that habit weaker on the second time. But if the habit's ask will be fulfilled once, on the second time you will find it stronger against you. Keep this knowledge within you regarding all things. This is for that help is the better that you have it by guarding yourself, that that help coming from things".

[499] 'As the stirred-up sea raised up waves, and the waves will sink the vessel, likewise the storm of the thoughts, by raising up defilements, they will sink the soul and they will send the soul into the deep of the perdition". In the passions born out of the belly's covetousness, or in any other passion, there successively appear countless dirty thoughts which will sink the soul in them, so that the souls won't be visible anymore. He who is troubled by such thoughts, he will no longer be aware of his proper self, about that one's value, or about that one's responsible openness towards the godlike infinite and towards eternity. He no longer live anticipatedly the deep life of the dialogue with God and that life's wideness into God's infinite, but he will only live spasmodically, narrowly, and dissimilar in a passing manner into each of his thoughts.

haven't tasted That One, they necessarily ask for being sweetened by my sweetness. This one can be defeated by the manhood. And he who has defeated that, he obviously hurries himself up towards dispassion and towards the fullest righteousness".

The Word XV

About the Cleanness and The Incorruptible Non-Defilement (Chastity), Earned by the Corruptible Ones, Through Toils and Sweats [500]

1) The cleanness (the chastity) is a characteristic of the incorporeal nature. The cleanness is the most beloved house of Christ, and the heavens above earth, of the heart. The cleanness is the above-nature denial of the nature, and a true and wonderful contest of the mortal and corruptible body with the incorporeal ones[501]. Clean is him who has rejected form himself the love through love and who has quenched the material fire through the immaterial fire[502].

2) The righteousness is the common name of all virtues. Righteous is him who even in his dreams he doesn't feel within him a movement (of the passion), or any change in his state. Righteous is him who has achieved a perfect insensitivity to the difference between bodies[503]. This is the perfect rule and definition of the all-clean cleanness, to have the same soul's state towards the animated or inanimate, speaking of speechless bodies.

3) Let no one among them who have achieved the righteousness by will, to believe that he has achieved it by [500] In the Edition from the year 1970 and in the translation made after the Russian Edition is placed in the beginning of this Word, and in the G.P., as the last scholium to the previous Word, the following text: "Introduction to the Word about bodies and about the people form outside bodies. I have just heard this insane saying that the war against the bodies is a nephew of her. And there's no wonder. Because this is taught to us also by this old ancestor of ours, Adam. This is because if the had not been defeated by his stomach, he wouldn't have known, through his wife, the falling. So, they who keep the first commandment, they won't fall because of disobedience, but they will remain sons of Adam from before falling, by not knowing it like Adam did after falling, but they are a little lower than the angels are. But this happened in order not to remain the evil without death, and he who is called The Theologian says". Namely, if Adam hadn't obeyed the covetousness of his belly, he wouldn't have known his wife as woman. This is the teaching of the fathers. The man would have remained clean like the angels are, though a little lower than they, because of having a body (Hebr. 2: 7).

[501] By creation, the people received a feature characteristic to the incorporeal nature, and after getting out of sin they will impropriate again this quality and they will become familiar to the angels.

[502] The cleanness is not an indifference, a lack of vigor, but it is a spiritual fire that overwhelms the defiled heat of the body. "Always the desiring the great things, by having in its mastery and in its power the joy of the desired things, it forces one to despise and to get far from the small things, as all the angels have shown".

[503] Actually, this righteousness (σωφροσύνη) is both the bodily and the souly beauty.

himself. This is because of being impossible to anyone to defeat his own nature. Where the nature has been defeated, one will know that there is present also He Who is above nature. This is because what is smaller will be defeated, without any doubt, by what is greater.

The beginning of the cleanness is to disagree to the thought and the passing of many years, unaccompanied by images[504]. The middle of it will be the natural movement towards a multitude of thoughts and not only that much, without these thoughts to take shape, and without leakage. And its end is the death of the body (towards these movements), before the death of the thoughts[505].

4) Truly blessed is him who has gained a perfect insensitiveness towards regardless what body, color, and beauty.

5) He is not clean who kept his body undefiled, but he who obeyed to his soul, perfectly, all the limbs of his body[506].

6) Great is him who remains dispassionate when touched. But greater is him who remains unhurt by sight and who has defeated the sigh of the fire[507], by thinking at the beauty of the realities from above.

7) He who has banished away this dog by praying, he is like him who fight a lion. But he who defeats this dog with resisting it by word is like him who pursuits his enemy[508]. And he who has totally destroyed that one's rushing in, though he still is into body, he has risen on himself from his coffin[509].

8) If the sign of the true cleanness is that of remaining totally unmoved by the hallucinations while dreaming, then the

[504] "The natural movements without images of the body in dreams announce the soul's health to some extent. But the remaining of the images is a sign of the illness. And the showing of some indeterminate persons you will reckon it as symbols of the passion. And the showing of the determined persons is a sign of a recent sickness".

[505] The thoughts still can occur within mind, but the body won't feel any movement towards those thoughts.

[506] "He obeys the limbs of his body to his ghost, he who uses his senses according to the nature and still he won't be hurt by any of his senses, while looking in God's eyes and by always mirroring the untold beauties from there".

[507] The "fire" of a bodily beauty. This is because such a beauty ignites a fire into them who are non-strengthened.

[508] "The resistance by work means contradicting it. But is somebody doesn't firstly humble on himself praying, he won't be able to come to this". So, this one is on a higher level that the first one.

[509] He is like a resurrected one. He has a body but his body is totally spiritualized.

sigh of the debauchery will be, doubtlessly, having leakages in state of vigil, because of the memories.

9) He who strenuously and with sweats wages war to this enemy, he will resemble to that one who tied his enemy with a rope. And he who fights this war through restraint and by taking vigil, he will resemble to that one who will have shackled up this enemy with a chain. Finally, he who wages war through the humble cogitation and non-getting-angry and thirst, he will resemble to him who will have killed his enemy and will have hidden his enemy by covering him with sand[510]. BY sand you will understand the humbleness. This is for this one doesn't fatten up the pasture of the passions, but it is dust and ashes[511].

10) Another is him who has the tyrant tied through ascetic toils, another is him who has tied his enemy through humbleness, and another is him who has tied his enemy through godlike unveiling[512]. The first one resembles to the morning star the second one to the full moon; and the third one to the all-shiny sun. But each of them lives in heavens. Like at dawn there comes the light, and out of light there rises the sun, likewise we must understand and see too the mentioned ones[513].

11) The fox pretends of sleeping; and the devil pretends of being righteous. But the first one does it in order to deceive the bird, while the second one does that in order to destroy the soul.

12) You won't trust your body for the whole your life. And you won't allow your body to become daring until you will meet Christ[514].

13) Do not dare to think that by restraining on yourself, you won't fall. This is because, a certain one, while not eating anything, he was thrown off heavens[515].

[510] He refers to Moses's deed as to a symbol (Exodus 2: 12).

[511] Through sweats and straining it will even more fight the man. By the humble cogitation works mostly God for Whose presence fully opens himself him who feels his insignificance.

[512] Here the feeling of the presence of God is placed above humbleness. But without humbleness the feeling of the presence of God or His unveiling won't take place.

[513] "Or, like out of dawn comes the light, likewise out of ascesis comes the humbleness. And like out of light comes the sun, likewise out of humbleness occurs within man the godlike illumination that brings him the peak of the cleanness. On all levels the man is accompanied by a godlike light and he lives in the presence of God, but on different degrees".

[514] In the future life, in the fully spiritualized life.

14) Some knowers are right when saying that the rejection is the enmity towards body and the fight against belly.

15) In the beginners, the falls always occur out of delectation (with foods). In the ones from the middle, out of pride, though this happens also to the beginners. And in them who are getting closer to dispassion, only out of condemning their neighbor.

16) Some people blesse them who are born eunuchs as being delivered from the tyranny of their body. I bless the daily eunuchs who make on themselves eunuch with their thought like with a knife[516].

17) I saw some people falling unwillingly, and I saw others willing to fall but not being able to. And I reckoned the last ones as worse than those who fall daily, because despite they cannot have it, they still desire the stench.

18) It is to be cried for, him who falls; but it is more deplorable him who causes the falling of another too. This is because he bears the burden of both fallings and of the (sinful, t. n.) pleasure of the another[517].

19) Do not want to tip over the devil of the fornication with proofs and with resisting words, because of that one has good reasons as one who fight us in a natural manner.

20) He who wants to defeat his own body, or to wage war by himself, he will run vainly. This is because if the Lord doesn't tear down the house of the body and if the Lord does not build up the house of the soul (Ps. 126: 1[518]), he who wants to tear it down (to weaken in, t. n.) by himself will fast and he will take vigils in vain.

[515] He who thinks that by restraining on himself he won't fall, he will give birth to pride, and by pride he will fall too, as satan fell off heavens without eating anything.

[516] "By calling eunuchs who make eunuchs on themselves, he understood those who cut off the lusts of their bodies and even itself the consenting to those passions, which means the beginning od the cleanness, either for the Kingdom of Heavens or because of fearing the torments".

[517] He bears the burden of the another's sweetness, which himself doesn't taste, though. "He calls as cause him who urges an incites on another. This is because one pushed him by words, the another by deed, into the pit".

[518] In KJB we have: Ps. 127: 1: "EXCEPT the Lord build the house, they labour in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain."; in ROB we have: Ps. 126: 1: "If the Lord did not build the house, they who build it would toil vainly; if the Lord did not guard the city, he who guards it would take vigil in vain."

21) Place before the Lord the weakness of your nature, by knowing your own helplessness, and you will unnoticedly take the gift (charisma, t. n.) of the righteousness.

22) There is within them who sweeten on themselves with the passions, as I was told by somebody who experienced that, after they wake up, the feeling of a love for the bodies and a shameless and inhuman ghost, manifestly dwelling in itself the heart's feeling, and that makes the heart of him who is warred to feel the painful burning of his body as he would be in an over of fire. And that makes him not fearing God, and to despise the torments as a nothing, to feel disgust of praying, and while committing this deed to reckon even the remnants of the death which would see him, as some inanimate stones. That makes him as a madman, drunken with a ceaseless lust for the speaking and for the speechless being. "And if the days have not been shortened, no soul will be saved"[519], being dressed up in this body that is mixed with blood and juices. Because how could that be? This is because everything that is built insatiably desires what it is kindred with: the blood desires blood, the worm desires worm, the clay desires clay, so that the body desires body. Therefore, us too, the ones who strive ourselves in order to lust for the nature and for the Kingdom of God, we try, by using some craftsmanships, to deceive our body that deludes us.

23) Blessed are they who haven't crossed through the temptation of the mentioned war. Let's pray, at our turn, to forever be shunned of such a temptation. This is for they who has roiled down in the mentioned pit they have fallen far from them who climb and descend on that ladder, and they need for getting out of that pit many sweats accompanied by the fullest hunger.

24) Let's take heed also at out known-with-the-mind enemies (intelligible), because, as in a seen war, each of them has his place in their fight against us, they being appointed to a different work, and that amazes us[520].

[519] "The works of the evil ghost and the fierce rushing in of the war won't be shortened except by the power of the of-all-working Ghost. If that did not happen, he who is wared would not be able to breathe and to liberate on himself.

[520] "The enemy by seeing each of us tending towards and therefore more easily to be conquered by something, he will set us traps by that thing, by taking in account our habits and age and kind and place. He won't whisper non-corresponding thoughts to him who received those, but corresponding to him and easy to commit. And this is because of wanting to attract

25) I took heed at them who were tempted and I saw fallings which were graver than others. He who have ears let him hear. It is a custom of the devil, specially towards them who have chosen the monastic life and who live in ascesis, to move against them all his urge, zeal, craft, cunningness, and contrivance, often towards the opposite ones and not towards those which are natural, and so to wage them war. That's why, by living together with a woman and not being fought at all through that, they congratulated on themselves, because of knot knowing, the unfortunate ones, that where the big perdition is there won't be needed a smaller perdition too.

26) Woe to us, because of the killer and the wicked have got used to wage war to us and to enslave us due to these two reasons in the contrary-to-nature things, because we can easily find the matter for our falling and because we will receive a bigger punishment. This thing is known by him who first were domesticating wild donkeys he later will be mastered and pitifully mocked by the wild donkeys themselves; thus, he who was nourishing before with the heavenly bread, he has deprived now, on himself, of all good. But what is more wonderful is that, also after that one's repentance, our teacher Anthony suffered bitterly and shouted out: "A great pillar fell". But the wiseman hid the meaning of the falling. This was because he knew that there is both bodily and incorporeal fornication.

27) There is within us a certain death and a perdition out of falling, which we bear especially in our youth, and which I haven't dared to write about it, because I have been stopped by the hand of his who said: "The things committed by some people hiddenly, it will be shameful to speak of them and to write them down and to hear them" (Eph. 6: 12).

28) Paul called as "death: this body, that is my enemy and friend, mine and not mine: "Who, he says, will deliver me from the body of this death?" (Rom. 7: 24). And The Theologian calls this body as passionate, slave, and nocturnal[521]. But I the wared one towards a thing he desires and which is easy to fulfil". The Swiss philosopher Ludwig Binswanger spoke about a hook which anyone can be grabbed and driven with, namely a weakness of each one (Grundforme und Erkentnis menschilchen Daseins, Zürich, 1942).

[521] "It is mine as composing one nature (συμφυσής) with the soul and by being cared by the soul, but it is not mine because it fights my soul and it is my soul's beloved enemy, and that is a very difficult thing. The Apostle, because of the offenses happening to the soul form the body, he called the body as death. And Gregory the Theologian called the birth of the body as have gotten thirsty for finding out what these names have been used for.

29) If the body is death, as it was said, he who has defeated his body he unmistakingly won't die. And I wonder who is that man who will be alive and who won't see the death on this defilement of his body? But I beg you study this: who is greater? Him who has dies and resurrected, or him who hasn't died at all?[522] He who blessed the second one, he is a liar. This is because Christ after He died, He has resurrected. But he who blesses the first one won't let them who have died, better said who have fallen, any hope.

30) The man's enemy, the defender of the fornication, he says to the man that God is loving of people and so God will give him forgiveness for this passion, as a passion that is natural. But if we take heed at the devils' cunningness, we are going to see that after committing the deed they are going to call God as right and merciless Judge. They did so in the beginning to urge us to sin; but now they do that in order to sink us into despair. By being thus born the sadness and the despair, we won't be able to cry for ourselves, or to rebuke on ourselves, or to repent passionate, and slave, and nocturnal, because of being the fruit of the pleasure and of the night and bellow the freedom and the daylight of the ghost, and because of being opposite to the gh0ost. And the godlike John Chrysostom, by interpreting the word said by the Apostles, he says: "You won't reckon that he blames the body. For he didn't say the body of the sin, but he said the body of the death, as one that has been taken into slavery by the death, and not as the one who gave birth to death. And this isn't a sign of the body's evilness, but it is a sign of the damage the body has suffered. Like somebody who is enslaved by barbarians, he will be called as barbarian not because of being barbarian but because of being held by barbarians, likewise this body is called of the death because it has been taken into slavery by the death and not because of causing the death. That's why neither him wants to be delivered from death, but from the mortal body". Of course, the body doesn't conceive on itself during night, but in the same time with its conceiving the soul appears within body. But the soul can be called as of the day, for the soul is bearer of light and of meaning within body. And rightly so Saint John Chrysostom says that the body is not evil by itself and it is not the cause of the death. This is for the body hasn't been made by God for standing alone and for decomposition, but as accompanied by the immortal soul, in order to participate to immortality. Only because the soul's power upon body has weakened due to the getting far from God, the body has been submitted to the death. Then my body is both friend and enemy of mine. Here is a true dialectics. By body is my friend by nature, for I work through my body the good things and the works of my soul are committed through my body. But my body will become my enemy if it obeys the sin, when I have loosened my, to body, to some extent, the reins of my soul. But my body will still be my friend even then, because my body still remains the means which I can clean myself through and which I can be saved through.

[522] "Of him who has died to the sins and resurrected "through repentance", or who hasn't dies at all, namely he who in appearance has died".

for seen. And when this one gets quenched, we will be picked again by the tyrant with the motif of the love for people[523].

31) As incorruptible and incorporeal our Lord is[524], insomuch He rejoices the righteousness and the incorruptibility of our body[525]. This is because some fathers say that the devils rejoice nothing more than the ugly stench of the fornication. So, neither they rejoice of another passion more than this defilement of the body.

32) The cleanness (the chastity) is the consummate closeness to God and the likeness to Him, as much as that is possible to the people. Mother of the sweetness is the earth and the moisture; and mother of the cleanness is the quietude accompanied by obedience[526].

33) The body's dispassion gained through appeasement, when the achiever gets often close to the world, it won't remain steadfast. But that dispassion born out of obedience it will be everywhere experienced and steadfast[527].

34) I have seen the pride becoming cause of the humble cogitation[528] and remembering him who says: "Who has known the mind of the Lord?" (Rom. 11: 34).

35) The falling is the pit and the daughter of the boasting. But the often falling, in them who want can become cause for humble cogitation.

[523] After we have committed the sin, the devil will want to drive us into despair, by telling us that God doesn't forgive. By that the devil attempts to impede us from repenting. But if we do not listen to de devil, we will get rid of despair, so that the devil will bring forth again the motif of God's love for the people, in order the devil to urge us again to commit the sin.

[524] It is about God by and large, and not about the embodied Son of God. Or it is about the fact that our Lord's body after resurrection is so highly spiritualized than can be also called as incorporeal.

[525] The in corruptibility gained by grace, and not natural, as also our Lord's body is not incorruptible by nature but due its union with God-the Word.

[526] "Four are the virtues which clean the soul up: the silence, the keeping of the commandments, the narrowness, and the humble cogitation".

[527] Climacus is showing here too that the obedience is greater than the appeasement by oneself. This is because the obedience is not stalked by pride. And the obedient is used to people and therefore he won't easily fall because of them. In addition to that, the obedient has become used to always depend on the advice of his spiritual father and, through that one, to depend on God.

[528] "He who has elevated himself by pride he has been deserted by grace. And by falling he got humbled and thus his pride was cause of humble cogitation to him". When one elevated on himself he falls off the grace. This is because that one reckons that he is what he is by himself, and not by God. So, he is no longer open to God and he no longer ask God for help.

36) He who wants to defeat the devil of the fornication with the covetousness of the belly and with satiation, he is like one attempting to quench the flam by throwing in fuel.

37) He who attempts to stop this war only with the restraint is like one swimming by using only one hand while trying to deliver himself from ocean. You unite the humbleness with the restraint. This is because without the first one, the second one is useless[529].

38) Anybody who sees himself overwhelmed by some passion, let him arm himself, before everything, only against that specific passion. And especially against his enemy from withing him. This is because if that enemy is not destroyed, we won't benefit anything by defeating all the other passions. And after we have killed this Egyptian, we will see God, at out turn, in the pyre of our humbleness[530]. By being I tempted, I have felt this wolf causing to my soul, deceitfully, an irrational joy, tears, and comforting. And I thought, like a little child, that I was picking up fruits and not corruption.

39) "Every sin the man commits, is outside body, but he who fornicates, he will commit sin within his body" (I Cor. 6" 14). He says that, unmistakingly, because through leakage it defiled the being of the body itself, and that is impossible through other sins. And I ask why at any sin we have the habit of only saying that the people mistake, but when we hear that somebody fornicated, we say, painfully, that that one has fallen[531].

[529] "One must know that the restraint alone won't be enough for fighting the passions, if other virtues are not united to it. It especially is necessary to be united with it the humble cogitation, in order to remove the burden coming out of it. If this burden is removed, the dispassion will easily come". Saint Maximos the Confessor says as well: "The humbleness and the heavy suffering liberate the man from all sin. One cuts the soul's passions off, the another cuts off the body's passions. This seems to do the blessed David when praying to God and saying: "See my humbleness and my tiredness ands forgive all my sins" (Ps. 24: 19).

[530] Here are being used as symbols moments from Moses's live (Exod. 2: 12; 3: 2).

[531] "One can say that somebody has mistaken and that one has turned back again through that the path that he has deviated through. This is for, for instance, he has denied by tongue but he again confessed his sin with his tongue. Or he has stolen by using his hands and again he gave gifts with his hands. But he who has fornicated he cannot turn back on the same way which he has fallen on. But through another way. This is for he cries, he fasts, and he sighs. That's why the fornication rightly is called as falling, and not as a mistake. This is all the more so when it comes about the monastic life, because characteristic to the monk are the virginity and the promise. So, he who has broken the virginity he has truly fallen, by breaking his promise".

40) The fish quickly runs away from the hook, and that soul that loves the pleasure get far from quietude[532].

41) The fire will start when the devil wants to tie ones to others with an ugly tie, in order to test both parties.

42) Often, they who tend to love the pleasure seem to be engulfed by compassion, merciful, and having an easy to be pricked heart. But they who take care of cleanness, they won't have those in the same manner.

43) A knower man asked me a fearsome question: "What is, except murder and denial, the graver sin of all". And I said that that would be the falling into heresy. "And why, that one asked again, the Universal Church by accepting in the heretics, after sincerely anathemizing their heresy, finds them worthy of being imparted with the Holy Mysteries, but on him who has fornicated, by receiving him after he has confessed and stopped sinning, the apostolic canons command to be that one kept far from the All-Clean Mysteries for several years?". And I, getting scared because of the impossibility of answering that, that secret has remained unexplained[533].

[532] "He loves the quietude who is not tied by any passion to the world's things and to the people, and who doesn't love anything human". He doesn't love those in a bad manner, so that to be dominated by them or to be addicted to them.

[533] "The heresy is a deviation of the mind and a serving of the world. That's why it is a mistake. But the fornication deviates all the body's, and soul's senses and powers, and it transforms and it corrupts the image and the likeness by throwing them into nothing. That's why it is also called as falling". Another: "The heresies are out of pride, while the fornications are out of sweet living. The first ones are corrected through humbleness, while the second ones are corrected by hard living". In the Edition form the year 1970: "He hasn't let the question unanswered because it would be unanswerable, but he has done that willingly, for a deeper oikonomia. This is because whom is not obvious to, that falling into heresy if the gravest thing at God and at people? But because the passion of the fornication, as one that is planted into the nature and it exercises a great tyranny through pleasure, it will turn back easily and it often attracts the people and makes them slip even after repentance, and that's why he who has committed fornication is forbidden from the Holy Mysteries in order him not to turn back again to the his vomit and his straightening to become difficult to achieve; and in order to sow the fear within everyone, so that they to fight against this passion with the whole their power. And the rolling down into heresy is a souly passion and nescience occurring rather out of straying, or out of love for mastery, or out of vain-glory. But after him who has suffered because of it he wakes up, he won't be warred by it anymore, and he won't be troubled by his nature. So, what would be the need for keeping these ones far from churches? One can say it also thus: that the goal of them who advise, by teaching and by healing, it that of cutting the roots of the evil off, so that the evil not to sprout up again. That's why they aren't satisfied only by removing the evil, as in the case of those who have deviated from dogmas, or who have tended to heresy, but they also appoint a certain period of time, as the habit of the exactingness is (strictness, t. n.), so that they who have fornicated to forget about the ugly pleasure. This is because he who has fornicated, despite he knows that what he does

44) Let's research, let's measure, and lets' notice what sort of pleasure comes to us during singing of psalms, form the devil of the fornication, and what pleasure comes to us from the words of the Ghost and form the grace and the power from withing Ghost's words.

45) Do not delude on yourself, oh, young man! I saw some people praying with the whole their soul for their beloved ones. These ones, because they were moved by fornication, they reckoned that they were fulfilling a law of the love.

46) Somebody can get bodily defiled by touching. And there's nothing worse than this feeling[534].

47) Remember him who wrapped his hand in his coat, and make your hand dead towards your body's and towards the stranger body's natural and unnatural things[535].

48) I reckon that somebody mustn't be called saint by any means, before he has transformed this dust (his body) in a holy land, whether that would be possible.

49) When we lay down on the beddings, let's wake ourselves up. This is because then our mind fights the bodiless devils. And if our mind is loving of pleasure, it will become a traitor out of pleasure.

50) Let the remembrance of your death go to bad with you and wake up with you; likewise, the prayer of a sole thought to Jesus[536].

it bad, he still is attracted towards pleasure, because he lacks the brakes; he doesn't stray because of his nescience. The evil of the heresy stays only within the soul. But the fornication. By starting out of the free soul, it has filled up the body with corruption because of the sin. And then, he who by fighting in a natural manner turns somebody back from heresy, in the same time with that one's turning he has also cleaned him. But him who returns from fornication he will need time, tears, and fasting, in order to erase that pleasure imprinted within him, and in order him to heal the wound of his sin that has been imprinted into his body, and in order him to make his mind non-stollen and non-tending towards that sin, through long-forgetfulness. But if both of them remain unrepented, they won't have the same punishment", but the heretic will get a bigger punishment.

[534] "The mother of the deed is the touching, as of this one is the sight, and as of this one is the hearing and the smelling. So, if somebody doesn't come driven by those to touching, but he rather falls with his thought, he won't come to deed, better said he won't rush towards the evil deed. That's why is good for us to run away, starting right from seeing".

[535] "It is to be noticed that one must not touch with his hand or with some other limb, even if they live in the same monastic community, like that brother was who wrapped his hand into his coat, and with a patch of cloth, and so he crossed his mother over that river. And not only not to touch another limb, but let's neither keep any of our limbs naked. And this is especially when somebody is warred by his body. Let's neither scratch on ourselves, because the touching is the mother of the sin".

51) Some people reckon that the wars and the leakages are caused by foods. But I was as being very defiled by wars and leakages even those who were very ill or fasting at the peak.

52) I once asked about these things a monk among the most experienced ones and who had the gift of the discernment, and the blessed one taught me very wisely. It happens, the always-remembered one told me, in sleep, a leakage because of the abundance of the food and because of resting; another leakage is because of pride, when we boast off with our long period without leakage; and again, there is another because of despising our neighbor. Among these three ones, the last two ones can happen also to the sick people, or maybe even all three of them. And if somebody sees on himself cleaned of all these causes mentioned before, he will be blessed by having such a dispassion; he was suffered what happened to him only because of the devils' envy. God allows for a while that to happen to him, so that by this sinless happening him to achieve an even higher humbleness.

53) Let's nobody accept to thing during the day at his hallucinations he had while sleeping. This is because, this too is a goal of the devils to dirty us up in the state of vigil with those dreams.

54) Let's take heed at another trick of our enemy. Like the foods which harm the body use to cause us our illness after a certain time, or after a day, likewise it often happens regarding the caused which defile us[537].

55) I saw some people who delighted themselves (with foods" without being immediately warred. I saw them eating together with women and spending their time with women and having no evil thought at that moment. And by deluding on [536] In the Edition form the year 1970: "Prayer of a sole thought is called that one that looks at only one thing and it thinks at only that thing and it prays for only that thing: salvation. And that prayer is: "Lord Jesus Christ, Son of God, have mercy on me", and "Our Father"". The monk and any other believer don't thing at dogmatic teachings as at some objects of theoretical thinking. He things everything depending on his salvation. His salvation is what concerns him, it what he takes care of, and it is what he fights for. It is a thinking full of feeling. It is a thinking engaging the whole his being in an exciting mode.

[537] "This is a big cunningness. The devils, which never get tired of warring us, they stop that for a while, when they see at us some drowsiness. And this is for, by despising those things, because of our carelessness, us to commit those things all the time. Namely, while we are alone, the things which we are required in an attentive care, to put us to slip. That's why, let's guard on ourselves let, without other bodies, by using our own body, to commit that sin, or better said, to roll on ourselves down to the pit".

themselves, they believed in themselves and they no longer took care, because of reckoning that they had in themselves peace and safety. But they suddenly suffered the harm while being in their monastic cell. What harm? That harm that comes bodily and souly only to us while we are alone. He who has been tried he knows what I am talking about. But he who is inexperienced, he mustn't know about that thing[538].

During that time the sackcloth and the ashes are a good helper, and the standing during the whole night, and to limit our food only to bread, and the burnt tongue by thirst and to drink temperately, laying down in coffins and, above all of these, the humbleness; and, if possible, the help form a father or form a zealous brother, who are old in thought[539]. This is because it would be such a wonder a sole ship to be able to save itself from the ocean.

56) The same falling causes to one a hundredfold condemnation in comparison to the falling of another: according to the kind (of him who commits that), according to the place, according to his spiritual level, and according other many aspects[540].

57) Somebody told me an example of very high cleanness (chastity). When seeing somebody an exquisite beauty he extolled the Maker for that and even by seeing her he was moved to the love for God and tears sprang out to him[541]. If one

[538] "So, one must avoid any discussion with the women, for it could lead to a loosing of the brakes. And if that is impossible because of some needs, or due to the care for poor, one must talk to them while keeping his head down, and this is because to the many, or to almost all of them who have been defeated by the women's beauty, their death came to them through windows, as it took in mastery also on the great prophet and emperor (David) when he looked at the bringing-of-death bath".

[539] We were told about some monks from Moldavia who were sleeping in coffins. "This is for the coffins too they help one to get rid of temptation. But the humbleness is everything, for the coffin is about humbleness. Besides that, let's have a brother among the ones living in ascesis, to pray together with us".

[540] We are giving here the same scholium from the G.P. in the better wording form the Edition form the year 1970: "Kind (mode) he calls the education. Place, the fact of not being close to fallings. Spiritual level, the fact of having an experience of the monastic state. This is because him who was educated in good morals ad who was far from the place of the fallings and who is experienced in the struggle of the ascesis, if he allows himself to be defeated by fornication, he will have a bigger punishment than him who has been raised in carelessness and in disorder and he is inexperienced. And "after many others" means committing the dirty deed in a holier place, on in a monastery, or with a married woman, or with a bodily or spiritual kindship, or to be to another as well teacher towards an unclean deed".

[541] "I reckon he tells us about Nonu, who baptized Saint Pelagia. Nonu, by being him liberated from the war of the unclean passions which are mixed with the things, he has put on the coat like this has always such occasions, such a feeling, and such a work, he will have resurrected himself before the general resurrection[542].

58) We see the same thing in songs. They who love God are moved towards a smooth joy and towards the godlike love and towards tears, both by the external songs and by the spiritual songs. They who love the pleasure, they will do the opposite.

59) Some people, as I said before, they are much more warred in the appeasement places (in hermitages). And there's no wonder. This is because the devils like being there, due to the fact that they are banished by God to desert places and in the deep, towards our salvation[543].

60) the devils awfully wage ware to him who appeases on himself (to the hermit), for, by not benefitting the hermit anything out of his appeasement, to come back into the world. And they leave us who live within the world for, by feeling us as non-warred by the world, us to remain with them who live within world[544].

61) Where we are warred, there we will fight too, without any doubt, powerfully, the enemy. This is because when we do not fight him, he will be our friend too[545].

of the dispassion. When that occasion came to him, he didn't show himself passionate (for he was delivered form passions). He was looking at the beauties from above. But they who love the pleasure they will work the opposite".

[542] "Incorruptible resurrection he calls that one form the present life, a resurrection coming out of changing the morals. This is for, when the debaucher becomes righteous, and the greedy becomes merciful, and the rood becomes gentle, then the resurrection will have come while still being here, as a downpayment of the future resurrection. And what this resurrection is like? By the fact that the sin has been killed and the justice has raised, and the old life has ceased, and the all-new and angelic life is being lived". At the general resurrection, the body being totally spiritualized in a full dialogical communion with God, the body will be totally righteous, and therefore incorruptible.

[543] There can be also a deep neighboring the deep of the quietude and of the life into God.

[544] "The evil thoughts take their existence by our choice and out of the evil work of the devils. And the good thoughts – for we have been created good – come out of our choice, due to our freedom, and by the urge from the angels. So, the evil thoughts take their existence out of two springs, while the good thoughts come to existence out of three springs. Let's remember him who says: "Stand against the devil and he will run away from you" (Jas. 4: 5). Therefore, let's persevere in ascesis. On the opposite, not being us warred by him while we live within the world it is a cunningness of him and not a sign of his love for the people".

[545] When we are warred by demons it will mean that ourselves fight them too. This is because when we do not fight them, they are our friends, because we do ourselves what they like us to do.

62) By living for a while into the world, for some need, we are covered by the hand of God, maybe for the prayers of our spiritual father, and in order not to be our Lord blasphemed through us. But sometimes we are not tempted also because our insensitiveness and because the fact that we have from before much experience and satiation out of the seen, spoke, and done things. Or, it may be that the devils get far from us and willingly leaves us, and so the space emptied of everything else, it will be filled up with our self-appreciation.

63) Listen also to another craft and cunningness of this deceiver, all of you who have decided to accustom yourself into righteousness, and guard on yourself! Somebody among them who suffered the test of the cunningness told me that, very often, the devil of the bodies totally withdraws himself and it instills to the monk a peak piousness, and maybe even setting in motion in the monk a spring of tears while that monk seats with some women and talks to them and advises them to think at death and to judgment and to righteousness. And this is for, the miserable women, by being gained by word and by the pretended piousness, to run to the wolf as to the shepherd. And then, due to the birth of the habit and of the daring, that miserable monk to fall.

64) Let's run away, in order us not to see neither to hear the fruit which we have commanded not to taste out of. This is for I would wander is we reckoned us stronger than Prophet David. This would be an impossible thing[546]. So high and so great is the praise of the righteousness, that some of the father dares to call it dispassion.

65) Some people say that is impossible somebody to be called clean (righteous) after he tasted the sin. But I say: "It is possible and easy to him who wants to graft the wild olive tree with the good one" (Room. 11: 22). If the keys of the heavens were entrusted to him who was virgin with his body (Apostle [546] "Look here at the benefit of the moving from some place. This is for the Holy Ghost by teaching the fathers that he who lives in ascesis can change his morals by changing the place where he stays, the fathers shout out: run away from the places of the falling… and by mentioning David, the father thinks at David's fall with Beersheba". Fron Issac: "He who does not willingly get far from the causes of his passions, he will willingly and unwillingly be attracted by sin. And the causes of the sins are these ones: the wine and the women, the richness and the good prosperity of the body, but not because these ones are sin by nature, but because the nature easily tends through them towards the passions of the sin. That's why the man must guard on himself zealously".

John), he might dogmatize better the ones who were mentioned before. But is not, let them be ashamed by him who had a mother-in-law and who became righteous and who bears the keys of the kingdom (Peter).

66) The snake of the bodies has many sorts. To them who are inexperience it instills to only try it and then to stop. And this wicked snake stirs up the experienced ones towards trying again, through memory. Many of the first one are not warred for they do not know the evil; but the second ones suffer many troubles and wars as ones who crossed through trying this abomination. But often the opposite happens as well.

67) When some of us wake up form sleep full of kindness and peaceful, we are hiddenly comforted by the holy angels. And this will be especially when we go to sleep with much prayer and watchfulness. But on some occasions happens too us to wake up being hangover, we suffer that because of some ugly dreams and views.

68) "I saw the unclean one extolling on himself, raising on himself up, getting troubled, and getting infuriated within me, as the Lebanon's cedars. And I crossed through that, by restraint, and behold his anger was not like before. And I searched for him, by humbling my thought, and his place and his trace were no longer within me" (Ps. 36: 35-36[547]).

69) He who has defeated his body, he has defeated the nature. And he who has defeated the nature, he unmistakingly will be above nature. And he who has become above nature, "he has been only a little diminished in comparison to angels" (Hebr. 2: 7), not to say that not at all[548].

70) There is no wander that the immaterial one (the devil) fight the material one. It is a wonder though, really, that him who is into matter, by fighting his material, enemy, and cunning body, he will set his immaterial enemies in running.

[547] In KJB we have: Ps. 37: 35-36: "I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay tree. // Yet he passed away, and, lo, he was not: yea, I sought him, but he could not be found."; in ROB we have: Ps. 36: 35-36: "I saw the faithless boasting and extolling on himself as the cedars of Lebanon. // And I pass by there again and I searched for him and his place was not found."

[548] The body belongs to the nature. He who has defeated his body he has defeated his nature and he has reached above his nature, as the angels are. But this can be only by the Holy Ghost's powers. He remains a man but he will have a clean and give to God as a gift life, a life similar to that of the angels.

71) The good Lord shows much taking care to us also by the fact that he restrains the woman with the bridle of the shame. This is because if the woman rushed over the man, nobody would be saved.

72) The father established, with their gift of discerning, that other is the bait, another is the accompanying, another is the acceptation, another is the enslaving, another is the fight, and another is the so-called passion of the soul.

The bait, as clarified by the blessed fathers, it is the simple thought, or the icon of something brought into heart in understanding manner. The accompanying is the dialogue with what has occurred in passionate or dispassionate manner. The acceptation (the approval) is to agree – while the soul feels pleasure – to what has occurred. The enslaving is the drawing forcedly and unwillingly of the heart, or the persisting accompanying of the heart with that thing and the loss or our good state. They decided that the fight supposes an equally strong power to the power of that one whom the fight is against, a power that either will be victorious or it will suffer the defeat. And the passion they say that is what properly-said digs its den, during a long time, within soul, in a passionate manner, and it will drive that soul to become accustomed to it, so that the soul starts willingly and by himself towards deeds.

Among all of these, the first one is sinless; the second is not necessarily sinful; the third is sinful according to the state of him who fights. And the fight occasions either the crowns or the punishments. The enslaving is judges differently, if it happened during prayer or outside prayer; differently, the states from the middle, and differently the bad memories. And the passion if followed in everything, unmistakingly, either by the appropriate repentance or by the future torments. So, he who thinks dispassionately, the first thing, he will cut off all the following ones.

We can as well find fathers who clarify the things in the most detailed manner and who give to this another and thinnest meaning to those, which some of them call it self-forgetfulness. This means the fierce occurring of the passion, suddenly, without thought or image, within him who suffers it. Nothing appears more thinner, or more unnoticed as this in ghosts. It shows its presence withing some people's souls as through a simple and without dialogues memory, suddenly and in an unknown manner[549]. If somebody has been able to discover this thinness of the passions from within him, by crying, he could teach us how one can fornicate, passionately, only by eyes, by simply looking, by touching with the hand, by hearing a song, and all of these without any meaning and thought.

73) Some people say that the body comes to passions out of the fornication thoughts. Others, as well, say that if the mind doesn't' take it ahead, the body won't follow to the mind[550]. and the second ones bring in support of their affirmation the fact that the evilness of the bodily passions, saying: often, the thoughts receive their entrance within heart through an all-pleasant view, through a touch of the hand, by smelling a good fragrance, or by hearing a sweet voice. Let teach about these things, him who can do it into the Lord. This is because these things are very useful and necessary them who occupy on themselves with the doing through knowledge. But to the worker into the simplicity of the heart these things are purposeless. This is because the knowledge doesn't belong to all people. But neither the blessed simplicity is not had by all people, as shield against the devils' cunningness[551].

74) Some among passions come from within upon the body, while others on the opposite. To the people from within world happens the second variant. And them who live a

[549] "The enslavement follows to the accompanying and it requires a time and a mode of development. But sometimes it is united with the kidnapping and it takes place quickly and often without accustoming, suddenly, and without the soul having a state prepared for it. It brings the harm through simple thoughts and feelings, during the time which we are kidnapped in". ("kidnapped" is standing here for ecstasy (E. l. t.'s n.))

[550] "And evil thought is preceded by a passion. But the passion is preceded by the feeling. And the evil usage of the feeling is preceded by the mind". Another, belonging to Saint Maximos: "The passions are usually moved by senses. So, by being the love and the restraint present, the passions won't move, but if those are not present, the passions will move. The wrath needs more medicines than the lust needs. That's why they say that the love is great, for the love is bridle to the wrath. This one was called by Moses, symbolically, as killer of snakes in the natural things (Lev. 11: 22). Another, belonging to Isaac: "The movement of the thought within man has four causes: first, out of the will of the natural body; second, out of the hallucination of the thoughts related to the world's things it hears and it sees; third, out of untying the soul from the mind; fourth, out of the baits of the devils which wage us war".

[551] They who are on the step of the cleaning efforts through deeds, they use the knowledge of the work methods of the devil as described before. But to them who reach the simplicity of the innocence, that knowledge is no longer necessary. Their innocence itself will be their shield against those plots crafted by the devil. They no longer can be budged out of their innocence.

monastic life, it happens the first variant, because of the lack of occasions. I say about them the following: if you search the evil one for wisdom but you won't find wisdom at them.

75) When, after fighting the devil – which is the company of the clay - for a long time, we banish the devil from without our heart, by beating him with the stone of the fasting and by piercing him with the spear of the humbleness, the wicked one will dwell within our body as a whatever worm trying to defile us by inciting us towards beastly and inappropriate moves. This usually happen to them who obey the pride's devil. This is because of no longer bearing within their heart thoughts of fornication they coke closer to the pride's passion. That what I have said is true, they will see when starting to strive for some appeasement, they will study on themselves carefully. Then they find within themselves some sort of a snake hidden into garbage, advising them to strive with the whole their diligence and zeal in order they to achieve the virtue of some cleanness of the heart. They – the misfortunate ones - do not understand, that word that says: "What do you have and you haven't received is as a gift, or from God, or from the together-working and prayer of others" (1 Cor. 4: 7).

Therefore, let them take heed, with the whole their diligence, at the snake from within their heart and to banish that snake away, by killing that snake with their much humble-cogitation. If they do this and they estrange themselves form that snake, they will eventually be able to disrobe their skin vestments (Gen. 4: 24) and to sing to the Lord, as yore the righteous young men, the victory song, if by disrobing those skin vestment they won't find themselves naked of those vestments' innocence and of the natural humbleness[552].

But this devil takes in account, much more than other devils, the times. This is because this wicked one tried to war us especially when we cannot pray bodily too, against him[553].

[552] Therefore, it won't be enough to only disrobe the coat of the sensuality, but they must also put on the coat of light, of the non-evilness, or of the cleanness, or of the virtues. Among those must shine the humbleness. This is because otherwise all of those can be darkened by a new dirt.

[553] It won't be enough if we pray only with our soul, while letting the body unsupervised, but we must bring the body too in state of prayer: to kneel the body down, to make is seat still, piously, completely dressed up etc. We pray differently while kneeled, as philosopher Max Scheller admitted at his turn (Das Ewige im Menschen). But this won't mean that we can pray only with our body. "Rightly so, the prayer of the mind must be done by them who serve bodily. This is because, when the devils see somebody occupied only with the bodily serving,

They who haven't yet achieved the true prayer of the heart, they will be much helped by tormenting on themselves with the bodily prayer[554], namely by the raising of their hands, by beating their chest, by cleanly looking at the sky, by the noise of their sighs, by ceaseless kneeling. But because of often not being us able to do those when other people are present, right then the devils will war us. But also, when we have not the strength to resist our enemies with the vigor of our kind and with the unseen power of the prayer, we will forcedly obey them.

But you run way, quickly, if you can. You hide on yourself for a while and make yourself unknown. You look upwards, with the eye of your soul, if possible. And if not, at least do that with your external eye. You crucify your hands in an unseen manner so that through countenance as well you to shame Amalec and to defeat him[555]. You shout out towards Him Who can save you, not with skillful words, but with humble words. You start before everything with: "You have mercy on me, for I am helpless"[556]. Then you will know with the deed the power of The All-High and you will banish away in an unseen manner the unseen enemies, by unseen help[557].

He who has accustomed on himself to pray in this manner, he will be able to quickly banish away, even only with his soul, the enemy. This is for, the second thing is the gift given (αντιδώρον) by God to the first kind of workers. And rightly so.

76) Being I in a gathering, I knew there a very diligent brother who was tormented by evil thoughts. That brother, because of not finding an appropriate place to pray, by entering that place that is necessary to the belly, as he would have been forced by that one, he started there the full of power prayer against them who warred him. And because I rebuked him for as they reckon that is impossible to somebody to pray bodily against his enemies, the devils will rush upon him through the ugliest thoughts and they will drive him to defeat".

[554] The Occidentals, by not understanding these things, they have disrobed their cult of any effort of their body, of any training of their body, by renouncing to any effort of sanctifying their body, and by reckoning that the soul can be sanctified and humbled without (the participation, E. l. t.'s n.) of the body. They want to say their prayers while comfortably sitting on chairs, in the churches.

[555] In the Editon form the year 1970: "Namely on the devil of the fornication".

[556] "You will pray, in the first place, for being you cleaned of passions; secondly, for you to be delivered of nescience; and thirdly, of all temptation and forsaking".

[557] "Experiencing the help from God means receiving that gift that matches the mood of our soul".

the inappropriateness of that place, he answered me: "Being I chased by unclean thoughts, I prayed in an unclean place to be I cleaned up of those thoughts"[558].

77) All the devils struggle to darken our mind, and then they instill to our mind the things pleasant to themselves. This is because if the mind is not asleep, the treasure wont' be robbed. But the devil of the fornication does that more than any other devil. This devil, by often darkening the leading mind, it will determine the people to commit things which only they who are out of their mind do. That's why, for the mind awakens after a while, we will feel shame not only of them who see us, but also of ourselves, of our deeds, for our words, and for our indecent countenances, and we will be amazed by our previous blindness. That's why, many stopped on themselves from doing that, because of knowing this.

78) You turn yourself back to your enemy which, after some deed of yours, it impedes you from praying, or from praising God, by remembering him who said: "Because of my soul, by being tormented by the unwilling thoughts, it causes me toils, I will search for his justice against his enemies" (Lk. 18: 5)[559].

79) Who has defeated the body? - him who had crushed his heart. But who had crushed his heart? – him who has denied on himself. This is because how will be crushed him who has died to his will?

80) There is an addicted who is more addicted than the addicted. That one is him who makes know his dirt with pleasure and with sweet addiction to it[560].

81) The unclean and ugly thoughts occur within heart from the deceiver of the deluder of the heart., form the devil of the fornication. These thoughts will be healed by the restraint and by reckoning them as nothing.

[558] Form Saint John Chrysostom: "One must know that not the place of the prayer is searched for, but the mode of the prayer is searched for. Jeremy was in the mud and he still prayed to God. Daniel was in the lions' pit and he was taming on God. Moses was at sea and God told him: Why are you southing out at Me? The thief was on the cross and the heavens were open to him. Therefore, you too, wherever you are, pray with a clean conscience and God will hear you. This is for His are the earth and its fulness". Another: "Not the place, but the virtue makes the place worthy of honor".

[559] "You notice that he didn't say soul tormented by passions, but by pre-judgments (unwilling ugly thoughts". This is because being dominated by passion it will be the willing fruit of the freedom, but the pre-judgment or the suggested thought is an unwilling tyranny".

82) What I am going to judge this friend of mine, according to the example of the other passions, once I will tie him up, I don't know. This is because he will untie on himself before I to be able to tie him up; and I will reconcile with him before I judge him; and I will get tamed before I punish him. What could I be able like to defeat him whom I got accustomed to love him by nature? What could I be able to free myself of him whom I tied myself to, forever? What could I be able to kill him who will resurrect together with me? What could I show incorruptible him who has received the corruption by nature? What blessed thing I could tell him who has achieved, by nature, the blessed things?[561]

If I tie my body up with the fasting, condemning my neighbor (who doesn't fast, t. n.), I will again surrender myself to it. If I defeat it, by stopping myself from judging it, and by getting haughty in my heart, I will see on myself lowered again. My body if to me both together-worker and enemy; both helper and opposants; both upholder and contriver of traps; served, it will war me, melted (with the fasting, t. n.) it will lose part of its powers; rested, it will desert the order; worked, it will not endure; if I sadden it, I will endanger it; if I hurt it, I will no longer have whom to gain my virtues through; the same body I embrace and I reject.

What is the mystery regarding me? What is the rationality of my composition? How am I enemy and friend to myself? You tell me that, my companion, my nature! This is for I am not [561] It is a whole drama caused by the fact that on one hand the body is necessary and good, while on the other hand the body is to us cause of sufferance and of condemnation. This matter is not of a theoretical order, but it is one painfully lives. Any path we choose, it will be accompanied by pains. If we leave our body into pleasure, the pleasure will be passing and followed by temporary and eternal pains. If we stop our body from pleasures, that will mean as well a long pain to our body. The complexity of this matter is due to the fact that the body deserved to be saved, for the body actually is good, and my salvation depends on saving my body. But saving the body doesn't mean leaving the body in its pleasures, it doesn't mean saving the body as it is – because that is not saving -, but it means cleaning the body up and always fighting for our body's cleanness, or for oud body, and against what our body likes on each moment because of that one condemning our body to corruption and to eternal torments. The solution consists of finding out the equilibrium line between extremes, namely the right-reckoning. But this line is so thin like a knife edge is. We are always in the situation of tending towards a side or another. From here it comes the continuous drama not only in the human individual life, but in the whole mankind's history too. This is also the cause of the always new and great and complex adventure of the mankind.

trying to find out about you from somebody else[562]. How could I remain unharmed by you? How could I escape the danger of my nature? For I have joined Christ in order to bear enmity on you, how will I defeat your tyranny? This is for I have chosen to submit you to my restraint.

And my body answering, to say so, to my soul, it seems to tell this: "I won't tell you what you don't know either, but what we both know[563]. I have in myself the love as mother and my external servings and the resting in all things as birth-giver of my heat; and the occasions of the fire and the inside movements of the thoughts are born out of the previous resting and out of the committed deeds. I, by giving birth, I will give birth to the fallings, and being those born, they will give birth, at their turn, to the death by despair.

If you limpidly knew my and your deep helplessness, you would tie up my hands. If you tied up my covetousness, you would tie up my feet so I could not go further. If you got yourself accompanied by the obedience, you would pat with me. If you achieved the humbleness, you would behead me"[564].

Behold the victory fifteen. He who, while being into body, he has gained this victory too, he has dies and he has resurrected and he has known while still being here the downpayment of the future incorruptibility.

[562] I learn only out of my feelings. And I can learn out of somebody else's feelings only by comparing those to mine, for those cause mine, and they meet together.
[563] I won't tell you what you already know, but what we know together and only together, us, body and soul, forming a unit.
[564] Everything in the man's life tends towards an equilibrium.

The Word XVI

About the Love for Money and about non-Earning

1) Many among the wise teachers, after the tyrant we have been speaking about before, they usually presented that devil having a thousand heads, namely that of the love for money. In order us, the unwise ones, not to change that order, we are going to follow the same rules. That's why we are going to speak a little about this illness, if you want, and then, briefly, about the way you can heal yourself of it.

2) The love for money is the worshipping of idols, the daughter of the faithlessness, a liar excuse for illnesses, the foretelling of the old age, fear of drought, and the heralder of the hunger[565].

3) He who loves the money laughs at Gospels and he willingly disregard them[566]. He who has achieved the love he will scatter the money. But he who says that these two could live together, he will delude on himself[567].

[565] Actually, the stingy one sees in himself only his body. That's why he tries to prolong his body's life as much as possible, manifesting his insanity in this impulse of his towards some sort of duration he reckons as endless here on earth. That's why the passion of the stinginess is connected with a great cowardice. The stingy abdicates from everything in order to prolong his body's life. He who is free of greediness, on the opposite, by knowing that his souls in infinitely more valuable than the body, and that he is mortal, he has a great courage. He can renounce to all the worldly things, even to his own body, in order to keep his soul unstained.

[566] "He who loves the money, by detaching on himself with his mind from the love for God, he will love the people's idols, made of gold". "By hearing him the Gospel saying: "Sell all your wealth and give it to the poor" and the following things (Mt. 19: 21), he will laugh at that commandment and he reckons it as impossible. If all the people sold, who would by" Likewise, when hearing: "Do not take care of tomorrow" (Mt. 6: 34), he doesn't believe, but he does the opposite and he willingly transgresses that commandment resisting it". To such a human being, the banknotes and the material goods are the supreme values. Such a human being disregards not only God, but he tramples over people as well.

[567] "The live of him who loves the money it is like a chamber for dead. By having everything, he will think at what he doesn't have". Evagrius: "The love for money imagines a long old age and the helplessness of manual labor, and the future famine, and the illnesses to come, and the bitterness of the hunger, and at what is the ugliest: receiving from other the things he needs". By and large, the love for money maintains during life a permanent uncertainty and the fear of future, because of lacking the faith. It is manifested in it a natural thirst for an eternal life and the conscience that one cannot have an eternal life by loving the money, but it will still search to gain that eternal life but in a wrong place, and by deluding on himself consciously. On one hand, such a person put an absolute price on the earthly life, on the other hand such a person lives in a continuous fear.

4) He who cries out for himself, he will renounce to his body as well. When the times requires it, he won't spare his body either[568].

5) Do not say that you gather for poor. This is for with two pennies was bought the Kingdom of Heavens (Lk. 21: 2)[569].

6) He who loves the strangers and he who loves the money encountered one another. And the second one called the first one as reckless[570].

7) he who has defeated this passion of his, he will have cut off his worries. He who is tied up with this passion, he won't ever pray cleanly.

8) The beginning of the love for money is the motif of the giving of alms. Its ultimate end is the hatred for poor[571].

9) I saw poor in money people who enriched on themselves in the living of those who are poor in spirit. These ones forget about their previous poverty.

[568] He who loves the people will scatter his things, by giving those things away. He sees within man an infinitely greater value in comparison to material things. The stingy hasn't any love for people, or he loves only on himself. But he does to himself the greatest possible harm, because without love one is lost.

[569] Still, the fathers admitted also a raising of money in order to help the deprived. But they realized that such an approach is difficult not to become stinginess. Saint Maximos admitted that besides the love for pleasures, the love for glory, and the faithlessness, there is also a fourth cause for raising money: the oikonomia for the poor. "Only the steward takes care of them in the right manner, in order to satisfy the need of each one, and, on this purpose, he will always need the necessary means". And John the Carpathian said: "There is some people who earn more than they need, for the need of another, but not for the sake of the earning. This is for, despite it seems that he has more than he needs, that won't be true, because he reckons as his duty to take care of his neighbor".

[570] In stinginess and in greediness are implied all the passions. Saint Maximos said: "He who loves the pleasure he will love the money, in order to use the money for delighting on himself; he who loves the glory, in order him to be glorified for having money; the faithless, to hide his money and to guard his money, because of fearing either the old age of the illness, or the exile. And he believes more in his money than he believed in God Who is the Maker and the Care-Taker of the entire creation, down to the smallest and most insignificant creatures". Actually, he who love the money doesn't know that the supreme reality is a Person Who loves all things and Who has the power of upholding all things; but he trusts as supreme realities as being the material objects which are corruptible, and which have not the capacity of giving the gift of the live.

[571] This passion goes growing. On the measure it grows up, the love for people will decrease, reaching to hate the people. This is the passion which is seen - more than in all other passions - the progressive increase in callousness, of the human nature, a nature that is made for freedom through the love for God Who is the spring of the love, and through the love for people, made for the love among the human subjects who remain free by that. And a callous nature is a nature which the life has been withered in; it will be like Lot's wife, transformed in a salt pillar, which doesn't have and doesn't communicate the life.

10) The monk who loves the money he will be stranger to idleness, for he constantly reminds the apostolic word: "He who doesn't work, let him not to eat either" (2 Thes. 3: 10). And again: "These hands of mine served me and them who were with me" (Acts 20: 34).

11) The non-wealth (the willing poverty) is the rejections of the worries, the lack of worry of the live, the unimpeded travel, the estrangement from sadness, and the faith in commandments[572].

12) The non-earner monk is the master of the world[573]. He has entrusted the care (for himself) to God and by faith he has everyone as his servants[574]. He won't speak to the man about some need of his own, and the things given to him he will reckon those as coming from the hand of the Lord. The non-earner worker is the son of the dispassion, by reckoning the things he has as they wouldn't even exist; and when the time for withdrawal from the world comes, he will reckon all things as some garbage. And if he gets sad for something, he won't have reached as non-earner yet. That man who is non-earner, he will be clean in his prayer[575]. But he who loves earning, he will pray to the image of the matter[576].

[572] In the G.P. this head starts "The Word XVII) on non-earning. Likewise in the translation belonging to Veniamin Costache. Likewise in the Greek text published by Pietro Trevisan, S. Giovanni Climatico, Scala paradisi, Turin, 1941, translated in Romanian by Metropolitan Tit Simedrea. "The mental non-earning is the consummate dispassion, and the mind reaching it will leave all the realities from here". This is the "poor in spirit". From saint Maximos the Confessor: "The non-earner is him who has rejected all his wealth and he no longer has any earthly thing, except his body, but he also has broken apart from his affection for his body and he entrusted on himself to God, and he entrusted the care for himself to the rightly-believers". Another of the same one: "He who has rejected the things, as for instance the woman, the money, and the other material things, he has made a monk of the external man, but not yet the internal man, that is his mind. And one easily can make the external man to be a monk, if only he wants that, but not a little struggle is required for one to make a monk out of the internal man".

[573] He is not mastered by anything. He refuses all things, and wo he shows that he is above all things. If he has something, he will give that something away, and so he shows that he is master over anything he could have. He has discovered the endlessly richer in life plan of the persons and of the loving connection among them and, in the last analysis, of the Person of God Who founds the existence and the life in love of all persons.

[574] Servant whom he won't abuse of. Servants is the sense that he can easily gain them by his love which they will feel on themselves totally free in.

[575] The clean prayer is that prayer which the thoughts lusting for the things of this world do not occur in. The clean prayer is totally directed towards God. But as long as somebody still is attached to material things, he won't escape the thoughts about those material things. The

13) They who live in obedience are strangers to the love for money. This is because, once they have surrendered even their body, what thing will they have to earn for themselves? They can be found guilty of only one thing: of the easily moving from place to place.

14) I saw things which the monks endured to remain in one place for. But I blessed them who were changing the places for the Lord more than I blessed the ones who stood in the same place.

15) He who has tasted the realities form above he will easily despise the realities from below. But he who hasn't tasted the realities from above, he will still rejoice of earnings[577].

16) The reckless non-earner will suffer two harms: he restrains from the present things and he will deprive himself of the future things[578]. Let's therefore not to show on ourselves, oh, monks, more faithless than the birds are. This is because the bord do not worry, neither they gather[579].

17) Great is him who renounces, in good faith, to his wealth. But him who has renounced to his own will, he will be a saint. The first one will receive, hundredfold, either in money or in gifts. But the second one will inherit the eternal life.

18) The waves won't miss from the sea, neither the anger and the sadness will miss from him who loves the money.

19) He who despises the material goods, he will be delivered from suit and strife. But he who loves earning he will fight top death even for a needle.

20) The true faith will end the worries; but remembering the death will cause the renunciation to the body.

attachment to material things isn't a theoretical attachment, but it is a practical attachment, meaning a life lived in worry and in lusting for material things.

[576] In the Edition from the year 1970: "Namely he has his mind directed towards the image of the material things, or towards pleasures, and not towards God".

[577] He who has discovered the love of Christ, he will go everywhere for Christ, for he is not tied to a given place because of some earthly motifs. He has tasted the realities from above, namely the spiritual realities, and that's why he despises everything else.

[578] This is him who wastes because of who know what passions, non-seriousness, of laziness.

[579] "He understands, in a higher meaning, by "the birds of the sky", they who occupy themselves with the wisdom (with the philosophy) of the contemplation (of the spiritual sight) and they have totally estranged on themselves from the attachment to the world and to the world's noises, so that they stretch their mind only towards the godlike and heavenly realities".

21) There isn't in Job any trace of love for money. That's why he remained untroubled when he was deprived of his wealth.

22) The love for money is and it is called as the root of all evilness (sins). This is because it has caused hatred, robberies, divisions, enmity, strife, keeping the evil in mind, lack of mercy, and killings.

23) Some people consumed with a little fire a lot of matter. Others, by a sole virtue, they have escaped of all mentioned passions. This is called dispassion. But the dispassion has been born out of trying and tasting God and out of the care for a good answer at the time of the exit.

24) He who has read these things with the whole his attention, he won't miss the meaning of the word that the belly's covetousness is the mother of all evil. This is because they say that in its cunning and cursed giving birth to offsprings, its second daughter is the stone of the insensitiveness[580]. But that snake with many heads of the worshipping of the idols has impeded me to give this one its place, namely the third place – as I have learnt, unknowingly, from those fathers who have the right-reckoning, the chain of the eight passions.

After I have finishes speaking, according to the measure, about all the others, we are wanting to speak now about insensitiveness, as one that is the third and according to its birth it is the second. After it, we are going to talk about sleep and about vigil and not only about them, but we are going to tell a few words about the childish and unmanly fear. Abd these illnesses are characteristic to beginners.

Behold another fight. He who has gained it he will immaterially travel to heavens. This was the sixteenth fight. He who is victorious in it, he has achieved the love, or he has cut off the worry.

[580] "He understands by saying "the mother of all evil" the belly's covetousness. The second of its niece he said before that is the heart's callousness. Not he calls that as the stone of the insensitiveness, given that the insensitiveness and the callousness mean one and the same thing".

The Word XVII

About Insensitiveness, namely about the Death of the Soul Before the Death of the Body

1) The insensitiveness is a killed sensitiveness, both of the body and of the ghost that end into insensitiveness, out of a long illness and carelessness.

2) The lack of pain (the petrifaction) is a carelessness imprinted into nature, it is a numbed cogitation, it is a daughter of the passionate thoughts which have taken over the man (of the prejudgments), a freezing of the zeal, a snare to manhood, a non-knowing of the pricking of the heart, a gate of the despair, a mother of the forgetfulness, and according to its birth is a daughter of its daughter[581]. He is an interpreter condemning on himself[582], one who loves words which are opposite to him[583], and a blind teacher[584]. He speaks about healing his wound while not ceasing to scratch it. He speaks against his passion while not ceasing to eat what harms him[585]. He prays against

[581] The forgetfulness give birth to insensitiveness, and the insensitiveness, once born, it will give birth, at its turn, to forgetfulness. This is something characteristic to passions that, by giving birth to offsprings, their offsprings will give birth to passions, at their turn, namely the passions themselves will extent through the offspring which they give birth to. "The insensitiveness and the forgetfulness are reciprocally mothers and daughters to one another. And the forgetfulness is the rejection of the remembrance". By forgetting, the man will break on himself from past and future. He will reduce his life to the present moment, and he will darken on himself because of lacking a horizon. But not nourished by the memory of the past and by the thought of the future, the life of the instant will become weak, it will pass as a mist into nothingness, it will be mostly dead. The death of such a man is shown also in the fact that he lives idly, out of prejudgments, out of remnants of thoughts coming to him from others (from "Man" as Heidegger says), which persevere, dead, within him, without him giving them life again by thinking at them anew.

[582] His philosophy is fixed, rigid. His philosophy is no longer watered with the life that is in a continuous motion. He no longer thinks. He no longer vibrated deeply. His mind is dead. And by lo longer participating to life, he won't feel either the pains or the joys of the life anymore, except spasmodically. They mean, when they recommend you to be sensitive, you "to be a philosopher".

[583] He will condemn on himself again to death, by his unchanged interpretation, an interpretation that is not continuously rethought.

[584] "A philologist that resists to himself. He uses his word against his life that is necessary to him. One that resists his own words and deeds."

[585] 'He who pretend that he is a knower, but he is not a worker too, he is sick with insensitiveness". "Take heed that he who condemns on himself by his words he will benefit the passion but he immediately starts working that passion. He gets angry on its work against himself, but his words won't be ashamed, he the miserable. "I do the evil" he shouts out, but he zealously perseveres in what he does. He prays with his mouth against his passion but with his body he fights to do that passion. He philosophizes about death but he behaves like he wouldn't die. He sighs because of the separation from life but he sleeps like one who will live forever. He speaks about restraint but he fights for the belly's covetousness. He blesses the obedience but he is the first disobeying. He praises the dispassionate one but he is not ashamed of keeping the evil in his mind and of fighting for a rag. By getting himself angry, he will be sorry, but he will again be angry because he will have been sorry; and by adding defeat to defeat, he feels nothing. He reads about judgment and starts smiling. He reads about the vain-glory and right in the middle of his reading he suffers from it[586]. He appoints on himself to take vigil but he will immediately sink into sleep. He praises the prayer but he runs away from it like from the whip. After getting satiated, he will repent, but after a short while he will add another satiation. He blesses the silence but he praises it by much-speaking. He teaches about gentleness, but he often gets angry even while speaking about gentleness. By waking up from sleep, he sighs, but again leaning his head on the pillow, he will obey again his passions.

He rebukes the laughter and he smiling teaches about crying. He blames on himself in front of everybody, but he aims nothing out of that, if he does not achieve also his turning back by deeds". "He who speaks about sweetness, but he doesn't eat that, he actually shows the bitter one".

[586] It is a struggle of the human being against herself/himself, a continuous contradiction, one never fully surpasses, as that one described in The Word XVI. This is characteristic especially to the insensitive one, in the sense that that one is willingly complacent in this state. But this is in a greater of in a more reduced degree present in each of us. So, each of us is in a certain state of insensitiveness or of lack of shame and that's why each of us is menaced to fall even more in it. From Saint Greogry of Nyssa: "They who are overwhelmingly mastered by evilness, they will lose even the feeling of the passion which they suffer of". The insensitiveness grows up with the prolongation in time and with the increase of the sin. It is an increasing callousness of the nature. That will chock up all the impulses towards good, towards liberation. It will kill any twitching of real life, by living an ever deeply imprinted and all-mastering death within himself. This one must be harshly and continuously hit so that itself to be killed, for the nature to wake up from its death sleep. From here is explained the need for the harsh ascesis. The waken up benevolence, an occasional benevolence, it has no power to liberate from his insensitiveness him who has fallen into this death. The painful crying is the most decisive medicine against insensitiveness.

to gain his glory by that blaming. He passionately looks at faces, and he speaks about righteousness. He praises them who appease on themselves, while living in the world, and he does not understand that he is embarrassing by doing that. He extolls the rich and rebukes the poor. He always makes of himself his own accuser and he doesn't want to come into his senses, not to say that he can't.

4) I saw many people listening up when they were told about death and about the fearsome judgment, and those people shed tears, but, while still heaving tears in their eyes, they hurried up towards having their meal. And I wondered what could this master and treasury of the foul smell could like to defeat even the crying and to master through the much insensitiveness.

5) I have unveiled, according to my little knowledge and power which I have, the cunningness and the wounds brought by this furious and insane passion when reached on the peak. This is because I cannot stand speaking much about it. But him who can bring, into the Lord, out of his experience, the medicines for these wounds, let him not tire from ceaselessly doing that. I am not ashamed of admitting my helplessness, as one who is strongly dominated by it. This is because I couldn't even understand through myself its cunningness and crafts, if I didn't forcedly dominate it and if a didn't beat it with the whip of the fear of God, by hitting it with the ceaseless prayer. Only thus I was able to confess the said things[587].

That's why too, this tyrant and malefactor reckoned to say: "They who have a covenant with me, they will laugh when seeing the dead. Staying at prayer, they will be totally petrified, callous, and darkened. Seeing the Holy Table, they will remain insensitive. Being them imparted with the Gift they will behave like tasting a simple bread. Seeing them who are pricked in their hearts, they will laugh at those. I have learnt from that father who gave me birth to kill all of those who are born out of manhood and toils. I am the mother of the laughter. I am the nourisher of the sleep. I am the friend of the gorging. I do not suffer even a reproach. I am intertwined with the liar piousness".

[587] "On them whom the fear of God has hidden from, the insensitiveness will have tied them up in fetters." Another, belonging to Isaac: "That mind that is darkened by filthiness, it won't be able to get rid of forgetfulness, and the wisdom won't be able to open its door to such a mind".

Amazed by the words of that insane, I asked her for the name of him who gave her birth. And she said: "I do not have only one birth; my conception is mixed and fickle. I am made strong by satiation. The time makes me grow up. The evil habit strengthens me. He who is mastered by me he won't even be able to liberate himself from me. You persevere into much vigil cogitating at the eternal judgment; I might get a little weakened by that. Take heed at my cause, where I am born withing you from, and you fight my mother. This is because I have not only one mother in all people. You pray often near to the dead, by painting into your heart their indelible faces. But if you do not paint that with the brush of the fasting, you won't ever defeat me".

The Word XVIII

About Sleep and about Prayer and about that Singing in Community[588]

1) The sleep is in some way a state of the fear, an image of the death, and a stopping of senses. The sleep is one, but as the lust too, it has many causes and sorts. It is out of nature, it is out of foods, it is from the devils, or it may be also out of a prolonged and brought to very end fasting, from which the body wants to strengthen itself through sleep, because it has been weakened.

2) As the much-drinking comes out of habituation, likewise the much-sleeping. That's why let's fight it especially at the beginning of the rejection. This is because of being difficult to heal a habit.

3) Let's take heed and we will find out that when the spiritual trumped sounds (the bell for the prayer, t. n.), the brothers gather up in a seen manner while the enemies gather up in an unseen manner. That's why, standing next to the bed, one of those, after we woke up, they urge us to lay ourselves again on the bed, saying: "Stay there until the beginning songs will be finished and you will go to the church after that". Others, while we stand at prayer, they sink us into sleep; others prick us into stomach more than usual; other attract out mind towards ugly thoughts; other urge us to lean against the wall, by reckoning ourselves weakened; and sometimes they even make us yawning. Some of them often instigate us to laugh during prayer, so that the upset of God to be moved against us. Others urge us to hurry up while reading verses, because of our idleness. Others urge us to sing more because of the love for pleasure. And sometimes they even make our mouth to open and close with difficulty.

4) he who wants to stay before God into the feeling of his heart into prayer, he must stand as a steadfast pillar non-mocked by any of them mentioned before. He who really is obedient, he will suddenly stand up to pray, and he will often be wholly luminous and fully glad. This is for the ascetic is prepared and lit up from before, for his non-liar serving.

5) Everyone can pray together with the community, but to many it will be easier to pray only with one souly kindred brother. But only to a few praying by themselves will be easy. Singing together with the multitude, you won't be able to pry as liberated form the material realities. But you can make to yourself a work of your mind out of souly seeing the sung realities; likewise, you make a work of your mind that prayer appointed while waiting for a verse to be sung by your neighbor.

6) It is inappropriate to anyone to start working some unnecessary thing, or better said a necessary thing, while the community is praying. This was taught to us by the angel who appeared to Anthony the Great[589].

7) The fire oven probes the gold, and the standing to prayer proved the zeal and the love for God which the monks have.

He who gains this commendable thing, he will get closer to God and he will banish away the devils.

[589] Elijas Krithinus explains that place like this: "The angel that yore appeared to the great Anthony clearly showed that a monk must never occupy himself with some handwork during prayer. This is for the saint never saw that angel working and praying in the same time, but he once saw the angel sitting and working with his hands, and then leaving his work and standing for prayer. And that angel was sent by God, to the saint, to teach him what he must do and what he must live, in order him to be sure of salvation. That's why the angel said to the saint too: "Do this and you will live" (A. d'Andilly, quoted work, Introduction IV).

The Word XIX

About the Bodily Vigil and what One Must Do that[590]

1) Some of them who stand before emperors on earth are unarmed and bearing nothing; others have batons; other have shields, and other swords. Big and unparalleled is the difference between the first one and the last ones. These ones use to be even kinships and household to emperor. This is like in such things.

But let's see how we stand before God and Emperor at the religious services and as the evening, nigh, and day prayers. Some of us remain, starting with the evening religious service, for the whole night, as disrobed of the material realities and with their hands stretched to prayer, empty of any worry[591]. Others, after singing the plasms, they will remain in that (in prayer). Others persevere more in readings. Some of them fight manly, because of their helplessness, against the sleep, by handwork[592].

Among all of these, the first one and the last ones persevere in spending the whole their night in that way pleasant to God. The second ones take their vigil according to the monastic rule, and the third one travel on the least among all other ways. But God receives and cherishes the gifts brought by each of us according to his thought and power[593].

2) The watchful eye will clean up the mind, while the long sleep will petrify the soul. That monk that takes vigil will be the

[590] In the G.P. this is given as The Word XX.

[591] "Not for the whole vigil, not even for the whole Psalms' stichology. But this will be accomplished by him who spends the while night in psalmody; and by him who spends his night in repentance, in prayers, and in bowings to the ground; and by him who perseveres in crying, in tears, and in weeping for his sins. This will be accomplished, again, by him who reads verses, in the evening, for a while, and for the rest of the night he sings troparia. That will also be accomplished through doxologies and readings. And that will be fulfilled also by him who, by establishing a rule to himself, he doesn't kneel, according to the example of that one who was warred by the thought of the fornication".

[592] "They fight the sleep because of their mind's helplessness with the manliness of their patience".

[593] "God cherishes our deeds according to our intentions. "May the Lord give you, he says, according to your heart"" (I Kings 1: 17 (this is usually called in KJB as: I Samuel (E. l. t.'s n.))).

enemy of the fornication, while the sleepy one will be the fornication's husband[594].

3) The vigil is the appeasing of the (bodily) heat, it is deliverance from (defiled) dreams, it is moist eye, it is mellowed heart, it is guard before thoughts, it is oven for foods burning out, it is the taming of the passions, it is the punishing up of the tongue, and it is the banishing away of the hallucinations[595].

4) The vigilant monk is an angler of thoughts, being able to discover them and to fish them out easily in the appeasement of the night. That monk that loves God, when the bell rings the call to prayer, he will say: "Good"; the lazy one will say: "Woe, woe!".

5) The way he prepares the table it will give away him who is greedy for food, as the working of the prayer will give away him who love God. The first one will jump around while seeing the loaded table, while the second one will get saddened.

6) The much-sleeping is the cause of the forgetfulness; and the vigil will clean the memory up[596].

7) The plowmen gather their richness into barns and in wine cellar, while the monks gather their richness in staying to the evening prayer and at the night prayer and in the works of their mind.

[594] "We have been commanded to always take vigil in prayers and in readings, and especially on holydays. This is because that monk that takes vigil, he will thin up his understanding towards a sight (contemplation) useful to his soul. And the much-sleeping thickens the mind up. But take heed not to surrender yourself, during vigils, to the vain stories, or to the evil thoughts. This is because of being better to sleep than to take vigil while occupying on yourself with vain words and thoughts".

[595] "By vigil one weakens the ghosts of the evilness and the wars are appeased; or, by vigil the people's souls are brought to the pricking of the heart. This is for the vigil caused the crushing and humbleness". By vigil the impulses of the lusts will be weakened, as they are caused by body's surplus of vigor and by mind's lack of attention. The mind gains a plus of time for observing on itself, for deepening the existence's meanings, which appear during the vigil as unimpeded by the external preoccupations. That will help to choose the right deed also during the following moments. "What you remember, you'll do that! And what you don't remember, it will be unveiled to you. And you will not surrender your cogitation, undiscerningly, to forgetfulness, by forgetting".

[596] "The forgetfulness has not power by itself, but it gets strengthened by our carelessness, on their measure". The forgetfulness, by breaking up the connection between present and past, because of the passionate attachment to the present pleasures, it will weaken even the depth and the intensity of the present life, that is not consciously fructified by the memories of the past's deeds. The vigil deepens not only the signification of the present thoughts, but also of the past deeds, and it sees the present in the light of the while past and of the future.

8) The much-sleeping is an unjust husband. He kidnaps half of the live of the lazy ones, if not even more than that.

9) The untried (inexperienced) monk take vigil in dialogues, but when the time to pray comes his eyes get heavy. The drowsy monk is skillful in much-speaking, but when the time to read comes he cannot see because of being sleepy. When the last trumped will sound, the death will resurrect, and when the much-speaking starts the sleepy wake up. The sleep is a cunning friend; after we have got satiated, the sleep often leaves us, but when we are hungry and thirsty, the sleep strongly wars us. It advises us to start doing some handwork during prayers. This is because otherwise it is unable to banish away the prayer of those who take vigil. The sleep is the first one snaking into the beginners in order to war them. And this is in the attempt to make them idle since the beginning, or in order to make them come closer to the devil of the fornication. Let's not cease from singing together with the community until we have liberated on ourselves from sleep. This is for if we feel shame of sleeping while being in community, we won't fall asleep.

10) The god is the hares' enemy and the devil of the vain-glory is the enemy of the sleep.

11) The merchant counts his earning after the day passed, and the worker counts his gain after singing[597].

12) After you have finished your prayers, wait, and you will see flocks of devils. This is because they have been warred by us and after we have stopped praying, they attempt to upset us with inappropriate hallucinations. While sitting, you take heed and you will see those who are accustomed to steal the firstfruits of the soul.

13) One can still cogitate while sleeping at the words of the psalms, but there is also the possibility that those words to be put in our mind by the devils in their attempt to make us haughty. And I wouldn't have wanted to say the third thing. But somebody forced me to. That soul that ceaselessly cogitates at

[597] "The day and the toils passed, so the trade will stop. The merchant studies what he has done: whether he recorded losses of he was defeated. If he toiled according to the man or according to God. The second one is of him who love God, the first one is of this who loves the vain-glory. One brings earning, the another brings loss and useless toils".

the Lord's words will become accustomed to move into those words even while sleeping[598].

This is for the second thing is a reward for the first thing, towards banishing away the ghosts and the hallucinations.

The nineteenth step. He who has climbed on it he has received light within his heart.

[598] "He who cogitates like David did, the whole day at the Lord's law, he also cogitates at that law at night, in order with himself to be accomplished that word that says: "And into His law he will cogitate day and night" (Ps. 1: 2); or: "I am sleeping and my heart watches" (Son of ongs 5: 20.

About the Coward or Unmanly Fear

1) He who occupied himself with the virtue in congregational monasteries, or in the company of a few others, he won't usually be warred too much by fear. But he who lives in more isolated places let him fight not to be take in mastery by the offspring of the vain-glory, or by the daughter of the faithlessness: namely by fear.

2) The cowards fear is a childish feeling in the soul oldened by the vain-glory. The coward fear is a weakening of the faith, one shown in the fearful waiting for some unexpected things[599].

3) The cowards fear is a danger before fear; or it is a full of trembling heart's feeling, shaken and scarred of doubtful misfortunes. The coward fear is the lack of entrustment. The proud soul if the slave of the coward fear, because of trusting on himself and because of fearing the noised of the things and the shadows[600].

4) They who cry and are not scared about pains, they won't be mastered by fear[601]. But they who get scared of something they will go out of their minds. And rightly so. This is for is righteous Him Who forsakes the proud ones. He wants us to be punished, so that we the others not to get haughty.

5) All the fearful love the vain-glory. But not all of them who are fearless are humble in thought too. It is a known fact that neither the thieves nor the tombs robbers have fear[602].

[599] "The fearful man suffers of two illnesses: of the fewness of his faith and of the love for his body".

[600] "When somebody falls because of his recklessness, that one will become both fearful and daring. This is because his soul is weakened. This is because, as the body when having lost its balanced composition, it will have become difficult to master and it will surrender itself to all passions, likewise the soul when will have lost his power and humble cogitation, by receiving a helpless accustoming, it will become coward and daring and mindless, and the soul will no longer know on himself. And he who no longer knows on himself, how will he know either the above-nature realities".

[601] In the Edition from the year 1970: "Απηλγηχότες may be those who do not spare their body and who will wait without being upset and without sadness regardless what happens to them". In G.P." "The uncomforted crying, received within soul, it has raised above the fear".

[602] Belonging to Saint Issac: "The good-daring and the despising of the dangers from one of these two: either out of the callous heart or out of the much faith in God. The heart's

6) In those places where you got accustomed to feel fear, you won't hesitate to go in the darkness. And if you shake a little, this childish and laughable passion will get old together with you[603]. By going, you accompany yourself with the prayer. And after you have reached there, you will stretch your hands upwards and you will defeat the enemies with the name of Jesus, for there is no stronger weapon that that in heavens or on earth[604]. When you have been delivered from your illness extoll Him who has delivered you. This is for, by thanking Him, He will forever cover you.

7) Like you won't ever be able to fill up your stomach at once, likewise you won't be able to defeat your fear at once. On the measure of your crying, your fear will decrease quicker, but if the crying is absent, you will remain fearful. "My hair is rising up", said Elifaz (Job 4: 14, "talking about the devils' cunningness".

8) Sometimes the soul is the first to get scared, some other times the body, and the fear passes from one to another. When the body gets scared and this fear without reason doesn't penetrate the soul too, then the deliverance from illness will be close. But when we receive with an open soul all the expected things, into the crushing of our heart, then we will truly be liberated from fear.

9) Not the darkness or the wilderness of the places strengthen the devils against us, but the lack of fruits of our soul; and sometimes we are as well punished out of oikonomia.

10) He who has made on himself servant only to the Lord we will no longer fear except his Master. But he who does not callousness is followed by the pride, and the faith is followed by the heart's humble cogitation".

[603] G.P." Like the tadpoles scare the little children, likewise the shadows scare the proud ones". In the formulation from the Edition form the year 1970: "He calls it as childish passion, because it uses to war on those who are children with their age into Christ. Tho them who are consummate, such a fear is worthy to be laughed at; this is because the tadpoles as well scare the little children and not on the consummate ones".

[604] "It is not possible that him who really fears God to be afraid by something else, because he says that besides God, he fears no one else". The fear of God gives courage to overcome any cowards fear of anything on earth. In addition to that, the fear of God actually isn't a fear that God will do something bad to him; all the less of anything else, by knowing that God will defend him or, if he loses the earthly things and even the present life, he will have a life full of all gods in heavens. So, he who entrusts himself to God, he won't fear. On the opposite, he who ears the earthly things and who trust only to himself, he always will fear those in a real manner. Neither the own self not the world's things assure him against troubles and misfortunes, not to say against passions.

fear This One yet, he will fear even his shadow. The body gets scared when a ghost stands next to us in an unseen manner; but when the soul gets gladdened, and humble, there is an angel staying next to us. That's why, by knowing out of his work the state of the present one, let's quickly jump at prayer for our good guardian has come to pray together with us[605].

It will be obvious that he who has defeated the cowards fear, he has surrendered his live and soul to God.

[605] "The thought's humbleness and the simplicity enlightened by the gift of the discernment will make us knowing the differences of the ghosts".

The Word XXI

About that Vain-Glory of Many Sorts

1) Some people love giving to vain-glory a place differing from that of the pride, in the chaining of their "Words". That's why they also say that there are eight thoughts which lead and uphold the evilness. Gregory the Theologian and other teachers reckoned these as being only seven. I will more gladly follow to these ones. This is for who will still have pride after he has defeated the vain-glory? They differ only to such an extent as the little child has by nature in comparison to the grownup man and the wheat in comparison go bread. This is because the first one is the beginning, while the second one is the end. But about the beginning and the fullness of the impious passions of the self-appreciation, we are going to briefly speak at the right time. This is because he who tries to philosophize on these in details, he will be like the one vainly attempting to weigh the winds.

2) The vain-glory is, according to its nature, the changing of the nature and the crocking of the morals[606] and the stalking for what could be despised. And according to its quality, the vain-glory is the waster of the toils[607], the loss of sweats, the stalking of the treasure, the niece of the miscreance, the forerunner of the pride, the wrecking of the ship in the harbor, or the ant in the threshing field. The vain-glory is thin but it plots against all toils and fruits[608].

[606] A Latin proverb says: "Honores mutant mores". The modest man from yesterday, after being appointed on a higher office, he will change overnight and become unrecognizable. His nature will be changed, his morals will be crocked. At Veniamin Costache: "The thought of the vain-glory is very thing and it easily stays next to virtues. He who is mastered by the vain-glory he wants to show his ascesis to the people and he hunts for glory form people. By being someone deceived by devils, they will make him liking to be taken care by women, and to like hi vestments to be touched by people, and they even bewitch him with the priesthood; then he likes that the people are searching for him and they stand around him and he like thinking at the fact that if he doesn't untie them, they will be tied in heavens. And after the devils make him haughty with such vain-hopes, they will fly away from him leaving him either to the devil of the pride to temp him, or to the devil of the sadness bringing upon him thoughts opposing the hopes". Another: "The feature of the monk's vain-glory is that he wants to be extolled for his virtues. And characteristic to the monk's haughtiness is to boast himself for his deeds and to despise others. And to the people from within world is characteristic to want to be glorified for their beauty, for their richness, for their mastery, and for their wisdom".

[607] All the virtues gathered within man by toils are defiled as a bucket of milk by a drop of oil.

3) The ant waits for the harvesting to be finished and the vain-glory waits for the richness to be gathered. The first one rejoices for stealing; the second one rejoices of wasting. The ghost of the despair rejoices seeing the sin being multiplied; the ghost of the vain-glory rejoices seeing the virtue being multiplied. This is because of the door of the first one is the multiplication of the wounds; and of the second one is the richness of the toils[609].

4) Take heed and you will see this unlawful one as flourishing to the tomb in garments, in spices, in convoys, and in others[610].

5) The sun shines in all things plentifully. And the vain-glory rejoices of all toils. For instance: I am mastered by vain-glory when fasting; by untying my fasting in order I not to be known (as fasting) I will again be mastered by my vain-glory for being modest; by dressing myself up in luxury clothes I will be defeated by my vain-glory, but if I change my clothes for modest ones I will again be defeated by my vain-glory; speaking, I will be defeated by it; keeping my silence I will again be defeated by it[611]. Regardless what I will throw this three-horned globe, deliverance is that of no longer keeping the evil in mind dome by him who spoke evil of us or of him who spoke too much".

[609] This is a paradox. The multiplication of the virtues opens the door of the vain-glory. The multiplication of the sins banishes the vain-glory away. "By being the passions moved, they will banish the vain-glory away, and when the passions has got scattered, that will make the vain-glory to return". But this doesn't mean that we must surrender ourselves to passions in order not to reach at vain-glory. That would mean us to remain down into mud in order us not to boast with our cleanness. We must get rid of both of them. But the beginning is done by getting rid of passions.

[610] This refers to those burials done with great pompousness. This can be seen also in the costly monuments some people have paid for being erected at their tombs, while they are alive or after their death.

[611] We can see here the author as describing with the same extraordinary talent of fine analyst of the complex souly states, the same contradictory intertwining between passion and the good aspiration, as in other of his Words as well (for instance in The Word XV). Each moral flower or virtue has in its shadow the vain-glory. This intertwining is characteristic to a yet non-consummate stage of our nature. Our passion is so much intertwined with our nature so that it seems to us that fighting it we actually fight our own nature, and that's why is so difficult to fight it out. Only a radical understanding of our nature as fully finding on itself when forgetting about itself, or when it totally surrenders itself to God and to the fellow humans, it will get us out of this contradictory and tormenting state, in order to elevate us to that supreme paradoxical state, one happy and fully conform with itself: that state which you no longer are through yourself, but through God, through Him Who loves you and Whom you consummately love.

always one horn will stand upright and that one will be the one from the center.

6) He who loves the vain-glory he is an idolater. Seeming that he worships God, he actually wants to be pleasant to people and not to God. Anyone who loves showing himself he loves the vain-glory[612]. The fasting of him who loves the vain-glory will not be rewarded and his prayer won't be accepted. This is because of working both of them for the vain-glory. The ascetic who loves the vain-glory he will lose in twofold manner: he both will melt down his body and won't take any reward.

7) Who won't laugh at the worker for the vain-glory, who at the singing of psalms is moved by this one either to laugh at or to cry for all things?

8) God often hides from our eyes the good things we have gained. But that man that praises us, or better said who deludes us, he has opened our eyes through his praises. But by being our eyes opened, the virtue will disappear[613].

9) The flatterer is the devils' servant[614] and the guide of the pride and the destroyer of the heart's pricking and the

---

[612] The Veniamin Costache Edition: belonging to Saint Maximos: "In all the things we work, God searches for our purpose: if we work for Him or for something else. So, when we want to do a good thing nor for being pleasant to people but for God, let's have Him as our purpose so that, by always looking at Him, us to work for Him, lest we will both endure the toil and lose the reward". In the G.P. belonging to saint Basil: "What is not done for the love for God, but for being praised by people, regardless what that be, it won't have the praise of being honored by God, but it will be given the judgment for a deed done for being pleasant to people, for enmity, for envy, or for some other guilt. That's why our Lord calls them all as deeds of the injustice, telling those who said: "We ate before You" and the others: "Get far from me all of you who work the injustice" (Mt. 7: 23). These ones are them who abuse the gifts they have received from God for their own pleasure". Another: "Vain mind has he who hunts for the praise from people and he hopes for nothing else". From Saint Maximos the Confessor: "Among the deed done by people, some of them are good by nature, but (sometimes, t. n.) they aren't good by their cause. For instance; fasting, taking vigil, praying, reading the plasms, giving alms, accommodating strangers, all of the are good deeds by nature, but when done for the vain-glory they will no longer be reckoned as good."

[613] If we see our virtues they will be lost.

[614] "Let's avoid being congratulated and congratulating on one another openly. The second part belongs to the flatterers and of the ones moved by devils. The first one belongs to those who are frivolous and whose victories are easily stolen. The second one is as spoiler of the goods, the angel of the devil; the first one is a reckless inheritor, one prepared to immediately lose the ascetic toils. Both of them work together to their reciprocal perdition". Another, belonging to Saint John Chrysostom (from Veniamin Costache): "Praising on those who live in sin will bring more dreadful torments that craving for sin, and even than those of the ones who live in sins… and rightly so, for this deed belongs to a broken judgment and to a soul that suffers of an unhealable illness. This is because he who praises the sin has deprived on destroyer of the goods, and he deviates other from the right way. “They who bless you, says the prophet, they deceive you” (Isa. 3: 12).

10) It is characteristic to those who are haughty in their thought to endure manly and joyfully the reproaches but it is characteristic to those who are saints and pious to cross through the praises unharmed.

11) I saw some ones crying for having been praised; but I saw others as lit well with anger, changing, as in a market, a passion for another.

12) “Nobody know the things of the man, except the ghost of that man from withing him” (I cor. 2: 11). Let therefore be ashamed and muted they who start praising on one another plainly.

13) When you hear that your friend or your neighbor speaks evil of you in your absence, or when you are present, you will show him your love, by praising him[615].

14) It is a great deal shaking off your soul the praise from people; but it is an even greater thing to remove the praise from devils.

15) Humble cogitation shows not him who defames on himself; this is because how could him not suffer on himself? But he who while rebuked by another, he won’t diminish his love for that one[616].

himself of that healing out of repentance”. These ones strengthen them who commit sins, in their sins.

[615] “The consummation of the humbleness consists of joyfully enduring the liar blame”. Belonging to Saint Isaac: “He who is humble in soul he won’t be troubled when injustice is done to him, neither will he defend on himself against the blame put on him. And he will receive the calumny as truth and he won’t take care of convincing people that he has been calumniated, but he asks for forgiveness”.

In this case the calumniated one by praising his calumniator, he won’t flatter on that one neither will he push that one to the sin of the vain-glory, but he shows him his love. That one will feel on that moment that he is not flattered and he neither will fall into vain-glory, but he will be ashamed of what he has done, because he will see that he has done injustice to the calumniated one. And this will help him correct himself by following the example of that one’s kindness.

[616] “You reckon that you have humbleness, but you cannot suffer even on yourself defaming on yourself. Therefore, if you want to know whether you are humble in your thought, check on yourself regarding the said things”. Namely you defame on yourself, sincerely, in front of yourself and in front of others. Another, at Veniamin Costache: “He who endures with humble cogitation the accusations brought to him, he has reached the consummation and he is praise by the holy angels. This is because no other good deed is so difficult to commit as this one is”.

16) I have noticed that the devil of the vain-glory instills to one of the brothers thoughts and he unveils those thoughts to another brother; and he makes this one to tell to that one the things which are in his heart, in order that one to congratulate on himself as a foreknower of that one's thoughts. And sometimes the devil even touches the body's limbs making them twitch[617].

Do not love another when he invites you to be bishop, or hegumen, or teacher. This is because it is very difficult to chase the dog away from the countertop of the butchery. But when this one sees some ones as having a little peace, he immediately urges them to come back from wilderness into the world. Go, he says, for the salvation of the lost souls.

17) As another is the countenance of the blackmoor people and another of the statues, likewise is different the sort of the vain-glory of those who live in a congregational monastery than of those who live into wilderness[618].

18) The vain-glory welcomes the laymen arriving to the monastery from the world and it drives the most frivolous monks to welcome those who arrive; It makes them fall at those ones' feet and he who actually is mastered by pride he will dress himself up in humbleness[619]. They who sit sat the table (he who

[617] "You watch this cursed passion that mixes itself with the virtues, until it will destroy the virtues. This is because, if the man doesn't cut off this dishonest passion, he won't be able to advance towards God. This is because to this passion follow all evilness". This passion closes our road towards God, by locking it up in self-admiration. Another, belonging to Saint Maximos: "Do not compare yourself to the weakest among people, but rather do that to the most advanced into love. This is because by comparing on yourself to the first ones you will fall into the pit of the self-appreciation; but if you compare on yourself to the love of the last-mentioned ones, you will advance towards the height of the humbleness".

[618] In the Edition from the year 1970: "The vain-glory from wilderness is proven in any humiliator deed: in fasting, in sleeping on the floor, in the other heavy sufferings. And the vain-glory form coenobitic community is proven in pleasant things, in material goods, in wellness, in the luxury richness. The first ones praise on themselves with their humiliator deeds, the second ones praise on themselves with their good deeds, so that one of the vain-glory is like that of the monks while the another is like that of the laymen".

[619] At Veniamin Costache: from Isaia the Hermit: "Take detailed heed at yourself, in order not to accept anything by any means, if you are not fully entrusted that God has sent you out of righteous fruits. Only then you will accept those things with the whole peace. And when you see that those things are out of injustice, or out of strife, or out of cunningness, or out of hypocrisy, you will reject those and throw them away, by reckoning that is better a small piece with the fear of God, than many fruits out of injustice". Another (ibid): "Let your hand not to be stretched for taking, but rather for giving". From Saint John Chrysostom: "The greedy holds the things of the poor. And you, by talking those things and by making them as part of your wealth, you will have shown yourself as more unjust than the unjust one and you loves the vain-glory) urges them to restrain on themselves and he mercilessly rebukes them who are inferior him. Among those who stand and sing psalms, he makes men out of drowsy ones, and he praises them who have no voice as having beautiful voices and he praises the sleepy as taking vigil. He flatters him who leads the rule of the singing and he asks him to give him primacy; he calls him teacher and father until the strangers leave.

19) The vain-glory instead of being cause for honor, it will often be cause for dishonor. This is because, by getting its disciples angry, it will bring them a great shame[620]. On them who are harsh to people the vain-glory will make them gentle; the vain-glory haughtily uses the natural gifts and by that the vain-glory often brought the misfortunate ones down.

20) I saw a devil upsetting his brother and banishing that one away. This is because, by getting angry a brother once, and because in the same time arrives there some laymen, that miserable jumped from anger to vain-glory. That was because he couldn't serve both of them in the same time.

21) he who has sold himself to the vain-glory, he will have a twofold life. This is because while living among monks with the schism, he lives in the world with his thought and with his memory.

22) If we prepare on ourselves to be pleasant to those from above, let's strive to taste the glory of the ones from above. And he who has tasted that glory from above, he will despise the whole earthly glory. I wound wander if somebody disregarded the second one without tasting the first one.

will have become greedier than the one who is greedy for money". Another: "Question: How comes that many greedy ones do not endure bad things" Answer: They will suffer more, even if they do not suffer immediately. This is because, it they escape for now, you rather fear that they will suffer greater torments. And if they escape, their inheritors will not escape. Question: And what can be this thing just like? Answer: It is very just, because you who have inherited a wealth made out of injustice, though was not you stealing it, you sweeten on yourself with it. That one gathered his treasure out of sin and out of anger for the day of the anger. And you have inherited the sin and the anger and you will be held accountable for everything… So, if you know the people whom injustice was done to, given them back and do what Zacchaeus did with much plus. And if you do not know those, share to the needy and then you will find the reward, and that one will find his eternal rest. Question: What one keeps the truth into injustice like? Answer: When somebody uses for his own pleasures, the things given him by God".

[620] "He who loves the vain-glory hypocritically mimes the non-getting-angry; and when he is caught in that, he will suffer dishonor instead of honor".

23) Often, because of being us robbed by the vain-glory, by coming us back we will rob it with even more skillfulness[621]. This is because I saw some ones kidnapped from their spiritual work by the vain-glory; but by being set a worthy to be rebuked beginning, the end has become worthy of praise, due to the change of the thought[622].

24) He who boasts on himself with his natural gifts, namely with his smartness, teaching, clear reading, easy speaking, skillfulness, and with all the others alike, which he has got effortlessly, we won't even gain those goods from above-nature[623]. This is because he who is unfaithful in a few aspects, he will be faithless in many aspects and mastered by vain-glory.

25) Many torment their bodies vainly for achieving the peak of the dispassion, for the richness of the gifts, for working the wonders, for the power of the foreknowing, but they do not know – the unfortunate ones – that not the toils but rather the humbleness is the mother of their goals which they are searching for. He who asks for gifts in exchange for his toils, he has laid down a wrong foundation. But he who reckons on himself as debtor, he will suddenly gain an unexpected richness[624].

26) You won't listen to the whisperer who advises you, allegedly, towards the benefit of our listeners, to announce your own virtues. "This is Because what will benefit the man even of gaining the whole world, and he will damage on himself" (Lk. 9: 25). Nothing can build up on those who look at us, as a humble and non-liar behavior and a non-pretending word. This one will [621] The vain-glory has stolen the virtues gained by us. But later on, we have come back and we have robbed it of its power.

[622] Nebuchadnezzar's anger was worthy of rebuke. But it was worthy of praise his humbleness, or his humble cogitation from the end.

[623] Belonging to Maximos: "If you want to really become knower and modest, you won't serve to the passion of self-appreciation, you will always search into creatures what is hidden to your knowledge. And by finding out very many things which are hidden from you, you will wonder about your knowledge, and by restraining your thought, you will understand many and great things, because otherwise the opinion that you know won't allow you to advance in knowledge".

[624] This teaching is totally opposite to the Catholic theology on merits and supra-merits. The whole Christian effort aims to clean and consummate the nature and it doesn't aim to merits received from outside. And the consummation is an endless progress. And the gift from God will come by itself, and not as a merit, otherwise that will no longer be a gift. Our free love is welcomes by the free love of God, or vice versa.

become to others too, an urge not to get haughty. And what is greater than this thing for the benefit of others?[625]

27) Somebody among those who can see noticed it, and by seeing that he told the followings: "While I was sitting in assembly (synaxis), there arrived the devil of the vain-glory and the devil of the pride and they sat on both my sides. And one of them pricked my rib with his finger lover of vain-glory and he urged me to talk about some view (contemplation), or about some work I did while I live in wilderness[626]. And after I removed this one by saying: "Let them turn back and be ashamed them who think evil to me" (Ps. 34[627] and 69), the one from my left side quickly whispered at my ear: "Good, you've done good, and you've become great, by defeating my all-shameless mother". Towards this one, by immediately continuing the next part of the verse, I said: "Let them turn back who tell me: Good, you've done good"[628].

Asking him that one: "How could be the vain-glory the mother of the pride?", he answered: "The praises make one to get haughty and boast himself up; and when the soul has got haughty, the pride will take that soul to heavens and it will lower that soul to deeps"[629].

[625] From the Epistle of Athanasius towards the virgin: "If you show your life, that will cause you vain-glory and it will harm you. But if you find a soul that co-speaks with you in order that soul to do the things of God as you do, you will unveil your secret only to that soul. In that won't be vain-glory, for you speak for a soul to be saved. Them who have the desire to listen you will speak the useful things. And if you pray or sing or read, you will sit apart and let no one hear that except yourself; and if you have, do that also with one or two virgins of the same soul with you". Another, belonging to Saint Mark: "If you want your sins to be covered by the Lord, you won't unveil your virtues to the people. This is because everything we do with our virtues God will do the same with our sins". Another, belonging to Saint Maximos: "Like the shown treasure will be stolen, likewise the virtue made known or public will be consumed".

[626] Belonging to Saint Maximos: "They who always search for our soul, they always search through unclean thoughts to push us to sin with our cogitation, or with our work. But when they find our mind unwelcoming, then they will be ashamed; and when they find our mind occupied with spiritual views, they will be banished and totally ashamed".

[628] Both those seemingly good urges are defeated with the humbleness. The deeds which the monk is called to are good in themselves, but they are actually must not be done when the urges to them come from devils, namely they occur intertwines with the temptation of the pride.

[629] "The banished vain-glory will give birth to self-appreciation; but if the vain-glory stays, it will cause the pride".

28) There is glory that comes from God: "On them who extoll Me, He says, I will extoll them" (I Kings[630] 2: 30). And there is a glory coming out of devilish preparedness: "Woe to you, he says, when the people will speak good on you" (Lk. 6: 26).

29) You will clearly recognize the first sort of glory when, by reckoning it as harmful, you will reject it with the whole your diligence and you will hide out your living[631]. And the second one you will recognize when, while committing any work, you will do that in order you to be seen by people. This unclean one urges us to hypocritically pretend that we have a virtue which we actually don't have. But "let your light lightening, He says, before people, in order they to see your good deeds" (Mt. 5: 16). But the Lord often brings them who love the vain-glory to the removal of their vain-glory, by the dishonor happening to them.

30) The beginning of the non-searching for the vain-glory is the guarding of the mouth and the love for dishonor[632]. The middle of if is the stopping of all though works of the vain-glory. And the end (if there is some end to the bottomless sack)[633], it is that of insensitively do before the multitude the things which bring you dishonor.

31) Do not hide your shame by reckoning not to give cause for offense[634]. But one must not use the same bandage for any mistake, but according to the sort of the mistake.

32) When we call the vain glory to come to us and when the vain-glory comes to us uncalled but sent by others, and when we start doing some things aiming to achieve vain-glory, let's remember our crying and our duty to make, fearfully, that prayer appropriate to our state, and we unmistakingly will shame the shameless, if we take care of the true prayer. And if not, let's quickly remember our death. And if do not succeed

[630] This book in KJB is usually called as I Samuel. (E. l. t.'s n.)

[631] "When somebody doesn't do the thing of God in order him to be seen by people, but they who accidentally see him will extoll him, that one will suffer no harm out of those praises".

[632] "He who takes care of his tongues he proves to be a worker of the virtues. And non-punishing the tongue show him as not having the virtues in himself".

[633] There is no end to the vain-glory. This is because the vain-glory is equal (but in the opposite direction, E. l. t.'s n.) to the humbleness. And the humbleness is an infinite deep (abyss) or height. This is because the humbleness is a bewilderment about God, and for God is infinite the humbleness will grow up infinitely too.

[634] One understands that here is about admitting it accompanied by repentance, and not cynically and shamelessly. This is because when recognized by deep and ceaseless repentance, it will rather determine others to shun themselves of it.

either by doing that, let's fear the shame that follows to the glory. "This is because "he who extolls on himself he will be humbled" (Lk. 18: 14). And not only there, but unmistakingly here too[635].

33) When the praisers, better said the deluders, the start praising us, let's remember the multitude of our lawlessness, and so will be found worthy of the thigs we said or did.

34) There can be, without doubt, hear by God in their prayers also some of them who love the vain-glory. Our Lord uses to welcome their prayers and requests, so that by receiving some of the gifts through prayer, they not to increase their self-appreciation.

35) Often, the simple ones won't fall into this venom. This is because the vain-glory is the rejection of the simplicity and the hypocritical and pretended living.

36) Often, the worm grows up and gets winged and climbs on height. Likewise, the vain-glory by evolving and growing, it will give birth to pride that is the chieftain and the completion of all evilness.

This has been the twenty-first step. He who hasn't allowed to be himself caught by it he won't fall into the mindless pride that is the enemy of God.

[635] "When you see a human thought tempting you with the glory, you will limpidly know that the shame is being prepared to you".

The Word XXII

About the Mindless (Uncontrolled) Pride

1) The pride is the denial of God[636], is the contrivance of the evils, is despising the people, is the mother of the condemnation, niece of the praises, the sign of the fruitlessness, the banishing away of the help from God, the forerunner of the going out of mind, the cause of the fallings, the cause of being taken into mastery (by devils), spring to anger, the door of the hypocrisy, the cause of the mercilessness, the guardian of the sins, bitter accountant, judge of the people, the opposer to God, and the root of the blasphemy.

2) The beginning of the pride is the end of the vain-glory. The middle of it is despising the neighbor, the shameless heralding of the own ascetic toils, the self-praising within heart, and the hatred on reproach. And its end is the denial of the help from God, the boasting with the own zeal, and the devilish habit.

3) Let's hear all of us who want to be delivered of this pit. This passion often likes to take its food even out of the thanks we bring to God. This is because in the beginning it doesn't think at denying God.

4) I saw a man thanking God with his mouth and boasting on himself with his thought. About this confessed that Pharisee who hypocritically said: "Thank You, God" (Lk. 18: 11).

5) Where this falling has taken place there has been the previously dwelling the pride. The second thing is heralder to the first thing.

6) I heard someone among those honored by me: "Think at the fact that twelve are the dishonorable passions. If you love willingly one of them, namely the self-appreciation, that will fill up the room of the other eleven passions"[637].

[636] "This is because he who reckons that he accomplishes something by himself, and not by the help from God, he will deny God and His help in all things. That's why he will fall too, because of being forsaken by the grace of God Whom he disregarded".

[637] "A certain philosopher said that the self-appreciation is a sacred illness". Another: "I saw a dreadful disease; that one suffers of it who guards at himself a richness towards his bad". Our Lord said: "Woe to you, who enrich yourself, because you will hunger; because you will get your payment" (Lk. 6: 25). The self-appreciation is a disease, because he who suffers of it, he won't live in reality. The richness he guards is smoke. But that smoke not only will not only

7) The monk who gets haughty in his thought, he opposes himself in words. But he who is humble in thought he won't know how to opposes himself even with his look. The cypress doesn't lean down its branches to lay down on the ground; neither does that that monk who has a proud heart, in order to obey.

8) That man who has a proud heart he will want to master[638]. Thus, he won't be able not to lose on himself until the end, as it usually happens; better said he doesn't want that either.

9) "To the proud ones the Lord stay against" (Proverbs 16: 5 and Pt. 5: 5). And who can have mercy on them? "Unclean is at the Lord everyone who is proud in his heart" (Proverbs 16: 5). And who want to clean up on like this?

10) The punishment of the proud ones is the falling and the tempter is the devil. Their forsaking is the getting out of their minds. Of the first one often the people got healed by other people. But the last one cannot be healed by people.

11) He who reject the reproach it will imprint the passion to himself. And he who accepts the reproach he will be untied of the passion's tie.

12) If a certain one fell off the skies only because of this passion, without any other passion, we must see if it happens that somebody ascends to heavens only by humbleness, without other virtues.

13) The pride if the loss of the (spiritual) richness and of the sweats. "He shouted out and there was nobody to save him" (Ps. 16: 4, 5), and that was, doubtlessly, because he shouted out with pride "towards the Lord and the Lord didn't hear him"; doubtlessly, because he didn't remove the causes he was praying against.

14) A very knower old man was advising a young man who was haughty. And the young man, being blind, said to the old man: Forgive me, father, I am not proud". And the all-wise old man told him: "And what other more obvious proof you can give us, son, except the word you have just said: I am not vanish and let him empty, but it will make him merciless and hated by God and by people, because that is a smoke that intoxicates him. He gets out of the connection with God and with the people who are the sole reality keeping himself too in reality.

[638] "Do not hurry yourself up to place yourself as chief of the brotherhood in order not to take the burdens of the stranger sins on your shoulders".

proud"[639]. Some people like these are helped much by obedience, by a more difficult and submitted to dishonor living, and the reading of the above-nature ascetic toils of the fathers. Maybe thus, they will have a tiny hope for salvation, they who are sick with this passion.

15) It will be a shame if somebody boasts on himself with a foreign adornment[640], but the last insanity will be one to boast on himself, by his self-appreciation, with the gifts he has received from God. You will boast yourself only with your accomplishments from before your birth[641]. This is because what you have achieved after your birth have been given to you by God, ad a gift, as your birth itself.

16) Only those virtues belong to you which you have committed mindlessly. This is for your mind is a gift given you by God. You show me your ascetic toils you have borne without your body, only out of your zeal. This is because your body doesn't belong to you, but to God.

17) You won't trust, until you will receive the decision, by seeing that one who, even after he entered the wedding room,

[639] Climacus is noticing here the same intertwining of the passion with the aspiration contrary to it, as in other previous places too. The sap of the passions goes up into man out of his stained nature, in the same time with the sap of the virtue, as the corruption in a tree's fruits. It is very difficult to remove the passion and to spare the virtues in the same time. He who reckons on himself that he is humble, that one is not. One constantly must remove form net to his virtue the awareness of having that virtue. The conscience must have only God as its content, and the own self must be seen as only nourishing itself out of God. All the virtues are God's powers within us. The ascending towards this conscience is a continuous distillation effort, of thinning the human nature, in order to make it totally transparent to God, by removing any thickness of the human nature and its visibility.

[640] "It is shown that nobody must praise and boast on himself due to anything he has committed through his cogitation and power, without the help from God". Another: "He who restraints on himself he retains on himself from the covetousness of his belly; the non-earner, from greediness; he who appeases on himself, from much-speaking; he who is clean, from loving of pleasure; the shy one, from fornication; he who is content with what he has, from the love for money; the gentle one, from disturbance; the obedient, from strife; he who accepts reproaches, from hypocrisy; he who prays, from despair, the poor, from richness; the confessor, from denial; and the disciple from idols worshipping. You can see that every consummate virtue until your death won't be anything else but restraining from sin. And restraining from sin is a thing of the nature, and it is not a price paid for the Kingdom of God". How far are we from the theory of the merits and of the supra-merits developed by the Catholic theology! In a following footnote we are going to see that the Kingdom of God is the gift from the Holy Ghost.

[641] He says that ironically, as the followings as well.

his hands and legs were tied up and he was thrown into the outer darkness (Mt. 22: 12)[642].

18) Do not raise your neck, since you are earthly. This is because many fell off the skies, despite they were saints and immaterial.

19) If the devil dwells within his workers, the devil will show himself in their sleep, or even when they are awake, by taking the devil the countenance of a holy angel or of a martyr, and the devil will share some secret, or some gift (charisma), in order to delude the unfortunate and to make them get out of their minds[643].

20) Even if we had suffered tens of thousands of deaths for Christ, we wouldn't have fulfilled everything that we owe to, because other is the blood of God and other is the blood of the slaves; unmistakingly, according to worthiness, and not according to being[644].

21) Let's not cease researching together and understanding the enlightener fathers from before us; and then we will find on ourselves as not thoroughly following their way of living, neither guarding piously the promise, but as living worldly.

22) The real monk is him who has the eye of his soul unscattered and the feeling of his body motionless[645]. The real monk is him who calls his enemies as some beasts, and be whips them up in order they to run away from him. Monk is

[642] Belonging to John the Carpathian: "The wedding garment that Christ's words speak of, you reckon it as being the gift of the Holy Ghost; this is because him who hasn't made on himself worthy to put the Holy Ghost on, he won't be partaker to the heavenly wedding and to the spiritual dinner".

[643] Neither the unveiled mysteries nor the given charismas are real, but they are apparent contrivances; they are superficial "mysteries" or "charismas", and even still non-unveiled lies.

[644] Christ's blood spilled for us is, according to the being, a human blood like ours too, but according to worthiness His blood is infinitely more valuable, for it is the blood received by the Son of God as His won blood and given by Himself for us. So, through Christ's blood we are imparted with the endless love of God. That's why, even if we had given our blood through death for Him, we couldn't have paid Him equally, so that we couldn't have paid our dets we have to Him. This is because somebody has given you something, you will have paid your debt only by paying back the same price. But even so little as we can give to Christ, it is out of the power shared us by Him through His blood. We love Him, at our turn, a little, by taking power out of His endless power. Where is then the ground of our pride? The proud one doesn't love Christ not even the little as a man can love Him, on the ground of His love.

[645] "When we separate our mind from God either by much-speaking or by joking, or by something else, and so we scatter our mind, we won't be monks".

him who lives in an uninterrupted going out of himself[646]. The monk is so transformed by virtues, as somebody else is transformed by pleasures[647]. The monk (the monasticism) is an endless light in the heart's eye[648]. The monk is a bottomless deep (an abyss) of the humbleness, which the whole his ghost has sunk in and drowned.

23) The haughtiness causes the forgetfulness of the mistakes. This is for the remembrance of those will cause the humble cogitation[649].

24) The pride is the ultimate poverty of the soul who hallucinates to himself the richness and who reckons the darkness as light[650]. Not only that doesn't allow, the unclean one, any advancement, but it also throws off the height him who is mastered by it[651].

25) The pride is that apple that is rotten within, but outside it shines of beauty. The proud monk won't need a devil, because he is a devil to himself and an enemy waging a war to himself.

26) As strange is the darkness to the light, as stranger is the proud from virtue. Withing the hearts of the proud ones will

[646] Into an uninterrupted going out of his mind into God, or in a ceaseless ecstasy.

[647] His nature has changed its quality by virtues. He doesn't have the virtues, but he is that what the virtues are.

[648] This is for, by being ceaselessly attentive to his nature, he will uninterruptedly see through it the endless light of God, through the transparency of his own heart, as through an eye which the light from God can be seen in.

[649] But also inversely: "The forgetfulness of the mistakes sometimes causes the self-appreciation, but on some other times it occasions the insensitiveness". There are two sorts of forgetfulness; one is the forgetfulness about oneself because of his pride, and that gives the appearance of a self-knowledge; and there is the forgetfulness about oneself (the kidnapping, the ecstasy) out of humbleness, one that is the real self-knowledge. This is because the self knows out of pride it will be a superficial self, a superimposed self, one that stands on sand as a void, while that self knows out of humbleness it will be the self eternally sunk in its steadfast and true foundation that is God. The proud one, by not knowing his sins, he cannot discern between himself and God in his imagination, and so he won't see his foundation. The humble one, by knowing his mistakes or his insignificance, he will see the foundation upholding him for eternity, and forgiving him.

[650] Detached from reality, the pride counterfeits the reality by imagining it. He lives in a phantasmagory, in a prolonged hallucination. Emptied of everything, the pride one hallucinates that he would be rich; darkened, he imagines that he is into light; but his richness itself is poor, and in its light, he sees nothing real, nothing substantial. That's why also his spiritual food is poor, unsubstantial.

[651] "He who gets proud he will be allowed to fall into blasphemy. He who gets proud for his virtue with the deed he will be allowed to fall into fornication; and he who gets haughty for his wisdom, he will be allowed to fall into the traps of the nescience".

be born blasphemy words; within the souls of the humble ones will be born heavenly views. The thief hates the sun and the haughty despises the gentle ones[652].

27) I do not know how, but many among those who are proud they do not know on themselves and, by reckoning on themselves as dispassionate, they will have seen their poverty (of virtue) at the time of their exit from this life. He who is mastered by pride, he will need God. This is because the help from people will be useless to him.

28) I once caught this mindless deceiver walking within my heart, borne on the shoulders of its mother. And by tying both of them up with the tie of the obedience, I whipped them up with the whip of the humbleness and I forced them to tell me who they entered within me. And they, while being whipped, told me: "We don't' have beginning, neither birth, for we are the beginning and the birth-giver of all passions. And not only a little, it wages us war us the crushing of the heart born out of obedience. That's why, by wanting to become masters upon the realities from heavens, we have been removed from there[653]. We have made on ourselves, to say it on short, of all of them who work against the humble cogitation. This is because all the things helping the humble cogitation will resist us. But we have been successful even in heavens. So, where are you going to escape from us?[654] We have got accustomed to oppose the rebuking, the obedience, the non-getting-angry, the non-keeping-of-evil in mind, and to serving[655]. Our nieces are: the anger, the gossip, the bitterness, the shouting out, the [652] "Greta and honest this I reckon it is to defeat the vain-glory and to advance into the knowledge of God. This is because he who falls into the ugliness of this passion, he will estrange on himself from peace and he will make his heart harsher to the saints. And at the end of his evil deeds, he will fall into the cunning price and into the care for lying". He who is proud he doesn't know either God not he lives in peace with the people. He gets petrified in his heart even towards the gentle people and he despises them. He behaves with harshness especially towards these ones, because he fears the powerful ones and, if he needs them, he will flatter them up.

[653] They have become masters upon some angelic beings from heavens and that's why those angelic beings have been removed from there. This is because those didn't want to be mastered by anyone else except by themselves (by the vain-glory and by the pride. The pride, by not wanting to have any master, it won't know any head because it is headless. The proud man doesn't admit any chieftain to himself, because he is anarchical.

[654] Namely: if we have succeeded to defeat even some beings from heavens, where and how do you believe, oh man, that you will escape us?

[655] This is for often the monk gets enough of reproaches, or obedience, of non-comforting, and then he will surrender himself to pride.

blasphemy, the hypocrisy, the envy, the living according to an own rule, the opposition in word, and the disobedience. We have a sole enemy which we have no power upon. We tell you who he is, for we are being whipped by him. He consists of sincerely defaming on yourself in front of God. Then you can disregard us as we would be a spider net. So, as you can see, the vain-glory is the horse ridden by me: the pride".

But the pious humbleness and the self-reproaching will laugh at that horse and at his rider, by zealously singing the victory-song: "Let's sing to the Lord, for He extolled on Himself with glory. Horse and rider have been thrown into the sea" and into the deep of the humbleness.

This has been the twenty-second step. He who has climbed on it he is victorious.

The Word XXIII

About the Thoughts of the Untold Blasphemy

1) In the previous sayings we have heard that there is an all-awful nephew of the awful root and mother that is the wicked pride: it is the unspeakable nephew of the blasphemy. That's why we need to mention it. This is because this nephew is not an ordinary enemy, but it is a more-awful than all an enemy and a warrior. And the most awful thing is that he cannot easily be understood, confessed, and tied to the steak in front of the spiritual physician. That's why it has given birth in many to despair, by chewing up, the lawless, as a woodworm, the whole their hope.

2) This all-wicked like to often mock the Lord and the things committed in the Holy Liturgies themselves, and during the itself time of the fearsome Mysteries. Out of this we can clearly know that not our soul is the one uttering these lawless words, non-understood and unspeakable, within us, but that is the devil hating God who has been banished away from heavens, because there too he attempted to throw blasphemies at God. If those shameless and indecent words were mine, how could I bow before the gift and receive it?[656]

3) This deceiver and this of-soul-breaker, he often drives us to getting out of our minds. But no other thought is so difficult to be confessed as this one. That's why, it often gets old into many people[657]. This is because nothing gives the devils and these thoughts so much power against us except the fact of nourishing and of hiding those thoughts within our heart unconfessed.

4) Let nobody reckon on himself as the cause of the blasphemer thoughts. And our Lord is knower of hearts and He knows that those words and thoughts do not belong to us, but they belong to our enemies.

[656] Climacus proved to always be a thin and sincere analyst of the souly states which often are contradictory. Consistently personalistic, he explains the contradictory thoughts through the presence within our soul of other unseen subjects, in the given case, of the demons.

[657] It gets old into many people, because they cannot destroy it by confessing it, because they are ashamed to confess it. It is too obvious and too God our Lord so they so dare to openly express their blasphemer thought against Him. Themselves cannot decide to believe that thought. This is another reason why they do not trust to themselves.

5) Getting drunk is a cause of the stumbling. And the pride is a cause of the inappropriate thoughts. But him who stumble is not guilty for his stumbling. Still, he will be punished for getting drunks.

6) When we stay at prayer, this unclean and unspeakable thoughts rise too. But by persevering into prayer, those thoughts will immediately withdraw. This is because they do not use to fight those who fight back.

7) The lawless doesn't blaspheme only on God and on the churchly things, but he even utters within us some too ugly and inappropriate words, in order us either to leave the prayer or to despair because of ourselves. And so, he interrupted many from praying and he removed many from Mysteries. He melted the body of many by sadness. This evil and inhuman tyrant exhausted others by fasting and he gave them no moment of resting, and he did that not only to the people from within world but also to them who occupy themselves with the monastic living. Then he instilled them the thought that they won't be partakers to any salvation and made then reckon on themselves as worthier to be cried for and more unfortunate than all the believers and even more than the pagans themselves.

He who is tormented by the ghost of the blasphemy and who wants to be delivered from that ghost, let him know that not his soul is the cause of such thoughts, but the unclean devil, that yore said to our Lord: "I will give You all of these if you fall down and worship me" (Mt. 4: 9). That's why, by despising him and by not taking heed at what he said as measure, let's tell him: "Go behind me, satan! I will worship my Lord God and Him alone I will serve" (Mt. 4: 10) and let the pain turn upon your head; and upon your head's top your blasphemy to descend now and forever. Amen.

8) he who strives on himself to fight with the devil of the blasphemy outside the mentioned way, he will be like one who attempt to hold the lightning with his hands. How could we catch, or resist, or beat that one who enters within his heart suddenly and like a wind and throws his word faster that an instant and then he disappears?

9) This is because all of them who fight the war they stand and fight and they remain for a long time and they give time to those who fight them. But this one doesn't do that. But immediately that he appears he will get far from there; and immediately that he has spoken us, he will be gone.

10) This devil uses to dwell into the mind of the simpler and more innocent people, who are troubled and tormented more than others. But within those ones everything happens not because of their self-appreciation but because of the devils' envy.

11) Let's stop judging and condemning our neighbor and let's not be afraid of the blasphemy thoughts. This is because of the first thing is the cause for the second thing.

12) Like him who is locked within his house he still hears the words of the passersby, but he doesn't' talk to them, likewise that soul that lives within himself, when hearing the devil's blasphemies, he will get troubled, because of that one passing through him.

13) He who despises this devil he has been liberated from passions. But if he thinks that he can fight that devil in other way, he will finally be defeated. This is because him who want to master the ghosts with the words, he will be like him who wants to lock the winds up. A zealous monk who was troubled by this devil, he melted his body with fasting and vigil for twenty years. And because he didn't feel form that any benefit, he left and, by writing his passions down on a paper, he submitted that to a holy man, while laying himself down to that one's feet, because of not being able to look at that one's face.

The old man read that and he smiled. And by rising that brother up he told him: "Put your hand, my son, on my neck". And when the brother did that, the great old man told him: "On my neck will be, brother, this sin, as long as it has been within you and as long as it will be within you. Only you not to take heed at it anymore"[658]. And that brother confessed me that even before him leaving that old man's cell he was delivered from than passions. And this was told me by him who experienced it, thanking God.

He who has taken victory upon the passion he has rejected his pride.

[658] This is an important argument for confession: he who confesses his sins, by receiving the assurance that form then further he won't be responsible for himself, but the confessor who has given him the forgiveness will be responsible for him, he will no longer feel the torment for his sins neither the helplessness in not committing those sins again. And the confessor will be hold accountable because he had done that in the name of our Lord. You must, therefore, to experience the encounter with Christ as another Person, in the only way accessible to us, in a concrete manner. Namely, by encountering another godlike person who welcomes you for he was appointed by and in the name of Christ.

The Word XXIV

About the Gentleness, the Simplicity, and the Non-Evilness, Earned through the Wise Striving and non-Natural; and about Cunningness

1) The dawn's light appears before the sun and the gentleness is the forerunner of the humble cogitation[659]. That's why we hear the Light too, as ordering these ones thus, according to their levels: "Learn from Me, He says, for I am gentle and humble in heart" (Mt. 11: 29). So, we owe to be lightened by light before sunrise, so that we to be able to limpidly look at the sun. This is because he who doesn't firstly know the light, he won't be able to look at the sun, as the true order of the said things teaches us.

2) The gentleness is the unshaken state of the mind, that remains the same when honored or dishonored[660]. The gentleness consists of praying us in an undisturbed and sincere manner for him who troubles us and during the troubles he cause to us. The gentleness is the slab placed on the anger's sea, that scatters all the waves which strike it, and that suffers not shaking[661].

The gentleness is the prop of the patience; the gentleness is the door, or better said the mother, of the patience and cause of the discernment (of the right-reckoning). This is for: "The Lord will teach the gentle His ways" (Ps. 24: 8[662]). The gentleness is the cause of the forgiveness, the daring of the prayer; and it is the room of the Holy Ghost. This is for he says: "Whom will I look at, if not at the gentle and peaceful" (Isa. 66: 2).

The gentleness is the helper of the obedience, the adviser of the brotherhood, the brake of them who get infuriated, the appeasement of them who get angry, the giver of the joy, the following to Christ, the feature of the angels, the tying up of the devils, and the shield against bitterness.

[659] "The gentleness guards the wrath untroubled; and the humbleness liberates the mind from haughtiness and from vain-glory".

[660] The same definition of the gentleness as in The Word XIII, head no. 3.

[661] "It is characteristic to gentleness to bear" (to endure) the neighbor.

[662] In KJB we have" Ps. 25: 9: "The meek will he guide in judgment: and the meek will he teach his way."; in ROB we have: Ps. 24: 10: "He will guide the gentle at judgment, He will teach the gentle His ways." (E. l. t.'s n.)

3) The Lord rests Himself within the hearts of the gentle[663], but the troubled soul is the chair of the devil. "The meek will inherit the earth" (Mt. 5: 5), or better said, they will master the earth[664].

4) The gentle soul is the throne of the simplicity. And the angry mind is the cause of evilness. The smooth soul will comprise the word of the wisdom "The Lord will guide the gentle into judgment" (Ps. 24: 10[665]), better say in working the discernment (the right-reckoning). The righteous soul is the husband of the humbleness. And the cunning soul is the servant of the pride. The souls of the gentle will be enriched into knowledge[666]; and that mind that is mastered by wrath will inhabit together with the darkness and with the nescience.

5) The angry and the hypocrite met[667] and on couldn't find anything sincere in their discussion. If you study the heart of the first one, you will find there the insanity; if you study the soul of the second one, you will see cunningness in there[668].

[663] The gentle Lord Who has no reasons to be helped, He rests on Himself within the gentle. The gentleness from within Him flows into the believers, and it becomes within them a smooth cradle which Himself rests in. The gentleness is the delicacy and the tenderness of the love, and its surety is not disturbed by anything. By gentleness them who love on each other they comfort on one another. One knows Christ by participating to Him, and by His dwelling within us. Christ is Teacher by the fact that he dwells within us by the Holy Ghost.

[664] The gentle will rule the earth, stretching their gentleness, which is the gentleness of Christ, all over the earth, and nobody will resist them but everybody will answer them with the same gentleness. This will be the Kingdom of Heavens: The Kingdom of the Gentleness among people, out of Jesus Christ's gentleness.

[666] The true knowledge is tied to gentleness, for the gentleness is also a peaceful contemplation of the fellow humans who open themselves to it, and a contemplation of the existence's mysteries, and of the mystery of the gentle God.

[667] "Hypocrite is called also the flatterer, the deceiver, and the liar, because their intertwine the words in order they to be pleasant, and not for telling the truth".

[668] Belonging to Evagrius: "The nature of the anger is to fight against the devils and for some pleasure. This is for the angels instill us spiritual pleasures and they urge us to turn back and to feed the anger against the devils for the happiness coming to us out of it. And those ones, by attracting it towards the worldly lusts, they force it to fight contrary to the people's nature, so that by being the mind darkened and by falling off the knowledge, to become traitor of the virtues". Another belonging to Gregory the Theologian: "Restrain your anger (wrath), in order you not to get out of your mind. You will punish your wrath, because by getting out of measure it will become father to madness". Another: "The cunning one never is in peace, but he always is occupied, he always is full of anger, of cunningness, and of wrath. He always stalks his neighbor, he always speaks against, he always is harsh, he always opposes in words when receiving a command, he uprises when they decide something concerning him, and advised to do the good he will do the evil, and if he is rebuked, he will mock. He mocks them who live in the good manner, he hates them who spiritually advance, he feels disgust when

6) The simplicity is the habit of the soul deprived of diverse thoughts, a soul that has become steadfast towards a non-mischievous thinking. The non-mischievousness is a state of serenity of the soul, a state delivered from any cunning cogitation.

7) The first feature[669] of the children is the simplicity non-diverse in thoughts, a simplicity that – as long as he had it – didn't see the nakedness of his soul, neither he saw the ugliness of his soul[670].

8) Good and happy is also the simplicity that is within some people by their nature; but that is not a simplicity like that one that has been delivered from cunningness through pains and sweats. The first one is covered and guarded against the great diversity of the passions[671]. The second simplicity becomes the cause for the highest humble cogitation. The rewards for the first one it is plenty, but of the second one is more than endless.

9) All of us who want to attract our Lord towards us, let's get closer to Him in a simple, unpretending, without cunningness, without many sorts of thoughts, and without spying, as we would come to attend the lessons of a Teacher. This is for Him being simple and uncomposed of many, He wants the souls who come to Him to be simple and innocent. But one cannot ever see the simplicity without humbleness[672]. The cunning one is the liar foreseer who imagines that out of receiving good advices, he diminishes the brothers, he uprises them, he makes them evil, he turns away from the gentle ones, he laughs at them who are long-suffering, he is hypocrite with the strangers, he gossips one to another, se associates with each one against any other, he instigates to strife, he is always ready for defaming and for doing evil".

As one can see, the wrath or the anger, when exceeding a certain measure, they will darken the mind and they will keep the man in an accentuated agitation, leading him all the way to insanity. Between the souly functions there is a tight connection, they influence reciprocally.

[669] From here forward, in the Editon from the year 1970, it follows a different order than that from the G.P. and from the Trevisan Edition. We are going to follow the Edition form eth year 1970.

[670] From the Edition from the year 1970: "He understands by nakedness the absence of the godlike grace".

[671] "The natural simplicity preserves itself, he says, as non-partaker to the many passions".

[672] "The simplicity and the self-non-cherishing, they will clean up the evilness from the heart". In the Greek text the self-non-cherishing is expressed by the word μή μετρείν – the self-non-measuring. You ought not to measure your own good deeds, or your virtues. Properly said, you ought not to notice those. You will reckon them as inexistent. Let not to duplicate on yourself through the conscience of your value. This is humbleness and, in the same time, this is simplicity.

words he will know thoughts, and out of external countenances he will know the things from within heart[673].

10) I saw righteous men who learnt from the cunning ones how to become cunning and I wondered how could they lose so quickly a feature and a gift of the nature[674].

11) As easily as the righteous fall, as difficult is the opposite ones to change themselves. But the true estrangement, the obedience, the guarding of the lips, they have often been able to do many things and they have been changing, wonderfully, unhealable illnesses.

12) If the knowledge makes most of the people to get haughty, won't the nescience and the lack of learning be able to humble on their measure? There still are some people, without doubt they are rare, who are haughty because of their nescience.

13) A limpid and manifested proof of the blessed simplicity is the threefold-blessed Paul, who made himself simple. But nobody saw or heard and neither could one ever see such a spiritual advancement and in a such short time[675].

14) The simple monk is an obedient speaking animal who loads his burden on the shoulders of his adviser[676]. The animal doesn't speak against him who ties it up; neither the righteous soul speaks against his adviser' He follows to him who pulls him as he wishes and he won't resist that one, going all the way to sacrifice.

15) Non-cunning is the clean nature of the soul who behaves in the encounters with all people in the way that nature has been built up.

[673] "The liar-foreseer" is him who imagines that he can see within hearts, but he doesn't truly see, and that's why the issues wrong judgments, by a large as malevolent judgments on people, and he claims that he can see their evil deeds and he counts on those evil deeds.

[674] He urges us to avoid, with the whole our power, the living with the evil ones, in order us not to become prey to their evilness.

[675] By becoming simple, and sincere, Saint Apostle Paul advanced right by that in knowing that what is essential, namely the love of Christ towards him and his love for Christ and people. Saint Apostle Paul saw the Supreme Person and the persons of the people above objects; he saw the simple love, a direct love, as being infinitely more life-giver than all sorts of cunningness in the relations with the people.

[676] Another paradox: "obedient speaking animal", who doesn't' even bear his own burden, but he places his burden on the shoulders of his adviser. On one hand, himself is obedient, on the other hand he obeys his adviser. "Bear your burdens to one another" (Gal. 6: 2). He bears bodily burdens. And by both of them he gains.

16) The righteousness is a non-spying thought, it is non-liar behavior, it is unpretending and unprepared in advance word. Like God is called Love, likewise He is called also Righteousness. That's why the wiseman says too, in the Song of the Songs, towards the clean heart: "The righteousness loves you" (1: 4). And again, to his father: "Kind and righteous is the Lord" (Ps. 24: 6[677]). And on them who are of the same name with Him He saves them: "He Who saves the righteous" (Ps. 24: 6[678]). And again: "He saw the righteousness of the souls and He looked at their face" (Ps. 10: 8[679]).

17) The cunningness is the pretending of the state of righteousness, and the astray word, and a liar-self-ruling; oaths submitted to punishments; intertwined words; deep (willingly hidden) of the heart; precipice of cunningness; the lie soaked into the nature; the self-appreciation become natural; the opposite to the humbleness; the hypocrisy of the repentance; the banishing away of the crying; the enemy of the confession; rule of life according to the own pleasure; the cause of the fallings; the opposite to resurrection[680]; the smile of the mockery' the insane sadness; the pretended piousness; and the devilish life.

18) The cunning one is together-speaking with the devil and of the same name with the devil. That's why the Lord also

[677] In KJB we have: Ps. 25: 8: "Good and upright is the Lord: therefore, will he teach sinners in the way."; in ROB we have: Ps. 24: 9: "Good and righteous is the Lord, for this the law will set them who transgress of the way." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[679] In KJB we have: Ps. 11: 7 "For the righteous Lord loveth righteousness; his countenance doth behold the upright."; in ROB we have: "For righteous is the Lord and He loved His righteousness and His face looks at the righteous." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[680] "This is because the cunningness doesn't allow the soul to learn by repentance". Another: "Like if somebody is bitten by adder, the venom will cross throughout all his body and it will hurt the heart, likewise is the evilness of the heart towards the neighbor. This is for its venom bites his soul and he will be endangered by cunningness. So, he who has mercy on his toils, if he wants not to be himself lost, he will quickly shake off this adder from himself, namely the cunningness and the evilness". There is an endless deep, and abyss of the cunningness, as there is also an abyss of the humbleness or of the simplicity. This is because the evilness too has not end and it can constantly advance. There are countless dimensions of the infinity, good and evil. The combine and graft and they oppose to one another on multiple ways. As the endlessness of the humbleness is nourished out of experiencing God's infinity, likewise is the endlessness of the cunningness is nourished out of the opposition to humbleness. This is because the cunningness is an overturned image of God's love. As the love is shown in several forms out of God, and out of people, the cunningness answers, at its turn, with new degrees of evilness, of envy, of liar imitation, as a dimension of the infinite evilness confronting the dimensions of the good infiniteness.

taught us to call that one so, by saying: "And deliver us from the cunning one" (Mt. 6: 12).

19) The cunningness is a science, or rather it is a devilish abomination, one stranger to the truth, one that reckons that it will be hidden from the many.

20) The hypocrisy is a state opposite to the soul and to the body, and intertwined with all sorts of thoughts.

21) Let's run away from the precipice of the hypocrisy and form the pit of the cunningness, by listening to him who says: "The who work cunningness will perish and like a grass they will quickly wither and as some greeneries they will quickly fall" (Ps. 36: 5[681]). These ones are the pasture of the devils.

22) Hardly will the rich ones enter the Kingdom, or hardly will the mindless wisemen enter the simplicity[682].

23) The falling often made wise many of the evil ones, by giving them as a gift, unwilling non-evilness and salvation.

24) You fight for deceiving your own understanding[683]. And by doing so, you will find salvation and innocence, into Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

He who has climbed this step, let him dare. This is for he has been saved by taking Christ as his role-model.

[681] In KJB we have: Ps. 37: 1-2: "FRET not thyself because of evildoers, neither be thou envious against the workers of iniquity. // For they shall soon be cut down like the grass, and wither as the green herb."; in ROB we have: Ps. 36: 1-2: "Do not aspire to be like them who commit cunningness, neither you follow them who commit the lawlessness. // This is because they will wither like the grass and like the greenery of the grass will they pass away." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[682] "He doesn't mention here the wisemen into Christ, but on them who usually are called as wisemen by the world. Mindless, really so, are they who reckon on themselves as wise, and they will inherit the prophetic woe".

[683] "You fight, he says, for not doing what appear to be good to your understanding, without those things being evaluated by your advisers."

The Word XXV

On the All-High Humble-Cogitation, Destroyer of the Passions, One that Is Born out of the Unseen Feeling

1) He who wants to describe by seen word[684] the feeling and the work of the love or our Lord in an appropriate manner; and of the holy humble-cogitation in a due manner; and of the bless repentance in a true manner; and of the enlightenment from God in a manifest manner; and of the fear of God in a non-liar manner; and of the entrustment of the heart in an undeceiving manner; and he who reckons to illuminate by clarifying these ones to them who haven't tasted them yet, he will do something like him who wants to describe by words and examples the sweetness of the honey to them who have never tasted honey. But the second one[685] will speak vainly, not to say he is much-speaking; and the first one, he ither is inexperienced in what he describes, or he is obviously the mockery of the vain-glory.

2) Our word presents, for preparation, in the first place, a treasure places in a clay pots, or better said sealed up in bodies, which quality cannot be made known by any word. It makes firstly knows its non-understandable name from above, which it gives as gift towards much and endless tiresome study to them who study that name with right-reckoning. And the word is this: holy humble-cogitation.

3) As many are guided by the ghost of God, let them gather together in this understanding and all-wise assembly, by bearing in an understanding manner, within their hearts, the tablets of the knowledge of God. So, by doing that, we have gathered ourselves and we researched together and we spied the meaning of the honored name. And one said that that means the complete forgetfulness of the own feats; another, that it means reckoning on yourself as the least one and more sinner than all; other, that conscience had by the mind about its helplessness and weakness; other, getting you before your neighbor and being you the first to untie the anger; other, knowing the grace and the mercy from God; other, again, feeling your soul as crushed, and you to deny your own will.

[684] Namely sensitive and material.
[685] He who speaks about honey.

And I, by listening to all of these, and by researching them through reckoning and watchfulness, I wasn't able to find that one's happiness by hearing. That's why, because I am the last one, gathering, as a dog, the crumbles fell off the table of those knowers and blessed fathers, while trying to clarify that, I said:

The humble-cogitation is a nameless grace of the soul[686], having names only for them who have received the trying (the experience) of it[687]. It is an unspeakable richness; it is the name of God and it is His gift. For he says: "Learn from Me"; so, not from angel, neither from man, not by reading, but "from Me" (Mt. 11: 29), namely from the dwelling, from the enlightenment, and from the work of Mine within you; "for I am meek and humble in heart" and in My though and in My thinking; and "you will find resting" from wars and alleviation from thoughts "to your souls".

4) Different is the showing of this pious vine during the winter of the passions, and different is its showing during the spring of the fructification, and different is again during the summer of the virtues, though all showing of its produce together the gladness and the fruitfulness. That's why they are also like some images and signs of the gifts.

5) This is for, when the grape of this pious (humble-cogitation) starts flourishing, we immediately start painfully hating the whole human glory and praising, and we are banishing away the whole wrath and anger from us. And by

[686] "He called the humble-cogitation "nameless" not by negation but by affirmation. And he called it as grace for the grace given by it to the soul. This is because the names do not express the "the more" or the "the less". And this is because the people are not more or less people; nor similar things. But the impartations are more or less. That's why the grace in itself is nameless; but, to them who are imparted with the grace, the grace will have a name". Still, there are so deep and complex realities, so that their names only generally indicate them, while they still keep in themselves something unspeakable. The man is a name but the being bearing this name has also something unspeakable in himself. Actually, the author of The Ladder doesn't' call the grace as nameless in itself and as bearing names to them who receive the grace, as the author of the scholium from the Edition from the year 1970 thought, but he called is as the humble-cogitation.

[687] One can achieve the true knowledge of the virtues only by experiencing them. And by experiencing the virtues one achieves experience, namely he achieves the knowledge about God, in his soul who has the virtues. The virtues are transparent to the corresponding power of God. The virtues thin up generally, or they make transparent the man's nature to the infinite wideness of the light and of the kindness of God.

advancing into this empress of the virtues together with the spiritual age, into the soul, we will reckon as nothing, or better said as causes of disgust, all the good deeds done by us, by thinking at the fact that we daily add many burdens to our burden by a scattering unrealized by us. And the richness of the godlike gifts given us, we will reckon it as an adding rather towards a bigger punishment, because of that richness being above our worthiness. That's why our mind will remain then unrobbed, by locking itself up into the treasury of the humbleness and by not hearing except the knocks on the door and the mockery from the thieves, but no longer being damaged by any of those, if the humbleness is the unrobbed treasury.

6) That much we have dared to cogitate, through a few words, about the flourishing and about the beginner progress of this always green tree. But which is the consummate crown or this holy virtue, you will have to ask the Lord, you who belong to the Lord. This is because about the greatness of this pious virtue one cannot speak. And about the quality of this virtue is even more impossible to speak. Although, we are going to still try to speak something about its characteristics, according to the understanding given to us.

7) Between the careful repentance and the crying cleaned of any stain and the all-pious humbleness of the beginners, there is as much difference as between bread, dough, and flour. This is because the soul is crushed and it is thinned through manifested repentance, and the soul is united, to say so, and it is mixed (kneaded) with God through the water of the non-liar crying, and when lit up by the Lord's fire it becomes bread and it hardens. This is the blessed humbleness, that one missing the dough (of the corruption) and missing the swelling of the pride.

Thus, by being gathered into a sole power and work, the three ones are as an all-pious chain, or as a rainbow that has the same features[688]. And you will find out that the sign of one becomes the sign of the others as well. This is what I am going to try underscoring by a short demonstration.

[688] "The rainbow is that bow stretched in the clouds after a rain. He called the humbleness with the word rainbow for the strengthened and diverse and multicolored nature, for its threefold color and for the height of this virtue that is elevated above the earthly things" ("for the threefold color" is mentioned only in the translation belonging to Veniamin Costache).

8) The first and the most exquisite feature of this good and worthy of praise trinity is the receiving of the dishonoring with the greatest joy, and waiting for that with the soul's open arms, and that is embraced as one that alleviates and melts the soul's illnesses and the great sins. The second feature is the loss of all wrath and the temperance that will be shown after the wrath has been appeased. And the third all-beautiful step is the faithful mistrust in the earned good things and the ceaseless desire for learning[689].

9) "The end of the las and of the prophets is Christ, towards straightening everyone who believe" (Rom. 10: 14), and the end of the passions is the vain-glory and the pride of him who doesn't take heed. These ones are destroyed by this understanding deer (the humbleness, t. n.) that guards him who lives with her (the humble human being, t. n.) so that he won't receive any bringing-of-death venom. This is because where it is shown in it the hypocrisy's venom? Where, of the slandering? Where is it hidden in it the snake? Isn't the snake rather brought out and killed and destroyed, when plowing the heart's field? There isn't in this union any showing of the hatred, or any sort of opposition in word, and no stench of the disobedience, except if it would be about faith[690].

10) He who has united himself as a bridegroom with the humbleness, he will be smooth, gentle, easy to be melted by pricking, more merciful than all, serene, shiny, easy to restrain, non-getting upset, watchful, and non-idle. Ans what should we say more? He is dispassionate, if "into our humbleness the Lord remembered us and he delivered us from our enemies" (Ps. 135: 23-24[691]).

11) The monk who has a humble thought he won't spy the unspeakable things. But the proud monk he will spy the injustices.

[689] He who is humble he will never trust his virtues which he gained and his good deeds which he committed, but he will do that on the ground of his faith in God and in the possibility of advancing as far as possible.

[690] Only if the obedient monk was asked not to believe or to change something in his creed, he would be allowed not to obey that.

[691] In KJB we have: Ps. 136: 23-24: "Who remembered us in our low estate: for his mercy endureth for ever: // And hath redeemed us from our enemies: for his mercy endureth for ever."; in ROB we have: Ps. 135: 23-24: "For in our humbleness the Lord remembered us, for His mercy in forever. // And he delivered us from our enemies, for His mercy if forever." (E. l. t.'s n.)

12) By standing the devils in a visible manner in front of the eyes of a certain brother, they started to congratulate him. But the all-wise told them: "If you start praising me through thoughts in my soul, out of your withdrawal I will reckon on myself that I am great. If you do not stop praising me, I will know out of your praises my uncleanness. This is because "unclean is to the Lord everyone who get haughty in his heart" (Proverbs 16: 6).

"So, if you leave, I will make on myself great; if you praise me, I will achieve through you even more humbleness"[692]. And the evils because they were bewildered by the dilemma brought by those words, they vanished.

13) Let not your soul be a pit to this of-life-maker water that now springs up and then gets dry under the heat of the glory and of the haughtiness. But let it be to you as a spring of dispassion that always brings out the water rive of the poverty (with the ghost, t. n.) out of itself. You take heed, my friend, that the valleys are those fertile for the multiplied wheat and for the spiritual fruits. The valley is the soul humble among [692] We have here the same subtle noticing of some contradictory souly tensions. The monk places the devils in a great dilemma: "If you leave, I will boast on myself that I was able to chase you away, so it will be good to you if you leave me, but it will be good to me if you stay; if you stay, not only that I won't have any possibility to say about myself that I am great for I have banished you away, but I will also have a reason for humbling on myself, because by being praised by you I will realize my uncleanness that is contrary to your sayings". The devils do not know what to do: to stay, in order to further tempt the monk through their praises, because there could be a possibility to make him boasting in the end; but he has told them that if they stay, he will be even more convinced about his own sins. So, the devils will leave him alone. But by leaving, they won't be able to tempt him any longer.

Actually, this will happen even if the devils aren't present, but only our thoughts: if our though tells us that we are humble, we will get proud; therefore, it is good us to banish this thought away; but if we banish this thought away, we will no longer have the conscience of the humbleness and, by being that absent, it will be replaced with the self-content, namely the pride. How can we get out of this dilemma? By banishing the thought that we are humble, but by remaining humble too. But can we do that? And how? Climacus will give the solution in the next chapter: we must permanently and exclusively be under the power of the though at our sinfulness. Not into a theoretical thinking about humbleness, but into a real sufferance because of our insufficiency. The escape consists of a real and deep sufferance for our sins, and not in a coquettish thinking on the theme of the humbleness.

While the pride makes a man harsh and opaque, the humbleness make shim delicate and transparent. In humbleness it consists the ennobling of our nature. But one cannot commit humbleness without being aware of his own sinfulness, and without the effort to overcome his sinfulness, namely through repentance, a repentance proven not to be complete except in crying.

mountains, namely among the spiritual virtues, always non-haughty and always unshaken[693].

14) I haven't fasted, I haven't taken vigil, I haven't sleep on the floor, but "I have humbled on myself, and the Lord quickly saved me" (Ps. 114: 6[694]). The repentance resurrects, the crying knocks on the heavens' door, and the pious humbleness opens that door up. I confess the Trinity in Oneness and the Oneness in Trinity and I worship that[695].

15) The sun lightens all the visible things; and all the things made with judgment (with rationality, t. n.) are strengthened by the humbleness. If the light is absent, all the things will be darkened. And if the humble cogitation is not present, all our things will be rotten[696].

16) One is in the whole creation that place that has seen the sun only once; and one is that thought that give birth to humbleness for many times[697]. One and only was that day which everyone gladdened on; and this is the unique virtue that cannot be humiliated by devils[698].

[693] Another paradox: the higher the virtues are, the humbler the soul will be.

[695] "As the Holy Trinity of the Hypostases is into the One and Godhead, and as the One Godhead is in Three Hypostases, likewise the repentance and the humbleness are kindred and they are strengthened in the godlike grace and the godlike grace unites them by elevating one with another and by elevating the mind to God". The three ones in their unity they not only reflect the Holy Trinity but they also have within them the grace of the Threefold God or God as Threefold, by grace, as uniting the three ones without confounding them, as He is One in His Being and Threefold in His Hypostases.

[696] They are decomposing. They have within them the worm of the pride that doesn't allow our nature to really be beautified, to truly be ennobled, to truly constitute its bridges towards God and towards people, which it is strengthened into life through.

[697] "This place was the bottom of the Red Sea when the people of Israel crossed it. And this sole thought is the remembrance of death or of the future judgment or of the Lord's passions". By this thought we cross through the torrent of our passions towards our salvation. In that place God sat between Israelis and Egyptians, like a cloud that was dark towards the Egyptians and that covered the Israelis, while above and in front of the Israelis that cloud was dark and showed them the way (Exod. 14: 20). This is the humbleness that sees God, or it sees God's greatness, but it is covered towards the people form around in its greatness. But that humbleness that sees only God it will be born only for it thinks at death, at God's judgment, and at the passions of the Lord for the sins". This explanation corresponds to that formulate by John of Raith (G.P. 88, 1236, C.D.).

[698] "The day of every one's joy is no other but the day of our Lord and Savior's resurrection, which our nation has been liberated on, from the eternal ties. And some people say that that day if that of the Lord's birth, which it was heard on, from angels: "Glory to the highest, to God" etc.; and others say that that is the day of Noah who existed the ship with the others". Between the day of Lord's resurrection and the day of Lord's birth there isn't only a parallel, but there is also a connection. Only because our Lord descended on Himself by His birth, we

17) Boasting is different from not boasting; and different is to get humble. The first one spends his day judging on others; the second one doesn't judge others, but he might judge on himself; and the third one, by being unworthy of condemnation, he always condemns on himself.

18) It is different judging humbly; it is another thing one living in ascesis in order him to cogitate humbly; and again, it is different to praise him who is humble in thought. The first thing is characteristic to the consummate ones; the second is characteristic to the true obedient; and the third thing is characteristic to all believers.

19) He who has got humble within himself, he won't be stollen by his lips; this is because one cannot take out of the treasury, through the door, that what the treasury doesn't have[699].

20) A sole horse running seems to run fast, but if it is brought in a troop, it will know his helplessness.

21) When the thought no longer brags with one's natural gifts, that will be a sign that the thought has started healing. And as long as one feels the ugly scent, one won't feel the wine's fragrance.

22) He who loves me, said the pious humbleness, he won't hit, he won't judge, he won't want to master, and he won't play the wiseman (he won't want to advise) until he remains too can lower on ourselves into humbleness. But the humbleness brings us true glory and salvation, as His birth brought to Christ the glory from the angels and the resurrection; as the obedience brought to Noah the deliverance from the flood's waters. Another, in the Edition belonging to Veniamin Costache: "The rationalities of the things made into creation can be seen gathered only in the man alone, who has been created out of the thought and felt realities. Son, on that day of his sinlessness and of itself his humbleness the whole creation rejoices". One can see in man the all the rationalities of the creatures, both of the sensitive ones and of the understood and understanding ones. The man is the all-comprising rationality of all created rationalities. Within man there are both all the rationalities of the sensitive objects which can be known through man (or which they have connections with, t. n.) and the rationality that knows those things (as the angels, t. n.) and that is in connection with all the knower rationalities. But the man rejoices of knowing on himself in a real manner, and of knowing; when the man humbles on himself, he knows on himself the best. That's why, into man the whole creation rejoices when, by humbling on himself, the man knows the most both on himself and on all realities.

[699] He who is humble he will reckon that he has nothing. That's why his lips have nothing to steal from himself and give to others. Actually, he remains a sealed treasury, one that is ceaselessly being enriched. Of course, the others still learn from him. They learn in an untold manner (apophatically), by seeing the height or the depth of hid humbleness.

united with me. This is for after the union with me that one won't be submitted to the law any longer (I Tim. 1: 9)[700].

23) The lawless devils sown the pride in his heart to one who wanted to reach the blessed humbleness. And he thought, out of godlike instilling, to defeat the devils' plot through a pious craft. Namely, by getting up, he wrote on the wall of his monastic cell the names of the highest virtues, namely of the consummate love, of the humble cogitation, of the clean prayer, of the unbroken cleanness, and of the ones alike. So, when the thoughts come to praise him, he answered them: "Let's go to rebuking!". And by coming into his monastic cell, he read the names on the wall and he shouted out to himself: "Even if you have gained these, you will know that you will still be far from God"[701].

24) Which is the power and the nature of this sun we cannot tell you; but we know its nature out of its works and features.

25) The humble cogitation is the godlike cover, in order our victories not to be seen[702]. The humble cogitation is the bottomless deep of our fewness, one that cannot be stollen by any thief[703]. The humble cogitation is "a strong tower in face of the enemy" (Ps. 60: 3[704]). "His enemy won't use him; and his son, namely the thought of the lawlessness, it won't hurt him;

[700] He will fulfill the law without having to search for an external law. "They who hit insensitively, or who judge, or who play the wisemen, or who lust for mastery, they are not partakers to humbleness. But sometimes some people learn the humbleness also by the deeds of them who get closer to them".

[701] "Abba Isaiah said about the humble cogitation that it has no tongue to speak to somebody because it is worriless, or to another because it is despising on itself; neither it has eye to take heed at another's fallings, not it has ear to hear things useless to its soul. And it doesn't mind about another's businesses but it only minds its own sins. It is peaceful to all peoples but it is so for the commandment of God and not for friendship. And if somebody feasts for six days and for another six days and he dedicates on himself to great toils and commandments, but without this path (of the humbleness), all his toils will be useless". Another: "If you haven't gained them (these virtues), you will still be far from the commandments of God; and if you have gained them, you will still be unworthy servant: you have done what you must do, while others did more than the commandments require".

[702] The humbleness covers our virtues in order us not to brag on ourselves and so to lose them by doing that. It covers the even from ourselves. Only God must see our virtues.

[703] Seeing our own fewness and non-importance can progress endlessly, as in an abyss, as we know increasingly obvious the infinity of God. But it cannot advance to nothing, because if that had been the case it couldn't have had the self-conscience any longer.

[704] In KJB we have: Ps. 61: 3: "For thou hast been a shelter for me, and a strong tower from the enemy."; in ROB we have: Ps. 60: 3: "You have been advising me, you have been my hope, strong tower in front of my enemies." (E. l. t.'s n.)

and he will cut off his enemies from his face and he will set in running on them who hate him" (Ps. 88: 23[705]).

26) But the know features of the great founder of his richness from within his soul are more numerous than all the shown ones[706]. And these ones are, to them who can see them, signs resembling to richness; only a thing cannot be seen: its will of not showing on itself[707].

27) You will know and you won't deceive on yourself seeing that this pious virtue is within you in a richness of untold light and full of a love unexplained by prayer. Before making room for that within itself, the heart has reached the non-defamation of the foreign mistakes. And the forerunner of the said things is the hatred for any vain-glory.

28) He who has known himself in the whole felling of his soul, he has sown in good soil. This is because within them who haven't sown like this, there cannot flourish the humble cogitation. He who has known on himself, he has known the thought of the fear of the Lord[708]. And he who travels with this thought he will reach the gate of the love.

29) The humbleness is the gate of the Kingdom[709], letting him who comes closer to enter it. I reckon that about it our Lord said that "he who wants will enter and he will exit (without fear, from life) and he will find pasture" (Jn. 10: 9), and that that is

[705] In KJB we have: Ps. 89: 23: "And I will beat down his foes before his face, and plague them that hate him."; in ROB we have: Ps. 88: 23: "And I will cut off his enemies from his face and I will defeat them who hate him." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[706] To the Holy Ghost, the Founder of the humbleness from within the soul, are known also other goods of the humbleness than those made visible by Him.

[707] We again have here a paradox: the humbleness's features can be seen and they betray the humbleness. Still, the humbleness itself doesn't want to be seen and it doesn't show itself. But right by doing so it shows itself. "The shown features are signs of the humbleness, except its will. I think that this one is that one he talks about". In the Edition form the year 1970: "Others say that that one is the self-defamation ceaselessly committed by him who is humble in thought, hiddenly, within himself, by reckoning on himself less important and more worthy of disgust than everybody. And this cannot be seen at somebody, so it is separated from all the visible features of the humble cogitation".

[708] "The true humbleness is the daughter of the knowledge. And the true knowledge is the daughter of the temptations". Out of temptations we know that we are exposed to temptations, because of our weakness, namely we really know on ourselves, as we won't know on ourselves while we still are dominated by pride. But by knowing on ourselves thus, we will reach the humbleness.

[709] It is the gate leading to the Kingdom of Love. This is for it is the sign of the disappearance of any pride that locks the man up within himself, and it lock up to the man any gate. The humbleness is the sign of the supreme cherishing of God and of the people. And this comes out of the love for them and for the opening their door.

the greenery from Paradise[710]. So, all of them who enter the monastic scheme on other ways, they are thieves and burglars of their lives.

30) We who want to achieve the humbleness, let's not stop inquiring on ourselves; and if we reckon, into the feeling of our heart, that our neighbor exceeds us in everything, the mercy will be close to us[711].

31) It is impossible fire to come out of snow. But it is even more impossible one to find the humble cogitation among them who have a different faith (heterodox). This virtue belongs to them who are rightly-believers and rightly-worshippers, but even to those ones only if they are cleaned[712].

32) Most of us call on ourselves as sinners and maybe we are so. But what proves our heart, it is the acceptation of the defamation[713].

33) He who hurries himself up towards this peaceful shore (towards humbleness), he won't cease to fulfill, to cogitate at, and to conceive all kinds of plans, of words, of thoughts, of craftsmanships, of searches, of ways, of images, of behaviors, of

[710] "He who has entered the monastic life by his imitator of Christ living and humbleness, he will enter it well and when he will exit the present life, he will find that pasture that produces the gladness from paradise".

[711] "He calls as mercy the humble cogitation coming within soul by grace. But the humble cogitation comes when we reckon on ourselves, with the whole our soul and with the whole our heart more insignificant than any human being. This means: into the feeling of our heart".

[712] Only the right-faith is a foundation and a spring of humbleness. Any other faith is the product of the pride. "The humble cogitation doesn't mean despising the knowledge, but it means knowing the grace and the mercy from God". That's why, only they who believe in the true God Who has descended, for His love, all the way down to us, only they can receive the gift of the humbleness. But this doesn't mean despising the self-knowledge. Without this self-knowledge we will be proud and we won't receive the grace. The humble cogitation, though being from grace, it rather deepens our self-knowledge and it brings within us a true self-knowledge.

[713] Belonging to Isaac: "He who can stand the harsh word of a naughty and unwise man, for God and for reconciling the thoughts, he will be called as son of the peace. And one like this can achieve the peace of the soul and of the ghost". Another: "If you reject the toil and the dishonor, do not say that you repent on yourself through other virtues. This is because the vain-glory and the avoidance of the pain use to serve the sin for glory". Another: "When you see somebody complaining because of the much dishonor, you will see that that one by being dominated by the thoughts of the vain-glory, he will reap the sheaf of the seeds sown by him into his heart". Another: "The more you are crossed through by evil habits, you must receive more joyfully the heavy tormenting, as by being you humbled by that, you to throw up the pride". In the translation by Veniamin Costache: {"When you will suffer a lot for some rebuke, or dishonor, you will know that you have benefitted a lot of that. This is because the vain-glory is brought out of you, according to a wide oikonomia, through dishonor". Another: "Trying and proving the humbleness are done by dishonor".

spying, of asks, and of payers, until, by the help from God, and by ever humbler and ever more rebuked behaviors, he will escape the vessel of his soul from the sea hunted by storm of the self-appreciation. This is for he who has been delivered from that he has become a publican able to find a good answer to all sins[714].

34) Some people keep as cause for humbleness their evil deeds which they did before even after those deeds have been forgiven to them, until their death, in order they to whip their self-appreciations by remembering their sins. Others, by keeping in their mind the sufferings of Christ, they reckon on themselves and forever debtors. Other humiliate on themselves by the daily poverty. Other bring down their haughtiness through their temptations, illnesses, and mistakes. Other have made of the absence of the gifts the mother of the gifts[715].

But there are also some people – if they still exist, I cannot tell you – who, by the gifts from God and by progressing in those gifts they get humbler in themselves, by reckoning on themselves as unworthy of such richness and they remain in such a feeling by daily adding to their debt[716]. This is the humbleness, this is the happiness, and this is the consummate crown.

35) When you see somebody, of you hear about somebody, that he achieved the highest dispassion in only a few years, you will reckon that not on a different way but on this blessed and short way of humbleness that one was travelling.

36) The love and the humbleness are a holy pair. The first one elevates while the second one upholds them who have been elevated and it won't ever let them fall.

37) Something else is the crushing of the heart, something else is the knowledge, and something else is the humbleness[717]. The crushing id the daughter of the falling. This [714] He will easily answer for his sins by repentance and humbleness. The publican is the image of the sinner, but also of the repentance for sins.

[715] Notice the beauty of this paradox: the poorest is the richest, if he admits his own poverty.

[716] Another remarkable paradox: The more you progress, the more you will feel yourself as debtor, as you won't have progressed at all. And this is for the more gifts they receive, the more they will feel on themselves as indebted, and so the more they will humble on themselves. The more the adornments which a benefactor loads somebody with, the more those adornments make the receiver to bow deeper in front of his benefactor, by being overwhelmed by those adornments.

[717] Belonging to Saint Mark the Monk: "Without the crushing of the heart it will be impossible to us to be delivered form this passion. And the heart will be crushed by the is because he who falls he will crush and he will stay at prayer without daring, but with a shamelessness worthy to be praised[718], by leaning on the staff of the hope as one who is totally crushed, and with that staff banishing away from him the dog of the despair.

The knowledge is the steadfast understanding of the own measures and the unscattered remembering of even the thinnest mistakes.

The humbleness is the thought teaching of Christ gathered in an understanding manner into the treasury of the soul by them who have been found worthy of it, a teaching which the sounding words cannot come closer to[719].

38) He who tells that he feels the fragrance of this chrism entirely, but during praises he feels himself moves even a little, or he who says that by understanding the meaning of the words he doesn't delude on himself, he is actually wrong[720].

39) I heard somebody saying into the feeling of his soul: "Not to us, Lord, not to us, but to Your Name You to give glory" (Ps. 113: 9[721]). This is because he knew that the nature cannot be at all damaged through itself. "From You is my praise in large gathering" (Ps. 21: 29[722]), namely in the time to come. This is because before that time will have come, we cannot bear this without danger.

40) If the nature and the rationality and the image of the ultimate pride, it is to hypocritically mimic, for the sake of the glory, virtues which we do not have within us, then the sign of threefold restraint: from sleep, from food, and from the bodily resting. This is for the abundance in these ones it will cause the sweet passion. And the sweet passion will receive the evil thoughts. And it will actually resist both the due prayer and the due serving".

[718] Another paradox: He who has fallen, he will stay at prayer deprived of daring, but full that perseverance given him by his despair, because he has in God a sole hope: to ask for forgiveness without being ashamed.

[719] In humbleness there is concentrated in a live mode the whole teaching of Christ, in an unspoken, apophatically manner. Through humbleness the teaching itself of Christ is proven as comprising an undried deep of living and all the more as unspeakable.

[720] "He doesn't command us to be insensitive, but he forbids somebody to take heed at praises as to some true words and to delight on himself with those praises and to reckon on himself as worthy to be addressed such words."

[721] In KJB we have: Ps. 115: 1: "NOT unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake."; in ROB we have: Ps. 113: 9: "Not to us, Lord, not to us, but to Your name it is due glory, for Your mercy and for Your truth.". (E. l. t.'s n.)

[722] In KJG we have: Ps. 22: 25: "My praise shall be of thee in the great congregation: I will pay my vows before them that fear him."; in ROB we have: Ps. 21: 29: "From You is my praise in large gathering, my prayers I will make before them who fear Him." (E. l. t.'s n.)

the deepest humble cogitation is that of presenting ourselves as guilty for sins which do not belong to us, for the sake of being despised.

So did him who took the bread and the cheese with his hands[723]; so did him who by taking off his clothes he wandered through the city non-tempted by passion, as a worker of the cleanness[724]. Some people like these ones do not fear to offend other people, for they have taken, through prayer, the power to assure (about their cleanness) anyone in an unseen manner.

41) He who takes acre of the first thing, he knows that the second thing will miss[725]. This is for where God is ready to listen to us, there we will be able to accomplish all things. You want rather to upset the people than to upset God. This is for God rejoices when seeing us choosing dishonors, in order us to narrow up, to hit, and to destroy the vain-self-appreciation.

42) The estrangement is the biggest cause for such ascetic toils. This is because only them who are truly great can endure to be mocked by their own people[726]. Do not get scared by what I've just said. This is because no one have ever been able to climb the ladder at once.

43) By this all people will know that you are the disciples of Christ: not because the devils will obey you, but for your names have been written in the circle of the humbleness[727] (Lk. 10: 20).

44) The infertility elevates at height the branches of those trees called as lemon trees. But when they become fruitful, their branches bow downwards. He who has looked at that with understanding, he will know that.

And because one cannot reach that while among his own people, the estrangement is the best cause of the humbleness". [727] The sky is the peak of the humbleness; this is because only where is humbleness, there will be love. There is neither forcing nor strife.

another of a hundred steps. On the highest height there are the dispassionate ones; in the middle there are those who are at the age (spiritual) of the manhood; and on the first step everybody can climb. He who knows on himself, he won't allow himself to be deluded and try climbing on the steps which are above his powers. But you step steadfastly on this blesses path[728].

46) The birds fear the hawk, and the workers of the humbleness they fear the sound (the echo) of the speaking-against[729].

47) Many have achieved the salvation without previous heralding, or illuminations, or signs, or wonders. But without humbleness no one will enter the wedding chamber. This is because the humbleness is the guardian of the first things, and without humbleness, the first things will destroy the fickler people.

48) Because we do not want to humble on ourselves, our Lord organized, with caretaking, this one too: no one can see his own wound as he sees the wound of his neighbor. That's why it is necessary to give thanks for our healing not to ourselves, but to our neighbor and to God.

49) He who has a humble mind he will shun form his own will as from a deluder and in his asks addressed to the Lord he learns and he obeys with an unhesitating faith[730]. He doesn't take heed at the living of his teachers, but he surrenders the care for himself to God Who taught Barlaam the necessary things even through the female donkey (Numbers 22, 28 and the followings).

50) Such a worker, even if he would understand, and he would do, and he would speak the due things, not even then he would trust to himself. This is for the trusting to himself is to him who is humble as a spike and as a burden, as it is to the proud one the saying of another.

51) It seems to me that is characteristic to the angels not to be stolen by sins[731]. This is for I hear the earthly angel saying: "I do not know anything into myself; but I will straighten on myself into this. This is for He Who judges me is My Lord" (I

[731] The sin is a stealing of the man from his clear and sharp self-awareness, it is a half-conscience. The angel is in the most luminous, in the most woken up, and in the most unrobbed self-conscience.

Cor. 4: 4). That's why we must ceaselessly condemn and rebuke on ourselves, so that by diminishing on ourselves to reject from us the unwilling sins[732]. And if not, at the time of our exit, we will be held accountable for them in an awful manner[733].

52) He who asks from God things which are below his worthiness, that one will certainly receive things which will be above his worthiness[734]. This is witnessed by the publican whoa sked for forgiveness but he received the straightening (Pk. 18: 14), and it is also witnessed by the thief who only asked for to be remembered in the Kingdom but he inherited the whole Paradise (Lk. 23: 24).

53) One cannot see in creation big and small fire; and there cannot remain into the non-liar-humble-cogitation any sort of addiction to the material things. As long as we willingly commit sins, the humbleness is not within us. This is the sign that the humbleness is not within us.

54) By knowing our Master that we can imprint the image of the soul's virtue in our external behavior by taking a towel He has shown us the path of the humbleness (Jn. 13: 4). This is for our souls will become alike our external works and our soul will take the countenance of the things he does and our soul will be imprinted with those things.

55) The mastery has become to one of the angels cause for haughtiness, but he did receive the mastery for that[735].

56) Something else feels him who sits on the throne, and something else will feel him who sits into garbage. And maybe that's why, that righteous sat down in garbage outside the city. This is for, by achieving thus the humble-cogitation, he said into the feeling of his heart: "I have condemned on myself and I

[733] "Not by simple word must we ceaselessly judge on ourselves, but into the feeling of our heart. This is because he who rebukes thus on himself, he won't turn himself away also from those who reproach him and rebuke him as from some enemies, but he will love them with the whole his soul, as on some benefactors of his". This is insistently said by Abba Dorotheos.

[734] "He who reckons on himself as unworthy even of his smaller asks, and he asks as a sinner for the smaller things, he will receive a great forgiveness. This is for faithful is God to give us even more than we ask, but these things won't come to us as long as we still commit sins willingly". Or also this: "Below his worthiness asks him who works the righteousness and he doesn't ask any reward for his deeds, but only for his sins to be forgiven. That's why he will also receive the things which are above himself, from God Who will plentifully give us things which are above what we have asked or we have thought at".

Even if the whole world fated for him, he wouldn't be able to bring in exchange something equal to his sin. But his humbleness succeeded to heal in him even the unhealable illnesses of his[738].

[736] "You notice how much crushing brings to the soul the self-defamation, towards repentance. This is for from the self-defamation somebody comes also to endure him who reproaches and defames him".

[737] In KJB this Book is usually called as 2 Kings.

[738] "The humbleness can bring, without deeds, forgiveness of many sins. But the deeds without humbleness are, on the opposite, useless. And the deeds without humbleness even cause us many evil things. So, you gain forgiveness of your sins by your humbleness, as I've said". Another, at Veniamin Costache: "As the salt is needed in any food, likewise is the humbleness to all good deeds. And the humbleness can defeat the strength of many sins. That's why we must ceaselessly sadden on ourselves up with our mind, into humbleness and sadness and with right-reckoning. Abd if we gain that, it will make us sons of God. Without good deeds the humbleness will place us before God; but without humbleness, vain will be our deeds. This is for God wants the transformation of our mind. In our mind we become good people, and we become in our mind worthless people. It is enough our mind to stand before God and to speak on our behalf". The humbleness annuls the whole evil that has been imprinted within us through our evil deeds; but the absence of the humbleness will make unpleasant all our good deeds by showing them as done by us out of our vain-glory. Our pride will stop us from entering the true communion with other people, even if we do good deeds for them. Our pride locks up our self towards others, and it will send our good deeds towards them as some hunting dogs chasing the hunted animals. That's why our pride will stope those too from entering the communion with us. Our pride locks up their heart too, towards us. They might receive our good deeds but they won't receive us because of not trusting us. This is because neither us give ourselves as a gift to them in the same time with our deeds. IN such deeds the proud one gives something from outside him, as a bait. So, he won't give on himself. Only in humbleness one gives on himself as a gift, for he prays him to be accepted by others, who he cherishes more than on himself. He shows on himself as a human being needing them.

The same thing happens also in our reports with God: our humbleness opens us to God and it opens God to us, while our pride locks up both us and Him. Out good deeds can lock us up even more, by becoming a cause of pride to us. That's why only our humbleness speaks with a good result on our behalf in front of God. Only our humbleness opens our hear to the people and to God. Only at our humbleness's undaring and delicate knocking the door of the Kingdom will be open to us. Our humbleness successfully speaks on our behalf, for our in our humbleness is our heart speaking.

[739] In KJB we have: Ps. 51: 17: "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise."; in ROB we have: Ps. 50: 18: "The sacrifice of God: the humiliated ghost; the broken and humbled heart won't be cursed by God." (E. l. t.'s n.)

bodies, You won't want them. What "the sacrifice of God" and the other things means, everybody know. We have sinned to the Lord, this blessed humbleness shouted out yore to God, while speaking about adultery and killing. And it was immediately heard. The Lord forgave your sin.

59) As path and as cause of this humbleness, the forever-remembered fathers ordered the bodily ascetic toils. And I value the obedience and the heart's sincerity which resist, by nature, the self-appreciation.

60) If the pride made some of the angels to become devils, unmistakingly the humbleness can make the devils to become angels. Therefore, let them dare who fell.

61) Let's hurry up with the whole our power to climb up towards the top of the humbleness. And if not, let's at least hang on it and be borne on its shoulders. And even if we still limp, let's not fall off its arms. This is because him who falls off humbleness's arms I will wonder if he will have achieved some eternal gift.

62) The power and the ways of the humbleness, but not its sighs[740] too, are: the non-gathering of material goods, the estrangement, the unshown hiding of the wisdom, the non-crafted speaking, the asking for mercy[741], the hiding of the noble origin[742], the banishing away of the daring, and the removing of the much-speaking. This is because nothing has ever been able to humble the soul insomuch as the poor state and the countenance of a man asking other for mercy[743].

63) If you start fighting a certain passion of your let your humbleness to be your ally. "For you will step over asp and basilisk and you will trample the lion and the dragon" (Ps. 90:

[740] "The signs or the images are causes to the humble cogitation".

[741] It is not about asking for material alms, but it is about asking from mercy from your fellow humans. This makes us confessing our authentic human quality that always needs other people. This opens us to them and them to us. This makes both parties emotional so that they will enter the real communion.

[742] The noble origin made know intentionally or plainly to the people, it will as well constitute a wall between the noble and his fellow humans. Not hiding our noble origin will keep us too distant from others and it will make it more difficult to them to come accept us.

[743] "Let to be your countenance and your way of walking and your coat and your seat and your food and your beddings and your house and all the things from your house, appropriate to humbleness; likewise, to be your word, and your hearing and your welcoming of your neighbor. Let everything to be your rather sings of tour modesty than of your haughtiness".

13[744]). It is, of course, about despair and about devil – the body's dragon.

The humble cogitation is the heavenly probe that can elevate our soul from the bottomless deep (abyss) of the sin, up to heavens[745]. Somebody saw within his heart the beauty of the humbleness and, engulfed by wonder, he asked for the name of Him Who gave birth to the humbleness. And the humbleness, by smiling him luminously and peacefully, it answered him: "How do you hurry up to find the name of Him Who gave me birth? I won't tell you that, until you have not God". Him to be the glory forever and ever. Amen.

The deep (the abyss) is the mother of the spring, and the humbleness is the mother of the right-reckoning (of the discernment power).

[744] In KJB we have: Ps. 91: 13: "Thou shalt tread upon the lion and adder: the young lion and the dragon shalt thou trample under feet."; in ROB we have: Ps. 90: 13: "Over asp and basilisk you will step and you will trample over lion and over dragon". (E. l. t.'s n.)

[745] "The definition of the humble cogitation taken as the working power". The humbleness is the power that elevates us truly and authentically up to heavens, namely into the heart of God and of our fellow humans.

The Word XXVI

About Discerning the Thoughts, the Passions, and the Virtues

1) The power of discernment is in them who are beginners the true knowledge or the things regarding to themselves. In them who are in the middle, it is the understanding feeling[746] that discerns unmistakingly the actual good from the natural good and form the opposite good[747].

And among the consummate ones there dwells the knowledge through godlike illumination, that can enlighten with its light also the things which are within others in a darkened manner.

Or, maybe, the discernment power (of the right-reckoning) is and it is known as usually being the sure knowing of the godlike will in any place and at any time and related to anything. That can be usually found only in them who are clean in heart and have clean bodies and mouths. The right-reckoning is the unstained conscience and the clean feeling[748].

2) he who has defeated the three ones, in a rightly-faithful manner, he has defeated together with the three one also the [746] "The understanding feeling or the feeling of the mind" (νοερα αίσθησις) it is an older expression used by the father (even by Saint Gregory of Nyssa), and this expression shows that the mind understands and it feels in the same time, namely the mind knows through a touch with the affective reality itself, and it also notices its quality as good or bad. For instance, I understand a man, and I realize his good or bad quality. And one could say that then I will understand him more. That is a feeling which an understanding is within, and it is an understanding that is a feeling. It is like an understanding by tasting (to be seen at Diadochus of Photice, head no. 30; The Romanian Philokalia, volume I, pp. 345-346).

[747] The actual good or the chief good (το χορίως αγαθόν) is that good achieved through ascesis and by grace, unlike the natural kindness that is inferior to that. But there is also the Good through Himself, or the godlike Subject, the inexhaustible spring of the kindness, of any kindness, and that cannot be but a person, because only the person is kind.

[748] The discernment is not only a theoretical knowledge, but is both a knowledge and a feeling, in the same time, of what is good or bad, and therefore it depends on the state of cleanness of him who has the discernment power. Only him who is clean in heart can perceive what is clean and he will feel, with aversion, what is unclean. "And clean in heart is him who does not transgress the commandments of God, and who condemns on himself; or him who has mercy on the whole creation; or him who is free from hidden passions. And clean to his body is him who is free of the defilement of his body and who speaks the truth with his mouth".

five ones. And he who behave carelessly towards those ones, he won't defeat any of them[749].

3) Let no one who hear or see during the monastic life things which are above-nature, to fall, because of his nescience, into faithlessness. This is for where God Who is above nature comes, there will be dome also things which will be above-nature.

4) The whole devilish war from within us consists of these three all-comprising things: carelessness, pride, or devil's envy. The first one if to be deplored: the second one is very wicked; but blessed is the third one.

5) Let there be in all our things, according to God, as target and guide, our conscience, for, by knowing where the blowing of the winds comes from, us to spread our sails according to those[750].

6) In all our works according to God, the devils dig three pits to us. Firstly, they fight to impede us from doing the good. Secondly, after they have been defeated in the first place, they fight us not to do that according to God. When the thieves do not reach either this target, by peacefully coming towards our soul, they congratulate us that we live in everything according to God. The enemy of the first temptation is the zeal and the thinking at death. The enemy of the second one is the obedience and the reproach; and the enemy of the third one is the ceaseless self-defamation.

7) This ascetic toil stands before us until the fire of God will enter our holy place (the altar)[751]. Then we won't stay under

[749] In the Edition form the year 1970: "he who has defeated the three ones, namely the belly's covetousness, the love for money, and the vain-glory, he has defeated together with those also the five ones, namely the fornication, the idleness, the sadness, the anger, and the pride. And he who hasn't defeated those ones, he won't be able to defeat these ones either". These are the eight passions.

[750] "Sometimes the ship sinks because of the external waves. On some other times it sinks because of the burden from inside. We too will sometimes be lost because of our sins with the deed, while some other times because of our inward thoughts. So, we must take heed at the attacks of the ghosts from outside and at emptying on ourselves of the thoughts of the uncleanness from within. But we must be more careful with the inward thoughts".

[751] This is an allusion to the saying of Saint Mark the Ascetic about soul as the holy dwelling place of God, and about heart as the alter of this church (About Baptism; The Romanian Philokalia, volume I, p. 282). On this altar stays, as sacrifice or as gift, our being, which we are waiting for the fire of the godlike love to descend upon, in order to ignite our being and to being our being to God into scent of good fragrance, or as a sacrifice and a totally given gift and well pleasant to God. If we do not offer on ourselves to God with the whole our heart, and ignited by the fire of the love, we won't be a clean and pleasant to God sacrifice.

the force of some thoughts entering us before us noticing that (prejudgments). "This is for our God is a fire that consumes" (Deuteronomy 4: 24) the whole (inappropriate) heat and movement, the thoughts form before (the prejudgments), the petrifaction and the darkening from within, seen and thoughts.

8) The devils use to do also the things which are contradictory to what we have said. This is because, when they succeed in defeating our soul and in overturning the light of our mind, there no longer will be within us, the unfortunate, neither watchfulness, nor right-reckoning (discernment), neither reckoning, nor shame, but there will be bluntness, insensitiveness, lack of discernment, and blindness.

9) If the evening and the darkness do not come over the soul's day[752], the thieves won't steal, stab, and destroy. By theft is lost the being, by theft is done what isn't good as it would be good. The theft is a taken of the soul into slavery, unnoticeably. The stabbing of the soul is the killing of the rational mind that has fallen into inappropriate deeds. And the destruction is the despair after committing the lawlessness.

10) Let no one blame their helplessness because of not fulfilling the evangelical commandments. This is for there are souls who did even what was above commandment. Let yourself be persuaded by him who love his neighbor more than himself and he put his souls for that one, despite he didn't receive a commandment from God to do that[753].

11) Let dare the passionate who humble themselves. This is because, even if they fall into all the pits and even if they are hunted by all traps and they will be sick will all illnesses, but after they get healthy, they will be doctors and lighteners, candlesticks and advisers, by teaching the ways of healing each illness and by delivering those who will have fallen, due to their experience.

[752] "The evening and the darkness of the soul are the carelessness, the forgetfulness, and the lust… If, therefore, the mind hasn't been darkened by the mentioned passions, the passions won't master over our soul". Like the heart's cleanness gives the condition for knowledge, likewise the defilement through passions will bring the darkness. The light of the knowledge and the darkness of the conscience aren't, on the spiritual plan, only deeds of a correct or of an incorrect usage of the rationality, but also of the moral cleanness or filthiness, or of the delicate sensitiveness or of the rude bluntness.

[753] "This was Abba Leon from Cappadocia".

12) They who still are tormented by some thoughts which sneaked in previously[754], and they can teach, even by simple words, but they cannot lead. This is because, by getting themselves ashamed by their own words, they will start doing the good things. And it happened to them what we saw at some people who were wallowing on themselves into mud. Those ones, by getting themselves dirtied with mud, they were teaching the passersby the way they sank, telling them that for their salvation, so that the passersby not to fall into the same passion.

This is for the salvation of others the Almighty God delivered them from mud. And if the passionate one throw themselves willingly into pleasures, let them share the teaching by keeping their silence. This is for it was said that "Jesus started to do and (then) to teach" (Acts 1: 1).

13) Awful indeed, awful sea are we crossing, oh, you humble monks; and full will many waves and raised rocks and of dizzying swirls and hidden rocks and monsters and pirates and waves and abysses.

Through the seen rock of the soul we must understand the savage and fierce anger; by dizzying swirls we must understand the hopelessness enveloping our mind and pushing our mind to fall into the bottom of the discouragement; through the hidden rock we must understand the nescience that reckons the evil as being good; the monster is this small and savage body; the pirates are the all-dreadful servants of the vain-glory who steal the load of our ship and the toil of our virtues; the wave if the swollen and heavy belly and that surrenders us to the monster by its own impulse[755]; and the abyss is the pride cast off the sky, that raises us up to the sky and that casts us into the bottomless precipice (abyss).

14) They who have been educated, they know which teachings match the beginners, which teachings match the ones in the middle, and which teachings match the teachers. Let's

[754] "The fight against the thoughts sneaked in before being noticed, with the prejudgments (προλήψεις) it isn't characteristic to the passionate ones, but to them who stay away from hatred but still feel the smell of the souly filthiness. That's why he ordered to these ones not to take leadership positions, lest, because of their carelessness, they to roll down in the inappropriate deeds. And to them who are open to the ugly deeds, he doesn't allow them to teach others".

[755] "He appropriately called the swollen belly as wave. This is because there is the mind dragged by waves and driven to falling".

take heed thoughtfully, lest by legging behind at learning, us to still live the ascetic toils of the beginners. This is because it is a big shame to see an old man going to school next to the children.

The best alphabet to anyone is this: the obedience, the fasting, the sackcloth of the repentance, the ashes, the tears, the confession, the silence, the humbleness, the watchfulness, the manhood, the cold, the tiredness, the living into difficulties, the defamation, the crushing, the non-remembering the evil, the love among brothers, the gentleness, the simple and non-inquiring faith, the absence of the worldly worry, the hatred without hatred of the parents[756], the dispassion, the simplicity combined with the non-evilness, and not to be cherished by others[757].

The good rule of the advanced ones consists of: the lack of the vain-glory, the non-getting-angry, the good hope, the quietude, the right-reckoning (the discernment), the steadfast thinking as judgment, the mercy, the hospitality, the temperate advising, the prayer untroubled by passions, the non-loving of money.

And the rule, the word, and the law of the ghosts and of the bodies of them who have become consummate, by living with good faithfulness into the body, it is this: unenslaved heart, consummate love, spring of humble cogitation, getting out of mind[758], Christ's entrance, unrobbed light of the prayer, abundance of the godlike illumination, enduring the death[759], hating the life[760], the running away from the body; being a messenger to the world[761], God's zealous, together-liturgizing with the angels, the bottomless (abyss) of the conscience, house of the mysteries, guardian of the mysteries, savior of the people[762], god of the devils[763], lord of the passions, master of the [756] It is a hatred that doesn't actually hate the parents as persons, but it hated their worry about their son who has become a monk, and the temptation his parents lead him into pressuring him to renounce to monasticism etc.

[757] These are the virtues of the beginners, twenty-four in number, as the letters of the alphabet.
[758] It means that the mind leaves the worry for itself and it will exclusively look at God; it is the kidnapping or the ecstasy.
[759] Enduring the death anticipatedly; living with the thought at death; to live as you have died to this life.
[760] The hating of the life into sin, while loving the living into God.
[761] The prayer for the world, the work for world's salvation.
[762] Namely a tool of Christ in the work of saving the people.

body, administrator of the nature, running away from sins, house of dispassion, and follower of the Master by the help form the Master.

15) We will need no little watchfulness, when our body is ill. This is for the devils by seeing us laying down and for now not being us able to use any ascesis toil against them, because we are weak, they will attempt to war us even stronger. The ill people from the world are approached by devils of the anger and sometimes of the blasphemy. But the people who are outside the world, if they have abundantly what they need, the devil of the belly's covetousness or the devil of the fornication tempt them, and if they are poor and they live in ascetic places, the master of the idleness and of the discontent set them traps[764].

16) I've found out that the wolf of the fornication adds pains to the ill and even in pains it sows in him indecent feelings and leaks. It happens you to see a striking thing, that during some awful pains, the body becomes hot. But I turned the other way and I saw some people laying down and being comforted on the bed itself by the godlike work, or by the pricking of the heart, and those were removing from them their pains, so that there were some of them who never wanted to be delivered form their illness. And again, I turned in another direction and I saw some people being tormented, but being delivered through their illness as through a trial, and I extolled Him Who through clay was cleaning the clay.

17) The understanding mind is necessarily dressed up with understanding feeling too. Bu being the understanding mind within us and by not being the understanding mind within us, let's not cease searching for it. This is for, by showing itself the external things will cease working[765]. This is what a [763] God by grave of the devils; so higher than the devils are as God is by nature to His creation.

[764] "But all of these can be defeated by the humbleness combined with the poverty. This is for, by reckoning the misfortune coming upon him as his own, in the poverty of the repentance and of the humbleness, he won't fall either during his illness in defilement as rich, nor in idleness and discontent as deprived; but he will endure the time of the illness as an earning time, rejoicing himself and giving thanks".

[765] "The understanding feeling is within us as one that is united with the mind in every man. But it is not within us as one that is hidden by passions in the addicted ones ands it is unworking and unknown". The mind's feeling works when through it the mind comes in contact with the spiritual realities. But this happens only when the mind is clean of passions. Otherwise, the will only mind speculate about the spiritual realities as about some suspected realities, but which the mind hasn't experienced yet. In order us to reach the true knowledge certain knower philosopher said: "And you will find the godlike feeling"[766].

18) The monastic life is appropriately lived into the heart's feeling, in deeds, in words, in thoughts, and in movements[767]. And if not, it won't be monastic and therefore neither angelic.

19) Something else if the care from God, and something else is the help from Him, something else is us to be guarded by Him, something else is His mercy, and something else if the comforting from God. The first one can been seen throughout all the creation; the second one can be seen only within believers; the another can be seen among them who truly believe; and the last one appears within them who love God.

20) Sometimes it happens that what is a medicine to somebody, to somebody else it will be poison. And sometimes it happens that one and the same, if given to somebody at the right time it will be a medicine, while given at the wrong time it will be condemnation to him[768].

21) I saw an unskilled doctor who, by defaming the crushed one, he didn't cause to that one but despair. And I saw a skillful doctor who, by incising with the rebuke the swollen heart he emptied that heart of all its puss. I saw once an ill man who in order to clean his defilement he drank the medicine of the obedience and by moving and by walking and by not-sleeping, and some other time, I saw another – having his soul's eye ill – appeasing on himself and living in silence[769]. He who has ear to hear, let him hear.

22) Some people, I do not know where they have that from (for I have learnt not to inquire the gifts from God with my or the spiritual realities by contacting them, we must strive ourselves to remove the cover of the passions from on the mind's feeling, namely the bluntness brought to it by our passions. Through the mind's feeling we will cross beyond the sensitive cover of the things, and so that cover will no longer impede us to know their spiritual foundations.

[766] Through the feeling of the mind, we will place on ourselves in contact with the reality of God, namely we will have the "feeling of God".

[767] The heart's feeling is the mind's feeling, which the heart puts more sentiment into.

[768] A scholium belonging to Photius, the Patriarch of Constantinople: "For instance, the fasting is a cleaning of the passions when kept in particular and within oneself; but in gatherings and celebrations, it will be a poison that hurts in many ways him who uses it, either it will be an offense to others, or he will brag on himself for fasting, or he will get haughty and he will part with the others".

[769] "I reckon that he called as illness of the soul eye the addiction of the mind through thoughts. This is for the soul's eye is the mind. But to the healing of this illness can contribute the lack of meetings with other people and the quietude, unlike the much-speaking that usually causes bleariedness".

opinions), they have by nature, to say so, a tendency towards restraint, or towards cleanness, or towards appeasement, or towards non-daring, or towards gentleness, or towards easily getting a pricked heart and there are others having the same nature opposing them when they want to do those, so that they must force their own heart with the whole their power. But I like the last ones more than the first ones, as one who, despite they are defeated for a while, they force their nature.

Do not brag on yourself, man, with that richness that you haven't worked for to earn it. This is because the Giver of gifts, by knowing in advance the harm and the perdition which you are going towards, he has delivered you, to some extent, through His unpaid for gifts[770]; and the teachings from your childhood and the education received and the learnt trades help us or resists us, after they have grown up, to achieve the virtues in the monastic life too.

23) The angels are luminous light to the monks. And the monastic living is a light to all people[771]. Therefore, let him strive in everything for being a good example, not offending anyone in anything, in what they work and in what they say. "This is because, if the light becomes darkness, the darkness" – namely they who live in the world, how much more will they be darkened (Mt. 7: 23)?

24) If you listen to me, you who want, it is good not to lose on ourselves in many types of teachings or to divide our poor soul in fighting thousands and thousands and tens of thousands of enemies. This is because we won't have enough time for leaning all their thousands of crafts. Let's arm on

[770] "He calls as unpaid for that work that is untiring, a work that will easily be scattered. This is because the crowns are intertwined for toils. This is for: "You gave Me to eat" (Mt. 25: 35) and the others, which are deeds and proofs of the toils".

[771] "As monks we owe to illuminate by our life, as for ourselves as also to the people who see us. But not through the trumpet of the showing up. This is for: "So your light to lighten" (Mt. 5: 16) doesn't mean to herald about ourselves, but as the fire lightens into the darkness form on earth, likewise the light shines into darkness" Another, belonging to Saint Isaac: "It is appropriate to the monk to be, in all his things, useful image and example to them who look at him. This is for, by seeing the enemies of the truth the monks' many good deeds, which shine like some rays, they to unwillingly confess that the Christians have a founded hope for salvation. And the people will run to him from all quarters, as to an escape and as to a shelter, so that the horn of the Church to be raised against its enemies; and many to start zealously doing the good deeds… This is for the monastic life is a praise to the Church of Christ".

ourselves with the Holy Trinity against the three ones through the three ones[772]. If not, we will cause many toils to ourselves.

25) Rightly so, if "He Who transforms the sea into dry land" (Ps. 65: 5[773]) come within us, the Israelite from us will unmistakingly cross that see too, non-haunted by waves, or that mind that sees God, and he will see the Egyptians drowning in the water of the tears. But if That One doesn't come within us, "who will be able to endure the roar of the waves or of this body?" (Rom. 7: 24). If God resurrects within us by our doing, His enemies will be scattered; and if we come closer to Him through seeing (contemplation), they who hate Him and us will run away from His face and from ours[774].

26) Let's strive to learn the godlike things rather through sweat and through toil and not by simple word. This is because not words but deeds will we have to show at the time of the exist (of the soul)[775].

27) They who have heard about a hidden treasure in a certain place, they will search for that treasure, and because of their very tiring search they attentively will guard what they will have found out. And they who have become rich tirelessly, they easily waste their richness.

[772] "With the help of the Holy and of-One-Being Trinity, he says, let's arm on ourselves against the three ones, namely: the love for pleasure, the love for money, and the love for glory, through the three ones, namely: through restraint, through clean love, and through humbleness. This is for the love for pleasure is abolished through restraint, the love for money is abolished through clean love as power of giving and of communion; and the love for glory is abolished through humbleness, as non-loving of showing up and as hating the glory". The virtues of the communion abolish the passions of the egotism with the power of the Holy Trinity, the supreme spring of the life in communion.

[773] In KJB we have: Psalm 66: 6: "He turned the sea into dry land: they went through the flood on foot: there did we rejoice in him."; in ROB we have" Ps. 65: 5: "He Who transforms the sea into dry land, through the river they will cross by foot. There we will rejoice ourselves of Him." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[774] It is being applied here the verse no. 1 of the Ps. 67 to our life (in KJB we have Ps. 68: 1 (E. l. t.'s n.)). The doing and the contemplation are the two stages or steps of the ascension towards God.

[775] "He who shows on himself as wise, not by deeds but by words, "he enriches on himself out of injustice, and his toils, according to eth Scripture, they will enter the strangers' houses" (Parables 5: 16). Namely the houses belonging to those who do not look at his deeds but who listen to his words. They will not enrich on themselves not out of his unclean of sins state, a state that hasn't reached yet the righteousness; but out of his words, which still are a toil, will benefit others, and not himself. A scholium belonging to Photius: "What hasn't been born out of toil, the longing won't embrace it. This is because it is easy to be despised what one achieves easily (either is about deed or about contemplation)".

28) It will be difficult to defeat all the thoughts sneaked within us previously[776]. And they who do not cease to add to those thoughts, they will have got despaired in themselves, because of not benefitting anything from their rejection. Though, we know that God can do everything and nothing is impossible to Him.

29) Some people asked me a difficult to answer question, a question that exceeds the knowledge of all of those who are like me, a question whose answer I haven't found it any of the books I have read. They said: Which of the eight thoughts are born out of other thoughts, and which of them is born by each of the three chief thoughts, in a special manner? I, by admitting my nescience in answering this question, without being embarrassed by that, I have found an answer from the all-pious men:

The mother of the fornication is the belly's covetousness; of the idleness, it is the vain-glory; the sadness is the daughter of these three, as the anger is too. The mother of the pride is again the vain-glory. But I answered to those forever-remembered men: can you please show me also the daughters of the eight ones, and each one whose daughter is?

Those dispassionate taught me with great benevolence, by telling me that there is not a certain order or an understanding among those which are without understanding[777], but there is a total disorder and fickleness. And the blessed fathers I have mentioned assured me about that by invoking convincing examples, which brought many proofs, some of them presented by us in the present Word, in order us to illuminate the other ones by this.

For instance: the laughter at inappropriate time is caused sometimes by fornication, and some other times by the vain-glory when somebody shamelessly brags within himself; and [776] Here, the previous thoughts (προλήψεις – prejudgments) are the thoughts at the passion the monk had before entering the monastery. Scholium from Mark: "A previous thought is the unwilling remembering of the previous sins. At the beginner the sinful thought sis impeded to advance to passions, and in him who is victorious the bait is rejected". Another: "If you love learning, let yourself also love living in ascesis. This is because the simple-knowledge makes the man haughty".

[777] The connection among them, the passing from one to another, it has something irregular, or chaotic, because all of them start out of the same abyss of darkness started towards evil; the come our rather together, because of being connected to one another.

some other times the laughter comes out of delectation[778]. The much-sleeping will come out of delectation; but it will sometimes come out of fasting too, when them who fast boast themselves for that; and some other times it will come out of nature. The much-speaking will sometimes spring out of vain-glory, and some other times out of belly's covetousness. The idleness will sometimes come out of delectation (much-eating), and some other times out of not fearing of God.

The blasphemy is, in the first place, the daughter of the pride, but it often will come out also from judging your neighbor in your thought or out of the undue envy from the devils. The heart's callousness will come out of satiation, but it will often come also out of insensitiveness and out of addiction. And the addiction it will often be born out of fornication and out of vain-glory and out of many others.

The cunningness will come out of the self-appreciation and out of anger. The hypocrisy will come out of self-content and out of living according to your own rules. And those who are contrary to these are born out of mothers which are opposite to the mentioned ones[779].

And in order not to say to many (because I won't have the time to study and clarify each of them individually), the chief destroyer of all passions is the humble cogitation. This is for they who have gained it they will have overcome everything.

30) The birth-givers of all passions are the pleasure and the cunningness; he who keeps these two he won't see the Lord. But we won't benefit anything from restraining ourselves from one of them without restraining ourselves from another.

31) Let's take example of fearing our Lord from the clerks of the regime and form the beasts, and the love for the bodies

[778] "The laughter comes out of three causes: out of fornication, out of vain-glory, and out of the inward haughtiness and delectation, that is the satiation". Another, belonging to Saint Ephraem: "The laughter it will banishes away the happiness of the crying, it will tear down what we have built, it will sadden the Holy Ghost, it won't bring any benefit, it will break (corrupt) the body, it will banish away the virtues, it will be deprived of remembering the death and of thinking at torments. You take from me the laughter and give me the crying and the weeping as a gift, which you ask me for, God".

[779] In the Edition from the year 1970: "If the much-speaking has as its mothers the vain-glory and the belly's covetousness, the silence, that is contrary to the much-speaking it will necessarily be born out of the ones which are contrary to the vain-glory and to the belly's covetousness, namely out of humbleness and restraint". And the same is with the other as well. But even though any passion will be abolished by the contrary virtue, the humble cogitation will abolish all the mentioned passions".

let it be to you as a way to love God. This is for we are unimpeded by anything from taking the examples of the virtues from the contrary ones.

32) The today's people have become awfully evil and all of them have been filled up with the self-appreciation and with hypocrisy. They might show bodily toils like our fathers from yore, but they are not worthy those ones' gifts, though I reckon that the human nature didn't need so badly the gifts as it does now. And this rightly has happened to us. This is because not in toils but in simplicity and in humbleness will be God shown[780]. And despite the Lord's power is being consummate in weakness, the Lord won't reject the worker that is humble in thought (2 Cor. 12: 9).

33) When we see somebody among Christ's warriors submitted to some bodily pains, let's not hurry ourselves up to reckon that as a punishment coming out of his sinfulness, but let's rather heal him by welcoming him with simple and non-cunning love, as he would be one of our limbs and as a together-warrior with us[781].

34) There is an illness for cleaning the sins up; and there is another for humbling the thought. Our Good and All-Good Lord and Master, when He sees some monks idle in their ascesis, he will humble their body through some illness, as through an unpainful ascesis. But sometimes the illness will come also for cleaning our souls of evil thoughts, or of passions[782].

35) All the things happening to us, either seen or unseen, they can be received well or passionately or with a middle feeling[783]. I saw three brothers submitted to hardships: one rebelled, one remained sad, and the third one harvested many fruits.

36) I saw plowmen sowing the same seed, but each of them aiming to different purpose: one to pay his debt; one to [780] "The bodily toil without the mind's cleanness it will be like a baren womb and as some dried tits. This is because that won't be able to get us closer to know God. It tires the body but it won't have any benefit out of that".

[781] "The monks' helplessness is a gift from the godlike oikonomia".

[782] "That monk who doesn't serve pleasantly to God and who doesn't live in ascesis for the salvation of his soul, but he does his ascetic toils carelessly, you will unmistakingly see him as allowed by God to fall into temptation, lest out of his much-non-working to slip towards the worse ones".

[783] "He will receive well those things who reckons the things coming upon him as his own and he won't be upset because of that but he will be thankful".

gather wealth to himself; one to hunt the praise for his work from them who were passing on the road of the life; one to upset his envious enemy; and finally, on not to be condemned by people for being lazy[784]. And the meanings of the plowman's sowings are these: the fasting, the taking of vigil, the giving of alms, the serving, and the others alike. So, let the brothers trying to knowing by experience the purposes they pursuit into the Lord.

37) As when we draw the water out of fountain, it happens sometimes that we draw, unwillingly and unnoticedly, a frog too, likewise when we work the virtues, we will often work also the passion invisibly intertwines with the virtues[785].

For instance: the belly's covetousness is intertwined with the hospitality granted to strangers; the fornication, with the love; the harshness with the right-reckoning (discernment); the cunningness with the temperance; the plotting with: the hesitation, the idleness, the resisting by word, the living according to ow rule, the disobedience, and the gentleness; the haughtiness when teaching on others with the silence; the pride with the joy; the laziness with the hope; the condemnation, again, with the love; the drowsiness and the idleness with the appeasement (hesychia); the bitterness with the cleanness; the trust in oneself with the humbleness[786]; and all of these are [784] In the Edition form the year 1970: "The plowmen are the monks called to work the vineyard of Christ. They are listed according to the differences among their virtues. From among them, the first one fulfills the work of the servant by working because of his fear; the second one works for payment, the third one works as a son does. All of these are worthy to be praised. The fourth one works uselessly, as one who want to be pleasant to people; the fifth one likens to a warrior, of better said he fights zealously. The sixth toils because of shame and he is not a hireling. But the work of these last three ones will be submitted to condemnation and it will be in vain. And we, by trying all of those works, we have realized that we must give you this advice: that even if we are debtor sinners, we can reconcile our Master through gifts. Despite the first work is humbler, but it will forever remain as priceless as one that we always owe and as the first one".

[785] "If the evilness became visible in our life, naked and not covered by the imagination of something good, the man wouldn't start by himself towards it".

[786] Belonging to Mark: "He who doesn't know the enemy's traps he will be torn apart easily. And he who doesn't know the cause of the passions, he will fall easily". In the translation of Veniamin Costache. Another, belonging to Josephus of Pelusium: "The knowledge mixed with the simplicity is a godlike thing, namely it is a consummate virtue. If the first one is separated from the second one it will become cunningness, while the second one alone is stupidity. The first one does evil, the second one allows itself to be deluded. Christ asked for them to be united: "Be wise like the snakes and gentle like the doves". Our enemy wages war to us through all things. So, he who wants to be saved, he must have many eyes".

followed, as a communal drink, or better said as a poison, by the vain-glory[787].

38) Let's not get sad when we ask God for something, for a long time, and we are not heard, for the Lord would have wanted that all the people to become dispassionate in an instant, but because He is all-knower, so that He know also that that won't be useful to us. All of them who ask and who don't receive from God what they ask for, they doubtlessly don't receive what they are asking for because of one of these causes: either because they ask for that before the right time, or because they ask for that with unworthiness and by wanting vain-glory, namely because if they have received what they have asked for they will brag with that, or after they have received the asked for thing they will fall into carelessness.

39) The passions got sometimes far not only from some believers, but also form some who were not believers, except one passion. The other passion left only that passions to fill up their places as one that if the first among passions. This is because this passion brings so much damage that it will be able to bring one down even from heavens[788].

40) Nobody doubts, I think, that the devils leave the soul for a while or constantly. But only a few know how many sorts this leaving is of.

The matter of the passions is consumed by the godlike fire[789]. And in the same time with the uprooting of this matter and with the soul's cleanness, the passions are destroyed as well. Let's not attract them again by a bodily living and by carelessness. The devils get far from us also willingly, in order to make us carelessness. But by that they will unexpectedly kidnap our poor soul.

I know also about another withdrawal of the beasts. It is that from after the soul has got fully accustomed and the soul has been soaked with passions to the peak, and the soul has become plotting to himself and waging war to himself[790]. The example for this thing is the children. This is because, after a long-habituation, in the absence of their mother's tits, they will suck up their fingers.

[787] In the Edition form the year 1970: "The vain-glory is a common damage to all virtues. It brings no benefit to him who works the virtues and who doesn't reject his vain-glory. This is for God won't receive him. On the opposite, God will receive him who is a sinner but who repents into the feeling of the humble-cogitation and who doesn't turn himself from God".

[788] "He speaks about pride, which the devil fell by".

[789] "Namely through the work of the Holy Ghost, or through the love for God, that is preserved as an unquenched fire within the hearts of them who love God".

I also know about a fifth dispassion within soul, one that consists of much simplicity and innocence. "The right help comes from God Who saves them who are right in their heart" (Ps. 7: 10-11[791]), and God delivers them unnoticedly from evil, like the naked children do not know they are naked.

41) The sin or the passion are not in the natural in a natural manner[792]. This is because God isn't the maker of the passions. And the natural virtues planted within us by God are many. Among these are as well: the mercifulness, if even the Hellenes are commiserating; the love, for even the speechless

[790] "Getting used to it means reaching to get habituated to the passions' evilness". The fight of the good and evil tendencies has become a state that is characteristic to the soul. In this struggle the evil tendencies which have become habits or passions, they will always achieve the victory, if God is not called for help by a feeling of great faith and love, one that overwhelms the urges caused by the attraction to the pleasures. And if the struggle lasts, it will bring the soul to decomposition, or to the helplessness to do something good in order to regain the strength of his freedom. This is one with the soul's death.

[791] In KJB we have: Ps. 7: 10-11: "My defence is of God, which saveth the upright in heart."; in ROB we have: Ps. 7: 10: "My help comes from God, The One Who saves them who are righteous in their heart". (E. l. t.'s n.)

[792] "If the sin was natural, nobody would be punished. Neither other would commit the virtue". Another: "The evil cogitated outside the free choice and in an own hypostasis in the nature of the existing things, it will be nothing". Another: "The passion is not else but the absence of the virtue". Another: "The natural virtues within us are: the mercifulness, the love, the faith, and the hope. And the virtues from above-nature are: the cleanness, the non-getting-angry, the humble cogitation, the prayer, the vigil, and the fasting". Another, belonging to Mark: "Something else is the deed of commandments and something else is the virtue, even though they have their impulses one into another. The deed of the commanded is what it has been commanded. The virtue is what is dome for being pleasant to the truth (to God).

The sin cannot be by nature, because the fight introduced by sin within nature cannot start from within nature. The sin cannot be cogitated without being chosen by a subject. And the evil by and large, it cannot be cogitated as standing by itself, as having an own hypostasis. This is because the evil is something fighting against the being, in the bosom of the being. The evil is a woodworm of the existence, having its origin in the evilness of the human subjects, and wanting to introduce a disorder within being. The physical evil doesn't hurt so much as the evil coming from a person. The physical evil has its ultimate roots in the evil freely chosen by persons, namely into sin.

The passions cannot be understood without supposing the virtue that the evil opposed to. The virtue can be understood without passion. Only when the passion is totally absent, we will have the full virtue. The virtue represents not only the inward harmony of the persons but it also represents the good relation between persons, in the last analysis between the human person and the godlike Person. The harmony within a person cannot exist but in the same time with the harmony among persons.

beats sometimes shed tears when separated from their companions; the faith, for it is born in all people; the hope, for by borrowing, by going at sea, and by sowing, we hope for the good things.

So, as it has been proven, the love is a natural virtue within us, "and the love is the connection and the fulfillment of the law" (Rom. 13: 10), then the virtues wont' be stranger to the nature. Let them be ashamed who oppose the helplessness to the virtues.

42) Above nature are: the cleanness (the virginity), the non-getting-angry, the humble cogitation, the prayer, the vigil, the fasting, and the ceaseless pricking of the heart. The teacher of some of these are some of the people, and of the others are the angels; and Teacher and Giver of the others is God-the Word[793].

43) When we are required both good deed in the same time[794], we must choose the most necessary of them. For instance: often, when we stay to prayer, some brothers come to us. We must choose one of two: either we leave the prayer, or we will sadden the brother letting him leave without and answer. The love is greater than the prayer. The prayer has been always reckoned as a partial virtue; the love comprises all virtues.

Again: I was going to a city or to a village, I was still young, and sitting at the table I was engulfed immediately by the thoughts of the belly's covetousness and of the vain-glory. And by fearing I the daughter of the belly's insanity[795], I rather was defeated by the vain-glory[796]. But I knew that the devil of [793] Teachers of the virginity are Elijah and John the Forerunner and John the Speaker about God; teachers of the gentleness: Moses and David; of the prayer: Himself God-the Word, and the angels who showed himself to Anthony and to Pachomius. Of the fasting: again, Moses and our Lord Himself. Of the vigil, many who have earned also the pricking of their heart out of this; of the humble cogitation: the Word of God and everybody's Savior Who "for us He made Himself poor" (2 Cor. 8: 9) and "He took our body".

[794] "The collision of the debts".

[795] "He calls as daughter of the insanity the fornication, as one born out of the belly's covetousness".

[796] "He was defeated by that one out of oikonomia, in order him not to taste, pushed by his youth, the sweetness. Besides, the vain-glory is worse than the belly's covetousness. This is because the last one is the entrance of the evil, and the vain-glory is evil's end".

the vain-glory often defeats the devil of the belly's covetousness in the young ones. And rightly so[797].

44) At the people from within world the root of all evil is their love for money. And at the monks, it is the belly's covetousness. At them who are spiritual are often allowed by God, out of His oikonomia, some very small passions, so that by defaming them on themselves because of some small and sinless passions, they to earn an unrobbed richness of humble cogitation.

45) It is not possible that he who lives since the beginning with disobedience, to achieve the humbleness, even though each one imagines that he has learnt his own craftsmanship or that he is able to earn the humbleness[798].

46) The Fathers establish that the doing consists of two totally general virtues[799]. And rightly so, this is for one of them is the killer of the pleasures, while another ensures this killing through the humble cogitation. That's why the crying is twofold as well: one abolished the sin while another causes the humble cogitation.

47) It is characteristic to them who are pious to give everything to him who asks for it. And it is characteristic to them who are even more pious to give him even what he hasn't asked for. But not to ask back from him who has taken (Mt. 5: 39), especially when they can, it is characteristic only to them who are dispassionate[800].

[797] "The devil of the belly's covetousness being more natural and therefore more deceiver, it rightly so it defeats the vain-glory".

[798] In the Edition form the year 1970: "This is a demonstration that he who is disobedient won't be able to achieve the humble cogitation. This is because he who lacks the humble-cogitation is proven that he suffers of the devil's illness. And he who suffer of this illness if God doesn't help him with steadfast repentance, he will be together-inheritor with him whose illness he suffers of too".

[799] The doing is the first stage of the spiritual climbing which the cleaning of the passions and the achieving of the virtues is being done through, and then one to reach the superior stage of the contemplation (of the spiritual sight). In the Edition form the year 1970: "The two general virtues of the first stage are: the fasting and the obedience".

[800] In the Edition from the year 1970 and at Veniamin Costache: "He who doesn't ask back from him who takes his possessions, not only that he shows on himself as non-addicted to the material things, but he also shows himself as non-rewarding with evil him who has done him evil, though he could do that. But somebody won't be able to forgive with the while his heart him who has hurt and has done injustice to him, if he doesn't have by cleanness and by dispassion God within him. By learning from God, the rationalities of the things which take place, he will receive the troubles coming upon him as his own and he is convinced that those troubles are appointed to him towards his own benefit (secretly being him announced about 48) Let's not stop researching in all passions and in all virtues, where are we: at the beginning, in the middle, or at the end. All the devils' wars against us are born out of these three reasons: either out of the love for pleasure, or out of pride, either of the devil's envy. They who are warred because of the last reason they are blessed. They who are warred because of their pride they are worthy to be cried for. And they who are warred because of their love for pleasure, they will remain worthless until the end[801].

49) There is a feeling, better said an accustoming called patience in pains, and if one is caught by that, he will no longer fear or run away from passions. Mastered by this forever-praised virtue, the souls of the martyrs easily endured the torments.

50) Something else is the guarding of the thoughts and something else is the guarding of the mind. As far it is the sunrise from sunset, as higher is the second one from the first one, and also more tiring[802].

51) Something else means somebody to pray against the thoughts and something else is speaking against the thoughts; and something else is despising the thoughts and getting about them[803]. The first way to resist is confessed by him who said: that). And so, he can forgive them who do injustice to him and he can love his enemies and he can reckon those as his benefactors". Not only the things and the person have their rationalities from God, but everything that happens. And the rationalities of the things happening to us without us contributing with an ill will to them, they belong to us, or they are guided by God towards our spiritual development and therefore towards our salvation. Even them who do evil to us, if we overcome our tendency towards revenge, that will help us to ascend to a new stage of kindness, to a new stage of closeness to God. That's why they are our benefactors, though unwillingly they are so.

[801] They who belong to the two categories contribute willingly to the evil from within them. They who are warred out of envy they won't contribute willingly to that. So, we cannot blame the devils more than on ourselves.

[802] "The guarding of the thoughts means banishing away the diverse thoughts and attacks through prayer. And guarding the mind means guarding the mind non-enslaved and unseparated from the remembrance of God; and as the mind is higher than the thought, as more difficult and more useful is the guarding of the mind. This is for we call mind also our understanding power, and somehow the eye of our soul. And we call as thought, the thing seen into mind and imprinted into mind. And guarding the mind is the preservation of the mind in state of refusal of any attack, which is the mind's first voluntary work. And the guarding of the thoughts is the rejection of the thoughts imprinted through mind's voluntary work. It is obvious to anybody how much higher is the mind in comparison to the thought".

[803] Belonging to Mark: "The first thing is characteristic to the weak ones. This is because, by not being they able to resist the enemies, they oppose them by praying. The second one is characteristic to the warriors who defeat the enemies by ascesis; and the third one is

"My God, take heed and help me" (Ps. 69: 1[804]), and the things alike; the second way to resist is confessed by him who said: "And I will answer opposing word to them who condemn me" (Ps. 118: 42[805]). And again: "You have put us towards speaking against our neighbors" (Ps. 79: 7). And to the for the third one is witness the singer: "I was mute and I didn't open my mouth" (Ps. 38: 3[806]) and "I placed a guard to my mouth, when the sinner uprose against me" (Ps. 38: 2[807]). And also: "The proud ones transgressed the law very, and I didn't deviate from seeing You" (Ps. 118: 51[808]).

Amon these ones, he who is in the middle he often uses the first way, because of his unpreparedness; the first one cannot banish yet the enemies in the second way; and the third one totally mocks the devils.

52) It is impossible by nature that the bodiless one to be bordered by body[809]. But to him who has earned God all things will be possible.

53) As they who have healthy their sense of smelling, they can know him who hides spices, likewise the clean soul uses to know the good fragrance he has achieved from God or the ugly characteristic to the contemplatives who are elevated by contemplation (by vision) and to they remain untouched by adversaries and non-warred".

[804] In KJB we have: Ps. 70: 1: "MAKE haste, O God, to deliver me; make haste to help me, O Lord."; in ROB we have: Ps. 69: 1: "My God, towards my help take heed! Lord, to help me You hurry up!" (E. l. t.'s n.)

[805] In KJB we have: Ps. 119: 42: "So shall I have wherewith to answer him that reproacheth me: for I trust in thy word."; in ROB we have: Ps. 118: 42: "And I will answer word them who rebuke me, for I have trusted Your words." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[806] In KJB we have" Ps. 39: 2: "I was dumb with silence, I held my peace, even from good; and my sorrow was stirred."; in ROB we have: Ps. 38: 3: "I got muted and I humbled myself and I neither talked of good and my pain was renewed." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[807] In KJB we have: Ps. 39: 1: "I will keep my mouth with a bridle, while the wicked is before me."; in ROB we have: Ps. 38: 2: "I put guard to my mouth when the sinner stood against me." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[808] In KJB we have: Ps. 119: 51: "The proud have had me greatly in derision: yet have I not declined from thy law."; in ROB we have: Ps. 118: 51: "The proud ones mocked me exceedingly, but I didn't deviate from Your law." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[809] "The mind, because of being fickle by nature, it will stop wandering only if united with God. This is for all things are into God and there is nothing above Him or outside Him, which the mind to wander towards". That's why the mind, as bodiless and impossible to be bordered by anything among the bodily ones, the mind cannot find its rest except in the endless One Whom the mind has everything into.

smell from others which he has been delivered from. But these things are unknown to others[810].

54) It is impossible all people to become dispassionate, but it is not impossible that all people to be saved and reconciled with God.

55) Let not master upon you them who are of different nation and who want to spy the untold oikonomia of God and the views happening within people and who unnoticedly put in your mind the thought that God would be biased. This is because these ones are and they become known as grandchildren of the self-appreciation.

56) There is a devil of the love for money who often hypocritically claims that he is humble[811]; and there is a devil of the vain-glory and of the love for pleasure urging to giving alms. If we clean ourselves of both of them, let's not stop spreading mercy everywhere[812].

57) Some people said that the devils resist the devils, but I say that all devils are looking for our perdition[813].

58) To any seen or thought spiritual work it precedes an appropriate intention and an all-good desire born within us

[810] "He who has in his nostrils his own bad smell he won't be able to smell something else, even if he stays on cadavers". Another: "They who do not feel others, they reckon that they who are unclean in their souls cannot receive and know either the good fragrance achieved from God by the clean ones, or the bad smell which those ones have been delivered from. This is for it is characteristic to them who are clean and dispassionate to feel the things existing within others". Namely, they who are clean in heart they can feel the disposition from within others, but the unclean ones cannot feel that because of their insensitiveness.

[811] "By being addicted to the love for money and by not giving others anything, he hypocritically mimics the humbleness by saying that he doesn't want to be pleasant to the people."

[812] There are all sorts of perverse intertwinings between passions and virtues. The passions use the mask of the virtues in order to deceive others. At Veniamin Costache: Saint Mark the Hermit: "The vain-glory and the love for money and the delectation won't allow the doing of the good to remain undefiled, if they do not perish, firstly, by the fear of God". Another: "These two passions deceived Eva and Adam. This was because the sweetness showed that that tree was good to eat and beautiful to seeing, and the vain-glory told them that if they tasted out of that tree, they would become as some gods. As Adam – the first one created – and Eva felt shame of one another, likewise us, after rejecting the evilness of the understanding eyes and so we see on ourselves as naked, let's be ashamed in a conscious manner of one another and let's sew fig tree leaves, or let dress ourselves up in the external shapes and in justifications by words. And our Lord prepared for us clothing of skins and He tells us: "Into your patience you will gain your souls".

[813] The opposition of the devils to one other, or their encouragement to some virtues opposite them and to passions, all of those only aim to deceive us. Their resistance is a method, and not a purpose.

with the together-working of God. This is because of the first ones do not precede, the second one wont' usually follow[814].

59) If there is an appropriate time for everything from under the sky, as the Ecclesiastes says (Eccl. 3: 1), but among all the things there are also the sanctified things of our living, let's take care of searching at any time the things appropriate to that time[815]. This is for there is a time of the dispassion within them who live in ascesis, and there is a time for addiction because of the young age of them who live in ascesis; there is a time of the tears and there is also a time of callous heart; a time of obedience and a time of domination; a time of fasting and a time for eating; a time of war from the body and a time for appeasing the heat; a time of the soul's winter (of the blizzard) and a time of mind's appeasement; a time of heart's sadness and a time of the spiritual joy; a time for teaching others and a time for listening to others; a time of the defilements, because of self-appreciation, and a time of cleanness, for humbleness; a time for fight and a time for sheltered resting; a time for appeasing and a time for uncontrolled scattering; a time for ceaseless prayer and a time for unhypocritical serving.

Let's therefore not to search for the things of the time before-time (according to a certain thing), by deluding on ourselves because of an impulse of our pride. Let's not search in the winter for the things belonging to the summer; let's not search for sheave in seeds. This is because the time of the [814] "Look at the exactness of the father. If there doesn't precede, he says, the intention and the desire from within us, the together-working with God won't follow". Another: "Give me the intention, me says, and take power".

[815] Each moment in time is given for a certain thing of ours. If we do that thing at the moment appointed to that thing, then we will be able to live our life according to the fore-appointment by God, namely in a pleasant to Him or sanctified way. We must find out the accord between the moments of the time and the moments of our life. There are some fore-established harmonies between the mentioned moments for the norms and for the healthy development of our life. The time is not a void which we can fill up with anything. But the time is correlative to the human lives. There are within time some harmonies potential to the development of our life. This is for our life itself is made so rhythm itself with a time of its. This doesn't mean a predestination, because we can live our life also against time. But that isn't a normal development of our life. You must know what time is appropriate to a moment of your life. Only then the potentialities of our being will be fully and harmoniously actualized. Each moment of the time is appropriate to a certain potentiality of our being, and these potentialities compose, at their turn, a whole. And the moment means the whole ensemble of circumstances requiring a certain thing. In addition to that, this accord depends of a full cleanness of passions. Only that give us a clear sight and a power to truly conform on ourselves to what the moment requires from us.

sowing requires toils and the time of harvesting brings untold gifts. And if not, we won't take even at the right time the things appropriate to that time[816].

60) Some people will take from God the rewards for their toils before the toils[817]. Other in toils, other after toils, other at the time of their death, according to an untold oikonomia of God. One must look at who is the humblest among those ones[818].

61) There is a despair because of the multitude of the sins and because of the burden of the conscience and because of the insupportable sadness, and because the soul is overwhelmed by the multitude of his wounds, and there is a sinking of the soul in the deep of the despair under the heaviness of those ones[819]. And there is a despair happening to us because of our pride and because of our self-appreciation, because we reckon the falling that has happened to us as bellow our dignity. He who takes heed, he will find within those ones the following state: the first one will surrender on himself to the despair; the second one no longer will trust the ascesis. But of those are useless. This is because one of them will usually be healed by the restraint and by the good hope, while the second one will be healed by humbleness and by not-judging others.

[816] Belonging to Saint Isaac: "Each one who starts, before-time, the things which are above his measure, he will cause to himself twofold harm and not advancing. This is because the merchants who are inexperienced in the great things they case bid losses to themselves. But they advance quickly in the small things. This is for each thing has its turn and each living has its appointed time".

[817] They took those rewards on the ground of their general intention to work according to the will of God (intention that is known only by God). That's why they who die young, without having showed the proof for their good work, they won't remain without the reward from God, for God knows that they would have done that and God rewards that as it would have been done.

[818] This means that God maybe rewards each one according to their humbleness. But it might be that him who hasn't had the time for committing deeds which he generally wanted, he was the humblest.

[819] "Let nobody who live into sins to trust in himself, because we know that the plowing changes the kinds of the plants, and the taking care of the soul by virtue can defeat all sorts of illnesses". Another: "Deadly sin is the unconfessed sin. Even if a saint prays for that sin to be forgiven, his prayers won't be heard". Another, belonging to Great Basil: "If one counted the abundance of the mercilessness of God, and if one could measure God's greatness in comparison to the multitude and to the size of the sins, then the despair would be justified. But if these ones can be measure and counted, and the mercy and the lenience of God cannot be measured, there won't be place for despair but for trusting God's mercy, for us repenting of our sins, in front of which there stay the forgiveness and the blood of Christ".

62) We must not wonder or feel uneasy, by seeing some people committing evil deeds and justifying those deeds with good motifs. This is because also the snake from Paradise was destroyed by the self-appreciation that made it haughty[820].

63) In all done things and in all kinds of living, either into obedience or into disobedience, either seen or thoughts, let this be your rule: if they are according to God[821]. For instance, if us who are beginners, we do a certain thing, we won't gain by working that thing into our soul more humbleness than that we already have it, I won't reckon that we do that thing with the will of God, be it a small or a bit thing[822].

64) Withing us, who are rather children, we have in this the entrustment about the will of God[823]; within them who are in the middle, it might be the fact that they are left by their enemies; and in the consummate ones, in the advancing and in the richness of the godlike light. The small things, to the great ones, it might not be small; and the great things, to the beginners, are not necessarily consummate[824].

[820] Scholium belonging to Gabriel the Monk and the Hesychast, from Latro Mountain: "he who imagines about himself that he is something, and therefore he teaches others things which he is inexperienced into either by deed of by knowledge, he will suffer of two illnesses and of two blindnesses: of the self-appreciation and of the vain-glory, and of insensitiveness and of nescience. And if that one adds to himself also the belly's covetousness, he will be led to the obvious danger and he will hear from many" Doctor, heal on yourself" (Lk. 42: 3). Veniamin Costache: "Ands if somebody has accomplished the first good deeds and after that he starts teaching others, that one will earn the godlike happiness, as he who did and taught". Another, belonging to Solomon: "There are some people who sow their things and they will earn more fruits; and there are others who add the foreign things and they will become poor".

[821] "The things into obedience are ordered by people; the things into disobedience are non-ordered by people, and done out of the own ascesis by him who is not under obedience".

[822] "Research in detail, for all of us can know if the thing we do will be pleasant to God".

[823] In increasing our humbleness.

[824] "Namely the things which are reckoned at the great ones as small, those things might not be small because of their consummation. And the things which are reckoned great at the beginners, because of their non-consummation, they might not necessarily be consummate. The same thing must be understood too about virtues and sins. For instance, one can ascertain in the great ones a progress in humbleness that is actually small to the consummation of the great ones. Abd one can find in beginners an increase in light and the banishing away of the enemies which are characteristic to the consummate ones and to them who are in the middle, and that progress is actually great to the non-consummation of the beginners. But something else is the humbleness and the illumination of the beginner, according to his measure, and something else is the humbleness and the illumination of the consummate one; these ones are very great and consummate and undeceiving. The small mistake, to the consummate ones, it is not small given their consummation. And the big mistake to the beginners is not necessarily big given their non-consummation".

65) The sky cleared of clouds will show the shiny sun; and the soul, freed from the thoughts of the previous evilness[825] and found worthy of forgiveness, that soul will necessarily see God[826].

66) Something else is the sin and something else is non-working the sin because of idleness; and something else is the carelessness; something else is the passion and something else is the falling. The one who can research them into the Lord, let him research them clearly[827].

67) Some people bless above everything the working of wonders and what is seen out of the spiritual gifts (charismas). Thy do not know that there are many things superior to that and hidden, and which are, therefore, protected from falling[828].

68) He who has cleaned on himself in a consummate manner he will see his soul, though he won't see the soul of his neighbor too, which gifts he is in. But he who is still advancing, he will know these signs through body[829].

69) A little fire can clean the whole matter, as a small breach can destroy the whole ascesis[830].

70) There is a resting of the enemy work which wakes up the mind's power without stirring up the heat. And there is a pricking (of the heart) which wakes up also the movements of the heat, and this is for us not to trust ourselves but to trust God Who kills in and unknown way the heat that is within us.

71) When we see some people loving us into the Lord, let's guard on ourselves in order us to remain non-daring, especially [825] Belonging to Mark the Monk: "The obsession with the previous things" (πρόληψις – prejudgment) is the remembering unwillingly the previous sins. He who lives in ascesis will prevent that for advancing into passions. The victorious will abolish even the attack (the bite)".

[826] Thus, the mind is always passionately hanging on the memory of the sin and on the narrowed and opaque image of the committed sinful deed.

[827] "The sin is the transgression of all commandments, even of the smallest commandment. The idle non-working consists of not doing and of not working the thing of God. The carelessness consists of working by idly. The passion is the soul's imprinted impulse and therefore difficult to be removed towards a harmful way. The falling is the collapse from the height of the (monastic) promise into disbelief, or the rolling down into some of the bodily passions".

[828] Those things are not submitted to falling because they are sheltered against praises and vain-glory.

[829] His soul hadn't become yet transparent in an unmediated manner.

[830] "You guard on yourself in the small things so you won't fall into the big mistake".

towards them. This is for nothing uses to scatter the love and to cause hatred as the daring does[831].

72) The soul's eye is understanding and very beautiful and above any beauty, according to the bodily beings. That's why the passionate ones could know too the thoughts from within other souls, out of their much love for those. And that is especially when, defiled, they are sunk within their bodies.

73) If nothing resists the immaterial nature as what is material, let him who is reading this to understand[832].

74) The care for themselves in the worldly people opposes the taking care from God; as in us, it opposes to the understanding knowledge. They who have their soul unfortified, let them know out of the body's troubles and dangers and out of the troubles coming from outside, that they are tried by God; and they who are consummate, let them know that out of the coming of the Holy Ghost and out of the adding of gifts (charismas)[833].

75) There is a devil that, when we lie down on our bed, he comes to us and he shoots at us with ugly and dirty memories as arrows, so that we will fall asleep in dirty though and we will have dirty dreams if we do not arm ourselves by getting up and praying and if we do not arm on ourselves against that, because of our idleness.

76) There is a so-called forerunner of the ghosts that pick on us immediately that we wake up and that defiles our first thought. You give your firstfruits to the Lord, because your first fruits will belong to him who take it first.

An all-good worker of the Lord told me a worthy to be listened to word: "I know the whole road of my day since the very morning".

[831] Scholium belonging to Saint Isaac the Syrian: "Visit your friends with appropriateness and decency. If you do so, both you and they will benefit. This is because under the mask of the love the soul unties the bridle of his guarding".

[832] In the Edition form the year 1970 and at Veniamin Costache. The scholium is wider than in the G.P.: "Immaterial is the soul, material is the body. So, nothing resists the soul as the body does it. This is for as immaterial the soul tends upwards; and the body is attracted downwards by the wight of the matter and so the body becomes an impediment to his soul. Or: nothing troubles the mind so much and makes the mind blind, as it does that the body's filthiness that comes out of the uncleanness of the ugly pleasures".

[833] "When he who is weak in his soul, he will achieve patience in illnesses and in trials, let him understand in that that he is tried by God. And they who are consummate, let them know that out of the high knowledge of the grace".

77) Many are the ways of the piousness and many are the ways of the perdition, because often when somebody resists as certain thing, he actually helps to be another's thing accomplished. But the purpose of both of them is pleasant to God[834].

78) The devils wage us war in the trials happening to us, by urging us either to tell or to do something inappropriate. And when they cannot do that, by mimicking the peacefulness, they will urge us to bring to God thanks which are full of pride.

79) They who cogitate the things from above, by detaching on themselves, they ascend a little, while they who cogitate the things from below, they start again going downwards. They who detach on themselves they will no longer have anything in the middle[835]. Namely they no longer have the world among themselves as like in the life from here[836].

80) Only one among creatures has received the existence in another, and not in himself. And it is a wonder how can stay outside of that one which it has received its existence into[837].

81) The mothers give birth to the pious daughters. And the mothers are born by the Lord. But is won't be too unwise to see the rule from above also in the contrary ones[838].

82) Moses, of better said God, commands that the fearful one not to go to war. Lest, the ultimate straying of the soul to be bigger than the first falling of the body, and rightly so[839].

[834] The path of the piousness can be diverse, because one resists a sin, while another works for fulfilling a good deed.

[835] "He calls here detachment the death. So, some people, by cogitating at the heavenly things, when they part with their body they ascend with the soul in heavens. And they who cogitate the things of the passions, after their death they will descend in hell. And in the middle, namely in this world, after their parting, there will be nothing left". The souls departed from here they will no longer have the world as an environment for communication among themselves, as it was while they were into their bodies.

[836] The world has become totally transparent, personalized.

[837] "I reckon that he speaks here about the soul, that neither preexisted to the body, not it comes to existence after the body. But the souls I created in the same time with the body. That's why, he who kills t embryo is a killer too. This is because the embryo if animated since its very conceiving. As the body grows up the soul will show his works as well. So, it is a wonder, he says, how the soul that takes its existence into the body can subsist naked after separation. But this is the dogma of God… The soul will wait for and will necessarily exist until the other tying of the soul, into God, with his body".

[838] "He calls here mothers the general virtues which give birth to their daughters. And they are born out of the love for God, out of faith, and out of hope, which are from God. But it is likewise regarding the contrary ones. The more general passions give birth to the more partial passions. And as the virtues are born by the Lord, the passions are sown within us by the devil".

The Same Word XXVI

Part II

About that Well-Discerning Right-Reckoning

1) "Like the thirsty stag desires the water" (Ps. 41: 1[840]), likewise the monk desires the knowledge of that good will of God. And not only this knowledge, but also the mixed-up knowledge[841]; and even the knowledge of what is opposite to that. About this, our word really has numerous things to say, and those things are difficult to explain. Likewise, the monk wants to know which are, among the things concerning us, those which must be done above all the other things and without any delay, according to him who said: "Woe to him who postpones day after day and time after time" (The Wisdom of Sirach[842] 9: 8); also, which things must be done gently and thoughtfully, as we are urged by him who wrote: "The war is done with advise" (Proverbs[843] 24: 6); and again: "All things with decency and according to the rule" (I Cor. 14: 40).

[839] "Fearful he calls him who loves his soul and who fears the toils. He advises that one not to become a monk, lets after he promised to live totally spiritually, by taking care only of his soul's virtues, he will continue to take care of his body's sweet passions which he served before; this is because, if he doesn't estrange on himself from his previous passions, he will wander a lot and he will fall into despair, so that he will endure an even bigger crumbling, as one who will have fallen from high, or from the monastic schism, and so he will suffer an even heavier judgment, by turning himself back to the things form before, because of his despair, and so he will commit sins into knowledge. "This is because him who have been given much, he will be asked for much" (Lk. 12: 48).

[840] In KJB we have: Ps. 42: 1: "AS the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God."; in ROB we have: Ps. 41: 1: "As the stag desires the springs of the waters, likewise my soul desires You, my God". (E. l. t.'s n)

[841] "Namely the monk wants to know what does it mean doing a thing good in its purpose".

[842] This book is not present in King James Bible. In the Romanian Orthodox Bible is called as The Book of the Wisdom of Joshua, the Son of Sirach (Ecclesiastes). But do not confound it to the book called also The Ecclesiastes. The interested reader can find all the 14 books missing from the KJB and present in ROB, on www.academia.edu, called Bible Missing Texts, in our translation in the English language. (E. l. t.'s n.)

[843] This book is called ibn ROB as The Parables of Solomon. (E. l. t.'s n.)

This is because it is not given to anyone to quickly and easily know such difficult to discern things. That's why the-bearer-of-God David and the Holy Ghost Who spoke through him, are shown to us a praying for many times. This is for he says once: "Teach me how to do Your will, for You are my God" (Ps. 142: 10[844]); some other time, again: "Guide me to Your truth" (Ps. 24: 9[845]); and again: "Hosw me, Lord, the way I will walk on, for I have raised my soul towards You" (Ps. 142: 8[846]). And I have raised my soul from all the worry of the life and from all passions.

2) All of them who want to know the will of the Lord they owed firstly to kill their own will[847]. And by praying faithfully and with unforced simplicity, and by asking the fathers' souls or the brothers' souls, into the humbleness of his heart and with doubtless thought, him to accept from them their advices, even if the things said to them would be opposite to their own goal and even fi they who were asked would not be very spiritual. This is because God is not unjust so that Him to allow to be deceived those souls who have humbled on themselves through trust and lack-of-evilness, by the advice and by the judgment of the neighbor, even fi the people whom they asked would be like some speechless animals. He Who speaks through those is immaterial and unseen[848].

They who obey doubtlessly that mentioned rule have been filled up with much humble-cogitation. This is for, if somebody has opened in psaltery his thought (Ps. 48: 4), how much different will be the mind endowed with judgment and the [844] In KJB we have: Ps. 143: 10: "10 Teach me to do thy will; for thou art my God: thy spirit is good; lead me into the land of uprightness."; in ROB we have: Ps. 142: 10: "Teach me Your will, for You are my God. Your good Ghost to guide me to the land of righteousness." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[845] In KJG we have: Ps. 25: 8: "Good and upright is the Lord: therefore, will he teach sinners in the way."; in ROB we have: Ps. 24: 9: "Good and righteous is the Lord, and for that He will set up law to them who commit mistakes on their way." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[846] In KJB we have: Ps. 143: 8: "Cause me to hear thy lovingkindness in the morning; for in thee do I trust: cause me to know the way wherein I should walk; for I lift up my soul unto thee."; in ROB we have: Ps. 142: 8: "Make me hear Your mercy in the morning, for in You is my hope. Show me the way I will walk, for I have raised my soul to You." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[847] "They must die to their pleasures and to their wills and they must part on themselves with those."

[848] Important is to overcome the egotism of our pride; and to reckon God as being another and not identical to our own self. God speaks to us through another.

understanding soul from an unanimated saying[849]? Bu many by not knowing this consummate and easy to achieve good[850], but trying to know from them and within them what is pleasant to God, so that they told us many and diverse judgments on this.

3) Some of them who tried to know these, they detached their thought from all addiction, from both these two urges of the soul, both from that one that take on something and form that one that resists by word, and they imagine in the mentioned days their mind naked of their will in a fiery asking to the Lord, and so they knew His will: either the understanding Mind spoke in an understanding manner with our mind, or for it was totally lost from their soul that unique thought of theirs.

Other understood out of the difficulty and out of the impeding that followed to their decision to do something, that these ones were godlike, according to him who said: "We wanted to come to you, once and twice, but satan impeded us" (1 Thes. 2: 18). Other, on the opposite, out of the unexpected help from God in the things they started, they felt that that thing was well received by God and they told us: "Each one who chooses the good he will be helped by God" (Rom. 8: 28).

4) He who has earned God within himself, he will be assured about the second thing[851], through illumination, but not immediately, of His help, in the things which must be done immediately, as also in the things which can be postponed.

5) The doubt in the decision which must be made and the unsureness which last longer, are the sign of an unilluminated soul and loving of vain-glory. This is for God is not unjust, so that he would close on Himself to them who knock with humbleness. The Lord searches in everything for their purpose, either in the things which need to be done without any delay, and also in the things which can be postponed. That's why, all the things which are clean of addiction and of any defilement, done firstly on behalf of the Lord and not for anything else, even if they are not unmistakingly good, they will be counted to us as

[849] I David entrusted his soul to a verse from the Psaltery, how much more must we entrust our soul to a human soul? Namely, we must rather ask a believer than a text of the Scripture. This will guard us against an individualistic and haughty interpretation of the Scripture. (We think that Saint Dumitru confounded the psaltery as musical instrument to the Book of Psalms that is called in Romanian theological technolect or slang as Psaltery (E. l. t.'s n.)).

[850] It is a consummate and easy to achieve good to do what you are advised to do by a spiritual father, for you will achieve your humbleness through him.

[851] In the second way, namely by feeling the help from God.

good. This is because searching for the things which are above us it won't come to a undangerous end[852].

6) Unspoken in the judgment of God regarding us. This is because for many times He wants hide, out of oikonomia, his will regarding us, by knowing that even if we knew His will we wouldn't obey Him, and so we will receive even more wounds.

7) The righteous heart has been delivered from the multitude of the things[853], and it sails unendangered in the ship of the non-evilness.

8) There are manly souls who, by being lit up by their love for God and into the humbleness of their heart, they will start doing works which are above them; and there are proud hearts who do the same. This is because, often, the goal of our enemies is to urge us to try to do things which are above our power, so that, by getting us discouraged because of our incapability to accomplish those things, we to reject also the things which we can do and so to occasion the biggest laughter to our enemies.

9) I saw souls and bodies weak because of the multitude of their sins, who started doing ascetic toils which were above their power and so they were unable to accomplish those ascetic toils. And I said that their repentance will be valued by God according to the size of their humbleness and not according to their ascetic toils.

10) It happens sometimes that the cause of the biggest evil things is the place of living; but on some other times, it is also the living together with others[854]. But often the corrupted soul is enough for his own perdition. This is for he who has parted with the first two ones he might have been also delivered from the third one. But he who keeps the third state, he will prove on himself as inexperienced in all places. This is because no place is such a good shelter as the heavens are[855].

11) But they who usually fight us, disbelievers or ill-believers, "after the first and the second rebuke, let's avoid

[852] When we try to accomplish things which are above us, even though we do that for God, we could mistake. Though, God wont' condemn us for our mistake once the purpose of that work of ours was to serve Him.

[853] "The diversity of the things" consists of all sorts of hidden thoughts, cunning ones, born out of the mind's trust in its own smartness. That's why is good to sail in the ship of the simplicity unendangered by the waves of all sorts of thoughts.

[854] "You notice that by reminding of growing, he blames also the society as cause of the sin. So, one must not say that there will never come any harm from these ones, ither by words or by other things".

[855] The sky of the dispassion or of the humbleness.

them" (Tit. 3: 10). But them who want to learn from us the truth, let's not get ever tired, to do them good. But let's use both kinds of work also for strengthening our hearts.

12) He is very deprived of judgment, he who by hearing about above-nature virtues in the saints, he will despair because of himself. This is for you will rather be taught by one of these two: either your zeal will be incited by their pious manhood, or it will turn you towards much-self-defamation and towards seeing your helplessness through their threefold-pious humbleness.

13) There are unclean devils, very cunning among the cunning ones, which advise not only on us to commit the sin, but they want to make others too as partakers to committing that evil, in order they to occasion us an even more awful condemnation. I saw one learning from another the evil habit. And he who was teaching the another, by coming into his senses, he started to repent and he stopped himself from doing that evil; but his repentance lost its strength and its fruits because of his disciple.

14) Much it really is, much and difficult to comprise it is the evilness of the ghosts and it is seen only to few people. And I even reckon that not even those these few it is wholly seen the evilness of the ghosts: for, how, for many times, by delighting on ourselves with foods and by satiating on ourselves, we take vigil into watchfulness, and by fasting and by suppressing our body we are tired and pitifully brought down by sleep? How, by appeasing on ourselves by our own, we get harsher, and by living together with others we are pricked to heart and we get angry? How, by killing ourselves with the starvation, we are tempted by sleep, and by gorging ourselves up with foods we remain non-tempted? How, in restraint we become darkened and non-pricked in the heart, and in drinking of wine we become glad and easy to be pricked in heart[856]? If there is anyone who can, let him enlighten the non-enlightened ones into these, into the Lord. This is because we are non-enlightened into these things. All we try to say is that not always our transformation comes from the devils, but it also [856] Form Theodore of Edessa: "Thew wine, as it was written, it gladdens the man's heart" (Ps. 103: 15 (in ROB: Ps. 104: 15 (E. l. t.'s n.)). But you, once you have promised to be always crying, you avoid this gladness and you will be gladdened by the spiritual gifts (charismas). This is because by getting gladdened with wine, you will get mixed with many ugly thoughts and you will end in many troubles".

come, (I do not know how), form the mixing of juiced that has been given to me and out of the defiled and greedy thickness that dresses me up.

For this difficult to explain falling, in the said things, I sincerely and humbly ask our Lord to forgive us; If after our prayer and after its time we find out that what happened to us is worked within us in the same way, let's know that that is not from devils but it unmistakingly will be from our nature. But often also the godlike oikonomia wants to help us through the opposite things, in order to restrain, by all things, the self-appreciation of ours. It is bad to inquire the deep of God's judgments. The inquirers travel in the ship of the self-appreciation[857]. And do read some things about the helplessness of the many.

15) Somebody asked someone among those who can see: "Why God, by knowing from before the fallings of someone, he adorned those with gifts (charismas) and with signs (wonders)"? And that one answered: "In order Him to make the other believers steadfast, and then in order to show the man's freedom; and in order they who fell not to have any answer in their defense at Judgment".

16) The Law, because it was non-consummate, says: "Take heed at yourself" (Deut. 4: 9). And our Lord, for He is above-consummation, He commanded us to straighten our brothers as well, by telling us: "If your brother wrongs you" and the followings (Mt. 18: 15). If your rebuke, better said your reminding directed towards him, it is clean and humble, you do not avoid fulfilling the Lord's commandment. If you haven't reached that state, you will still fulfill the serving of the Law[858].

[857] In a shadow of a ship, in a shadow of a travel, in unreality.

[858] "I Think that the saint reckons here that serving the Law consists of somebody taking heed at himself, namely minding his own businesses. And serving our Lord consists of looking at the things of our neighbor and of straightening him". Another: "The Law is the shadow of the Gospel, and the Gospel is the image of the future realities. The Law forbids the evil deeds, while the Gospel urged towards doing the good deeds".

The Gospel of Christ is the law of loving for the neighbor, it is the law of surpassing the worry for oneself. The law of the love doesn't only ask for not to do evil to others, but it asks for doing them good. The Gospel reached the ultimate knowledge about the man, by showing us that the man cannot save on himself except by putting his own life for his neighbor's salvation. The Gospel's Law explains the deepest law itself of the human being, by explaining what the man himself experiences as the deepest aspiration of his and as the only one making him happy. That corresponds to a more advanced stage of the human. The eternal happiness is not else but the prolongation of this real happiness which the man can reach even from here

17) Do not wonder either when you see them whom you love as hating you for your rebukes, because they who are light-minded, they make on themselves as tools of the devils, and especially against them who are enemies to those (to the devils)[859].

18) I feel the urge to wonder very often especially about a thing happening within us: how, by having Almighty God as Helper in virtues, and the angels, and the saints, and by having in the opposite things as helper only the cunning devil alone, we bend easily and more quickly towards passions? I do not want to speak about this in details. And I cannot do it also.

19) If the happening things happen like thus, for they have been created so by nature, how am I in the image of God and how have I been mixed with the clay? As the Great Gregory says: "If something among the created realities has become different from it was, that reality will necessarily long, insatiably, for his kinship".

20) One must use the whole his craftsmanship in order to enthrone the clay, to put it that way, by elevating it on his throne to God[860]. So, let nobody excuse themselves by invoking at. The happiness isn't within us but it is within others and, in the last analysis, in Him Who has made and Who upholds everyone, and Who unified them without confounding them, one within others. But our neighbor cannot be saved by us without him willing that. That' why we must wake up our neighbor in order him to become aware of his sinfulness, when he mistakes. We help our neighbor by waking him up to his personal responsibility. But we must do that with love, by not lowering him at the state of object, and by not cultivating again our closing up within us by the pride of a harsh and despising rebuke. The happiness of the eternal communion will be a communion among persons who love on one another and who respect each other as equal. We sink ourselves one into another as persons in persons, but without merging.

[859] "It is about those who work the good, and by that they become enemies of the devils". The evil's ghosts do everything in order to keep the people in enmity by all means. "The devils tempt us either through themselves, or by arming against us on those who do not fear our Lord. The devils will do that by themselves when we are alone and separated from people, as they did to the Lord while in desert; through people, when we live together with the people, as they did to the Lord too by Pharisees. But we, by looking at Him Who is our role-model, let's banish the devils away from both sides. You take care of yourself, and not of others. This is because you cannot do the last work except with the love you must earn".

[860] Are expressed here both the bewilderment and the answer. The man somewhat works according to his nature, when he takes care of the things of his body. But because the man has estranged on himself, partially, through his sin, form his nature, of from God Who is his kinship, he insatiably tends towards God, because of not being able to achieve the happiness because of being overwhelmed by the exclusive worries about his body. But the man has been created in order to be able to elevate even his body on the throne of God, and on that purpose, God united the soul with the body. This is the true aspiration of the man, and therefore is the any motif regarding the work. This is for the way and the door have been opened[861].

21) Hearing about the victories of the spiritual fathers, it will wake up to zeal our mind and soul, and by hearing their teaching will advise their disciples to follow their example.

22) The right-reckoning is a candlestick into darkness, it is the turning back of the strayer ones, it is the enlightenment of the shortsighted. He who discerns (the good things from the bad things) he will find the health and he will remove the illness.

23) All of them who wonder about the small things, they suffer that on two ways: either because of their nescience, or in order they to extoll and glorify the deeds of their neighbor, on the purpose of achieving the humble cogitation.

24) Let's strive not only for fighting the devils, for defending on ourselves, but also for waging them war and for defeating them. The first one, when hit he will hit back; the second one always chases away his enemies.

25) He who has defeated his passions he will wound the devils too. Sometimes, by pretending that he is dominated by passions, he will deceive his enemies by doing that, and so he will remain non-warred by them. Some of the brothers was dishonored but he was steadfast in his heart and he was praying with his mind. But later on, he complained very much about the dishonoring, in order to hide his dispassion. Another brother, because he didn't want by any means to be protos, he pretended that he was suffering because of not being protos. But what could I say about that one's righteousness who, by entering a brothel, seemingly for committing the sin, he man's true nature. Actually, on the godlike throne there has been enthroned the body of our Lord. And we are together-inheritors with our Lord. We become partakers to this supreme honor, for we impropriate to ourselves the mastering power of God. The man aspires to reach the highest peak possible. God sown within man this aspiration. This is not a wrong aspiration. But the man cannot achieve that except through God and in union with God.

[861] "The Holy Scripture calls as ways the virtues. And the greatest among all virtues it is the love. That's why the Apostle said: "But I am going to show you a way through overwhelming" (1 Cor. 6: 51). This is for the love convinces us to despise the material things and to not place anything from the temporary things above the eternal things". On the other hand, Jesus is our way. This is for out of Him springs the love and thus the love becomes our own too. Through the love for the Father and for the people He ascended, as man, on the godlike throne, and by the same love springing out of Him, a love that we will receive if we united ourselves with Him, so we climb on the same throne. The love will have the supreme reigning forever and ever.

attracted a hooker to ascesis[862]? And somebody brought very early in the morning, a grape to him who was appeasing on himself. And this one, after him who brought him the grape left, he ate that grape in a hurried and without lust impulse, so that he showed on himself to the devils as dominated by the belly's covetousness. Another, again, by losing some green branches, he was complaining for the whole day. But ones like these need much watchfulness lest, while trying to laugh at devils, themselves to become cause for laughing to others. These ones are them whom the Apostle said about: "as deceivers and loving the truth" (2 Cor. 6: 8).

26) If somebody wants to present to the Lord an undefiled body and to show Him a clean heart, let him hold strongly the non-getting-angry and the restraint. This is because, without these ones, the whole our toil is useless.

27) As the lights form the people's eyes differ from one another, as many and as diverse are the overshadowing of the understanding sun occurring into the soul. Another is that one that works through the bodily tears, and another is that one that works through the souly tears; another is that one shown through the body's eyes, and another is that one shown through the understanding eyes. Another is that one coming out of hearing the word, and another is the gladness specially moves within the soul. Another is that out of appeasement, and another is that out of obedience. In addition to all of these, another is that that, in a totally special manner, it presents the mind to Christ, by kidnapping, in an untold an impossible to explain manner, in the understanding light[863].

28) There are virtues and mothers of the virtues. So, he who is sapient he will strive more for gaining the mother of the virtues. The teacher of the mothers is God Himself by a special work. And teachers of the daughters are very many[864].

[862] Abba Serapion says: "It happen that one works in the things from the left the life into God; and it happens that another works the sin under the mask of the godlike things".

[863] In the Edition form the year 1970: "Mothers of the virtues are: the faith, the hope, the love, the sapience, the manhood, the temperance, the righteousness, the right-reckoning, and the humbleness; and other, smaller than the mentioned ones: the fasting, the vigil, the non-gathering of material things, the prayer, the appeasement, the silence, and others similar to these ones".

[864] Belonging to Theodore of Edessa: "Threefold is any speaking soul. The virtue that is in the rational part of the soul we have called is sapience, understanding, and wisdom; the virtue that is in wrath (anger) we have called it as manhood and patience; and the virtue that is in the lusting part we have called it as love, righteousness, and restraint. And the righteousness has

29) Let's take heed lest we compensate the fewness of the food with the muchness of the sleep. This is because that is a thing of the mindless ones, as the opposite things is too. I saw workers who in a certain circumstance, they untied a little the ascesis of their belly, but they quickly after manly tormented the wicked by standing up for the whole night, and they taught their belly how to joyfully get humble after that satiation.

30) The devil of the love for money often wages war to them who do not accumulate material things. And when it doesn't succeed, it presents the poor as cause[865], and so it will persuade them who do not love the material things to start loving those again.

31) When we get upset, let's remind the commandments given by our Lord to Peter, and let's forgive for seventy times seven (Mt. 18: 22). This isa for what He commanded to another He did that Himself, and even much more than that. And when we get proud, let's remember again Him Who said: "He who will fulfill the whole spiritual law, but he will mistake by a sole" been sown in all of them in order to make them work in harmony. Through sapience, it fights against the opposite powers, defending the virtues; through righteousness, it looks at the things dispassionately; through love, it convinces the soul to love the people as on himself; through restraint it cuts off any pleasure; and through manhood and patience it arms the soul against the unseen enemies" (Veniamin Costache). Another: "The three parts of the soul are: the cogitation, the wrath, and the lust. When in the wrath there is the love for people, and in the lust, there are the cleanness and the righteousness, then the cogitation will be enlightened. This is for the cogitation will be healthy and wise and enlightened, when it has obeyed to itself the passions and when it spiritually looks at the rationalities of the creatures of God and he places those rationalities in connection with the Holy Trinity. And the wrath will move according to the nature when it loves all the people and when it has for no one any disgust or keeping of evil in mind. And the lust, when through restraint and through the humble-cogitation and through non-accumulation of material things, it will kill the passions, namely it will kill the body's sweetness and comfort and the lust for money and the lost for the passing glory and it will be directed towards the godlike and immortal love. This is for the lust starts towards three things: either towards the body's sweetness, or towards the vain-glory, or towards the deceit of the money. And because of this reckless lust it will defame God, and it will forget about its beautiful behavior given to it by nature, and it will become savage towards its neighbor and it will darken the cogitation and it will impede the thinking to look upwards towards the truth. But he who has gained the high cogitation, he will gain the Kingdom of Heavens". The three parts of the soul influence on one another. The love ascends from lust into cogitation, with the impulse given to it by the wrath, and the cogitation will be elevated not only through understanding but also through love, at the Holy Trinity, and it will nourish on itself with endless love out of the Holy Trinity, an immortal love and a love always full of enthusiasm.

[865] It gives the taking care of poor as reason for accumulation of material goods.

passion, namely by pride, "he made himself guilty of all passions" (Jas. 2: 10).

32) The evil and envious ghosts sometimes decide to willingly get far from the saints, lest not cause some crowns by warring them, because they remain undefeated in the wars brought against them.

33) "Bless are the peacemakers" (Mt. 5: 9). No one would say differently[866]. But I saw the strife-makers happy as well. For instance, two individuals entered with one another a connection of fornication; and one of the knowers, an all-experienced man, he made o himself the servant of the hatred between them, by plainly defaming them one to another. And thus, the all-wise man succeeded in removing the devils' evilness by a human plot and to cause a hatred that untied the connection of the fornication.

34) It happens that somebody, for a commandment, to transgress another commandment. I saw your people living in a pleasant-to-God friendship, but because of the harm brough to others' conscience, by letting one another to know that, they parted with one another[867].

35) As opposite is the marriage to exiting the world, as opposite is the pride to despair. But due to the disorder brought by the devils, these two can be also seen together.

36) There are some of the unclean devils who instill us at the beginning of our monasticism an interpretation of the godlike Scriptures. They love doing that especially within the hearts of them who love the vain-glory, and especially to them who occupied themselves with the external philosophy, so that by deceiving them little by little, to bring them heresies and [866] Scholium belonging to Gregory of Nyssa (this specification is present only at Veniamin Costache): "Peacemaker is him who conveys the peace to another. But one cannot provide another with somethings that himself doesn't have. So, actually, peacemaker is him who has appeased within himself the strife between his body and his soul and who has transformed the body's inward war into a peaceful harmony. Then the body no longer will lust against the ghost, but the grace of the ghost will master upon the body's passions. Then will be working not only the body's law, which toils against the mind's law, but by obeying a higher kingdom, it will become servant of the godlike commandments. Then the wall from the middle will be removed and the two will become one, growing together by being combined on a higher level".

[867] "If you live among brothers and if there is one among those whom you have love for God for, you won't dare to show that when the others can see that, lest there is among them a weak one and to get envious and you will bear his sins because have given him occasion to commit sin".

blasphemies. We will know the theology, or better said the theomachy of the devils, out of the shameless disturbance and joy overpoured within our soul while interpreting the Scriptures.

37) Some of the happening things have, by designation, a beginning and an end, from the Maker. But the virtue is limitless. "I saw the edge of any end, says the Psalmist; but wide and limitless id Your commandment" (Ps. 118: 96[868])[869].

38) If some workers advance from the power of the doing to the power of the seeing (of the contemplation) (Ps. 83: 7[870])[871] and if the love doesn't reach an end and if the Lord will guard the entrance of your fear (of Him) and your exit (Ps. 120: 8[872])[873], then the edge of this one will truly be infinite. By advancing into it, we will never reach to an end of it, neither in this time nor in the time to come, by adding light to light[874].

Though what will be said could seem stranger to some people, it will still be said: after the proof we brought before, oh, you the blessed one, I won't say even about the non-understanding beings that they do not advance. But a strongly say that they too always add glory to glory and knowledge to knowledge.

[868] In KJB we have: Ps. 119: 96: "I have seen an end of all perfection: but thy commandment is exceedingly board."; in ROB we have: Ps. 118: 96: "I saw an end to any consummate thing, but Your commandment is without an end." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[869] The commandment is borderless, because one can always bring its fulfillment further, for the consummation obtained by man by fulfilling the commandment it won't have limits either.

[870] In KJB we have: Ps. 84: 7: "They go from strength to strength, every one of them in Zion appeareth before God."; in ROB we have: Ps. 83: 8: "They will go from power to power. The God of gods will show on himself in Zion." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[871] These are the two main stages of the spiritual climbing that end in the union with God, as unique and eternal stage.

[872] In KJB we have: Ps. 121: 8: "The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth, and even for evermore."; in ROB we have: Ps. 120: 8: "The Lord swill guard your entrance and your exit from now and forever and even." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[873] By the fear of God, we enter the road towards him, traveled by us by fulfilling His commandments; by love we will exit this road towards the union with God. Both of them are guarded and helps by God. About the advancing from fear to love through commandments to be seen at Diadochus of Photice, heads no. 16 and 17, The Romanian Philokalia, volume I, pp. 340-341.

[874] We will never get satiated of love. The love always gives us joy. The love is endless and endlessly new in its manifestations. The fact that there is love it is a proof that there is eternity, an eternally new infinity. And the fact that the love is only among persons, it shows the fact that the persons are destined to eternity and that there is a supreme interpersonal community of love from eternity to eternity. And in love there is the true knowledge.

39) Do not wonder that the devils often instill us good meanings and they resist those meanings in an understanding manner. The purpose of our enemies is that of convincing us, by that, that they know the thoughts from within our heart.

40) I do not want you to be bitter judge of them who greatly teach the word, because you see them lazier in accomplishing what they teach. This is for often the benefit of the word compensates for the lack of the work. We do not have, all of us, all the things alike. Within some people the word surpasses the work. Within others, again, the work surpassed the word[875].

41) God didn't make, nor He created the evil. Therefore, some people deluded on themselves by saying that some of the passions are natural within the soul[876], by not knowing that we have changed the features upholding the nature in passions. For instance: the seed is within us by nature for giving birth to children, but we have changed it towards fornication; the anger against the snake is within us by nature, but we use it against our neighbor; by nature is within us the zeal for virtues, but we crave for doing the evil; by nature is within our soul to aspire to glory, but for the glory from above; by nature we have the tendency to be proud, but against devils; likewise, the joy: but for our Lord and for our good deeds we have done to our neighbor. We have received the keeping-of-evil-in-mind but against the soul's enemies. We have received the lust for food but not for unrestraint.

42) The non-idle soul will rise the devils against himself, but if the wars multiply, the crowns will multiply too. But he who has escaped unwounded, he won't be crowned necessarily. But he who doesn't get tired because of the fallings, it will happen to him to be extolled by the angels like a warrior.

43) Somebody spent three nights into the ground, but He resurrected forever. And he who has defeated three hours, he will no longer die[877].

[875] Despite Climacus somethings proves to be very harsh is his demands, on some other times he manifests understanding for them too who give only a little. His thinking is, by and large, wide, complex, and balanced.

[876] Scholium belonging to Saint Isaac: "If the passions were within soul in a natural manner, why the soul would be harmed by passions? The things matching the nature won't harm the nature".

[877] "Christ, our God, by spending into the ground for three days and nights, He resurrected. And the followers of Christ who defeat the-three-hours sin, they won't die. And the three

44) If, due to a pedagogical oikonomia, after His dawn within us, the Son has known His first dusk, He necessarily placed the darkness over the place of His hiding and there have been night. During that night the wild lion cubs will come upon us, which left us before, and all the beasts of our passions roaring to kidnap the hope from within us (Ps. 103: 22[878]) and asking from God our passions as their food, passion we nourish either by thoughts or by doing[879].

But after that dawned again, out of the dark humbleness, the Sun, and the beasts gathered again in their dens (Ps. 103: 22[880]), or they will lie down in those hearts which love the pleasure, but not within us (Ps. 103: 23[881]). Then they will say among themselves: "How much has been the Lord extolled", in order to have again mercy on them (Ps. 103: 25[882]); and we will say towards them: "How much has been the Lord extolled" for He has mercy on us. We have been gladdened and you have been banished away.

Behold, the Lord sits on a light cloud, the soul being elevated off all earthly lust[883]; and the Egyptian heart will come, that was darkened before, and the handmade idols and the mind's memories will wobble.

hours are the three ages the youth, the middle age, and the old age, which the Gospel also called as the three guard-shifts (watches)". Another: "I fear of three things, says some of the fathers: the exiting from life, the showing before God, and the reckoning we will be asked for at judgment". Another: "Somebody interprets the three hours as: the pleasure, the vain-glory, and the love for money; another, as the three persecutions of the devil; another, as the three hours od idleness; and another, as the three hours of fear".

By and large, he who withstand for three hours undefeated by an awful temptation, he will have been strengthened so that he will no longer die defeated by temptations.

[878] In KJB we have: Ps. 104: 21: "The young lions roar after their prey, and seek their meat from God."; in ROB we have: Ps. 103: 22: "The lion cubs roar in order to grab and ask from God their food." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[879] "Actually, the devils ask, towards our falling, either for eating our victuals, or, as in case of Job, to wound us. And on the measure of our lack of care, we will be surrendered, through forsaking, in a pedagogical manner".

[880] In KJB we have: Ps. 104: 22: "The sun ariseth, they gather themselves together, and lay them down in their dens."; in ROB we have: Ps. 103: 23: "The sun rose and they gathered together, and in their dens will they go to sleep." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[881] Vid supra.

[882] In KJB we have: Ps. 104: 24: "O Lord, how manifold are thy works! in wisdom hast thou made them all: the earth is full of thy riches."; in ROB we have: Ps. 103: 25: "How glorified have been Yor thing, Lord You have done all of them wisely! The earth has been filled up with Your creation." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[883] Our Lord will rest on Himself in our soul that will have become a light cloud, a transparent cloud for Christ-the Sun, as a soul that has lost from within himself the thickness of his lusts."

45) If Christ ran away bodily from Herod, though He could do everything, let learn from that they who are inclined to throw on themselves into temptations. "Do not give, he says, your foot towards wobbling, and the angel who guards you won't sleep" (Ps. 125: 2-3)[884].

46) The haughtiness intertwines with the manhood as the ivy does on the cypress. Let's the work be ceaseless within us, so that we won't reckon that we have earned something by simple cogitation; but by taking heed at that things' true quality, let's see if that thing is within us and then we will necessarily know on ourselves as having shortcomings. You research tirelessly also the signs of the passions and then you will find many of their things being within you. We, as ones who have these illnesses, we cannot discover them, either because of our helplessness, or because we have been previously deeply mastered by them.

47) God judges the intention, but He also searches – with love for people – for the work as well[885]. Greta is him who has no shortcoming in the things he can do. But greater is him who humbly start doing the things which are above his power[886]. But often the devils impede us to work the easy and useful to us things, and they urge us to start working the more tiresome things[887].

[884] Scholium belonging to Saint John Chrysostom: "We neither must refuse the ascetic toils, nor to jump towards them. This is for thus, our victory will be shinier as well, and the devil will be more mocked by our restraint. Drawn into battle, let's manly accept the fight. Not called into battle, let's appease on ourselves and let's wait for the time of the battles, in order us to show also the non-searching for the vain-glory, and the manhood".

[885] "The who wanted the good things, according to their power, they will be imparted with the same honor as those whom their intention was equal to, even though some people did more". But the man must start, humbly, even from the things which are above his power as known to him, for only thus the man can advance ever further.

[886] In the Edition from the year 1970: "One just know that the commandments have been given for the thins matching the power. And he said that him who does the things of the commandments will be called great. But on him who tried – out of love – the things which were above his power he called him greater, by comparing those who worked according to their power and those who worked things above their power".

[887] Climacus nuances again according to reality. It is good that we start working the things which are above our power. But let's take heed that sometimes this is a temptation from the devil, so that we will have the excuse for not fulfilling those. One can see that that is an evil temptation when we do not do things corresponding to our power but we do those which are above our power. Let's do firstly those things and only then to start working the things which are above our power.

48) I think that Josephus must be blessed for rejecting the sin and not for proving his dispassion. We must research for which and for how many sins rejected by us we have received the crown. This is because something else is avoiding the shadow and something else is running towards the Sun or the righteousness.

49) The darkness is the cause of the stumbling, the stumbling is the cause of the falling, and the falling is the cause of death. They who have become darkened out of wine, they often washed up on themselves with water. And they who have darkened on themselves out of their passions, they have washed on themselves with tears.

50) Something else is the disturbance, something else is the scattering, and something else is the blindness. The first one is healed by restraint, the second one is healed by appeasement, and the third one is healed by obedience and by God Who made on Himself obedient for us[888].

51) We, out of two examples which clean up the things from below, we understand in an appropriate manner the who cleanings of them who cogitate at the realities form above. Thus, we call as whitening that community according to God, a community cleaning the filthiness and the thickness of the soul and its ugliness. And the hesychasm is the dye house to them who have rejected the non-restraint, the keeping in mind of the evil, and who have passed from that (from the life into community) to appeasement.

52) Some people say that falling into the same sins comes out of the absence of the appropriate repentance and because of the lack of straightening on the measure of the previous sins. But one must also see if everyone who haven't fall into the same sin they repented appropriately.

53) Some people fall into the same sins either because of sinking themselves into the deep of the forgetfulness of the things from before[889], or because they reckon God as loving of [888] Christ, by having the ghost of the obedience to the Father imprinted in His human, by dwelling within us, He will imprint that to us too.

[889] This "deep of the forgetfulness of the things previously committed" can be likened to the subconscious which the modern psychology speaks about. The subconscious still has a role, because of forming as habit out of repeating the same sins. It is strange how the memories of the sins call us to repeat the same sins, as also forgiving about them will urge us to committing them anew. In both case the repentance is absent, the repentance being a continuous remembrance of the sins, but a memory associated with the pain for committing people, out of their love for pleasures, or because they have no longer hoped in their salvation. And if some people did not despise on themselves, I would say that they did that also because they couldn't tie up that enemy that masters them through the tyranny of the habit.

54) One must research how the soul, by being bodiless, he doesn't see those who come to him despite of being of the same being, according to their nature. Isn't that because of their yoking up with them, that is known only to Him Who tied them up[890]?

55) Somebody among the knowers asked me once: "Explain me, for I am willing to learn, which things use to humble the mind and which use to make the mind haughty, because of the sins?". And because I couldn't answer that question and by assuring them about my nescience, by taking an oath on that, he who wanted to teach me he taught me, by telling me: "By giving you, on short, the dough of the understanding (of the discernment). I will let you zealously research the other aspects".

The devil of the bodies and of the anger, or the belly's insanity, of the idleness and of the sleeping, he doesn't use to raise the horn of the mind; but that one of the love-for-money, of the loving of mastery, and of the much-speaking, and many others, they use to add evil upon evil. Close to these ones is also the devil of judging on others.

56) If somebody goes to the people living into world and a day later after he left them, or even after an hour he feels an arrow of sadness and not rather joy, as one who has been delivered from a hindrance or from a trap, he will submit himself to the mockery from the vain-glory or from fornication.

them. Contrary to throwing the past sins into "subconscious", that equals to a weakening of the self-conscience, the repentance keeps everything in memory, but not in a pleasant memory, but in a painful memory, and that equals to an acute sense of responsibility, or to a continuous reinforcing of the self-conscience in front of God as supreme person.

[890] The soul doesn't know the devils (or the angels) coming to him, maybe just because of the connection existing between soul and those, in the soul's moral state. Through this, the human subject fulfilling those ones' will, he somewhat identified on himself to one or another of them. Only God Who has created those in this connection with us, only Him can know those. But maybe though "He Who has tied them up" the author understands also the man who, by tying up the evil ghost, by doing that he has detached somewhat the evil ghost from himself, so that the man can know that, though close to us, the man is under the mastery of the evil ghost, his soul feeling the closeness of that one through his effort of keeping that one tied up.

57) Let's study, before all, where the wind comes from, lets we will find ourselves extending our sails against that wind.

58) Comfort with love the doer ole men, who have exhausted their bodies into ascesis, by giving them a little resting. You force them to restraint on themselves the young people who exhausted their souls through sins, by remembering them about torments[891].

59) It is an impossible thing, as I said in another place as well, to immediately clean up on ourselves from the very beginning, and totally, of the belly's covetousness and of the vain-glory. But let's not attempt fighting the vain-glory with delectation (with foods). This is valid to the beginners. Let's rather fight is by fewness (of the food). And thus, it will come, within them who want that, the hour – and now it has come – when our Lord will obey that too under our feet.

60) Are not warred by the same passion them who come to the monastic life young or old. This is because they often suffer of totally opposite passions. That's why blessed it the blessed humbleness. This is because the humbleness is both to young and old as reason for steadfast and powerful repentance.

61) Do not get troubled because of what I am saying. Though rarely, there still are clean and non-cunning souls, delivered from sin, from hypocrisy, for the habit of doing the evil, souls whom the living together with other is beneficial to, souls who can, out of appeasing themselves together with an adviser, to ascend, as out of a harbor, to heavens, and who do not need the troubles coming from living in a community, and so they remain non-tempted by those.

62) They who are unrestraint they might be healed by peoples the cunning ones, by angels; and the proud one, by God.

63) This too is a way of love: to allow our human being who comes to us to work in everything as he wishes, and we to show him the whole joy.

[891] "The body, being weakened when submitted to thigs which are greater than its power, it will bring within soul darkness upon darkness and it rather causes disturbance. And the strong body, if you will surrender it to resting and non-working, it will cause all sins within that soul inhabiting it; and even though it wants the good, after a little time, it takes from him even the thought of the good it had". Another: "They who have exceedingly lived in ascesis, they must be comforted with foods. But the young people must be forced to restraint, through urges".

64) One must study how and until where and when the repentance scatters away the good things as the bad things[892].

65) We need much right-reckoning (discernment), in order us to know when we must stay put and in which things and until where us to fight the occasions and the means of the passions and when we must withdraw. This is for sometimes we better choose to run away, because of our helplessness, than to die.

66) We must see and take heed at what time and how can we empty our gall through bitterness; which among devils make us haughty and which humble us; which make us harsher and which comfort us; which darken us and which lighten us up; which make us idle and which push us to do evil things; and which makes us sad or glad.

67) Let's not wonder of seeing on ourselves, in the arena of the ascesis, at the beginning, even more passionate than we were while living within world. This is because we must, in the first place, to remove the causes in order than us to be healed. This is because the hidden beats didn't show on themselves before.

68) When they who have come closer to consummation, by whatever happening they will be defeated by devils in a small thing, the devils will use this occasion top steal from them the consummation in a hundredfold manner.

69) Like the winds use to sometimes disturb the sea's surface, by their peaceful blowing, and some other times the wind disturbs the deep of the sea, of course that happens also to the dark thought of the evilness. If they come upon the passionate ones, they will storm even the feeling of their heart. If the evil thoughts come upon them who has advanced, they will trouble only the surface of their mind. That's why, the last ones rather feel their peace, their heart remaining undefiled[893].

70) It is characteristic to the consummate ones to always know which thought belongs to the conscience, which thought belong to God, and which thought belongs to the evils. This is

[892] "When somebody repents aiming to something better, then the repentance won't cause the scattering of the good ones, but it will occasion to achieve those. The repentance causes the scattering of the good things only when accompanied by the doing of the evil things".

[893] "Like the winds agitating the sea often endanger the sailors, likewise the dark thoughts of the evilness sometimes throw the guiding mind into the deep of the perdition". Here the heart is reckoned as the being itself in its deep, while the mind is reckoned as the organ of the thinking in a continual movement.

because the devils do not instill from the beginning all the opposite thoughts. This is why this question is truly dark and difficult to answer it. Through two sensitive eyes is the soul illuminated, and through the fits of the seen and understanding discernment are illuminated the heart's eyes.

The Same Word XXVI

Part III

The Brief Content of All the Things Said Before

1) The steadfast faith is the mother of the rejection. But the opposite thing sis obvious too. The steadfast hope is the door of the dispassion. But it is obvious the opposite thing too. The love for God is the cause for estrangement. But is it obvious the opposite thing too.

2) The mother of the obedience if the despising of the self and the desire for health[894]. The mother of the restrain is the thought of death and the steadfast remembrance of the gall and of the vinegar given to the Master. The helper of the righteousness is the appeasement. The crushing of the thinking is opposite to the ugly thoughts.

3) The faith and the estrangement are death to the love for money. The mercy and the love (of Christ) surrendered the body (to the death). The perseverant praying is the destruction of the idleness. The recalling of the judgment is causing the zeal. The love for dishonor will heal the anger.

4) The singing and the compassion and the non-pilling-up of material goods, will chock up the sadness. The non-addition to the seen things is the sight of the thought things[895]. The [894] "If the obedience is caused by the despising of the self and by the desire for the souly kindness, this despising is rather a searching for the own being and for the true life. Then it rather isn't itself despising of what is damaging to the own true life".

[895] "The sign that the mind occupies on itself with the thought (intelligible) realities is the despising of all things comforting our senses". Another: "The life into God is the death in all the things submitted to senses. When the heart lives the senses will die". Another: "The resurrection of the senses will mean the death of the heart. And when the senses resurrect that will be the sign that the heart will have died to God". Another: "He who doesn't pile-up material things he won't have anything to be sad if they have lost that".

silence and the peace are enemies to the vain-glory. And if you are in the middle, accept the dishonor.

5) The saddened senses heal the seen pride. But the unseen pride will be healed by Him Who is unseen from before ages. The deer kills all the seen beasts; but the thought beasts will be killed by humbleness[896]. It is possible to us that through all according to nature things to know, manifestly, the thought (intelligible) realities.

6) As it will be impossible to the snake to get off its old skin if it doesn't enter a narrow crack, likewise we cannot get rid of our old passions which master upon us, and to get rid of the oldness of our soul and of the vestment of the former man, without us traveling the narrow and full of troubles path of the fasting and of the dishonoring.

7) As the fat birds cannot fly up to the sky, likewise won't be able him who feeds and serves his body[897].

8) The dry mud will no longer pleasant to pigs and the withered body will no longer rest the devils.

9) As the multitude of the woodchips often chocks up and quenches the fire, and it cause much smoke, likewise the over-measure saddening often make that soul smoky and darken and it will dry the water of the tears.

10) Like the blind archer is unskilled, likewise the disciple who opposes, he will be lost[898].

11) Like the tempered steel can sharpen the non-tempered steel, likewise the zealous brother will often save the idle brother.

12) Like the birds' eggs, when warmed up in the nest, they will give birth to life, likewise the non-confessed thoughts will be filled up with life and they will advance to deeds[899].

[896] "The deer wages war, by its nature, to all the snakes".

[897] "Unpleasant thing is to them who love their bodies and to them who are greedy of foods to occupy on themselves with the spiritual things, as it is difficult too to the fornicators to speak about them who are virgins. Withing the full stomach there is not the knowledge of the mysteries of God".

[898] Scholium belonging to Barsanuphius: "The opposition by word lost many people, as on Datan and on Aviron who opposed Moses. And this is bad sign. If somebody doesn't respect his Abba, whom is him going to respect? And not respecting somebody is the sight of a thought of mistrust. And this mistrust is born out of the urge coming from the devil and they who do that are the devil's sons and what will happen to them? Some like these ones have estranged on themselves form humbleness. But also, Davis said: "Save me from the opposition of the people" (Ps. 30: 21 (I KJB we have: Ps. 31: 20 (E. l. t.'s n.)))".

13) Like the horses race each another, likewise the community stirs up the competition among monks.

14) Like the could hide up the sun, likewise the evil thoughts darken the mind and lose it.

15) Like him who has received the sentence and goes to be punished, he won't speak about heathers, likewise him who truly cries, he won't ever comfort his belly.

16) Like the poor seeing imperial treasuries he will know their poverty even more, likewise the soul reading about the great virtues of the fathers will make his thought even humbler. Like the iron even unwillingly starts going towards the magnet, by being forcedly attracted in an untold manner, likewise they who are soaked with evil thoughts form before they will be tyrannized by those thoughts.

17) Like the oil appeases the sea even unwillingly, likewise the fasting appeases the body's heat even unwillingly.

18) Like the narrowed water gushes up towards height, likewise, often, the soul narrowed by dangers will ascends towards God through repentance and it will he saved[900].

19) Like him who bears aromatic spice he will be revealed by the fragrance even unwillingly, likewise he who has the Lord's Ghost he will be known out of his words and out of his humbleness[901].

20) Like the sun shows the gold as shining, likewise the virtue makes shown him who has that virtue[902].

[899] Scholium belonging to Photius: "The evil thoughts warmed up in the bosom they will produce puss and a difficult to heal wound. But unveiled to them who have knowledge and wisdom regarding the healing to those thoughts, they will be easily imparted with healing".

[900] "Question: What the repentance is? Answer: The crushed heart".

[901] "The words resemble to mirrors; and like in the mirror one can see the image of the body's shape, likewise in speeches one can see the soul's characteristic image". One expresses the things' rationalities by using words. But in the man's words is expressed not only the rationality of the general human being, but it is expressed his person's specific rationality as well. And for the person is a living subject who things and who feels, in the person's words one can see also that person's life palpitating in everything that person has specific by birth by or by that persons' life until then. If the person's rationalities converge with the rationalities of the other persons that will be a sign that both that person and the other persons are spiritually healthy. This produces the harmony among people. So, the person's rationality and rationalities have an interpersonal character.

[902] Not only the words unveil the man, but the virtue does it too. This is for the virtue shows the man as turned back to his real rationality. Better said, the virtue shows the man shining by the light which his subject has been elevated to, by virtue. This is for in virtue is ever more actualized the true beauty of a human subject and his healthy relation with the other people in

21) Like the winds disturb the (sea's) deep, likewise the anger, mor than anything else, it disturbs the understanding.

22) Like the eye doesn't lust for tasting the things it doesn't know but by hearing, likewise they who are pure in their body they will have much easement out of that.

23) Like the thieves who see the imperial weapons lying somewhere, they non-haphazardly won't come there, likewise he who has united his prayer with his heart, he won't be robbed by the thought (intelligible) enemies and not haphazardly.

24) Like the fire doesn't give birth to snow, likewise he who is searching here for the honor he won't enjoy the honor form beyond.

25) Like a sole spark burns, often much matter, likewise a sole good thing can erase, often, a multitude of sins.

26) Like it is impossible to kill a wild beast without using a weapon to do that, likewise it will be impossible to earn the immortality without humbleness.

27) Like one won't be able to live, according to the nature, without eating, likewise he who wants to be saved he couldn't be careless not even for no matter show short time until his death.

28) Like the sunray, by entering a house through an opening, it will so much lighten up all things that one will be able to see floating even the tiniest speck of dust, likewise the fear of God reached within heart will show all that heart's sins.

29) Like the so-called devils are easily caught, because they go here further and there backwards, likewise that soul that here laughs and there cries and then feasts, it won't be able to benefit of anything.

30) Like they who nap will be easily robbed, likewise are they who occupy on themselves with the virtue close to the world.

31) Like him who fight the lion, if he wanders with his eye elsewhere, he will immediately lose that fight, likewise will do him who fights his body, if he gives his body rest.

32) Like they who climb a rotten ladder will endanger on themselves, likewise the whole honor, glory, and mastery, which are opposed to the humble cogitation, they will overthrow him who have them.

the frame of the all-comprising Subject of all rationalities, of all persons, and of all things (threefold Subject).

33) Like it is impossible to him who is hungry not to think at bread, likewise him who strives to save on himself it will be impossible not to think at death and judgment.

34) Like the water deletes the letters, likewise the tear erases the mistakes.

35) Like some people, in the absence of the water, they will delete the letters on many other ways, likewise those souls who lack their tears will erase their sins and they will scrape off their sins up, by sadness, by sighs, and by much grief.

36) Like much garbage will causes lots of worms, likewise the much-eating will cause many fallings and thoughts and ugly dreams.

37) Like the blind cannot see where he walks, likewise he who is idle won't be able to see and to do the good.

38) Like he who has his feet tied up he won't be able to walk easily, likewise they who gather money the won'\t be able to ascend to heavens.

39) If the hot wound will be easily healed, with the oldened wounds of the soul it will happen the opposite and they will be healed with difficulty, if ever.

40) Like him who is dead he won't be able to walk, likewise him who is despaired he won't be saved.

41) He who has a right-faith, but he commits sins, he will be like a face without eyes.

42) He who has not faith, but he can do some good things, he will be like one who draws water and he pours it in a perforated vessel[903].

43) Like that ship that has a skilled helmsman it will reach, unendangered, with the help of God, at shore, likewise that soul who has a good shepherd will easily ascend to heavens, even if he has committed very numerous evil things.

44) Like him who has no adviser he will easily astray on himself on the road, even if he is a very thoughtful man, likewise him who travels the road of his monasticism by his own, he will easily get on himself lost, even if he knew the whole wisdom of the world[904].

[903] From Saint Diadochus: "The faith without deeds and the deed without faith will be condemned alike. This is because he who is a believer he must bring to the Lord a faith shown through deeds. This is because not even to our father Abraham his faith wouldn't have been take in account if he hadn't brought there, as fruit of his faith, his child" (Head no. 20, The Romanian Philokalia, volume I, p. 342). The deeds without faith will be condemned as well, because they are the fruit of the human pride and, therefore they have something defiled and irrational within them.

45) When somebody is helpless in his body and he had committed heavy sins, let him walk the road of the humbleness and of its features. This is because he won't find any other salvation.

46) Like him who was ill with a long sickness, he won't be able to earn his health in an instant, likewise one won't be able to defeat his passions, or his passion, at once. Let yourself have as sign of any passion or of any virtue its size, and you will be able to notice your progress.

47) Like they who change the gold for clay will suffer losses, likewise will suffer losses they who describe the spiritual realities in public for the sake of the bodily things.

48) Many gained forgiveness in a short time, but dispassion not. This is because the dispassion needs much time, and it also need God.

49) Let's see which animals or birds stalk us during our sowing, which, during the sprouting up, and which at the time of harvesting, so that we will be able to set the appropriate traps for catching those.

50) Like it won't be just that him who is ill with fever to kill on himself, likewise one must not despair, until his last breath.

51) Like it is a shameful thing that he who has just buried his father to leave the funeral service and to go to a wedding, likewise will be inappropriate to them who cry for their fallings to search for honor, for resting, or for glory from the people in the present time.

52) Like the dwelling places of the citizens differ from those belonging to the condemned ones, likewise and totally different must be the state of them who are crying for their guilts in comparison to those of the innocents.

53) Like on that soldier who was gravely wounded to his body during the war, the emperor won't order him who be removed from the army, but he will rather be promoted in rank, [904] From Saint Isaac: "If the man did all things, but he didn't have obedience, he would deviate towards what is contrary-to-nature", namely to pride, to break the natural relationship with the other, and to the spiritual disorder brought by that.

likewise the heavenly Emperor will crown that monk that endured many dangers from the devils[905].

54) The soul's feeling is a soul's feature, and the sin is the slapping of the feeling[906]. The feeling of himself will determine the ceasing of the sin, or the sin's diminution, and that's the daughter of the conscience. And the conscience is the word and the reproach of our guardian given us at our baptism. That's why on those who are non-enlightened (unbaptized) we won't see them so much having their souls because of their sinful deeds, but much less[907].

And the diminution of the sin will give birth to the restraint form that sin; and restraining from a sine will be the beginning of the repentance[908]. The beginning of the repentance is the beginning of the salvation; and the be3ginning of the salvation is the good intentions. The good intention is the mother of all toils; and the beginning of the toils are the virtues. The beginning of the virtues is their flower; and the virtue's

[905] "He calls as dangers the temptations, and he calls as wounds the blows from the imagination". Another: "How could him who endured the danger be crowned otherwise except for not getting weak in those dangers, but for he stood strong in withstanding the evils and he didn't betray the virtues".

[906] "The soul's feeling is that that has a seeing power, like the apple of that eye that has within it the sensitive light". Like the body's feeling as manifested into virtues, it enters the contact with the sensitive world that differs from the body, likewise the soul's feeling enters the contact with the intelligible world that differs from the soul: the angels, the godlike rationalities of the things, the godlike energies, and God Himself.

[907] Here it can be about the word and the reproach from the guardian angel given us at our baptism. But because the angel cannot be reckoned as our conscience waken up again at out baptism, it rather is about the entering of Christ or of His Ghost in an accentuated dialogue with us, after our baptism. By addressing us constantly, the word of Christ will become so united with our conscience waken up by that, so that our conscience can be reckoned as one with Christ. This is for conscience means responsibility and one cannot understand the responsibility without the word of God Whop asks us to answer Him. Our conscience is bi-personal or interpersonal and it is especially so in the relationship between man and God. through conscience we are held accountable and we manifest our responsibility. In this one can see that in our conscience there is both something from God and something from us. We will answer more consciously as we feel that we are held accountable more strongly, as we feel in a more accentuated manner God Who speaks to us. The Word of God maintains our conscience even before our baptism, but in a weaker manner.

[908] "It will be impossible to touch the good him who hasn't totally parted with the evil; as it is impossible to receive back the health before being delivered from evil". Another: "deviate from evil and do the good" (Ps. 36: 27 (in KJB we have: Ps. 37: 27 (E. l. t.'s n.))), namely wage war to your enemies, in order you to diminish your passions. Then, you continue watching lest your passions will grow back again. Then you will also wage war to them in order you to earn the virtues. And after then, you will continue watching, in order you to guard your virtues. This stands for working the good."

flower is the beginning of the work. The daughter of the virtues is the continuation of the work. And the fruit and the daughter or a more continuous thinking at the virtues is the habit. And the daughter of the habit is the good quality of the being.

And the quality of the good is the mother of the fear[909]. At its turn, the fear will give born to the guarding of the heavenly and earthly commandments. And guarding the commandments is the proof for the love. The beginning of the love is the bigness of the humbleness. Earning this one will be the fullness of the love, or the consummate dwelling of God within them who are pure in heart, due to their dispassion. This is for those ones will see God (Mt. 5: 8). His be the glory forever. Amen.

[909] From Isaac: "The fear is the spiritual walking stick guiding us until we will have reached the Paradise of the spiritual goods. And when will have reached there, it will leave us". Another, from Veniamin Costache: "The fear of God is twofold: one is that fear born within us because of fearing the torments. For that is the restraint and the patience and the hope in God and the dispassion. Out of this first one, it will be born within us, according to an order, the love. And the another is yoked up with the love itself. This one will always produce piousness within our soul, lest, because of the daring of the love one to reach to despise God. The love removes the first fear from that soul that has the love in a consummate manner, for the love no longer fears the torments. And the love has the second fear always as yoked up with itself. The first fear is matched by the word: "Anyone deviated from evil because of the fear of God". And: "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of the wisdom". And about the second fear: "The fear of the Lord remains forever and ever".

The Word XXVII

About the Holy Appeasement of the Body and of the Soul

1) Wee like some bought slaves and subjects of the lawless passions, we know by that quite well also the slaves and the ways and the commandments and the cunningness of the ghosts which mater upon our wicked soul. But there are other people who were enlightened about the works of those ones by the work of the Holy Ghost and by being delivered from those. One reckons about the resting of the health out of the pain of the illness which he is in, another understands the sadness of the illness out of the joy of the healthy state which he is in. We, as some helpless ones, we feared of speaking (to philosophize, t. n.) in this Word about the realm of the appeasement, because we knew that there always is a certain dog in the refectory of the good community and it always wants to steal from it a good piece of bread, or the soul, and by carrying it in its mouth to run away from there and to eat it at will. That's why, in order us not to be in our word like that dog, and in order us not to give them occasion to be like that dog them who are searching for such an occasion, we reckoned that we were not allowed to speak about peace to the soldiers of our Emperor, because they were at war with the whole their soul. So, we have decided to say only that them, who fight strongly, their crowns of peace and of quietude have been crafted. Therefore, we are going top tell only a few words on quietude, aiming to offer a ground for discernment, so that us not to sadden certain people because of leaving the Word at its middle, without any effort of telling something about quietude.

2) The body's quietude is the science and the good-setting of body's behaviors and senses. And the appeasement of the soul means being aware of your thoughts and keeping your cogitation unrobbed. The friend of the quietude is the manly and assertive thought staying awake at the door of our heart and that kills or banishes away the coming thoughts[910]. He who [910] From Isaiah: "He who always stays within his own heart he will necessarily be departed from the life's beautiful things. By walking with the Ghost, he couldn't know about his body's lusts, once he takes his walks inside the city of the virtues. He has these ones as guardian virtues at the door of the righteous living within city. That's for, the plots of the devils remain unworking upon him. The arrows of the worldly love reach at most the nature's appeases on himself into the feeling of his heart will know what we are talking about. And he who still is a little child won't know that. He who enjoys the quietude and the knowledge (the knower hesychast, t. n.) won't need words. This is for he enlightens his word out of deeds.

3) The beginning of the quietude consists of banishing the noises because they disturb the deep. And the end of the quietude consists of not fearing of noises, but being insensitive to them.

4) Progressing, he who appeases on himself he won't advance with his word, but he will be gentle and whole as a dwelling place of the love. He will be difficult to persuade to speak and he will be unmoved towards anger. But the opposite thing will be obvious as well.

5) He who appeases on himself, he strives to lock up the bodiless in his bodily house, and that is an all-wonderful thing[911].

6) The cat stalks the mouse, while the thought of him who appeases on himself it stalks the mouse known with the mind. Do not reject this example. If you reject it, you haven't known yet the quietude.

7) The true monk is not like a monk living together with another monks. This is because ethe monk needs much watchfulness and a non-scattered mind. To the first thing he often is helped by another, but to the second thing he is helped by the angel[912].

8) The understanding powers liturgize together and they are moving within him who appeases on himself. But I will keep my silence about the opposite thing[913].

windows". A sole thought will banish away all the other thoughts: the thought of himself, the non-sleepy conscience that he stands in front of God and his will to ceaselessly stand in front of God. This is one with the non-scattering, with the non-sinning, and with seeing on God through the indefinite deep of the unveiled self.

[911] It may mean also that by getting outside himself (or out of his monastic cell) to welcome others, he won't go out by word, but by the wetness of his countenance.

[912] By and large, the spiritual fathers recommend the appeasement with another monk who on one hand will ease his watchfulness, and on the other hand makes possible to him the non-scattered cogitation. But in order toa void other dangers it is recommended the appeasement in three monks.

[913] "The opposite thing will take place when the ghosts of the evilness live together with the babbler and the much-speaker who only locked himself bodily, and therefore vainly". IN any case, neither the monk is alone. As man, he always has somebody at least inside him. This can be noticed especially when the monk has somebody with him, outside. The man is a dialogical

9) Deep is the precipice of the dogmas. And the mind of him who appeases on himself jumps into them without danger[914]. He who swims with his clothes on he won't avoid the danger; neither will be safe him who touches the theology (the knowledge of God) while mastered by passion.

10) The monastic cell is the fortification of that body that appeases on itself. The monastic cell has within the house of the knowledge.

11) He who suffers from a souly illness and he starts appeasing on himself, he will be like him who jumps off a ship into the sea, reckoning that he will reach the dry land, without dangers, on a wooden board.

12) To them who fight the clay, the quietude will come at a right time to help them[915], if they have an adviser too. This is because the lonely need angelic strength. But my word is addressed them who have truly appeased on themselves with their body and with their soul.

13) The hesychast who has become lazy will utter liar things, by urging the people with twofold meanings words to stop them from appeasement. After he has left his monastic cell, he will blame the devils and he will forget that himself has become a devil.

14) I saw monks appeasing on themselves and satiating their fiery longing for God without satiating it, and igniting fire out of fire and love out of love and longing out of longing[916].

being. He needs to talk to somebody. And this means that actually the monk always is together with somebody. The monk is with God, or with the angel, or sometimes even with the evil ghost.

[914] Veniamin Costache translated: "But he jumps not without danger in it". And the scholium from the G.P. says: "It is not without danger to the hesychast to occupy himself with the dogmas". But the Greek text, on the opposite, says: "νουσ ησυχαστου αλλεται αχινδύνως εν αυτοις" (your mind is quiet, it is not vulnerable to them (E. l. t.'s n.)) and we believe that this is the truth. He who appeases on himself he goes towards the deep of the dogmas in a right way, he won't jump to thoughtless affirmations because of his inexperience in the spiritual reality expressed into dogmas. This can be seen in the words of the author as well, who saw as endangered him who occupies himself with the dogmas while he still is mastered by passions, among which there is also the passions of the pride that divers to individualistic misinterpretations.

[915] "This is helped by the fasting, by the vigil, by the sleeping on the floor, by the prayer, by the standing, by the thirst, by the toil, and by the things following to those".

[916] Another paradox: he who loves and who is consummately loved, he will satiate his thirst for love but he will still remain unsatiated. Out of the satiated love will grow even more love, and more thirst for love; out of fire, more fire. Only a non-full love gets one bored. This is a fact which the untruth of the Origenistic theory is proven by, about the boredom of the spirits

15) He who appeases on himself (the hesychast) is the earthly image of the angel, who liberated from idleness and drowsiness the prayer, through the letter of the longing and through the letters of zeal[917].

16) He who appeases on himself (the hesychast) is him who shouts out loud: "Ready is my heart, God!" (Ps. 56: 10[918]; 107: 1[919]). He who appeases on himself (the hesychast) is him who says: "I am sleeping, by my heart take vigil" (Song of Songs 5: 2).

17) Close the door of your monastic cell to your body, and close the door of your tongue to your word, and close your inner door to the evil ghost.

18) The peace of the sea and the heat of the midday sun test sailor's patience; the lack of the needed things proves the zeal of him who appeases on himself. The first one floats drowsy on the waters; the second one, when getting idle, he will mingle with the crowd[920].

19) Do not fear the knocking distracting you. This is for the crying do not know about fear neither gets scared.

20) They whose mind has learnt how to truly pray, they talk to the Lord as standing before Him Who is present, as the people who speak at the ear of the Emperor. They whose mouth prays, they resemble to them who fall at His feet in front of the entire assembly. They who live within world, they ask the emperor from the middle of the entire people. If you have learnt in their union with God and about their need for getting out from there for a new experience. In this head and in the next head one can see that the hesychast isn't a lazy soul, empty of any aspiration as in Buddhism, but full of the heat of the love for God that is ever hotter.

[917] He who writes a full of longing letter, he won't have time to be lazy. Alike is him who appeases on himself" he is like that one who takes his prayer, advancing towards God, as through a full of longing letter.

[918] In KJB we have: Ps. 57: 7: "My heart is fixed, O God, my heart is fixed: I will sing and give praise."; in ROB we have: Ps. 56: 10: "Ready is my heart, God, ready is my heart! I will sing and I will praise Your glory."

[919] In KJB we have: Ps. 108: 1: "O GOD, my heart is fixed; I will sing and give praise,"; in ROB we have: Ps. 107: 1: "Ready is my heart, God, ready is my heart; I will sing and I will praise into my heart."

[920] From Evagrius: "You must not leave the quietude during temptations, by imagining so-called blessed motifs, but you must sit inside and endure and manly receive all of those coming upon you. And especially the devil of the fornication that is stronger than all others, and that makes the soul especially experienced. And if you run away from such battles and if you let yourself to be defeated by those battles, that will make your mind inexperienced and coward".

this craftsmanship, it won't be unknown to you what we are talking about.

21) While you sit on a high place, take heed at yourself, if you know how to do that, and so you will see when, since when, hos many, and which thieves come to enter and steal your grapes. When you get tired of stalking, you will get up and pray. And by sitting again, keep your work from before, manly.

22) Somebody who tried this thing, he wanted to talk about it in a thin and detailed manner. But he feared not to make the workers lazy, and them who want to start doing that thing him to banish them away with the sound of his words. He who talks in a thin and into knowledge about appeasement he rises the devils against himself. This is because nobody can unveil their abominations.

23) He who has reached the quietude he will know a deep (an abyss) of mysteries. But he hasn't reached to that without previously hearing the noises of the waves and of the winds and without him being splashed by those. What I have said is confirmed by the great Apostle Paul. This is because if he wasn't kidnapped to Paradise as into quietude, he wouldn't be able to hear the untold words (2 Cor. 12: 2)[921].

24) The ear of the appeasement receives wonderful things from God. That's why also in the book of Job this all-wise one[922] said: "Won't the ear receive wonderful words from Him?" (Job 4: 12).

25) He appeases himself whom runs away without hatred from everything, unlike another who runs carelessly towards those things. The first one doesn't want to suffer any interruption in the sweetness he receives from God.

26) "Go, sell your wealth". For "sell" requires time. "And give it to the poor" (Mt. 19: 21), in order to help you through [921] The Paradise which Paul was kidnapped into, it not but the quietude, namely the ocean of the peace and of the godlike love. All the Christian symbols express the states of the spiritual living of the man into God. The quietude isn't a void, but it is the living and unimaginably rich in meanings deep of the love of God. Through quietude we appease on ourselves from the agitation lived in connection with the passing things and circumstances, which promise us, one at the time, our happiness, and which throw us down into the sadness of losing them. We have everything non-passing into God. That' shy, we are ceaselessly happy and peaceful, sheltered against temptations and collapses, and delivered from deluding agitations.

prayer towards appeasement[923]. 'And take up your cross" and by bearing it through obedience and by strongly enduring the burden of cutting off your own will, come "and follow Me" towards achieving the all-blessed quietude and I will teach you the unseen work and living of the understanding powers[924]. These ones won't ever get satiated from praising the Maker, neither him who entered the heaven of the quietude will ever get satiated from praising the Creator. Do not take care of the material things they who are immaterial; neither of food, they who are immaterial, but embodied. The first ones do not feel the pleasure of eating; neither the second ones need its promise[925]. They do not take care there of money and of wealth; neither these ones of being upset ghosts.

Not them who are above desire the seen creation; neither them who are below and appease on themselves lust for the sensitive sight. They won't cease to increase in love. Nether these ones to daily compete with those ones. It is not known by them the richness of their progress; neither is known to these ones the love for climbing. Those ones won't stop until they will reach the seraphs; neither these ones won't get tired until they will become angels[926]. Blessed is him who hopes. Threefold blessed is him who - by wanting - he has become an angel.

[923] In the Edition form the year 1970 we have: "And given it to the poor monks so that by praying for you they to help you and they to run together with you towards prayer". And the scholium from the G.P. says: "Give to the right-believer and do not help the sinner; do good to the humble and do not give to the lawless". But sometimes this one too, helped at the right time, he could come to faith. That's why Veniamin Costache translated, at his turn, though he spoke only about the poor: "to help you and to run together with you towards appeasement".

[924] From Isaiah: "Do not understand that one must crucify on himself and to follow the Lord. But you will; crucify yourself towards the worldly things, so that you will never touch those again. And again, you will crucify your mind forever on your soul, so that you won't neglect your salvation. And one must not receive the evil thoughts, but he must know how to discern those, because those belong to the devil. One must not let your mind untied by any scattering, in order him not to be disturbed by thoughts. This is because if you untie your mind, you will pray vainly. This is because of the mind going around those thoughts, even if the mind prays, the mind's prayer won't ascend to God. This is because if the mind does not pray with a clean prayer, a prayer willed with faith, God won't receive that prayer". One enters by prayer in a real manner at God, when, by being left the limited thoughts of the things, the mind finds again through that its limitedness, and in its mirror the infinity of God. This is the mind's quietude into God, a quietude lives by the angelic powers.

[925] For the time to come.

[926] It is an opinion of the author that by progressing all the angels will reach to be seraphs, and the people who progress in dispassion they will reach to be angels (into body).

The Same Word

About the Kinds of the Appeasement and about the Discerning of Them

1) In all sciences are, as everybody knows, differences of opinions and judgments. This is because of not knowing everybody all the things in a consummate manner, because of the lack of diligence and because of the fewness of their power. There are some people who sink in the world's harbor itself, better said in the sea, or maybe in the sea's deep, because of the weakness of their mouth or because of the lack on control upon their own body[927]. Others, because of their incontrollable anger, because they – the misfortunate – cannot control the power of their anger. Others, because they reckon to sail according their own rule, or they lead on themselves according to their self-appreciation. Others, because of not being able to restraint on themselves from the material things, amidst the material things. Others, because of not wanting to become zealous in a lonely life. Others, because of tormenting on themselves without knowing how, for diverse guilts. Some, because they search by doing that, their glory.

But there are others as well (if, by coming, the Son of Man will find out about these ones too on earth), who for the delectation and for the thirst of the love for God and for its sweetness, they married to this pious quietude, and they didn't do that before giving a letter of separation to the idleness. This is because this union is reckoned as fornication by the first one.

2) According to the little knowledge given to me, I composed, like an unwise carpenter, a ladder of the climbing. So, let each one see what is the step he has stopped on, either because of the self-leading (idiorhythmic), or because of the glory from the people, or because of the helplessness of this tongue[928], or because of not controlling their anger, or because of the bigness of their addiction, so that he will be able to pay for his guilts and to become zealous, so that he will be able to [927] "I reckon that by the weakness of the mouth he means the daring of the tongue; and by the lack of control upon the body he means not working because the body has become accustomed to not working, or to bodily resting". These ones are those who drown in this world like in a sea, either in its port, at the beginning of the leaving for appeasement, or in the open seas, after they have started advancing on it.

[928] The tongue's helplessness of keeping its silence.

achieve fire[929]. And thus, the first ones will become the last ones, and the last ones will become the first ones. The works of the week of the present time are seven. And the eight one is the proven sign for the time to come[930].

3) Take heed, you lonely monk, at the hours of the wild beasts. If not, you won't be able to set up the right trap to them. If that one that has received from you a separation letter has totally gone away from you, it will be useless you to worry about it at all[931]. But if it still dares to come close to me, I won't be able to tell how will I appease on myself. I wonder why there were not so many lighteners to the pious Tavasiniotes, as to the Schiteotes[932]? Let him who understand to understand, because I cannot speak on that, or better said I do not want it[933]. Some of them diminish their passions, other sing and persevere more in prayer, while others by focusing themselves on seeing they live in this deep. Let the steps be studied according to the sort of the ladder. He who advances, let him advance into the Lord[934].

[929] In order him to achieve the fire of the Holy Ghost, the fire of the love for God, so that he will start advancing from the step he on towards the higher step.

[930] The much industriousness that usually is mixed with the worries, with the vain-glory, they belong to the "seven days" of the present time, and they tend towards the eighth day of the future age; but the dispassion and the quietude are signs that somebody tastes this resting while still being here.

[931] "If the idleness, he says, it has gone away from him". This is for he spoke about that a little earlier. This is for them who appease on themselves wisely, they do not appease on themselves before giving a separation letter to their idleness. So, if this one has gone away, it will be useless to work any longer.

[932] The first ones live in community while the last ones occupied on themselves with the appeasement.

[933] "It is obvious that working the appeasement is great and it is a factor for more progress than the works from within community. But he doesn't want to say that plainly, because of the weak ones".

[934] "He lists the works of them who are in appeasement and who advance from the small things to the gib things. Some people, he says, they work this one in order to diminish their passions and they maybe toil also to do handwork. This is done by beginners. Other occupy on themselves with the singing and this is done by them who advance. And other persevere in prayer and this is done by them who have advanced. And others focus themselves on contemplation and this is done by the consummate ones. Starting from the humblest things, he has ascended to the higher things, by using the word as a ladder. This is for the ladder uses to climb from the humbler towards the higher". But only they who reached to persevere into seeing (into contemplation), they persevere through it into the endless deep of the godlike mysteries, in the ocean of light of all meanings and of the endless love of God, which the man cannot ever get satiated by, though that love satisfied the man always in a consummate manner. This is the heaven; this is the Paradise. This is the endless deep of the life, that is in

4) There are lazy souls living in congregational monasteries and having there plentifully the occasions for maintaining their idleness, and so they reached to total perdition. And there are other souls who have disrobed their idleness by together-living with other souls. This happened not only to those who are more careless, but it often happened even to the most zealous. We see the same thing happening also in the case of the appeasement. By receiving many who were experienced, it has rejected them because of them working according to their own rule (idiorhythmic), by proving them as loving the pleasure. And by receiving other with the fear and with the worry for bearing the burden of their judgment place upon them, it has made them zealous and hot[935].

5) Let nobody, if he is troubles by anger and by self-appreciation and by hypocrisy and by keeping the evil in mind, to dare to reckon that he sees in humbleness traces of appeasement[936], let he will earn by that a getting out of his mind and even more than that[937]. Ad if somebody is clean of these things, that one will know his benefit out of that. But I reckon that not even this one[938].

6) The signs, the stages, and the proofs of them who appease on themselves wisely, will be these ones: a non-sleepy mind[939], righteous thought, kidnapping to the Lord, imagining the torments, the pressure from thinking at the soon death, the insatiably praying, the non-stollen guarding, the melting away of the fornication, non-knowing of the addiction, the death to the world, the ceasing of the belly's covetousness, the inner urge to theologize (to occupy on oneself with the knowledge of God), spring of right-reckoning, obedient tear[940], the abolishment of the much-speaking or of anything else from among these ones, which the multitude like to oppose themselves to. And to them who do not appease on themselves the same time the endless deep of the quietude, for, once reached into it, the soul won't search for anything else due to the fact that the soul will has everything in it.

[935] "The sadness of the thought overcomes the body's tiredness".

[936] All these things show him tied to the limited and perishing things of the present world; that's why he cannot sink in the peaceful ocean of the godlike love.

[937] By reckoning his agitation as quietude, he will reach an awful despair, because of not being able to know that somewhere truly can be a quietude.

[938] This one has still not reached, only by the absence of the mentioned worries, to the supreme benefit of the quietude.

[939] In other manuscripts: "The mind non-haunted by waves".

[940] "Namely slave, coming whenever he who has it wants it".

wisely, the signs will be these ones: the poverty in richness[941], the increase in anger, the pilling up of the evil's remembrance, the diminution of the love, and a plus in haughtiness. And we are going to keep our silence upon what follows to those ones[942].

7) But because our Word has reached here, after we have spoken about all things, we need to speak also about them who are into obedience. This is for our Word is rather addressed to them. The signs of them who are married in a non-debauched and non-defiled manner with this well-adorned and decent virtue, are – as the of-God-bearer fathers stated – the followings (they become consummate at their time but by tending further on each day, we will ceaselessly add to them progresses and advances): the increase in the beginning humbleness; the diminution of the wrath (because how cannot happen that once the gall is vomited?); the getting far of the darknesses; the plus of love; the estrangement from passions; the deliverance from hatred; the diminution of the non-restraint by reproach; the non-knowing of the idleness; the plus of zeal; the merciful love; the estrangement from pride, that is the good things wanted by all but achieved only by a few. By not being water into foundation, it will be inappropriate its name[943]. And what happens will be understood by them who have mind.

8) The young woman who doesn't guard her bed she will defile her body; and that soul who hasn't guarded the deal, that soul will defile the body. To the first deed follow: the dishonor, the hatred, the beatings, and the separation that is the most pitiful of all things. Abd to the second deed will follow: the forgetting about the death, the non-satiation of the belly, the non-restraining of the eyes, the working of the vain-glory, the insatiable sleeping, the callous anger, the insensitiveness, the piling up of the thoughts, the increase in approval (of the temptations), the enslavement of the heart, the non-hearing, the opposition by word, the disbelief, the doubtful heart, the much-speaking, the addiction, and the daring which is the most awful among all of them. And the most pitiful things of all is the non-pricked heart that will be followed, within them who do not take [941] "The poverty of the virtues into the richness of the sins".

[942] "I reckon that what follows is either the bodily falling or the mind's scattering. This is because of these ones being the daughters of the haughtiness, as the blasphemy is too".
[943] "Or him who doesn't have these ones, he will vainly call on himself as obedient".

heed, by the lack of pain that is the mother of the ghosts and of the fallings.

9) They who appease on themselves will be warred by five, and they who are under obedience will be warred by three out of eight[944]. He who appeases on himself and who fight his idleness he will suffer losses on many times. This is because of spending the time for prayer and for spiritual seeing in the craftsmanships and in the fight with his idleness.

10) By getting myself lazy when I was once sitting in my monastic cell and because of almost thinking to leave my monastic cell[945], some men came and congratulated me much as on a hesychast (as on somebody who appeases on himself, t. n.) and immediately the thought of the fornication left me, by being banished away by the thought of the vain-glory, and I wonder what his devil with three spears opposes all other ghosts like.

11) Look on every moment at the beatings, at the slashings, at the impulses, and at the changes of your wife, how, and in what direction is her urge. But only him who has achieved the quietude of the Holy Ghost will be able to see those.

12) The good forerunner of the quietude is the lack of worry about all appropriate or inappropriate things[946]. This is because he who opens on himself to the first ones he will fall into the second ones. The second good thing of the quietude is the tireless prayer. And the third good thing is the non-robbed work of the heart. It is naturally impossible to him who hasn't learnt the alphabet, to read books and to cogitate at them. But it will be even more impossible to the who haven't achieved the first thing to occupy on themselves with the other two things, with a right-judgment.

13) By occupying on myself with what is in the middle, I have reached among them who were in the middle. And that enlightened me and behold I am again among them. But was [944] "Eight are the general thoughts of the evilness. On them who appease on themselves, they will be warred by five: of the idleness, of the vain-glory, of the pride, of the love for money, and of the sadness; and on them who are under obedience: the ones of the belly's covetousness, of the fornication, and of the anger".

[945] "The idleness is a mother of the evil things. This is because of stealing from you the goods you have and because of impeding you from earning the goods you don't have".

[946] "This is because he who has not achieved the lack of worry, how will him be able to take care of prayer, or of taking-heed at the heart?".

before the seen image, he who was appointed upon their images was unable to teach me[947]. This was because of not being him allowed to do that. I begged him then to tell me how He (Christ, is now, t. n.)? "Into His own things, he answered me, and not into His own things". And I asked him: "What is the staying and the sitting on the right hand of the Cause?". "It is impossible, he answered me, to find out these mysterious things by hearing them". Attracted by my longing for those things, I said: "Please tell me something more!". "The time for that has not come yet", he said, "for you miss the incorruptibility. If these ones are together with the dust, I do not know; if they are outside the dust, I cannot tell you by any means"[948].

14) It is difficult to us to shake off the midday sleep, especially in the summer time. Maybe then, and only then, one must not reject the handwork.

15) I knew the devil of the idleness as preparing the way and as walking before the devil of the fornication, as strongly drowsing the body and sinking it into sleep, in order to cause into them who appease on themselves the defilements as in

[947] Belonging to Elijah (the Cretan, added Veniamin Costache): "This godlike father teaches in these words that there are three advancements or steps: the lack of worry in the things of the live and in those which this one is scattered in, and the tireless prayer, and the third that is the non-robbed work of the heart. It is obvious that the middle of the two sides is the prayer. So, he who has earned it he will be able to occupy on himself with the other two as well. He who occupied on himself with the middle of the two mentioned, namely with the prayer, he has reached the middle of the good things and he hasn't yet ascended to the other one of the goods". In the Edition from the year 1970 and in that belonging to Veniamin Costache. Another: "The father says that him who occupied on himself with the prayer into kidnapping he will be among them who are in the middle, namely among those angels who are mediators between God and people, and who satiate, by illumination, on them who are thirsty for the longing for God, and into the things from the sides they defend them, namely into lack-of-worry and into work, that he says that is the seeing (the contemplation)". In the Edition form the year 1970 and at Veniamin Costache this is continued with a paraphrase of the things said in the Head no. 12. The interpretations start by showing that Christ has placed on Himself, by His embodiment, into these three states. Then follows the question: "How was Christ before His embodiment? Not even the angel can answer that".

One must notice that Climacus says that the ceaseless prayer is inferior to the heart's work, as Patriarch Kallistos did too, in the Century XIV. The work of the hear tis the consummate union with God. But until achieving the incorruptibility we remain somewhat always lover in comparison to the final end, to the consummate seeing, or it might be that we will remain like that forever and ever.

[948] "He is into His own things and He is not into His won things". Christ is into the heavenly realities and into the human realities. We miss now the understanding with our body in order us to understand His live with His resurrected body that can sit on the right hand of the Father. That's why, at the question: how is Christ, with the body, on the right hand of the Father, he answered as he did".

dream. If you resist him strongly, he will unmistakingly wage a strong war to you in order to make you leave the ascetic toils as useless to you. But nothing can prove the defeat of the devils as their bitter war against us.

16) In going-outs, you will guard the earned things. This is because, when the door is open, the birds from inside will fly away[949]. And thus, we will not be able to benefit anything out of our appeasement.

17) A small hair will trouble the eye; a small worry will banish the quietude away. This is because the quietude means the rejection of the worries and the renunciation to the justified worries.

18) He who has found the quietude, he will no longer take care not even of his own body. This is for He Who has promised that is non-liar (Mt. 6: 25; 1 Cor. 1: 9).

19) He who wants to show on himself to God as having a clean mind but he still is troubled by worries, he will be like him whose feet have been tied up but he wants to walk fast[950].

20) Rare are they who learnt the whole philosophy about world. And I say that there is even fewer they who truly know the philosophy of that quietude according to God. He who doesn't know God yet, he is not prepared for appeasement and he submits on himself to many dangers. The quietude chocks up the inexperienced ones. This is because, by not tasting the sweetness of God they will waste their time in addictions, in scatterings, in idleness, and in wasting[951].

21) He who has touched the prayer's beauty, he will run away from the crown as a wild donkey. This is for, what else if [949] "If you go out of your monastic cell, he says, you must avoid showing your virtues worked by you during the appeasement. This is because the mouth, by getting open and by rushing forwards without guarding, to speak, those hidden virtues which elevate your mind at God will be lost and will disappear. "This is because the mouth of the intemperate, he says, it gets the man close to destruction" (Veniamin Costache gave also two scholia belonging to Theodore of Edessa, head no. 68; The Romanian Philokalia, volume IV, p. 218, and a scholium belonging to Diadochus, head no. 26, The Romanian Philokalia, volume I, p. 343).

[950] Belonging to Saint Isaac: "Like him who has his head under water he won't be able to breathe the thin air that flows within the empty chest, likewise him who sinks his cogitation into his worries he won't be able to have his feeling to breathe in the new world".

[951] He cannot be true hesychast him who doesn't' have the knowledge about God. He can get stuck on wrong roads and in the wrong interpretations of his experiences. The yogis and the spiritists from today, the theosophists and the anthroposophist, they do not interpret their happiness as a state of tasting the endless happiness of the person-like God, but as a gradual losing into insensitiveness. That's why their experience isn't a true happiness.

not the prayer, it liberated the wild donkey from the mingling with the people? He who is wrapped up in passions and lives into wilderness, he will take heed at the movements of his passions[952]. I was told and taught this by a holy old man, Gheorghe Arsilaitul[953], whom your piousness knows too. Him, when teaching once a worthless soul and guiding that soul towards appeasement, "I saw in the morning, he said, fully rushing upon him the devils of the lust and of the vain-glory' at noon, the devils of the laziness, of the sadness, and of the anger; and in the evening, the devils who love the filthiness and the tyrants of the belly".

22) Better is an obedient poor[954] than a hesychasts stollen by his worries.

23) He who occupies on himself with that quietude with right-reckoning, and he doesn't see its benefit on each day, he either doesn't' appease on himself with judgment, or he is stollen by his self-appreciation.

24) The quietude is the uninterrupted worshipping of God and standing in front of Him[955].

25) Let your remembrance of Jesus be united with your breath and you will know then the benefit of the quietude[956].

26) The falling of the obedient is out of his will; the falling of the hesychast (of him who appeases on himself) is because of him getting far from prayer.

27) If you enjoy receiving visits in your monastic cell, you will know that you spend your time in idleness and you do not

[952] "If you want to ceaselessly call the name of God, you won't reject the temptations coming upon you as unjust, but you will endure all of those as justly coming. This is for the patience moves by any happening the remembering about God. And refusing the temptations will diminish the pain that enter the heart and by alleviation it will cause the forgetfulness".

[953] We have rendered here the name as spelled in the Romanian language, because we haven't found a corresponding translation (though Gheorghe is George) for Arsilaitul. (E. l. t.'s n.)

[954] "Poor is called him who doesn't pile up material goods. But I reckon like that the humble ones".

[955] Only God with His endlessness can keep the soul absorbed in contemplating Him, namely into quietude, without the necessary passing from a limited thing to another limited thing.

[956] Belonging to Saint Isaac: "When the power of the wine penetrates the limbs, the mind will forgive about the details of all things. And when the remembrance of God reaches to be pasture to the soul, the soul will reject all the pasture of other views from within heart". The soul no longer needs other food, earned by seeing the things from outside; that soul had God as endless food. Veniamin Costache gives as scholium also the head no. 59 from Diadochus; The Romanian Philokalia, volume I, p. 357. In Jesus, as infinite God in His godhead, and embodied, the soul has everything.

occupy on yourself with God. Let be example of prayer to you that widow whom her adversary did injustice to (Lk. 18: 3).

28) And example of quietude, the great and identically to the angels hesychast Arsenius. Remember into your loneliness about the living of this great hesychast and see how he often removed those who came to see him[957], in order him not to lose what was the best[958].

29) I knew the devils urging the reckless ones who walk from place to place, to go especially at those who appease on themselves with right-reckoning, so that those to be impeded through these ones, even for a little, from doing their work. You will reckon these ones as such and you won't shy from upsetting, in good faith, on the lazy ones. This is for, they might stop wandering purposelessly, because their upset. But take heed lest, due to the sake for the mentioned purpose, to vainly make sad any of the souls who come to draw out waster from you[959]. You need the candlestick of the right-reckoning in all things[960].

30) The life of them who appease on themselves, better said the life of them who live in loneliness, let it be done according to the conscience and to the feeling. He who runs with judgment let him follow all his occupations, words, thoughts, steps, wills, and moves according to the Lord, into the sanctification of his soul, and let him do all of those in front of the Lord. And if he is stollen (from this feeling), he still doesn't live according to the virtue[961].

[957] "It is good to be taught by word also, them who ask; but it will be better if they will be helped through virtue and prayer. This is for him who is brought by those to God, he will help also his neighbor through the help he provides to himself. If you want him who loves learning to benefit of you, you will show him briefly the prayer and the right-faith".

[958] "Namely searching for God and talking to God".

[959] "You won't tell anything at the ears of the mindless, lest they will take your words in derision. This is because of being damaging the living with the vain ones. Like them who walk into the bad air they will get sick, likewise them who live among careless people they will get contaminated with those ones' evilness. This is because "the evil talks will corrupt the good morals" (Wisdom of Solomon 2: 6).

[960] Belonging to Saint Isaac: "Do not wound them who need your prayer, neither deprive them of the gentle words of the comforting, so that their souls not to be lost and asked from you. But you take example from the physicians, who heal the hotter illnesses with colder medicines and the colder illnesses with the opposite medicines".

[961] "Question: What the monk is" Answer: He is the lonely one, the stranger: outside, from the material and worldly things; inside, from the meanings of those things. Firstly, in order him not to receive the worldly thoughts; secondly, in order him mind to become alone with the true God, and not receiving the thoughts of the evilness".

31) "I will open, he says in the Book of Psalms, my thought" (Ps. 48: 4[962]) and my will, because of still being I deprived of the sense of the discernment. And I will raise my will by prayer and, from there, I will wait for entrustment (confirmation or knowledge)[963].

32) The faith is the wing of the prayer. This is because, by not having this one, it will turn back again into my bosom. The faith is the doubles state of the soul, unshaken by any resistance. Faithful is not him who reckons that God can do everything, but faithful is him who believed that he will receive everything[964].

33) The faith if the producer of the hoped things. And this was shown by the thief. The mother of the faith if the ascetic toil and the righteous heart. The first one makes the faith doubtless, and the righteous heart produces the faith. The faith

[962] In KJB we have: Ps. 49: 4: "I will incline mine ear to a parable: I will open my dark saying upon the harp."; in ROB we have" Ps. 48: 4: "I will lean my ear towards example, I will interpret my thought in sound of psaltery." (We have to mention here the fact that in the Romanian theological technolect the Book of Psalms is also called as Psaltery, as the musical instrument) (E. l. t.'s n.)

[963] "If you truly pray, you will take much entrustment. And the angels will come to you and their will illuminate you the meanings (the rationalities, t. n.) of the happening things". Not only the things and the persons are embodiments of the rationalities of God-the Word, but also all the things happening due to the complex encounters among them. By any circumstance which we reach in, we are welcomed by a thought of God, and therefore also by a call from Him to answer Him with a corresponding work of ours. In a poor God meets me with the call to help that poor for my and his spiritual growth. But to decipher this thought of God, there is not only me contributing by being helped by God, but there are also the angels contributing to that. Like the circumstance is weaved and deciphered by many people, and many people help me, by their deed from now and by their past thoughts and deeds, to decipher that circumstance and to answer it with my deed, likewise many angels contribute to that. Each circumstance and my answer to that circumstance constitute a meeting point me, God, and the other people, and the angels. The prayer produces this entrustment and illumination, for it is a total opening of ours towards God Who is surrounded by His angels, after we have detached on ourselves from all the things which passionately lock us up into ourselves. We are in the ambience of a pan-personalistic plan, in which all the persons converge towards each person, and each person thinks at all persons. And all the persons are in the all-comprising Trinity of Persons of God, or their progress into this Trinity, being gathered by the Holy Gost into the Father's Son. The human being is not lost as a speck of dust into a huge impersonal pilling up.

The entrustment provided us by prayer is the experience of the encounter with God and the experience of the light radiating out of Him all over the place and all over the things.

Another scholium: "What else good is beside God? Therefore, let's surrender Him all our things and we will be well. This is for The Good One unmistakingly is the Giver of the good things as well".

[964] The faith is not a theological theory about the almightiness of God, but the faith is the inward conviction that God will fulfill the prayer of him who asks for that.

is the mother of them who appease on themselves (of the hesychasts). And if you do not believe, how will you appease on yourself?[965]

34) He who is shackled up into prison he will be burdened with the fear of him who will torment him. And in him who appeases on himself in the monastic cell the fear of the Lord has been born. The first one doesn't fear the judgment as much as the second one fears the judgment of the Lord. You need much fear in your appeasement, oh, you the wonderful one! This is because nothing can banish the idleness away so much as the fear can do it[966].

35) Each time the judge visits the prison, the condemned one will look directly at the judge. And the true worker of the quietude he will look directly at that time when him who hurries him up will come[967]. The first one is tied up to the burden of his sadness. The second one is tied up to the tears spring.

36) If you have achieved the walking-stick of the patience, the dogs will immediately stop being naughty. The patience is the unbroken pain of the soul that by no means will be shaken by the justified or unjustified hits he receives. The patience is appointed to the trouble it waits for on each day. Patient is that worker who doesn't fall, or who gains victories out of his fallings. The patience stands for cutting off the excuses and for taking heed at oneself[968].

[965] Belonging to Saint Mark: "He who believer sin the things to come he will abstain on himself from the sweet things from here, by non-absolutizing them. And he who doesn't believe, he will sweeten on yourself with those and he will run away from pain".

[966] There are degrees in the appeasement too. On the appeasement's highest stages, the soul is fully sunk in the happiness of living into the love of God. But in the beginning, in order to detach on himself from all things, he must fear God and His judgment for his sins. But he who is attached to the world he won't fear God. Belonging to Saint Isaiah: "He who trust something, he won't have within him the fear of God. And to the degree that somebody is slave to his passions, he won't be reckoned as servant of God, but he will still be servant of what he is mastered by".

[967] "Namely that angel that separates the soul from the body".

[968] Scholium belonging to Saint Isaac: "On the measure of your humble cogitation, you will be given your patience in your troubles. And according to your patience the burden of your trouble will be eased to you, and you will achieve comforting". The humbleness is itself a spring or comforting. This is for you do not reckon on yourself as having the right to receive worldly comfort. And the patience, by standing strongly, it will strengthen your nature, so that you will no longer feel the heaviness of your trouble. Out of your patience flows within you like a force, for your will hides into itself the force reserve which we do not usually put at work. Better said, these force reserves are within our nature and out nature set them in action through the will that is a general quality of it, which it doesn't usually set it in work. The power reserves of our nature will be even endless when our nature stays in connection with

37) The worker (of the quietude) doesn't need food as much as he need patience. This is for by being deprived of the first one he will receive a crown, but because of missing the second one he will earn perdition to himself.

38) The patient man has died before being entombed, by making his tomb out of his monastic cell. The patience is born out of hope and crying; this is because he who misses these two, he will be the slave of the idleness.

39) The fighter for Christ must know which among enemies he must banish away and which to fight against. Sometimes the fight brings a crown. Some other time avoiding the fight will leave s inexperienced them who avoid the fight. These things cannot be taught by word[969]. This is because not all of us have the same features and must fight the same temptations.

40) You will stalk one of the ghosts by watchfulness, because he too wages war restlessly: when you stand, when you change your place, when you sit on the chair, when you are in motion, when you stretch, when you pray, and when you sleep[970].

41) Some of them who advanced on the road of the appeasement, they keep within them the ceaseless work, according to the word: "I always saw the Lord before me" (Ps. 15: 8[971]). This is because not all the breads of the spiritual food,

God. We overcome the difficulties more easily by patience that by struggling not to receive them, or to avoid them at any costs, a fact which is manifested in a fear, a weakness that actually makes us weak. The things from outside will be able to easily crush our nature if we do not strengthen it out of its naturel reserves which stay in connection with the endless power reserves of God Who has created and Who upholds our nature as our nature's true foundation and spring. Another Scholium belonging to Saint Isaac: "All the dangers and the troubles which are welcomed patiently, they will bring a twofold torment. This is because the man's patience is according to the dangers coming upon him. The man will strain on himself accordingly to the difficulty he must face. And the weakening of the courage is the mother of the torment, while the patience is the mother of the comforting and it is a power born out of the heart's broadness and out of heart's joy. But this power will be difficult to be found by man in his troubles without the godlike grace coming to him by intentionally searching for the prayer and out of shedding the tears".

[969] "One must know that he who wants to learn something, he must try by doing that thing; this is because these things cannot be understood by word".

[971] In KJB we have: Ps. 16: 8: "I have set the Lord always before me: because he is at my right hand, I shall not be moved."; in ROB we have: Ps. 15: 8: "I always saw the Lord before me, for He is on my right hand so I won't wobble." (E. l. t.'s n.)

of the heavenly wheat, are the same. And others, they keep that work expressed by the words: "By your patience you will gain your souls" (Lk. 21: 29). Others, that one from the words: "Take vigil and pray" (Mk. 14: 38). Other, that one from the words: "You prepare your things towards exit". Others, that one from the words: "I humbled on myself and He saved me" (Ps. 114: 6[972]). Some of them always thing at the word: "The sufferings of the present time are unworthy of the future glory" (Rom. 8: 18). Other, they think at the saying: "Lest he will be kidnapped and there will not be Him Who delivers him" (Ps. 49: 29[973]). Everyone runs, but only one takes crown tirelessly.

42) He who has advanced he won't work only when taking vigil but also when he sleeps. That's why some of them rebuke the devils even when the devils come to them in their dreams, and they urge debauched women to righteousness. You won't expect visits, neither will you prepare for visits. This is for the state of quietude is simple and free of any connection.

43) If somebody wants to build up a tower and the monastic cell for appeasement, he won't start doing that before reckoning and finding out by prayer whether he has the necessary means for finishing the work, lets he will become, after laying down the foundation, mockery to his enemies and an impediment to other workers.

44) Take heed at the sweetness come within your soul, lets it has been sent to you cunningly, by liar physicians, or better said by some plotters.

45) During night, you will give the most time to the prayer, and less time to singing, and during the day, you will be according to your powers. The reading helps no less to illuminating and gathering the mind[974]. This is for the read

At Veniamin Costache, another, from Saint John Chrysostom: "Insatiable sweetness are the spiritual speeches. This is because like the non-rained land won't be able to bring forth harvest of wheat ears, despite one sowing countless seeds in it, likewise that soul that hasn't been illuminated by the Holy Scriptures, even if somebody pours countless dialogues in that soul, that soul won't be able to bring froth any fruits. So, we owe to read the Scriptures, for as by words belong to the Holy Ghost, and those word set in good order on them who occupy on themselves with them. May it be to you, who are a worker (of the appeasement), the things you read, as working to you[975]. And working those words will make useless reading other words.

46) You try to understand the words of the health rather through toils than through books. Do not occupy on yourself with the words of a foreign thinking[976], before you have gained the spiritual power; this is because of being those words of the darkness, they will darken them who are powerless[977].

47) Often, one cup is enough for knowing the taste of the wine; and one word of a hesychast makes know to them who are able to understand the whole his work and inwards state.

48) You achieve an unscattered eye of the soul against the self-appreciation. This is because of nothing being capable of robbing you are of destroying you as this one[978].

49) When you go out, you will restrain your tongue. This is because of being your tongue able to quickly waste many of your ascetic toils.

50) Earn to you a non-inquiring souly state. This is because the curiosity can defile the quietude as nothing else can[979].

51) Set before them who come to visit you the things they need for their body and for their ghost[980]. If they are wiser, let's [975] The hesychast has to read writings which have within them the power for moving him towards the spiritual work, and not writings of theoretical knowledge or which urge him to evil.

[976] "The words of a foreign thinking, or deceiving, are the words of the heretics".

[977] The words, despite generally having meanings, they will also be able to bring darkness if they propagate misinterpretations, or in a way contradictory to reality. One build disorder by suing the element of the disorder.

And the empties among people will be elevated by their self-appreciation". Another, belonging to Gregory the Theologian: "The good deed will be scattered by hallucination and by bragging". Another: "Let not your self-appreciation to tear apart your being".

gladness, as Patriarch Abraham showed us". Another, belonging to Abba Joseph: "When you want to urge somebody towards good, you first rest him bodily and honor him with a word of love. This is for nothing shames the man and makes him changing from his evilness towards the good things, as the bodily goods and as the honoring he received from you".

[982] This may be because in quietude we contemplate God mostly as gathered into His unity, while in obedience we contemplate the Son as obedient in all things.

[983] It is sunk into the abyss of The One, and filled up with His infinity.

The Word XXVIII

About the Blessed Prayer, the Holy Mothers of All Virtues; and about the Seen and Thought Showing at the Time of the Prayer

1) The prayer is, according to its feature, the accompanying and the union of the man and of God; and according to its work, the prayer if the upholder of the world. The prayer is reconcilement with God; it is the mother of the tears and their daughter; it is expiation of the sins; it is bridge crossing over temptations; it is the middle wall when facing troubles; it is the crushing of the wars, the work of the angels, the nourishment of all bodiless beings, the gladness to come, the edgeless work, the spring of the virtues, the causing of the charismas)of the gifts), the unsee progress, the soul's food, the mind's enlightenment, the hatchet for cutting off the despair, the overcoming of the despair, the scattering of the despair, the wealth of the monks, the treasury of the hesychasts, the diminution of the anger, the mirror of the progress, the showing of the measures, the proving of the inward state, the unveiling of the future things, and the sign of the glory. The prayer is him who truly prays, as a tribunal, as a ruler, and as a judgment chain of the Lord, previously to the chair of the future Judgment.

2) By standing us up, let's listen to this empress of the virtues shouting out and speaking loudly towards us: "Come to me all of you who are tired and burdened, and I will give you rest. Take My yoke upon you and you will have resting and healing to your wounds. This is for My yoke is gentle" (Mt. 11: 29) and healer of some big mistakes[984].

[984] In these rows the prayer is identified to Christ Himself. This can be explained by the fact that the prayer is a "accompanying" (ανάμιξη = mixing) so complete of the soul with God that one no longer can discern in it the work of the man from the work of the work of God, neither the human subject from the godlike Subject. This is, of course, when the prayer is entirely focused towards God, and all other thoughts are forgotten. This is because nay thought that is only ours or only ours and of the evil one, it will separate us from God. Jesus prays into our prayer and we pray into His prayer. Or better said, the Ghost of Jesus. From here comes the sentiment that in prayer we are inside God as in an appeasing shelter. In prayer, on one hand we speak to God, and on the other hand God speaks within us to Himself. By that we are united into prayer with God but non-confounded to Him. By prayer we ask and we receive, or we have in the same time the gift from and the power of God. Here is shown the complete

3) We who start going to present ourselves before the Emperor and to talk to Him, let's not do that road unprepared, lest by being seen from far the fact that we have no weapons and clothes appropriate to presentation before Him, He will command His servants and to His officials to tie us up and to throw us far from His face, and He to break up the parchments which we have written our asks on, and to throw the pieces in our face.

4) When you start going to present yourself before our Lord, let the coat of your soul be entirely woven with the threads, or better said with the chain links of the non-remembering the evil. If not, you won't benefit anything. Let the fabric of your ask to be simple and not diversely adorned. This is for, with a sole word, the publican and the prodigal son reconciled God.

5) The countenance of them who pray is one, but it is in the same time diverse and different. Some present themselves like to a Friend and Master bringing Him the praise and the ask for them and for others. Others come to ask Him for richness and glory and more daring; others, they come to beg Him for being themselves consummately delivered from their enemies. Some of them ask for being given a certain office; others, they ask for consummately escape from some debt; other, they ask for being released out of prison; others, they ask to be forgiven of some guilts.

6) Let's write down on the parchment of our prayer, before anything, a sincere thanks giving. Secondly, let's write there our confession and the crushing of our soul into much feeling. Then, let's make know to the Emperor the whole our ask. This way of our prayer is the best, as it has been told to a certain brother by the Angels of our Lord.

7) If you have ever been found guilty by the seen judge, you won't need another way to present your prayer, and if you have never been in front of a judge and neither have you seen other people in trial, you can learn this from the prayer of the sick ones in front of their physician, when that one is about co cut off or to burn a wound of the sick.

efficiency by the fact that God is Father and Son and Holy Ghost; or Son made man and having united the Holy Ghost with Himself; the Son united with us through His embodiment and having the Holy Ghost within Himself as man – and therefore us too in union with the Son have the Holy Ghost within us.

8) Do not pretend to be smart in the words of your prayer! This is because ethe simple and non-crafted cooing of the little children got emotional their Fathers from heavens[985].

9) Do not start to much speaking lest the searching for words to scatter you mind away. A word of the publican made God merciful, and a word uttered with faith it saved the thief. The much speaking into prayer causes hallucinations and scattering to the mind. And a sole word will gather the mind together.

10) When you feel sweetness of pricking into prayer you will remain in that state. This is for at that moment the guardian is together with us praying[986].

11) You won't be daring, even if you have achieved the cleanness. You rather get closer into humble cogitation and you will have more daring[987].

12) Even if you climbed the entire ladder of the virtues, you would still pray for the forgiveness of your sins, because of hearing Paul who shouts out than among sinners "I am the first one" (1 Tim. 1: 15).

13) They oil and the salt sweeten the foods; the humbleness and the tear wing up the prayer.

14) If you will dress yourself up with the whole gentleness and non-getting-angry, you won't tire yourself too much to liberate your mind out of slavery[988].

15) Until we haven't achieved a proven prayer, let's resemble ourselves to them who teach the little children how to walk[989].

16) You fight for elevating, of better said to lock up your cogitation into the prayer's words, and if it gets weaker because of its childhood, you will raise it up again. This is because the [985] "One must not speak much, neither to tell at once many things in prayer. But one must say a sole thing, or the same things for many times". At Veniamin Costache is given also the head no. 61 from Diadochus, The Romanian Philokalia, volume I, pp. 358-359.

[986] The guardian angel, of the Holy Ghost.

[987] It is known that "daring" of the saints in their praying. That is a daring differing from the naughty daring. The saints' daring is that daring due to their trust in the love of God.

[988] From the slavery of the thoughts.

[989] "This is because as they who teach the little children, when the little children advance a little but they fall, their teachers raise the children up again and teach them how to take more steps, likewise we direct our mind that while praying it falls form the focusing on God, and we will raise our mind again, until our mind will reach not to fall anymore".

fickleness is characteristic to our mind, but it is characteristic to God to be able to make our mind steadfast[990].

17) If you have achieved an uninterrupted ascesis, there will come within you Him Who, by closing between shores the mind's sea, He will tell the mind into prayer: come here and do not pass beyond from here[991].

18) The ghost cannot be tied up. But where the creator of the ghost is all things will submit to him[992].

19) If you saw the sun as it is due, you could talk to Him appropriately. And if not, how could you come closer to Him in a liar manner, once you didn't see Him[993]?

20) The beginning of the prayer banishes away, by a sole word (μονολογίστως), the attacks, since their very beginnings; when at its middle, the cogitation get settles down in the said and thought things; and the consummation of the prayer is its kidnapping to God[994].

21) Another is that joy born out of prayer within them who live in community, and another is that joy that occurs within them who pray while occupying on themselves with the [990] God fixes our mind in Himself, for He opens to our mind His wonderful infinity which the mind has everything into.

[991] God closes the mind's sea between His shores, for He doesn't allow the mind to rover around agitated by all sorts of thoughts. But between these shores the mind will find its endless depth. If the mind crosses over those shores, the waters which the mind moves itself in, they will lose their depth.

[992] The ghost is not like the material object which move according to the same laws remaining in their finite structure. The ghost is liberty and possibility to start going on any direction. But the Creator of the ghost is the Supreme Ghost Whom all freedom can move in, and Who upholds the whole liberty, for within Him are all things and He is the spring of the whole liberty. And because only within Him are all the things, all the things move within Him; and, especially, the ghost of that man who has found Him will remain within Him and he will find in Him the spring of the full liberty.

[993] "God is the "Sun of the Righteousness", as it has been said, out of which start all the luminous rays of the kindness. And the soul can become, by will, either wax when loves God, or clay when love the material things. As the clay is dried out by the sun, by nature, and the wax is melted in a natural manner, likewise every soul that loves the material and worldly things: when rebuked by God it gets callous by resisting with his will, as the clay does, and he starts on himself, as Pharaoh did, towards his perdition. But that soul that loves God he will be melted like the wax and, by receiving the godlike shapes and traits, that soul will become the dwelling place of God into Ghost". The man's ghost by finding again his life, it will find again the elasticity and fluidity of his liberty through the fluidity of the Supreme Ghost.

[994] At the beginning the prayer and the mind banish away the tempting images by the sole thought at praying to God; then the mind thinks at the care of God for us, or at the content of the prayer's words; at its peak, the mind will forgive even about those and it will be kidnapped to God Himself, as a loving, infinite, and all-comprising Subject.

appeasement. The first one may be mixed with many imaginings; the second one is wholly filled up with humble cogitation.

22) If you have accustomed your mind to never get far, you mind will be near to you even when you are at the table. And if your mind wanders unimpeded, it will never be able to remain close to you.

23) The great worker of the great and consummate prayer says: "I am wanting now to say five words with my mind" and the followings (1 Cor. 14: 19). This thing is stranger to them who are rather children in their ghost. That's why we, as non-consummate, we search for diversity and quantity in prayer. But the second kind is the cause of the first kind[995]. This is for it is said: "Give clean prayer him who prays" unhesitatingly in an unclean way and with tiredness.

24) Something else is the uncleanness of the prayer and something else is its perdition; and something else is the prayer to be stollen and something else is the prayer to be blemished. The prayer's uncleanness means that the prayer stays in front of God while hallucinating inappropriate thoughts; the perdition of the prayer means getting enslaved to useless things. Stealing the prayer means unnoticedly getting the prayer scattered; the uncleanness is some attack coming close to us.

25) If we are not alone at the time of the prayer we will pray inwardly. And if the servants of the praises are not present, we will give also an external countenance to our prayer. This is because within them who are non-consummate, the mind often take a common kind with that of te body.

[995] "The bodily tiredness is very useful to the beginners and to non-consummate in the spiritual age. To them who are consummate it is useless, as ones whom it is enough to work only with their mind and with the shapeless part of their soul. They who are little children (spiritually, t. n.) need kneelings and stretching of their hands for a long time, and they need standing for the whole night, and other things alike, in order to accustom their mind to pray together with their body. And to them who are consummate it will be enough the work of their mind, as ones who have achieved the ceaseless prayer, though we cannot see that in their countenance". In the beginning we must strive to commit the bodily gestures of the prayer: kneelings, stretching our hands towards sky, and uttering the words. These gestures attract the mind towards prayer and they strengthen the mind's feeling into prayer until the mind, by getting used to that, it will be able to commit the prayer by itself and attentively, while not getting stollen by thoughts. Not only the soul influences the body but also the body influences the soul. This is because, to a certain extent, even to those gestures seemingly very bodily, the soul will participate as well. In the same time with the hands stretched towards sky the mind will be stretched as well; in the same time with kneeling the body the mind keels as well in front of God's glory.

26) All of us, but even more so them who go to the emperor for asking for their debts to be forgiven, we need an untold crushing.

27) If we still are in prison, let's follow Peter's example and "girdle on ourselves with the apron" of the obedience, let's disrobe our needs and let's get closer, naked of those, to the Lord in our prayer (here are joined Jn. 21: 18 and Acts 12: 8, t. n.), us asking only for His will to be done.

28) Getting up from the love for world and for pleasures, you will cast away your worries. You will disrobe on yourself of your thoughts, and you will reject your body. "For what is to me in heavens?" (Ps. 72: 24[996]). Nothing. "And what have I wanted from You on earth?" (ibid). Nothing, except I to stick with You unscattered in prayer. Some people want wealth, some people want glory, other want earning. "And my longing is to stick myself with You, to put my hope in You" of my dispassion (Ps. 72: 27[997]).

29) The faith wings up the prayer. This is because without faith the prayer cannot fly to the sky.

30) We who are addicted, let's perseveringly ask for God. This is for all of them who are non-addicted they have advanced to dispassion out of addiction[998].

31) Though the judge doesn't fear God as God, but because of the soul from within him - that is deprived by sin and falling – causes him upsets, it makes him justice against his enemy that is his body, and against the ghosts which wage him war (Lk. 18: 5)[999].

32) On the grateful ones, our Good Providence Maker attracts them by quickly fulfilling their ask, towards His love; but the ungrateful souls of the dogs He makes them sit,

[998] Only into the dispassionate God, in Him Who is totally free, we will be able to have our dispassion as well, or the full freedom from any slavery of the sin or of the sinful impulses.

[999] In the Greek language the soul; is of feminine gender (ψυχή), so that the soul can be likened to a widow. The body is of both genders (neutral) so that at singular is masculine. The soul that has become widow by sin, because of being forsaken by God Who is the soul's only husband, to that soul the body always does injustice.

because of hunger and thirst for they ask to be fulfilled, next to Him in prayer. This is because the ungrateful dog, immediately after it received its bread, it will get far from him who has given that bread[1000].

33) You do not say that by tarrying for a long time into prayer, you haven't achieved anything, for behold you have already achieved. This is for what a higher good thing there is except that one of having been attached to Him as of uninterruptedly insisting in the union with Him?[1001]

34) He who is condemned won't fear his execution as much as him who takes care of his prayer he fears the state of prayer. That's why, if somebody is wise and nimble in his mind, he will be able to reject, by thinking at it, the whole defamation and anger and worry and occupation and trouble and satiation and thought and temptation[1002].

35) You prepare on yourself for the ceaseless prayer from your heart towards being elevated to prayer and you will quickly advance[1003].

36) I saw some people who shined in obedience and who were taking care with the whole their power of the remembrance of God in their mind, and who were suddenly elevated to prayer above their mind and shedding streams of tears[1004]. This was for they prepared on themselves through their pious obedience.

[1000] "Out of oikonomia God doesn't give quickly them who ask for the gifts. This is because after they have received those gifts, they will immediately forget about Him Who has given them those gifts. "They ate Jacob" and the followings (Ps. 78: 7 (in KJB we have: Ps. 79: 7 (E. l. t.'s n.))) and: "The people sat to eat and to drink and they get up to dance" (Exod. 6: 1). The work about prayer uttered by Climacus is harsh and concrete, as his whole writing. It is not a beautiful description of the state of kidnapping into the unspoken beauties of God.

[1001] Belonging to Saint Isaac the Syrian: "If you ask God for a thing and if He submits you to much patience, because of not listening to you quickly, you won't get sad. This is because of not being you wiser than God. That happens to you either because you are unworthy to receive what you are asking for, or because the ways of your heart are not matching your asks but even on the opposite, either for you haven't reached yet that measure needed by the gift that you are asking for. This is because you mustn't aim at great measures before time, in order the gift from God not to be despised because of the quickness which it has been received with. This is because everything that comes easily around it will easily go around.

[1002] This means praying ceaselessly.

[1003] It is ceaseless prayer that one that is made within mind. But is differs from that the elevation, or the festal staying to prayer. Climacus always discerns in this Word between them. Thew elevation or the staying to prayer is like the Sunday Liturgy in comparison to the daily prayers and religious services.

[1004] One prays ceaselessly by uninterruptedly keeping the remembrance of God in his mind. But the state of prayer of the elevation at prayer it is the elevation even above one's mind, it is

37) The singing together will be followed by enslavements and scatterings, but that won't happen to the prayer song by one alone[1005]. This is because this one is warred down by the idleness, while the first one is helped by the zeal.

38) The love of the soldier for his emperor will be showed by war; the love of the monk for God will be showed in time of prayer and by his state when praying. Your inward state is shown to you by your prayer. This is for the theologians (the speakers about God, t. n.) reckoned this as the monk's mirror.

39) He who occupied on himself with something, if he still occupies on himself with that thing when the time for prayer comes, he will be the mockery of the evils. This is because the purpose of the thieves is that of stealing the prayer, moment after moment, from us.

40) You do not refuse when you are asked to pray for a soul, even if you haven't achieved the prayer. This is for the faith of the one who asked somebody to pray for him it often saved him who prays with crushing of heart[1006].

Do not get haughty if after you have prayer for another you have been listened to. This is for his faith worked and it succeeded[1007].

41) Any child is daily asked by the teacher to tell what he has learnt from the teacher on that day. Any mind will rightly be asked, in each prayer, for the power that mind has received from God[1008]. Let's fulfill all virtues, but mostly the prayer, with the man's self-forgetfulness, and it is the man's kidnapping at God, in the man's consummate love for God.

[1005] In the Edition from the year 1970: "Namely that prayer done by somebody alone". In the G.P.: "That prayer that, especially, as I have known it by experiencing it, it is warred down by thousands of passions".

[1006] Not only him whom we are praying for will gain, but we ourselves will gain out of that; the trust of that one in our prayer compels us and gives us power to be worthy of his trust in us.

[1007] The faith of the one whom we are praying for it works also in our prayer for him. The faith doesn't work only within him who has it, but it is communicated to others as well, as in the communicating vessels. The serving priest gains at his turn out of the faith of the believers, namely of the members of the general priesthood. (The general priesthood means that after being baptized any Christian is a prayer of Christ within her of his soul when praying (E. l. t's n.))

[1008] Right during the time of the prayer, we are given from God the power for praying. It will be given to you in order us to show God that we use it. God wants to pray with us and within us. Let's associate on ourselves to that prayer, by making it our prayer. Let's not leave God to work upon us ineffectively.

much feeling. But the soul will pray into feeling when it is elevated above anger.

42) When you pray with watchfulness, you will more quickly pushed towards anger. This if because that is the goal of the enemies[1009].

43) Only the things we have earned after many asks and for a long time will remain steadfast to us. He who has gained the Lord, he will no longer tall to himself the purpose of his prayers when praying. This is for at that time the Ghost prays for him with unspoken sighs (Rom. 8: 26)[1010].

44) You won't receive in your prayer any hallucination from your senses, because otherwise you can suffer a going out of your mind[1011].

45) The entrustment about any answered question will occur right in the prayer. And the entrustment is the deliverance form doubt. The entrustment if the steadfast proving or what is unproven.

46) While taking care of your prayer, make on yourself very merciful. This is for in prayer the monks will take the hundredfold ones. And what follows will be told in what follows[1012].

47) By coming fire within heart, the prayer has resurrected. And by getting this one up and by being elevated to [1009] Our zeal at prayer the enemy turns it into anger against some of our brothers or against some circumstance which interrupt us from praying.

[1010] "By being then the mind widened by grace and that mind by advancing towards Him Who give prayer to them who pray, and by being that mind instilled by Him, that mind no longer occupied on itself with the words of the prayer uttered by itself. That mind overlooks the words about the things it experiences, by gaining quality out of quantity".

[1011] "When you pray, he says, do not liken the godlike realities to something submitted to the senses, because otherwise you will fall of the right-reckoning".

[1012] "You have locked up your heart to the doing of the good things, I will lock up at My turn the bosom of the resting during your punishment". In the Edition from the year 1970: "He who is merciful, he will take hundredfold gifts in his prayer; and what follows, namely "he will inherit the eternal life", he will take the future life. G.P.: Another: "Why do you cry when praying? Because you, when seeing the poor's tears, you won't have mercy on him". Another: "How will God have mercy on you? The prayer's wing is mercifulness. If you do not make wing to your prayer, your prayer won't ascend to height. But when your prayer is winged up, it will fly to heavens. This is because like the flame having not oil it will quench, likewise the prayer having no mercifulness will perish".

heavens, it has become the descent of the fire within the soul's upper room[1013].

48) Some people say that the prayer is more powerful that the remembrance of the death. And I praise both as two natures of a sole hypostasis[1014].

49) The experienced horse, the more it advances the more gets hot and it increases in its running. By running I mean the singing, and I mean by horse the manly mind. This one sniffs the war from far away and, by being prepared, it will remain totally steady.

50) It is an ugly thing to steal the water from the mouth of the thirsty. But it is even uglier that that soul that prayer with pricking to deprive on himself before finishing the prayer of the much-desired state of prayer.

51) Do not jump off (your prayer) until you will see the fire and the water stopping through oikonomia. This is because you won't receive a time like this for your sins' forgiveness in the whole your life[1015]. He who has tasted the prayer and who defiled his mind for many times by inattentively uttering some word[1016], by staying at prayer, he usually won't find de desired One.

52) Something else is supervising your heart more often, and something else is leading your heart through the mind that masters and bring, as a hierarch, rational sacrifices to Christ[1017]. The first one, as one of them who has been imparted

[1013] "He is calling here as fire the godlike longing, that by being ignited within heart it will make the mind be elevated to heavens; and therefore, in the upper room of this soul, or within that thought elevated above the earthly realities, there will descend the Holy Ghost as He descended too upon apostles in a sensitive manner".

[1014] "Both of them (namely the prayer and the remembrance of the death) do good to the soul and they instill to the soul the godlike pricking".

[1015] "Do not separate on yourself form your prayer until your moved-by-God tears and your pricking's fire won't stop, due to the oikonomia of the grace, because of your pride. This is because you do not know if on some other time during the whole your life you will even receive again such a state of prayer that causes the forgiveness of your sins".

[1016] In the Edition from the year 1970: "It may be a word of praise or an ugly word, I reckon".

[1017] "Something else is to understand and to look at himself, and something else is to be a supervisor (bishop) and a master upon passions, that is a much greater thing than the first thing". "The mind will be a ruler (αρχων) when leading well its things and the things from around itself, or the soul's powers and the body's senses. And the mind will be a hierarch when it brings the clean and unstained meanings on the godlike alter by prayer. It is characteristic to the leader to guide the inward realities; and it is characteristic to the hierarch to ceaselessly supervise bot the inward and the outward realities". The idea of these words is taken from Saint Mark the Ascetic, About Baptism, The Romanian Philokalia, volume I, p.

with the name of theologian, by coming there the holy and above-heavens fire, they will be burnt because of their cleanness's incompleteness; the others will be illuminated due to the measure of the consummation that they have reached at[1018].

This is for the Same One is called as consuming fire and enlightening light. That's why some people, when they get out of praying, they come out as from a fire oven, and they feel they have been unburdened by filth and by the material things. Others are like enlightened by a light and dresses up in the vestment of the humbleness and of the joy.

And they who come out from prayer non-imparted with these two works, they pray bodily, not to say Judaically. If a body that touches another body is changed by the work of that one, how won't be changed him who touches the Body of God with innocent hands[1019]?

53) We must look at our All-King Emperor as we look at the emperor on earth. This is for the earthly emperor too he gives his gifts to his soldiers, sometimes by himself, some tother times through one of his friends, and some other times through one of his servants, and on some other occasions in an unknown manner. So, He gives also the vestment of our humbleness that fits us.

54) Like the earthly emperor looks with disgust at the one who stays before him but has his face turned away from the emperor and talking to the emperor's enemies, likewise our Lord looks with disgust at him who stays before Him in prayer while still receiving unclean thoughts[1020].

294. All the rationalities of the things are given by God, as gift, to the created subjects in order those ones to bring them, at their turn, as clean sacrifices to God, after they have impropriated those rationalities; they to bring those rationalities united with their gratitude and with the praise they bring to God, by prayer. This is the ceaseless liturgy of the mind: taking notice about the rationalities of the created things and acknowledging their origin into God, and giving thanks for them. The prayer consists of this.

[1018] Here can be about two kinds of rationalities of the things impropriate by the man. Those ones which are defiled by the man's lust the Holy Ghost will burn them up in order to clean them; and the Holy Ghost will illuminate even more on those who are clean.

[1019] "He is speaking here about the Holy Mystery of the Impartation".

[1020] The unclean thoughts which somebody take heed as while he prays, those thoughts do not stand by themselves but they come from God's enemies. There are not thoughts without a subject thinking them. So, through those thoughts, he who prays dialogues with God's enemies, who are the subjects of those thoughts.

55) You will banish away with your weapon the coming dog; and each time it gets naughty again, you will not allow it to do so[1021]!

56) You will ask by crying; you will search for by obeying; you will knock by long-suffering! "This is for he who asks (thus) will take and he who searches for will find and to him who knock it will be opened" (Lk. 11: 10). You will guard on yourself not to pray anyhow for a woman, lest you will be robbed from the right side[1022].

57) Do not confess your bodily deeds in detail, as they are, in order yourself not to be tempted to do those again.

58) Do not let the time of your prayer be the time for some necessary cogitations or of some spiritual things. And if not, you will be robbed of what is the best[1023].

59) He who ceaselessly holds the walking-staff of the prayer, he won't stumble. And even if such thing happened to him, we wouldn't totally fall. This is for the prayer is the well-faithful master from God. The prayer's use is proven in overcoming the devilish impediments happening to us during religious services (the congregational services, t. n.). And the prayer's fruit is proven in defeating the enemy. "For into this I have known that You wanted me, for: (in the time of the waring, t. n.) my enemy won't rejoice of me (Ps. 40: 11[1024]). "I shouted out - says the Psalmist – with the whole my heart" (Ps. 118: 10), with my mouth, with my soul, and with my ghost. For "Where there are the last two gathered, there is also God amid them" (Mt. 118: 10[1025]).

[1021] "He calls as dog that devil that, by whatever pretext, it steals the mind from praying. This one must be banished away by asking for the help from God".

[1022] In order you not to be robbed of your cleanness just by the good intention of the prayer. And this can happen to you when, by praying on behalf of a woman, you will lust for her.

[1023] Do not let yourself to be tempted to solve necessary matters, or even to thing as spiritual things, during your time of praying. This means to allow yourself to be kidnapped from prayer. But this doesn't contravene to bringing to God the known rationalities of the things, in the same time with giving thanks to God for them; neither it contravenes to gratefully remember what God has done for you and for the world.

[1024] In KJB we have: Ps. 41: 11: "By this I know that thou favourest me, because mine enemy doth not triumph over me."; in ROB we have: Ps. 40: 11: "Into this I have known that You have wanted me, for my enemy will not rejoice of me." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1025] In KJB we have: Ps. 119: 10: "With my whole heart have I sought thee: O let me not wander from thy commandments."; in ROB we have: Ps. 118: 10: "I have been searching for You with the whole my heart; do not reject me from Your commandments." (E. l. t.'s n.)

60) Neither the bodily realities nor the spiritual realities are the same to everyone. Some people are better matched by a quicker singing, other by a slower singing. The first one defend yourself against getting enslaved, while the others fight their lack of education[1026].

61) If you ceaselessly pray your Emperor against your enemies, when those enemies come against you, you could dare for you won't get tired. This is for they will quickly get far from you. This is because the lawless ones they do not want to see you taking the crown by fighting them in prayer. In addition to that, they will run away as from fire, because of being defeated by prayer.

62) You achieve the whole manhood and you will have God as your Teacher on how you must pray[1027].

63) It is not possible to learn how to see only by hearing words. But the sight belongs to nature. Neither the beauty of the prayer can be known by being taught by somebody. This is because the prayer has God as Teacher Who teaches the man the knowledge and Who gives the prayer to him who asks for it[1028] and Who blesses the years of the righteous ones. Amen.

[1026] In the Edition form the year 1970: "They who sing more quickly they do that intending not to let themselves be stolen by other thoughts; they who sing more slowly, they do not in order not to tell the words wrongly, because of their lack of education. But to all of them the best is the measure regarding the times too".

[1027] "He doesn't need, he says, a teacher on how to pray, but he needs his own zeal and for that God Himself will be his Teacher on how he must pray. This is for on him who prays according to the law and zealously, God will teach him by illumination and God make that one's mind steadfast and God deliver him from any slavery". Another, belonging to Saint Maximos: "He who truly loves God, he will pray in an unscattered manner. He who prays to God in an unscattered manner, he loves God. He who has his soul attached to the earthly things he won't pray in an unscattered manner. Sop, he who has his mind tied to the earthly things, he doesn't love God".

[1028] "God gives the prayer to him who asks for it". One cannot know who is the one to start: he who prays God or God who gives him the power to pray.

The Word XXIX

About the Dispassion or the Earthly Heavens and about the Consummation and the Resurrection of the Soul Before the General Resurrection

1) Behold us too, we who are sunk into the deepest pit of the nescience and in the darkened passions and into the shadow of the death of this body, starting to speak (to philosophize, t. n.), daringly, about the earthly heavens[1029]. The sky is adorned with stars, and the dispassion is adorned with virtues. This is for I haven't learnt that the dispassion is something else than the mind's sky within heart, and that reckons as toys the devil's plots.

2) Dispassionate is and he knows about himself of being as such, him who has made his body incorruptible, and who has elevated his mind above creation and he has submitted all his senses to his mind, and he has placed his soul in front of the Lord. By this his power is being stretched towards the Lord. Some other people says also that the dispassion is the resurrection of the soul before the resurrection of the body. And others says that the dispassion's is the second to that of the angels' consummate knowledge about God.

3) So, this consummate non-consummate consummation of the consummate ones, as one who tasted it told me[1030], it so

[1029] "Earthly heavens" means not only the "heavens on earth" but it also means the earth that has become heavens by being imbued with spirituality, or better said with the energies of the Holy Ghost. The soul and even the body of the saints are filled up with these energies, like our Lord's body was transfigured on Mount Tabor. Further on will be said that by dispassion the body itself will become incorruptible. The body will become only partially incorruptible because of still being submitted to death. But this partial incorruptibility is the basis for the fact that the bones of the saints remain unrotten and it is the basis for their total incorruptibility into the age to come.

[1030] Saint Ephrem. It is the consummate and in the same time non-consummate consummation, for it no longer has in it anything clean, but it spends its time in the endlessness of the godlike ocean, but it is unable to even fully comprise that ocean. The consummation is constantly thirsty for even more consummation. "The dispassionate ones by tending themselves towards the desire peak without getting satiated, they make the consummation as non-consummate, because the eternal goods have not end". You can always unite on yourself even more with another subject, into love; that subject will remain to you as inexhaustible. All the more is like that the godlike Subject. Another: "The consummation is consummate regarding the measure of the human power, but it is non-consummate because much sanctified the amin and it kidnaps the mind from the material things, so that most of the part of the live within body, after reaching the heavenly shore, it keeps it elevated in contemplation (in the spiritual view) as one that it is kidnapped to heavens. He who has experienced that he says well about it that: "This is for the strong ones of God have been very elevated from the ground" (Ps. 44: 9[1031]). One among those we that that he was also the Egyptian who didn't keep his hand stretched while he was occupying on himself with some people[1032].

4) Oen can be dispassionate, but another can be more dispassionate than the first one. The first one strongly hates the evil things, but the second one enriches himself in virtues without getting satiated[1033].

5) Dispassion proved him who said: "I have achieved the mind of the Lord" (1 Cor. 6: 1). Dispassion achieved that Egyptian who said that he didn't fear the Lord[1034]. Dispassion proved him who prayed for the passions to turn back to him[1035]. Who has been found worthy before the future shininess, of dispassion, like that Syrian[1036]? This is for the famous Prophet David said to the Lord: "Let me breathe" (Ps. 38: 13[1037]), and this athlete of God said: "Weak up, Lord, the waves of Your grace".

6) Dispassion has that soul who has been so much imbued with the quality of the virtues, as the addicted ones with pleasures.

the power exceeds on itself, by the partial additions, and the consummation is being ceaselessly elevated through the elevations towards death" (towards that death to yourself).

[1031] The paraphrased verse has actually a different content.

[1032] In the Edition from the year 1970: "He speaks about Moses the Egyptian, or about Abba Sisoes".

[1033] "The dispassion has in itself that souls that doesn't get addicted to material things and that soul will remain undisturbed even by remembering those things". Another: "Guarding the commandments of God will give birth to dispassion; and the soul's dispassion will preserve the knowledge".

[1034] "Saint Anthony". He doesn't have that fear that is characteristic to the servant, but he has that fear that is characteristic to the son, a fear full of love. This is for he lives into God and he is freed from the addiction to material things.

[1035] Saint John Colovos. To turn back to him in order him to defeat them again and so to make his nature even stronger.

[1036] Saint Ephrem.

[1037] In KJB we have: Ps. 39: 13: "O spare me, that I may recover strength, before I go hence, and be no more."; in ROB we have: Ps. 39: 18: "Let me rest, before I go and no longer be." (E. l. t.'s n.)

7) If the belly's covetousness consists of the fact that he who is mastered by it he will force on himself to eat even without lusting, the nature of the restraint consists of the fact that he who lives in ascesis he will master his nature innocent even when hungry.

8) If the debauchery consists of the fact that he who is mastered by it he will get hot even for the speechless beasts, the nature of the dispassion has towards all realities a feeling as for the inanimate realities.

9) If the border of the love for money consists of the fact that he who is mastered by it he won't even cease gathering and he won't ever get satisfied[1038], the border of the non-earning consists of the fact that somebody won't spare even his own body[1039].

10) If the border of the idleness consists of not having patience in any resting[1040], the border of the patience consists of somebody reckoning on himself in any trouble as being at rest.

11) The ocean of the anger consists of getting infuriated even when nobody is present, while the ocean of the long-suffering consists of somebody being equally peaceful either is present of not the one who defames him.

12) If the height of the vain-glory consists of somebody making schemes of hypocritical deeds, even when there is

[1038] The "border" of any passions is that of not having any border, as in case of the eternal happiness. The passion has at its turn a thirst for infinity and even a progress to infinite, a thirst for infinity in the direction of the nothing, whose end one wont' ever be able to reach at, since the existence is created by God. This can partially be an explanation for the hell's eternity. It is a thirst for apparent existence, an existence that in reality is getting ever inconsistent. One could never reach its border, because the creature is kept into existence by God and the creature must move endlessly either into God Who is real and infinite, in order to comprise ever more of Him, or against God, a movement that is infinite as well, because God is infinite so that the creature won't ever finish to deny everything that God is. "The passions of the love for money consists of somebody rejoicing to (ever) take and in getting sad when he must give (because it seems to him that he loses the possibility to achieve the infinite); and one like this is not a good administrator", because he won't reach the infinite which he aspires to.

[1039] But the more somebody restrains his body's movements, the more will those be overwhelmed by the energies of the Holy Ghost which are infinite. The more one dies to himself, the more will he be filled up with the love from God that is infinite for it belongs to the infinite Subject.

[1040] The lazy won't even reckon that he rests on himself as much as he likes it. There is in him too an infinite thirst for idleness. On the contrary, the patience won't reckon on itself exhausted by any hardship.

nobody present of them who are forced to praise him[1041], the sign of the lack of the sign of the vain-glory is shown in somebody never allowing to himself to his mind stolen by the presence of them who praise him.

13) If the sign of the perdition, or of the pride, it consists of somebody taking pride in any poorly or despite state he would be in, the proof of the savior humbleness consists of somebody having a humble thought in the highest deeds and feats.

14) If the proof of the total addiction consists of somebody obeying all thoughts and impulses sown in him by the devils, I have learnt that the sign of the holy dispassion consists of being able to truly say: "Deviating the evil one from me, I didn't know" (Ps. 100: 5[1042]) either how he came, or what for, or how he left, but I am entirely insensitive towards these things, by being entirely united with God nor and forever in the future.

15) He who has been found worthy of such a state, while still being into body, he has God as helmsman, dwelling into him in all his words, deeds, and thoughts. That's why he feels within him, by illumination, the will of God, as he would hear a voice, and he is elevated above all human teaching. "When will I come, he says, and I will show myself to the face of God?" (Ps. 41: 2[1043]), because I cannot endure within me the power of the longing, and I look at the immortal beauty which you gave it to

[1041] We have here a string of concrete works of the thirst for infinite of the diverse passions. All the passions nourish their thirst for infinite with the imagining that it would be concrete what it actually is not. So, the passion actually moves towards ever more nothing, towards the evermore thinning of the existence, but which always preserves its appearance of more existence. But it seems that the one nourishing on itself more out of nothing it is the vain-glory. The vain-glory makes him who is mastered by it, to imagine that he is seen and he is praise even by them who are not present, and that's why he hypocritically gives worthy to be praise attractive countenances to his deed which actually are unworthy to be praised. He gives an imposing face to the ruins or to the ruin of his own being, and he imagines inexistent presences, and he believes in the sincerity of them who praise him, regardless how many signs of their insincerity he has. The torment of these ones is that they advance ever more towards a more thinning of their existence but in the same time they are mastered by the incertitude of this apparent consistency. That's why some of them sometimes even end in suicide.

[1042] In KJB we have: Ps. 101: 3-4: "I will set no wicked thing before mine eyes: I hate the work of them that turn aside; it shall not cleave to me. // A forward heart shall depart from me: I will not know a wicked person."; in ROB we have: Ps. 100: 4-5: "I didn't place before my eyes any lawless thing; I hated the transgressors of the law. // The stubborn heart didn't stick with me; the evil one, who went away from me, I didn't know him." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1043] In KJB we have: Ps. 42: 2: "My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God: when shall I come and appear before God?"; in ROB we have: Ps. 41: 2: "My soul has got thirsty of the living God; when will I come and show on myself to the face of God?" (E. l. t.'s n.)

be before the clay[1044]. What can say more about the dispassionate? He "is no longer him who lives, but Christ lives within him" (Gal. 2: 20), as tells him who fought the good fight and who traveled his journey and who guarded his faith.

16) The emperor's crow is not adorned with a sole precious stone. The dispassion won't become consummate if we disregard even a sole virtue. You understand the dispassion as the palace of that Emperor from heavens; and the many dwelling places as the dwelling places form inside the city[1045]. And by the wall of this heavenly city, he means the forgiveness of the sins.

17) Let's run, brothers, let's run and rejoice for entering the wedding chamber of the palace. This is because, if we will be absent to no matter what reason, either because of some passions that has been mastering, or because of the weather, even from a sole dwelling place from around the wedding chamber, there will be an awful misfortune. Even if we limp and we still are weak, let's try everything for reaching at least inside the wall. This is because him who doesn't reach out there before the end, or who hasn't crossed beyond that wall, he will dwell into the devil's desert. That's why somebody was praying: "Into my God I will cross over that wall" (Ps. 17: 32[1046]). And another says as from God: "Do your sins separate you from Me?" (Isa. 59: 2).

18) Let's tear down, oh, my friends, the middle wall of the separation, which we have wrongly built up, by disobedience. Let's receive even from this life the untying of our debt. This is because in hell there is nobody to forgive our debt.

19) Let's strive, my brothers, from now on. This is for if we strive on ourselves, we will be written into the book of life (Apoc. 3: 5). There is no exculpatory motif: neither the falling, [1044] "He calls the immortality as the immortal beauty. And clay he calls this earthly body that Adam put on after his disobedience, as Gregory called the Theologian says". Before his falling, Adam has also his body immortal, of capable of immortality, by the fact that it was filled up with the energies of the Holy Ghost, and therefore spiritualized.

[1045] ""Many dwelling places" he calls the measures of the understanding of those who inhabit that country, namely the right-reckoning and the discernments of understanding which the enjoy. This is for he didn't mean by "many dwelling places" different places, but the steps of the gifts".

[1046] In KJB we have: Ps. 18: 29: "For by thee I have run through a troop; and by my God have I leaped over a wall."; in ROB we have: Ps. 17: 32: "This is for with You I will be delivered from temptation, and with my God I will cross over the wall." (E. l. t.'s n.)

nor the time, nor the burden[1047]. "As many as they received the Lord, through the bath of the rebirth, He gave them power to call on themselves as sons of God" (Jn. 1: 12), by saying: "Stop and know that I am God" (Ps. 45: 10[1048]) and the dispassion[1049].

The blessed dispassion elevated from earth the needy mind and it elevates the poor mind out of passions. The all-praised love makes the mind sitting together with the ruling angels, with the chieftains of the people of Israel.

[1047] We cannot exculpate on ourselves either with the falling from before (in Eden), nor with the lack of time, nor with the hardships of the life.

[1048] In KJB we have: Ps. 46: 10: "Be still, and know that I am God: I will be exalted among the heathen, I will be exalted in the earth."; in ROB we have: "Stop and know that I am God, I will exalt on Myself on earth."

[1049] The dispassion into the spiritual man, or in the saint, it is the work of God, or it is God Himself Who overwhelms the man's work.

The Word XXX

About the Connection of the Trinity of the Virtues: of the Love, of the Hope, and of the Faith

1) "And now, after all the said things, there remain these three, the connection that tightens up and keeps up all of them: the faith, the hope, and the love. But greater than all of them it is the love. This is for God is called love" (Cor. 13: 13).

But as far as I can understand, I see one of them as a ray, another as a light, and another as a circle[1050]. And all of them are one shininess and one light. The first one can do and build up all things; the second one embraces the mercy of God; and the third one will never fall, it will never cease to look at and it will never allow him who has been wounded by it to appease his blessed insanity.

2) He who wants to speak about the love of God he actually attempts to speak about God Himself. But speaking of God by words it will be wrong and it will be dangerous to them who do not take heed[1051]. The word about love is known to the angels, but even to those one sonly by the work of the enlightenment. The love is God. And he who want to show the border (the definition, t. n.) of Him, that one will be like a blind who attempts to count the sand on the ocean's bottom.

3) The love, according to its quality, it is the likeness to God, as much as it is possible to the mortal. And according to its work, the love is a drunkenness of the soul. According to its feature, the love is the spring of the faith, it is the bottomless deep of the long-suffering, it is the ocean of the humbleness.

4) The love is, properly-said, the rejection of any opposite thought[1052], for the love doesn't reckon the evil. The love, the dispassion, and the adoption, they differ only by their names. Like the light, the fire, and the flame are united in a sole work, likewise you will understand about those ones as well. To the extent that the love misses something of its fulness, there will [1050] In the Edition form the year 1970: "The faith is like the sunray, the hope is like the sunlight, and the love is like the sun's disk".

[1051] It is dangerous to speak about God without feeling on yourself as overwhelmed by God's greatness and love, namely to speak indifferently and proud because you can comprise Him, or even mocking Him.

[1052] The love doesn't cogitate anything against somebody.

be comprised in it the fear. This is for him who is fearless, he has been filled up with love, of he has died with his soul[1053].

5) It is not an inappropriate thing to liken the images of the longing, of the fear, of the diligence, of the zeal, and of the human slavery, to those of the love for God. Blessed is him who has towards God a longing resembling to that had by a man in man love with his girlfriend[1054]. Blessed is him who fear the Lord as much as the defendants fear the judge. Blesses is him who has become so zealous in the true zeal, as grateful as the servant has become to his master. Blessed is him who has become so craving into virtues as attentive are in their zeal the husbands towards their wives. Blessed is him who stay into prayer in front of the Lord, as the servants stay in front of the emperor[1055]. Blessed is him who strives to ceaselessly be pleasant to the Lord, as much as he strives for being pleasant to the people. Not even the child clings on the mother's bosom as the son of the love uses to cling on himself forever on the Lord.

6) he who truly loves, he always imagines the face of the beloved one and he embraces that image with sweetness within himself. One like this cannot appease on himself even when sleeping, because of his longing for that one, but he occupied on himself with the desired one even in his sleep. So it happens to the bodily beings, thus it happens to the bodiless beings as well[1056].

7) Somebody who is wounded by the love's arrow said about himself (and I wonder about that): "I am sleeping", because of being forced by the need of the nature, "and my heart takes vigil" (Son of Songs 5: 2), due to the size of the love.

8) It is to be mentioned here, my beloved one, that after the perdition of the wild beasts from around the soul, the soul

[1053] He has dies with his soul, for he is overwhelmed by the life of the ghost. But he could die with his soul also because of no longer being in communication with the true life that comes to him out of God. By soul he means the souly movements directed towards those of God.

[1054] "By descending to our helplessness, the father takes his examples form among the small things, from namely us".

[1055] "He who stays before the emperor and who serves the people, he sometimes does that hypocritically, and for deceiving the eyes, and for payment, and that's why he will be deprived of happiness. But truly blessed is him who, by matching his inward image with his external image, he shows himself as standing in front with the whole his mind, and communicating in a joyful thought his asks towards one or another".

[1056] "Likewise, he says, it is in case of the bodily love and of the spiritual love, that what is also within body".

will desire and he will feel dying for his longing for God, getting hot as by a venom, by the love's fire[1057].

9) The hunger works invisibly and unclearly, and the work of the thirst extends and becomes visible to everybody by causing fever. That's why he who desires God says: "My soul has thirsted of the strong God, the living One" (Ps. 41: 2[1058]).

10) If the face of the beloved one changes us in an obvious manner and makes us luminous, and glad, and not sad, what will be able the face of our Master to do to us, when it comes in an invisible manner within the clean soul?

11) The fear, when it occurs within the soul's feeling, it uses to melt down and to eat the defilement. "Penetrate with the feat, he says, my flesh" (Ps. 119: 120[1059]). And the pious love sometimes east some people, according to him who said: "You has enslaved my heart, you have enslaved my heart" (Song of Songs 4: 9), and on some other times the love makes other to rejoice and it fills them up with shininess: "Towards Him, he says, my heart has hoped and I have feared; and my body has flourished up" (Ps. 27: 10[1060]); and: "When my heart gets gladdened, my face flourishes up" (Proverbs 15: 13).

So, when the entire man gets mixed up with the love of God, then the soul's shininess will be shown into body as in a mirror. So was filled up with glory the God-seer Moses. But they who has reached this step equal to that of the angels, they often forget about the bodily food. And I reckon that they don't even wat bodily food. And there is no wonder for even the opposite love often refuses the food.

I reckon that the body of this incorruptible ones it won't easily get sick. This is for it has become incorruptible, by being cleaned by the heat of the righteousness, and that put an end [1057] "Delivered from passions by his humble cogitation he will burn mastered by the godlike love".

[1058] In KJB we have: Ps. 42: 2: "My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God: when shall I come and appear before God?"; in ROB we have: Ps. 41: 2: "My soul has thirsted of the living God; when will I come and show myself to the face of God?". (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1059] In KJB we have: Ps. 119: 120: "My flesh trembleth for fear of thee; and I am afraid of thy judgments."; in ROB we have: Ps. 118: 120: "Prick my body with the fear of You, for I feared Your judgments."

[1060] In KJB we have: Ps. 28: 7: "The Lord is my strength and my shield; my heart trusted in him, and I am helped: therefore, my heart greatly rejoiceth; and with my song will I praise him."; in ROB we have: Ps. 27: 9-10: "The Lord is my help and my defender, in Him hoped my heart and He helped me. // And my body has flourished up and I will willingly praise Him." (E. l. t.'s n.)

to the other heat[1061]. I reckon that they neither come close to food with pleasure[1062]. This is for the heavenly fire uses to nourish their souls as the water nourishes underground the plant's root.

12) The growth of the fear will start the love. And the consummate end of the righteousness is cause for knowing God and for speaking about God (of the theology, t. n.). He who has united his feelings with God, he will be secretly taught by God His words, and without the union (with God) it will be difficult to speak about God[1063].

13) The existential word of God consummates the righteousness, by killing the soul's death by His presence. And this death once killed, the disciple will become enlightened into the knowledge and into the speaking about God[1064]. The Word of the Lord, that one out of the Word of the Father, clean, it will [1061] It can be here about that flame of the unclean lust, that is stopped by the fire of the desire for cleanness. But it can be also about the heat of the illness. And this one is overwhelmed and stopped by the fire of the love for God. The body's weakness that leads the body to illness, it is removed by the strength of the Holy Ghost. It is worthy to be noticed this explanation given to the incorruptibility which our bodies will achieve in the future life, through the heat of the clean love from God.

[1062] The pleasure of the life into God will overwhelm the pleasure for food.

[1063] The consummate righteousness gives the possibility to know God and to speak about God. God is known through cleanness. The cleanness makes the soul's eyes limpid so they see God. The cleanness is connected with the feeling. The clean feelings unite themselves with God. The soul's feeling when clean, they will contact God, like the sight of the healthy eyes makes contact with the material things. God is experienced and known by the clean feelings, which as such are united with God. The spiritual sensitiveness is the sign of our touching with God, of His penetration within us. God wakes up this sensitiveness. God Himself is not a passive Subject of our deductive and individualistic knowledge, but as a Subject Who moves our soul by His love, when our soul opens to God, when our soul is entirely focused towards Him and full of the longing for Him. Then God imprints to our mind the meanings of His existence in the same time with Hid reality, and so He inspires in that the word expressing these meanings (rationalities) of His.

[1064] The Word of God enlightens the soul for He is the Light of God full of all godlike meanings. But the Word of God doesn't enlighten the soul before cleaning the soul. Only him who is clean will receive the light within him. Even a clean material thing will shine. The cleanness sis, in the same time, the superior life, for it is sensitiveness to good, to high, and to beauty. That's why, the clean and luminous Word, by cleaning the soul up, He will take the soul out of soul's previous state as dull, dirty, and dead, in order to show the love and the light of God within and by that soul. "The Word of God-the Father consummates the cleanness within him whom He dwells into. And the death or the passion will totally kill a soul".

remain forever and ever[1065]. And he who hasn't known God he will make suppositions about God[1066].

14) The righteousness made a theologian (speaker about God, t. n.) out of disciple, by strengthening through him the dogmas of the Trinity[1067].

15) He who loves the Lord, he firstly loved his brother. The proof of the first thing is the second thing. He who loves his neighbor, he won't stand to see then who gossip, and he rather runs away from them as from fire. He who says that he loves the Lord, but he gets angry on his brother, he will be like running into dream[1068].

16) The strength of the love is the hope. This is for by that we wait for the payment of love[1069]. The hope is the richness of the unshown richness. The hope is the doubtless treasury before the treasury. The hope is resting of doubts. The hope is the door for the love. The hope kills the despair. The hope is the icon of the realities which are not present yet. The absence of the hope is the perdition of the love. To it are tied the ascetic toils, on it hang the tiredness, and it is surrounded by mercy.

17) That mink that has a strong hope he will stab his laziness, by killing the laziness with the sword of the hope. The experience gives birth to the gifts from the Lord. This is because the inexperienced will doubt. The anger scatters the hope. This is because the hope doesn't shame. And he who gets angry will have an indecent countenance.

[1065] Itself the word of the Word is clean and therefore luminous. What He says, for being the unchanged truth, it will last forever.

[1066] "The spiritual word fills up with entrustment the understanding feeling. This is for God starts a work of the love full of power and meanings. That's why, our mind remains doubtless in the movements of the knowledge of God and ins peaking about God. This is for our mind won't suffer then because of the helplessness brought upon us by worry. Good is, therefore, to always remain into faith him who is moved by love. This is because of not being there anything poorer than a cogitation thinking (philosophizing) about God while being that cogitation outside God". That cogitation remains with some empty schemes, with some inconsistent formulae, with some abstract shadows, without the power of being moved deeds, but getting filled up with haughtiness. This is a common teaching of the fathers. The love is a knowledge organ, and organ for true knowledge. Only through love we know the person, and specially on God Who id the Supreme Person; this is for only by love we enter His inside and He open His inside to us only by love.

[1067] Here is about Saint John the Evangelist.

[1068] Namely he doesn't really move forwards, but he only thinks that he does that.

[1069] The payment of love cannot be except also love. We love by hoping that we will love even more and that we will be loved more at our turn.

18) The love gives the prophecy like a gift. The love occasions the wonders. The love is the deep (the abyss) of the enlightenment[1070].

The love is the spring of the fire. The more it springs out the more will burn the thirsty one up. The love is the angels' steadfastness; the love is the progress of the ages[1071]. You tell us, of, you beautiful among virtues, where do you pasture your sheep? Where do you shelter on yourself at noon? You enlighten us, for we want to ascend to you. This is for you master upon all realities" (Song of Songs 1: 7). And now you have enslaved my soul and I cannot endure your flame[1072]. Where must I star to praise you? "You master the strength of the sea, and you appease and kill the agitation of the waves. You humble the proud thought as on a wounded. With the arm of your power, you scattered your enemies" (Ps. 88: 11[1073]). And you make undefeated on them who love you.

But I hurry myself up to find out: how Jacob saw you as standing steadfastly on the top of the ladder? You tell me, for I am asking you, what this climbing is like" And what is it its way like and what is it the totality of its steps, which he who loves you have placed them as ascensions in his heart? (Ps. 83: 6[1074]). I was thirsty for knowing what their number is and how long it takes the climbing? This is for him who has known your fight and your sight, he has shown us as guides[1075], but he didn't [1070] The love is knowledge. As endless the love is, as endless the knowledge provided by that love will be. This is for the love belongs to the person. The person is the subject of the love. Without person one cannot understand the love. And the person is inexhaustible in new and ever deeper movements of the love. If the love cannot exist without a person, neither the person could be understood without love, in the person's healthy existence and in the person's indefinite.

[1071] Without love the eternity would be petrified. The love is a continuous novelty and though the loves is the unchanged steadfastness. But through love we are advancing here and we will be rested there into the angelic life.

[1072] The G.P. gives as scholium the head no. 34 from Diadochus, The Romanian Philokalia, volume I, pp. 347-348.

[1073] In KJB we have: Ps. 89: 11: "Thou hast broken Rahab in pieces, as one that is slain; thou hast scattered thine enemies with thy strong arm."; in ROB we have: Ps. 88: 11: "You have humbled the proud like on a wounded one; with the arm of Your power, you have scattered Your enemies." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1074] In KJB we have: Ps. 84: 5: "Blessed is the man whose strength is in thee; in whose heart are the ways of them."; in ROB we have: Ps. 83: 6: "Blesses is that man whose help comes from You, Lord; he has placed ascensions into his heart." (E. l. t.'s n.)

want to clarify us anything else. Better said he couldn't (Gen. 18: 11).

And she, the empress (but I reckon I would better say: Him)[1076]. And may the ladder teach you the well-composes totalness of the virtues[1077]. This is for I am standing steadfastly on its top, as my great knower said: "And now there remains these three: the faith, the hope, and the love; but greater than all of these is the love" (1 Cor. 13: 14).

[1076] "Namely God, for He is the Love". The love doesn't exist except as feeling of the person. And the Supreme Person, better said community of Persons, He is also the Supreme Subject and spring of the love. The Occidental style theology accustomed us to the idea of a God Who that theology attributed many of our decayed traits, as potentiated to the maximum: power, domination, worldly-like justice etc. But God is totally on the opposite. His power of the love, the kindness, the gentleness, the delicateness, and His descent at embodiment, which he imprinted to our human nature through, the humbleness as its true feature. So, the humbleness isn't something contrary to God, but it is something that he has within Himself.

[1077] "Question: What the consummation of the many fruits of the Ghost is? Answer: When somebody will be found worthy of the consummate love of God. Question: Ans where one could not from that he has reached to that? Answer: When the remembrance of God moves into his cogitation and his heart will immediately move into His love and out of his eyes will flow abundant tears. This is for the custom of the love fi to ignite tears out of remembrance about the beloved ones. And he who is like that, he won't ever lack his tears. This is for he doesn't lack the occasions for remembering God. So that he talks to God even while sleeping. It is the habit of the love to do that. And the love is the consummation of the people in their life".

A Short but Equally Strong Urge to the Things Said Before in Details

Climb up, brothers, by placing ascensions into your heart. Hear him who says: "Come and climb the mount of the Lord and at the house of our God" (Isa. 2: 3); "of his who made out feet as those of the stag and Who appointed us over the high things in order us to be victorious on His way" (Ps. 17: 36[1078]).

You run, I pray you, with him who says: "Let's strive, until all of us will reach the unity of the faith and to the knowledge of God, to the consummate man as the measure of the age of the fulness of Christ" (Eph. 4: 13), Who was baptized at the age of thirty, according to the seen age, and Who had the consummate thirtieth step, in the understanding ladder, if the love if God. To whom id due the singing, the mastery, into Whom there is power, and Who is, and He was, and Hew will be that one cause of all good into borderless ages. Amen.

[1078] In KJB we have: Ps. 18: 36: "He maketh my feet like hinds' feet, and setteth me upon my high places."; in ROB we have: Ps. 17: 36: "He Who makes my feet as those of the stag and Who sets me upon the high things." (E. l. t.'s n.)

Of the Pious Father John Climacus

The Word XXXI

Towards the Shephard

Introduction

1) In the book from above I left you, the All-Pious, the last one. But in the book from above I have been entrusted that you are ahead of all of us, if it is true what was said: "The last ones according to their thought will be the first ones according to eternity" (Mt. 20: 16)[1079].

Chapter I

2) Shepherd is, in the true meaning of the word, he who can search for and straighten, through his non-evilness, through his zeal, and through his prayer, the lost sheep.

3) Helmsman is him who has taken understanding strength[1080] from God and from his own efforts, in order him to be able to get the ship not only out of the waves but even out of the deep itself of the sea.

4) Physician is him who has his soul and his body non-ill, and so he doesn't need any medicine for them[1081].

5) True teacher is him who has become as an understanding book of the knowledge, by the finger of God, or by the work of the illumination from God, and so he no longer needs the other books[1082]. It is inappropriate the teachers to [1079] They who reckon on themselves, due to their humbleness, at being the las ones, according to their worthiness that will be known, they will be the first ones.

[1080] This is a power differing from the bodily power. It is a force of persuasion of the spirit, of the mind.

[1081] "Non-ill body he calls here not on him who doesn't suffer of some illness because of the changing or of the increasing of the quantity of the composing juices, but he calls thus him who has disrobed the lusts of the sweet addiction and the corruption from within them. Like he said also in the Word about Dispassion (XXIX) that "dispassionate is him who has made his body incorruptible, and he has elevated his mind above the creation" (head. no. 2).

[1082] "He who is not taught from above, but he still cogitates at the things from below, how could he teach others? "For bling guiding blind, he says, both will fall into the pit" (Mt. 15: 14). Only him whom God works within, after he was cleaned up of his sins, that one will be advise according to (copied) books, as it is inappropriate too, to the painter, to pain by copying older paintings.

6) You who advise them who are inferior in rank to you, you teach them about the high things; and you guide the another by your seen countenance[1083]. Do not forget about him who says: "Not from people, neither through people I have taken the teaching, neither have I been taught" (Gal. 1: 2). This is because will be impossible to them who are down to ever heal them who lie on the ground.

7) The good helmsmen will save his ship; the good shepherd will heal his sheep and he will make them healthy. To the extent that the sheep ceaselessly follow their shepherd who walks in their front, to the same extent the shepherd will be able to answer the Master from those sheep. Let the shepherd hit with his words on those sheep legging behind because of their laziness or because of their belly's covetousness. This is for this one too is a thing of the good shepherd.

8) When the sheep will start, because of the heat of sultriness, or better said because of the heat of their body, to take a nap with their soul, the shepherd, by looking at the sky, let him take even more stronger vigil for his sheep. This is because during this sultriness, it happens that many sheep are eaten by wolves. But if the sheep as well, according to the habit seen by us at the sheep, they lean down, during the sultriness, the head of their soul, to the ground, it will be fulfilled the word: "The crushed and humiliated heart, God won't curse it" (Ps. 50: 18[1084]).

9) When over the flock comes the darkness and the night of the passions, you will command the dog to steadfastly stay next to God in the night guard. This is for it won't be inappropriate if you understand your mind as a dog that rips the wild beasts.

able to teach others, by communicating them also the godlike work, of on God Himself with His love.

[1083] "You impart the another" or the spiritual one. This is for like God teaches you in an understanding manner, likewise you teach your disciples in a sensitive manner".

[1084] In KJB we have: Ps. 51: 17: "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise."; in ROB we have: Ps. 50: 18: "The sacrifice of God: the humiliated ghost; the broken and humbled heart God won't curse it."

Chapter II

10) It is a feature of our nature, also given us by our Good Lord, that, when the ill one sees the physician, he rejoices even though he won't benefit anything from the physician.

11) Yourself must have, oh you the wonderful, bandages, blades for incise the veins, iron for burning the wound, pomade, medicines for sleep, knife, and your capacity of non-getting-disgusted. This is because, if we miss these ones, how will us show our science? By no means. And the payments are given not for words but for deeds[1085].

12) The bandage is the medicine for the seen passions, namely of the bodily passions; the drinkable potion is the medicine for the inward passions and it is their destruction; the scalpel is the rebuking that incises the wound, and it cleans up the puss of the pride; the drops are the cleaning of the soul's eye darkened by the disturbance of the anger. The knife is the biting reproach that after a while will heal. The blade for incising the veins it is the quick shedding of the unshown stench. That one is also the harsh scarring and the pricking towards the healing of the ill ones. The sponge is the comforting of the ill one and his colling down by the physician after surgery, by suing gentle and kind words. The iron for burning is the decision and the harsh rule issued for a while, towards repentance. The pomade is the comforting provided to the ill one after burning his wound, either by word, or by some food. Medicine for sleep means taking the burden of the obedient by giving his resting through obedience, and a non-asleep sleep and a pious blindness, to that he won't see his own good deeds. The bandages mean the strengthening and the tying up of them who got drowsy because of their vain-glory and bragging, by enduring to death. And after all of these, the knife is the decision and the rule and the getting out of that body that is souly dead, and of that limb that is full of puss, in order the damage not to cross to other limbs.

[1085] "All of these are done by word. But them why he said: "not for words". I reckon that he meant the following: the payments won't be given them who are only called as guides, but those who show with their deeds the words of the life". Another: "You look at the life, and not at the word. You learn the virtue by words but you preach the virtue with your life". Another: "Teaching belongs to the great ones; but teaching also bring big dangers. The lower is him who receives the teaching, the smaller the danger will be". Another belonging to Gregory the Theologian: "Nobody has ever been elevated without life. But many have been elevated without the resounding word".

13) Blessed is to physicians they capacity of non-getting-disgusted, as it is the dispassion to the protos. The first ones, but not getting disgusted, they can work for healing any ill-smelling sickness, without difficulty. The second ones can resurrect any dead soul.

14) One of the prayers of the protos let be this: to be him able to suffer together with all and to live their state, according to their level, lets he will wound as Jacob was (Gen. 27) them whom he loved and the people living together with him. And they usually suffer this, because they do not have the senses of the soul consummately accustomed to discern between good and evil and what is in the middle[1086].

15) It will be a great shame to the protos if he prays to be given to the obedient one what the protos doesn't have himself. Those who see the emperor's face and who have made friends with the emperor, they will be able to reconcile the emperor with all his servants, or even with them who are unknown to the emperor, or even with emperor's enemies, if they want, and so they provide those ones with the same glory as they have 0 you understand that about saints as well.

16) The most consummate and true friends (of the emperor) the friends pay them respect and obey them. And they even allow to be forced by them. It will be good to you if you make friends with the bodiless friends. This is because nobody helps us so much to virtue, as they do.

17) One of those who love God, he told me that always, and especially on the annual and imperial feasts, God rewards all of his servants with gifts.

[1086] Belonging to Saint John Chrysostom: "Some things are good, other are in the middle. Thus, the soul and the body are among those from the middle, because they can become either good or evil. Again, the thought of the body, namely the evil deed, it is among those which are always evil. This is because of not obeying the law of God. So, if you give the soul and the body to the good one, you will be on his side; if you give them to the evil one, you have become partaker to evil, but not by the nature of the soul and of the body, but by the will which can choose both of those". Another: "he who stays peacefully and who doesn't rebuke the sin of his neighbor, he is merciless, as one who will leave the venom into the ones who has been bitten by snake". The ghost is always good, for it is the soul crossed through by the godlike Ghost.

Chapter III

18) The physician owes to consummately disrobe on himself of passions, so that he will be able to pretend, at the right time, that he still has some passions, especially regarding the anger. This is because, if he hasn't totally rejected those, he won't be able to put them on again in a dispassionate manner[1087].

19) I saw a horse that was inexperienced to some extent, but due to the fact that that horse was driven while held by its rein, that horse was stepping ahead peacefully, but suddenly, because his master lets loose for a little the horse's rein, the horse endangered his master. There are two devils usually causing that[1088]. So, they who want to search for, let them search effortfully.

Chapter IV

20) He is not a worthy to be praise teacher him wo make wise the taught children, but he who makes wise the untaught and unwise children, and who brings them to consummation. The skillfulness of the horse drivers is shown and it is praised when those ones control inexperienced horses and save those horses from danger.

21) If you have eyes able to see in advance the storms on the sea, you will tell that limpidly to them who are in the ship. And if not, you will be the cause for that shipwreck, for you have been appointed by everybody, unhesitatingly, you to be the ship's helmsman.

22) I saw physicians who didn't announced the sick one regarding the causes of his getting-ill. That's why, those physicians caused to the ill ones and to themselves much tiredness and torment.

[1087] This is the sign that somebody has been totally delivered of his passions: that he can pretend having them, but he won't be influenced by them.

[1088] "The vain-glory and the belly's covetousness, or the fornication. This is because these ones do not stop warring us until the end". Another: "These ones are those of the anger and of the fornication. If somebody will loose even for a little the taking of care, they immediately will stir up, and insomuch that they remain until the end and they enslave our nature as they would be natural".

23) As much faith in himself the protos sees at his subjects, and at others from outside, as well he must guard on himself with the whole care in what he does and speaks. This is because of knowing that all of those look at him as at an exemplary icon and they reckon what he said and what he did as guidance and as law.

24) The true shepherd is proven by his love. This is for due to His love was crucified the Great Shepherd.

25) You impropriate to yourself the things you say to others by words, and you won't always need much shyness[1089].

26) You sadden the ill one for a while, so that he won't tarry too much in his illness, or him to die because of the worthy-of-condemnation silence. Many reckoned, because of helmsman silence, that they were sailing well, until they hit the rock.

27) Let's hear the great Paul writing to Timothy: "Insist around them timely and untimely" (2 Tim. 4: 2). "Timely", I reckon, when the rebuked ones endure the reproach with pleasure; "untimely" when those ones are bitten by the reproach. This is for the water springs at their turn, they spring up the water even when nobody is thirsty.

28) It is in the nature of some protos, to put it this way, to shy, and often they won't tell to the obedient what those ones need, but they remain silent. But let these protos not to avoid fulfilling their duty as teachers to their disciples, and let them write down on a paper the necessary commandments they owe to give to those ones.

29) Let's hear what the godlike Scripture says about that: "Hewn it off, what for to occupy the land uselessly?" (Lk. 13: 7); and: "Remove the evil ones from among yourselves" (1 Cor. 5: 13); and: "Do not pray for this people!" (Jer. 7: 16); and about Saul likewise. The shepherd owes to know all of these: whom, how, and when it must happen. This is for nothing is truer than what God says.

30) If somebody, who has been rebuked individually, he won't get ashamed, that one will make of being reproached in the presence of others an occasion of shamelessness as well, by willingly hating his own salvation[1090].

[1089] "The word is addressed to the shepherd: when, he says, somebody comes to confess his sins to you, and that one often doubts, you will strive to impropriate to yourself only by words those one's things, and not by your deeds. For instance, you tell him: of, brother, do not get sad; I did that too, namely the things he hesitates to confess. And so, he will get some courage and he will tell you everything clearly, and you won't suffer any damage from that".

Chapter V

31) I take in account also what I saw happening with many conscious ill people. These ones, by knowing their fear and helplessness, they asked the physician to tie them up, without their will, and to treat them forcedly, due to their will. This is because "the ghost is zealous", for the future hope, "while the body is helpless" (Mt. 26: 42), for its previous weaknesses. And I saw that and I prayed the physicians to let themselves be persuaded by those ones.

32) The adviser mustn't ask all of them who come to him to walk that narrow and full of trouble path. Neither it is to anyone the yoke gentle and the burden easy. But it rather is necessary to be administrated the appropriate medicines. To them who are burdened by heavy sins and who tend towards despair, it will be appropriate the second medicine. To them who tend to a haughty and proud thought, it will be appropriate the second medicine.

33) Some people, by intending to undertake a long travel and by asking those who knew that road, they heard back that that road is straight and undangerous. But by getting they drowsy during the travel, because of what they heard, after they traveled about a half of that road, they got endangered, and they turned back, because they were unprepared for that journey's hardships. But I reckon that the opposite thing can happen too.

34) Where the godlike love touched the heart, the fear out of words had not power. And where the fear of Gehenna occurred, there was born the patience in all pains and toils. Where the hope for the Kingdom is known, there will occur the despise of all the things from below.

[1090] "You will reproach the sinner without anger, rather persuading him by word and not by anger to correct on himself". Another: "He who shepherds the people will give correction punishments and he won't hit for small sins". Another: "It is due the sinner to be reproached carefully and zealously, for getting straightened. And if he perseveres into sin, and if the doesn't correct on himself, he must be removed from the brotherhood in order not to corrupt others too".

35) The skillful army commander knows limpidly the state and the rank of any of his subordinates. This is for there may be in the multitude some of them who are skillful warriors and who fight well by themselves, so that they can be placed doubtlessly in front of the soldiers.

36) The helmsman cannot save the ship by himself, without the together-working of the sailors. Neither the physician will be able to heal him who suffer, if the ill one doesn't ask him for doing that and if he doesn't show his wound to the physician with total trust. They who felt shame of physicians, they caused to themselves puss and they often dies.

Chapter VI

37) Guarding the sheep on the pasture, the shepherd must not stop using his flute, especially when the sheep want to go to sleep. This is for the wolf doesn't fear anything more than the shepherd's flute.

38) The protos mustn't always recklessly humiliate on himself, neither to always insanely got haughty. But let him look at Paul, how he used both of those (2 Cor. 10-13). The Lord covered the eyes of the guided ones not to see the shortcomings of their protos. And those one, by showing them what they didn't previously see, he stirred up the faithlessness within them.

39) I saw a protos allowing to be advised in some things, due to his deep humbleness, by his sons. And I saw another wanting to show to those ones, because of his pride, his unwise wisdom, and laughing at them.

40) I saw, it is true that very rarely, in some circumstance, passionate advisers mastering upon the dispassionate, and the protos by getting little by little ashamed of them whom they led, themselves put an end to their passions. I think that was worked within them by the rewards of the saved ones. And thus, their passionate mastery became to them cause for dispassion.

Chapter VII

41) Let's take heed at never scattering when we will be at sea, the things we have gathered while we were inside harbor[1091]. They who aren't yet accustomed to the noises from outside know this.

42) Rightly, great thing is enduring with determination and with manhood the sultriness and the peace and the resting of the quietude and not to search for the scatterings and for the comforting outside the ship, or outside the monastic cell, as the idle sailors are searching for, during the peaceful time, to bath on themselves into the sea. But it is an unparallelly greater thing not to fear the noises, but to remain, during their knocking on the heart, as steadfastly living together with the people outwardly, and with God inwardly.

Chapter VIII

43) Let it be to you, oh you the wonderful one, what happens at the external tribunals, cause to think at our tribunals: he who comes as a condemned one at the fearful and true judgment of ours, and who is innocent and striving to work and serve God? This is because those ones are two contrary arrivals and they need judgments appropriate to them[1092].

44) In the first place, to be asked him who is guilty, what his deeds were according to their sorts, for two reasons: in order to feel himself by confessing always pricked (into his conscience) and to remain non-daringly, and for, by knowing what wounds have been inflicted to him, to be him waked up to our love[1093].

[1091] In the Edition form the year 1970: "Let's take heed at not scattering the things we have gathered while inside harbor, or during our appeasement, while we will be on the sea of the leadership, or, the things we have gathered within community by obedience we to lose them again within community".

[1092] It is advised the spiritual guide / the confessor to receive as confession of sins as at judgment, both on them who have sins and on them who are innocent.

[1093] They who have committed sins while in congregation, they committed those sins towards some of them who live in that congregation ("by we the others") and by the pain of the confession they to be urged to love those ones.

45) Do not forget either this, oh you the all-honored one, s you know. Let's that not be! Let be judges by you also the places and the new way of living and the habits of the guilty ones. This is because they differ greatly. Often, the weakest is the humbles in heart. That's why he must be punished lither by the spiritual physicians[1094]. And it is obvious what the opposite one requires.

Chapter IX

46) It is not right that the wolf guards the sheep, and it won't be without dangers if the passionate ones lead the passionate ones[1095].

47) The fox is an unpleasant sight to the birds. But nothing is more unpleasant than a shepherd who gets infuriated. The first one disturbs the birds; the second one disturbs and loses the speaking souls.

48) Take heed not to inquire in details the unimportant things, because you won't be follower to God[1096].

49) Let yourself have God as administrator and as protos of all the things from inside and outside you, as an All-Good Helmsman. And by cutting off your will through Him, you will become worriless and guide only by His will.

50) Both you and all the others must take heed at this too: hasn't the grace planned to work through us most of the [1094] "He who gives the rebuke for health, he will punish with love. And he who searches for revenge, he has gone out of love. God punishes with love and not to avenge, let that not be; He tries to heal His image and he won't stay angry for long. This kind of the love is righteous and it won't passionately lean towards revenge".

[1095] "Who will be cleaned by the unclean one? How will the liar defend the truth? And he who is evil in himself, how will be kind to others?".

[1096] "Do not force him who didn't obey you at your first word, by rebuking him, but make your gain out of what he threw away. This is for more useful it will be to you your non-keeping-of-evil-in-mind than his straightening". Another: "By taking from God the job of teaching others, and by not being you obeyed by them whom you teach, you sadden on yourself into your thought but you do not show that externally. This is for, by being sadden by him you won't be counted with him. But if you get mad on him, you will be rebuked to the same thing". Another, belonging to Mark: "By receiving the job of commanding, you guard your rank and do not overlook the necessary things, due to the fact that they oppose to you. This is for you will get payment for them who obey you, for their virtue. And to them who do not obey you, you will forgive all their mistakes and you will get payment from Him Who said: "Forgive and you it will be forgiven to you" (Lk. 6: 37).

things form the faith of those who come to us, and not out of our cleanness? This is for many among the passionate ones did wonderful things in the mentioned way.

51) If "many; he says, will tell Me on that day, Lord, Lord, did us not prophesize in Your Name?" and the other things (Mt. 7: 22), it won't be unbelievable what it has been just said.

52) He who has made God merciful to himself, he will be able to heal the ill ones, without they feeling that, and in a way hidden to them, by achieving two great things: to keep on themselves hidden from the people's glory as from a rust, and to make them who have received mercy to thank only to God.

Chapter X

53) Give them who walk their way courageously and manly, harder foods and them who leg behind, either because of their nature, or because of their will, give them eat milk as to some who still are little children. This is because any food has its right time.

54) Often, the same food cause so some people the zeal, while to some other people the sadness. One must take in account, when throwing the seed, the followings: the time, the person, the quality, and the quantity[1097].

55) Some people reckoned as nothing taking upon themselves the worry of others, they started to shepherd the souls without recklessly; and despite they exceeded others with much richness (of virtues), they left with empty hands, by passing to others the taking care of those[1098].

56) As there are truly legitimate children, and other children from the second marriage, and others made with maids, and others out of fornication, likewise are known sorts of taking care of others. There is a true taking of care, soul of the neighbor in all the things. And there is a taking upon himself only of the sins committed before; and another of the sins committed after that. And there is a bearing only of the burden

[1097] "I reckon that he says that one must not share with all the ones coming to take teaching the same spiritual seeds, neither to give them the same commandments, or punishments (reproaches);

[1098] Some people when in leadership they lose the richness of their virtues instead of increasing it, because of getting filled up with vain-glory and with wrath, and they pass to others the occasion to get rich.

of the own commandments, out of the fewness of the spiritual power and out of dispassion. But even in the first one and consummate, we bear the burden on the measure of the cutting off of the will[1099].

57) The legitimate con is known when the father is missing. In this way you must understand also the case of them who are under obedience. Let the protos take heed and mark them who resist in word and work against; and let him rebuke them with the harshest reproaches in the presence of some of the higher in ranks ones, by instilling fear to other too by doing that, even if those ones will feel gravely bitten by reproaches. This is for it is more beneficial to make wise many than to cause losses to one.

58) There are some people who, out of their spiritual love, they have accepted others' burdens which were above their power, by remembering him who said: "A greater love than this no one have" (Jn. 15: 13) and the others things. And there are others who, by receiving from the power for carrying others, they didn't obey with sweetness to the hardships for saving their brother. And I cried for these ones as ones who didn't have love. And about the first ones I have found out said somewhere: "He who squeezes to himself honors from the worthless, he is my mouth" (Jer. 15: 19); and: "Let it be to you according to the way you did".

59) I ask you to take heed also at this: often the sin with the thought of the protos is judged more harshly that the sin with the deed of the obedient, if the mistake of the soldiers is lighter than the bad order given by the army's commander.

60) You advise the obedient not to confess their bodily and debauched sin in details. And they to move their other sins, day and night, in their mind, according to their detailed sort.

61) You accustom them who obey you to be together-innocent and very wise towards the devils.

62) Let not remain hidden from you the purpose of the sheep in their connections. This is because the goal of the devils is to make the zealous fall apart through idleness.

[1099] "They say that there are shepherds who do not take upon them the burden of the judgment of others among the obedient ones, because of the lack of consummation. As we can see now at many, who do not take upon themselves the thoughts of the monks who are under their leadership. But they endure that one of their children anyway. This is because these ones endure the judgment and the burden as ones who cause the wounds of their subjects, only out of the commandments they gave".

63) Do not hesitate when you are asked to pray also for them who are totally careless; you will pray for them to be moved by God to zeal, because of not being possible for now they to be saved.

64) Let the weak ones not to eat together with the heretics, as it is said in canons. They who are strong into the Lord, if they are invited faithfully by the faithless, and if they want to go to them, let them go for the glory of God.

65) Do not excuse on yourself with your nescience: this is because him who do not know but still does something worthy of punishment, he will be beaten because of not learning.

Chapter XI

66) It is a shame to the shepherd to fear his death. When the obedience asks for it, there mustn't be fear of death.

67) You search, of you the blessed one, for the virtue which no one will see our Lord without, and make your sons to gain that virtue in the first place, by delivering them from seeing any smooth of feminine-like faces.

68) Let the ways of living and the dwelling places of all of them who are under your obedience to differ according to the body's ages. This is because you must not send somebody away from the harbor[1100].

69) Let's not lay our hands upon anybody before we will have reached the age of the wisdom, established according to the world, lest by elevating some of the sheep who still are into nescience, these ones, when they reach the science, thy not to be able to endure the burden and the heat, and to rush towards the world. This won't be without danger to them who have been previously ordained.

70) But who is such a manager of the gift from God that, by no longer needing his tears, his sighs, and his toils, to relentlessly use those towards God for cleaning others[1101]?

[1100] "He speaks about educating and receiving children or young men, they to be separated according to the place".

[1101] It is not about the merits some no longer needed by some of the spiritual advanced ones, and which the Church passes to others through indulgences, as in the Roman-catholic Church, but it is about the personal work for waking up others, it is about a direct communication among the Church's members.

71) Do not ever cease from washing up and from cleaning up the defiled souls, and especially the bodies, so that you to be able to daringly ask for crows from the Leader of the fight, and not only for the souls of your subjects but also for those of the foreigners.

72) I saw a helpless ones cleaning up the helplessness of another helpless one, by using a worthy to be praised daring, for that one, towards God, and putting his soul for another soul into humbleness and by healing up that one he healed up on himself too. And I saw another doing the same out of his self-appreciation and he heard the rebuking: "Doctor, heal on yourself" (Lk. 4: 23).

73) It is possible to somebody to deprive on himself of a good thing for achiever a better good thing, like did him who avoided the martyrdom not because of fearing it but for the benefit of those who were being saved through him[1102].

74) There are some people who surrender on themselves to dishonor, in order other to be honored; these ones are reckoned by many as loving of pleasures or as a deceiver, though he tells the truth.

75) If him who have a useful word he doesn't share it abundantly, he won't remain unpunished, then what a big danger must expect for themselves, my friend, they who can to toil by deed for them who toil, but they do not want to do that?[1103]

76) You deliver others at your turn, you who have been delivered by God. You save him who is being brought to his death, you who have been saved, and you do not spare anything for saving them who are being killed by the devils[1104]. This is for

[1102] "He speaks about Gregory Thaumaturge (the Wonders-Doer), who chose better to withdraw on himself in order to protect them who were given him by God, than to become a martyr".

[1103] Saint Maximos: "He who has been imparted with good things from God, he owes to pass those things to others too. "You have taken as a gift, he says, you will give as a gift" (Mt. 10: 8). This is because him who hides the gift by burying it, he will defame the Lord as a harsh Master, by not using the virtue in order to clean up the body. And him who sells on himself to his enemies, by being later on uncovered as loving the vain-glory, he will be hanged up". Anyone can and therefore anyone must take part to the toils and to the pains of the others and to try to alleviate them. Thus, each of us can make Christ, through himself, as Worker for others. Since Christ nobody can say anymore: "Lord, I have no man". All of us can have Christ. But Christ works through them who believe in Him.

[1104] Each of us can be such a missionary of the salvation into Christ. Each of us can make Christ worker through himself and felt by others. No one is due to remain passive spectator to this is the great fight before God, a fight that is above any work and contemplation of people and of angels[1105].

77) He who washes up and cleans up, with his cleanness given him from God, the others' defilement, and, through the righteous things, he gives righteous gifts which he brings to God, he proves on himself to be a together-worker with the bodiless and understanding Powers[1106]. This one and only this one is the thing from always of them who liturgize to God[1107]. "This is for all of them from around Him will bring Him gifts": souls (Ps. 75: 11[1108]).

78) Nothing shows so much the love for people and the kindness to us of the Maker, as that of leaving the ninety-nine sheep in order to search for the strayed one. So, you take heed, of you the wonderful one, and show the whole your zeal, and love, and warmth, and care, and the ask towards God, for him who is very strayer and crushed. This is because where the wound and the illnesses are grave, the rewards given will doubtlessly be great too.

79) Let's take heed, let's watch, and let's do. This is because not always the protos must judge according to the justice but he also must take in account the helplessness as well. I saw two individuals judged by an all-wise judge. And this the work of the Church's priests. All of us are soldiers in the battle for Christ; each of us has a spiritual weapon which he can fight this battle with.

[1105] Helping others in the name of Christ and by that making Christ Himself Worker through us towards others, it is the greatest toil asked from us By God. It accomplishes two things in the same time: it helps others, and it preaches on Christ. Thus, are united in the Christian's work the horizontal and the vertical dimensions.

[1106] All the things and all the persons are given to us by God, and we must turn them back to Him, in a ceaseless dialogue of the love with the deed. But we have stained the gifts given us by God, because of the ugly thoughts which we look at them and use them with. By that, we have stained on ourselves and through them we stain others too. And God doesn't accept back stained gifts from us. He asks us to bring those gifts cleaned back to Him, namely us to make the effort for cleaning those gifts and for cleaning on ourselves, for putting our cleanness within them. If somebody gave me a clean coat and I have stained it, I will offend him by giving back to him his stained coat. I must clean that coat up before returning it.

[1107] This is the cosmical uninterrupted Liturgy, asked for by God: we to bring on ourselves and we to bring all the others and on one another cleaned up, to God, together with all the things he has given us.

[1108] In KJB we have: Ps. 76: 11-12: "Vow, and pay unto the Lord your God: let all that be round about him bring presents unto him that ought to be feared. // He shall cut off the spirit of princes: he is terrible to the kings of the earth."; in ROB we have: Ps. 75: 11-12: "Make oaths and fulfill them to your Lord God. All of them from around Him will bring Him gifts. // To the fearsome One and to Him who takes the ghosts of the chieftains, to Him Who is fearsome to the emperors of the earth." (E. l. t.'s n.) one declared the unjust as just because that one was weaker; and the judge condemned the just one as unjust because that one was more manly and full of souly strength. This was also for not being generated even a bigger division through justice. But he told face to face to each of them the things due to them, and especially to him who was souly ill.

80) The green pasture is appropriate to the sheep. But it is more appropriate the teaching and the remembrance of the dead to the speaking beings, for these ones being able to heal up their defilement.

81) You study them who have a strong soul and rebuke them without motif, in the presence of the weak ones, so that you to be able to heal, with the medicine administrated to one, the wound of the another, and to teach the drowsy ones how to become stronger.

82) Nowhere God, by listening to a confession, He is not shown as making that confession publicly known, lets to stope them who confess, by unveiling them, and so to make them unhealable in their illness.

83) If we enjoy the gift of the fore-knowledge, let's not tell in advance their mistakes to them who have mistaken, but let's rather allude them to come to confess. This is for, if they confess us their sins, they will receive no-little forgiveness[1109]. After a greater daring confession of theirs, let's make them worthy of a greater taking care than that we had for them before their confessions[1110]. This is for, if we do that, they will advance to a greater trust in and love for us. And we owe to shown on ourselves to them as an image of humbleness brought to the peak; but let's teach them also to fear us[1111]. You must be patient with them in all the things, except regarding their disobedience in the said things.

84) Take heed lest your excessive humbleness not to gather coals upon the head of your sons[1112].

85) Take heed and see if there isn't in your field a tree making the soul unfertile, but that tree would be fruitful if [1109] In the confession too it is shown the will for overcoming the sin. It won't suffice only an internal sorrow.

[1110] Let's not leave them in an embarrassing situation after their confession. But let's also provide them with the remedies matching their confessed illness.

[1111] Or rather respect for the remedies which we recommend them.

[1112] Lit charcoals of the eternal damnation, because of our humbleness that didn't make them repent.

planted in another field. Let's not avoid replanting these trees with the advice, in another place, through a loving approach[1113].

86) It is possible that the protos to work the virtue without danger, even in more inappropriate places, namely more worldly and more loving of pleasure.

87) When the physician prospers into the souly health, he won't need so much the bodily heal of the sick ones[1114].

88) Let the protos take heed as receiving the young ones; this is for not all the refusal or banishing away are forbidden by God[1115].

89) No gift is so welcome by God from us as that of bringing Him speaking souls through repentance[1116]. This is because even the whole world is not as precious as one soul. The world passes while the soul remains. Therefore, do not congratulate them who bring material goods; but congratulate them who bring speaking sheep to Christ[1117].

[1113] Sometimes you are unable to develop within yourself certain virtues, but you can help others by word, to develop those virtues within themselves. But for that you need a loving communion with others, in order you to be able to convey them the great longing that you have for those virtues which you are incapable of developing within you. For instance, for the power of the word, of the serving, and of the teaching. It can be also understood as an advice given to some people to move on themselves elsewhere.

[1114] When a great cleanness irradiates out of the confessor, he won't need to impose to his spiritual son too big toils in order that one to gain that cleanness at his turn; out of the confessor's example will irradiate power into the spiritual son as well.

[1115] Namely God doesn't require that anyone who asks for to be accepted into monasticism.

[1116] All of us must bring on ourselves as gifts to God, but also on one another, for all of us have been given by God as gifts to one another. But we cannot bring on one another to God as on soke objects, but as on some subjects, through the freedom we increase to one another, and enriched in the relations among ourselves. By bringing others as gifts, or those ones by bringing on us as gifts, they actually bring on themselves and we actually bring on ourselves as gifts, but as urged by others. So, our purpose is to urge on one another to that. And we do that by urging on one another to leave our sins, by repenting on ourselves. This is for the sin is nothing else but a man's refusal to bring on himself as a gift to God. And we have an important role to wake up the repentance in others, a rile we accomplish by word, but especially by our example.

[1117] This is the true priest and hierarch, if the service of the priesthood and or the hierarchy consists of bringing gifts to God for the people (Hebr. 5: 1). If it is so, the priest will exercise his work by any word, and by any exemplary deed, which he can gain a soul by, for Christ. He is not a priest only when at altar, as sometimes some people say these days. But woe especially to that priest who because of his behavior and words, he removes souls form Christ! That priest has become servant of the devil. One must also notice that here is being open a wide field for the general priesthood, which any believer belongs to.

Chapter XII

90) You make your burnt sacrifice righteously. Otherwise, you won't benefit anything.

91) If we must accept the word: "It was due to be sold the Son of Man; but woe to him whom He was sold by" (Mk. 14: 21), likewise we must accept also the opposite thing: it is due that many to be saved and, unmistakingly, they who want that; but the payment with be given them whom the salvation was done through, according to the Lord.

92) We need before anything, oh you the all-holy one, of the spiritual power, in order us to show Christ to them who we have started to guide towards the Holy of the Holiest, as Him resting on the mysterious and hidden Table. That's why, when we see them troubled and pressured by the multitude of the thoughts coming to impede them (especially on the porch of the entrance), let's take them by hand as on some children and let's deliver them from the multitude of the thoughts[1118].

And if some people are very childish or helpless, we need to take them on our shoulders and to bear them until they will reach the door of the truly narrow entrance. This is for there will take place the whole narrowing. That's why also somebody wrote about it: "This is my toil before me, until I will enter the holy place of God" (Ps. 72: 16-17[1119]).

93) I said, of Father of the Fathers, in the previous things as well, about that father of the fathers and teacher of the teachers, how he was entirely dressed up in the wisdom from above, non-hypocrite, rebuking, taking heed at all things, wise, lenient, and having a luminous soul; and what it was more [1118] The spiritual climbing of the believer (or of the monk) is likened to his entrance from on the Church's porch all the way to its altar, and on the altar's table there is resting Christ Whose resting is being communicated to the believer as well, through the Holy Impartation, or through his union with Christ. While on the porch, he who has started to advance he still is troubled by the defiled worldly thoughts, in the nave he rejects them all and he contemplated the clean rationalities of the things (or of the virtues) and of the persons whom they are together in prayer with, and in altar he is united with God beyond even the contemplation of the rationalities of the created realities, which are brought by saints to their union with the godlike realities.

[1119] In KJB we have: Ps. 73: 16-17: "When I thought to know this, it was too painful for me; // Until I went into the sanctuary of God; then understood I their end."; in ROB we have: Ps. 72: 16-17: "And I strived on myself to understand this, but it is a difficult thing in front of me. // Until I have entered the holy place of God and I have understood the end of the evil ones:"

wonderful among all things, it was that he asked more from them whom he saw that they wanted to save on themselves, and on them he saw as keeping their own will, or as having some addiction, he removed them from the thing which they were addicted to, so that all of them to take heed at not manifesting their own will regarding anything which they were attached to. The eternally-remembered one said also this: that is better to be somebody banished away from the monastery than to be allowed to do his will. This is for he who banished that one he will make that one many times humbler and, by that, that one will cut off his will by himself. And he who seems to behave with these ones with love for people and with lenience, he makes them to curse him at the moment of their death, as one who rather deluded them instead of providing them with any benefit.

That great shepherd could be seen after the evening prayers as sitting on a throne (composed externally by wood but internally by spiritual gifts), as an emperor, surrounded by the good community that was gathered like some wise bees and that was listening to his words and commandments as from God. And one was ordered to utter fifty, another thirty, and another a hundred psalms before they went to bed; another was commanded to do a number of kneelings, another to sleep in a sitting position; another, to read for a certain time; and another, likewise, to pray.

In addition to those, he appointed two brothers as supervisors, who had as task to take heed at the daily encounters and laziness and to stop those; and at night to take heed at the inappropriate vigils and to the things which cannot be entrusted to the writing. And not only that, but the great shepherd organized regarding the food too, to be each one given what matched him. This is for it was not a sole diet for all of them, not even a similar diet, but a diet tailored to each one according to his state. To some of them, the good organizer established a lither diet, while to other a juicier diet. And it was a wonderful thing that his orders were caried out without murmuring, as coming out of the mouth of God. Under the obedience of the worthy-to-be-remembered one, we found also a hermitage, which the consummate-in-all-things-one was sending from monastery, on them who were strong, for appeasement.

94) Please to not lead, they who are more innocent, to many sorts of crafter thoughts. Rather, you will lead also on them who have all sorts of thoughts, to simplicity. And this is a wondrous thing.

95) He who has been cleaned up to the peak, due to his peak dispassion, he will used as a judge also a harsh judgment. This is for the lack of the dispassion prick the judge's heart and it won't allow him to punish and to clean as he ought to[1120].

96) You leave to your sons, before anything, the inheritance of the dispassionate (unstained) faith[1121], and of the rightly-believing dogmas, in order you to guide to the Lord not only your sons, but also your grandsons, on the path of the right-faith (of the Orthodoxy, t. n.).

97) Do not let yourself to be stopped by your mercy on the young ones, to put pressure on them, to wither them, and to tame them, in order they to extoll you at the time of their exit (of their soul).

98) Let to be example to you, in this regard as well, the great Moses. This is because he wasn't able to liberate his obedient ones from Pharaoh, despite they followed him obediently, until they ate the azyme with bitter herbs (Exod. 12). The azyme is that soul not having as departure point his own will. This is because his own will could make him boasting and haughty. But the azyme is always humble. And by bitter herbs let's understand that circumstance when the bitterness comes out of commandments, when the narrowing is bot out of the bitterness of the fasting.

99) And I, you Father of the Fathers, by sending these pages to you, it seems to me that I hear Him who says: "You who teach on another, why won't you be your own teacher?"

[1120] In the Edition from the year 1970: "He will use the rigor (ακρίβεια), namely he won't be lenient in the penances imposed to him who has mistaken. The confessor who has himself a very clean life, he can require more from his spiritual sons but he who isn't too clean with his life, he cannot also ask too much from another. On the other hand, that confessor having an exemplary life, by that he will ease the fulfilling of the toils which he recommends, by the one who repents.

[1121] "The dispassionate faith". This is because only the Orthodox faith is not the product of a passion and it is the only faith that not expresses a passionate God, and it gives the power of the dispassion. This is for the Orthodoxy is the faith in the Trinity as a supreme structure of the love into the Son of God Who humbled on Himself out of His love, by embodying on Himself and by allowing Himself to be crucified; the Orthodox faith is the faith having, therefore, as a fruit, the community that is so stranger to the individualistic passion, as also stranger to the dictatorial passion of a sole person, both those being a fruit of the pride.

(Rom. 2: 21). But now, after I have been saying all these things, I am stopping the course of my word.

Chapter XIII

The Praising Brought to the Abbot of Raith Monastery, Compose According to Moses's History[1122]

That soul that is united with God through cleanness, that soul won't need another word of teaching, for that soul bears withing himself the eternal Word, as mysterious Teacher, as an adviser and enlightener. And I know that likewise is also your all-holy and all-luminous soul of coryphée. This is because I know not only by word, but also by work and by experience, your soul's all-clean cogitation, destroyer of wild beasts, shining of humbleness, alike to that great Lawmaker. This is for you follow him step by step, with the greatest perseverance, and you are always advancing towards the height, and you only need a little to even surpass him, in what regards the worthy-to-be-praised cleanness and the crown of the righteousness, which we can get closer through, more than through others, to God the Clean One and the Giver of all dispassion and the Helper in it, Him who moves by that to heavens on them who still live on earth.

In these, as in a fire chariot, like the loving-of-cleanness Elijah, by getting in it with tireless feet, you have killed not only the Egyptian[1123] (Exod. 2: 12) and you have hidden the victorious deed in the humbleness's sand, but you have climbed the mountain as well and you have seen God through your thorny and difficult to live living, and there you have rejoiced the godlike voice and the shininess of the light; and even your footwear, namely all mortal cover, you have untied it and by grabbing him by his tail, of by the end which he reaches at, on him who has been transformed from an angel into a dragon, you have thrown him as in a nest of his into the lowest pit, locking him up into darkness; and then you have defeated the pharaoh[1124], the lofty and haughty, and you have hit the Egyptians and they first born you have killed (and that is the greatest deed of victory)[1125].

[1122] This title is given only in the G.P., in the translation belonging to Veniamin Costache and in the Edition form the year 1970 there is not this title. In the Edition belonging to Pietro Trevisan, which reproduces the Greek text, it gives this title as well. The Edition form the year 1970 continues to give the whole Chapter XV from the G.P. placing this introduction in continuation to the head no. 100. Top John of Raith was sent the whole writing as one can see in the Chapter XIV.

[1123] "Namely the human lust".

That's why the Lord also entrusted you, as to one who is steadfast, the advising of the brothers whom, you the adviser, by advising them fearlessly, you have delivered them from pharaoh and from the dirty work of the clay bricks, and you have given them further on the entire trial of the godlike fire and of the cloud's cleanness, that quenches the whole lusts' heat. And not only that, but you have also separated the Red and fiery sea (which most of us are endangered by, t. n.) and you have made them victorious and bearers of the victory crowns, through your walking stick and through your pastoral skillfulness, and so you have totally drowned the ones who have been following them.

But not only that, but you have also lowered the Amalek of the pride, he who uses to come and meet the winers, after their victory upon the sea; you have lowered him by stretching your hands and by your contemplation (sight) for your people enlightened by God. You have defeated the peoples, you have brought up them who have been together with you on the mountain of the dispassion; you have appointed them priests; you have appointed the circumcision, you have shown that without one being cleaned up through it he won't possibly see God; you have ascended at height, by removing the darkness and the fog and the storm, namely that threefold darkened darkness.

You have gone closer to the much more lightened light, shinier and higher than the pyre. You have been found worthy of voice, you have been found worthy of sight, you have been found worthy of prophecy. You have seen, why you have still been living here, the realities which will be as the end, namely the last enlightenment of the conscience that will be. You have heard by voice: "The man shall not see" (Exod. 23: 30). That's why you have even descended into the deepest valley (of Horeb; G.P. = of the humbleness, t. n.), out of seeing God, and you have brought the tablets of the climbing into knowledge and you have had the face of your soul and of your body sanctified.

[1124] "He calls as pharaoh that mind that is proud, causing of falling".
[1125] The first evil thoughts that occur, in order they not to pass towards deed.

But woe to the view of crafting calves (because this is being done by my congregation), woe to the breaking of the tablets!

And what has followed then? You have taken the people by hand and you have crossed the desert. You have made on yourself, to the people, maybe hot due to your own fire, as spring of the tears though wood, namely by crucifying the body together with its passions and lusts (Gal. 5: 24)[1126]. You waged war to the Gentiles whom you have encountered and you have defeated them, by consuming them with the Lord's fire. You have come to River Jordan (this is because nothing impeded me from prolonging a little further the history), which you have separated with your word, for the people, and you have given the first water to the salty and dead sea, and the water of the higher love you stop them in the eyes of this understanding (spiritual) Israelites of yours[1127].

Then you have ordered twelve stones to be brought, either by showing the image of the apostles, or by hinting at the defeat of the eight nations of passions and at achieving the four all-

[1126] "He says that to the people who were burning due to their fire, namely of the passions and of the lusts, Moses came to help, through the wood of the cross, namely through the heavy suffering and by crucifying the body, springing them springs of tears, according to the example of Moses's deed, spiritually understood". Another: "There are two ways to climb on the cross: one is that of crucifying the body; the second is that of climbing to contemplation. The first one comes out of freedom, the second occurs by working the deeds; the mind won't obey this one if the body doesn't obey it in the first place. The kingdom of the mind is the crucifixion of the body and the mind won't obey God if the freedom doesn't obey the rationality". Namely the mind can make the body to crucify on itself. But out of this can come a pride of the mind on the ground that the mind can master the body. From here one must advance further, namely the mind must obey to Himself the embodied godlike Word, namely to the highest meaning of the bodily ascesis that is the union with God into love. This is for neither Christ crucified only His body, but by crucifixion He obeyed God as man. And He wants to sow within us this feeling. Thus, the crucifixion of Moses by the stretching of his hands finds, as well as that of all of us, its last fulfillment into the crucifixion of Christ.

[1127] "As Joshua Navi cutting the River Jordan with his walking stick, the waters which were flowing before he let them flow towards the salty sea, called Dead, and the waters from behind those he stopped into the eyes of the people, likewise you, by separating the people and by preparing them to cross this world, you have used the beginner tears for the bitterness and for the saltiness of the passions, and you have united them with the ascetic toils in order to kill the pleasures. This is because they were no longer needed after the killing of these ones. But those of the love coming after that, as causing of consummation, you have stopped them higher, or you have made them steadfast, immovable, and unchanged, by the grace from above, in the eyes of your disciples".

comprising virtues. The you have totally left behind the Dead and baren Sea[1128]. You have come to the city of your enemy, where you sound your trumpet, through prayer, in this sevenfold cycle of the human life. And thus, you have torn this city down, by defeating it. That's why you sing to your immaterial and unseen helper: "The swords of the enemies totally perished and you tore down cities" (Ps. 9: 6[1129]).

Do you want me to tell you also the most important and greatest thing of all? You have ascended to Jerusalem, to the s4eeing of the consummate peace of the soul. You see Christ, the Lord of the Peace. You suffer together with Him, as a good soldier. You crucify together with Him your body with its passions and lusts, and rightly so, as one who has become, at your turn, god to pharaoh and to his entire enemy power. You burry on yourself together with Christ, and you descend together with Him to the hell of the speaking about God (of the theology), of the untold mysteries[1130]. You have been anointed with chrism and with good fragrances by the related and friend women, namely by virtues. You have resurrected (for what would impede me now from saying this too, since you are sitting also in heavens, on the right hand. Oh, all-praised kidnapping

[1128] "You have left behind, he says, the eight passions of the evilness, into my insatiable and all-eating belly, in the palace of the emperor of the passions".

[1129] In KJB we have: Ps. 9: 6: "On thou enemy, destructions are come to a perpetual end: and thou hast destroyed cities; their memorial is perished with them."; in RON we have: Ps. 9: 6: "The enemy totally lacked their swords and you tore down their cities; the remembrance of theirs perished in sound." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1130] The whole spiritual ascension is being done with Christ and into Christ. The "hell" has here the meaning of the abyss of the theology, so that is hidden from this point of view, into darkness. Itself the descent of Jeus to hell has this meaning too, by representing the descent or His endless humbleness, making just by that to shine out of it the light of His true knowledge, as an endlessly love descending. This is for we know that He descended to hell and He fille it up with shininess. Under the influence of the Catholic theology oriented towards justifying a Christendom in concurrence to the worldly power, we have been accustomed to attribute to God the features of our decayed nature; of a power wanting to impose itself by force. WE have mostly lost the understanding of God Whose power and Kingdom are right inverse to this worldly power. His power consists of love, of gentleness, of delicacy, and of humbleness. These are the true powers and heights which the authentic man is attracted to. The mankind tends towards these heights. These heights will solve all the problems of the human convivence. These heights will install the Kingdom of God. Of course, these ones produce their effect when the man open himself to the descending power. The humbleness is the most efficient transfiguring power of the man, but in the same time the humbleness allows the whole freedom. Any spiritual elevation of the man, if done by force, it won't be a real elevation of the man. In this place of the Ladder the height of the apophatic is identified to the height of the humbleness.

of the glory!), you too have resurrected on the third day, after defeating the three tyrants, or maybe, to say it more appropriately, after you have defeated your own body, your own soul, and your own spirit; or after you have cleaned the three parts of your soul: the passions, the wrath, and the cogitating part[1131].

Then you have gone to the Mount of Olives (this is because it is due us to shorten our word and to not give unnecessary interpretations, especially for we are going to send you this Word, to you who are full of wisdom and you surpass us in the knowledge of all the realities which are above us). It is the Mountain which I reckon that a good runner who climbed it said about: "The mountains high to the stags" (Ps. 103: 19[1132]), namely to the souls, which kill the wild beasts. By running yourself as well to these ones (together with Christ), you have reached the feet of the mountain and you have looked at the skies (for I am bringing again my word to the image of the Word), and you blessed us for we are your disciples, and you have seen the ladder of the virtues placed forwards and well fixed.

You have paid the foundation of the ladder as a wise architect, by the grace of God given to you; better said, you have shown it in all its fulness, though you have urged us, due to your humble cogitation, thought we are simple, you have forced us to lend you our defiled mouth to speak to your people. And that's no wonder. This is for Moses as well, according to the history's example, he used to call on himself as weak at speaking and stuttering. But you, who are the mysterious knower of the untold realities, I do not where you have started [1131] "He calls here as passions, the lust". Belonging to Saint Maximos: "Restrain the wrath of your soul with the love; wither off the lust of your soul with the restraining and wing up your soul's cogitation with the prayer; and the light of your mind won't ever become darkened". He who does this, he will be in a manifested dialogue with God, by prayer, unattracted by lust and by anger towards the limited things of the world. Feeling the presence of God is a true light within soul. Everything is filled up with meaning in the light of the transparent presence of God Whose appeal addressed to the man if felt together with the man's necessity of answering God's appeal.

[1132] In KJB we have: Ps. 104: 17-18: "Where the birds make their nests: as for the stork, the fir trees are her house. // The high hills are a refuge for the wild goats; and the rocks for the conies."; in ROB we have: Ps. 103: 19: "The dwelling place of the stork in the cypress trees. The heigh mountains as shelter to the stags; the rocks towards the escape of the hares." (E. l. t.'s n.) from, but you have reached a waterless spring and entirely full with frogs, or better said with Egyptian charcoals.

But – since it will be inappropriate to let unfinished you Word, I to go, of you the runner one, towards the sky, by further intertwining what we I have picked up from your kindness – we say that by getting closer to the mountain and by starring at the skies with your holy eye and by stepping on the mountains foot, you have run again, you have run all the way up, you have climbed upon cherubs, you have stretched and you have climbed with shouting out, bringing the enemy down. And by stepping ahead you go in the front, better said you advise all of us, even now, by running towards itself the top of the all-pious ladder and by uniting on yourself with the love. And the love is God.

TO HIM IT IS DUE THE GLORY. AMEN.

ABBA DOROTHEOS

1. His Life, His Work, and His Work's Spreading

In the spiritual literature from the epoque of the fathers it has been preserved a great number of letters signed under the names Barsanuphius and John, two spiritual fathers who lives as great ascetics during the first half of the Century VI in Serid Monastery, as South of Gaza. Barsanuphius died in the year 540, being surnamed as "The Great Old Man", and John was surnamed as "The Prophet", he died a little earlier. These letters are answers to the questions addressed by some monks who live back then. From Barsanuphius remained 393 such letters, and from John 446[1133].

More than a hundred of these letters were addressed to Abba Dorotheos, who were a little younger than them, and who lived for a while in the same monastery. The respective letters do not mention Dorotheos as addressee, but the proof for being addressed to him is the fact that those letters circulated also under the name of Dorotheos.

This Dorotheos was born about the beginning of the Century VI and he spent 15 years, namely until about the year 535, in the same monastery founded at Serid, at about the beginning of the Century VI. Around that year, at one year after the death of John and of Serid, the last one dies 15 days after the death of the first one, Dorotheos withdrew on himself from there, because then Barsanuphius totally locked on himself in his monastic cell, and Dorotheos founded his own monastery no far from Serid's Monastery. This is said by O. Bardenhewer (Gesichte der altkirchlichen Literatur, V Band, 1932, pp. 67-70). But S. Vailhé (Saint Dorothée de Gaze et Saint Zosime, Echos d'Orient, 1901, pp. 259-263) says that Dorotheos gfounded his own monastery around the year 540 and he dies around the years 550-580). It seems that Dorotheos was born in Antioch and he enjoyed an exquisite education, and he had even medical training. At Serid's monastery Dorotheos was attracted by Barsanuphius, who was an Egyptian by birth, and by John. Hegumen Serid obeyed those two in all regards. The two old men locked themselves in their monastic cells and they communicated with the brothers and often with Dorotheos too, by their letters distributed by Serid.

The editor of Dorotheos's writings gathered many details about his spiritual life, out of the advised sent him by Barsanuphius and by John, and out of the Teachings written by him. Dorotheos had, in the beginning, the position of the doorman, who received the foreigners and who led the infirmary that was built on the expensed of his bodily brother. In addition to that, he was also appointed to take care of spiritually lead the brothers, though he was very young. He did all things zealously, though he had a very poor health.

But he rather wanted a hidden, modest, and contemplative life.

As founder is his monastery and as protos of that monastery, he held to the brothers a number of spiritual conferences, which were probably written down by some of his listeners, and we think that we can affirm that based on the notes, and those conferences were published under the title of Teachings. Those conferences were put together by a monk from Stoudios Monastery from Constantinople, during the life of the famous hegumen Theodore Studite († 826) and they were published, among other places, in Migne G.P. 88, 1611-1838, together with other eight short epistles[1134]. The Teaching XIX is not a conference belonging to Dorotheos, but it is a sum of sentences extracted from his writings. The Teaching XX is an answer-letter wrote by Dorotheos to the questions asked by a brother. The Teaching XXI comprises a number of questions addressed by Dorotheos to Abba John and John's answers and it is in the collection of the letter wrote by Barsanuphius and by John.

The Teachings wrote by Abba Dorotheos enjoyed a great authority among monks due to their practical advices written in a simple language, but remarkable due to their thin analyses on some virtues, passions, and souly states. One can say that The Ladder wrote by John Climacus was a little influenced by the way which Abbad Dorotheos described the virtues and the passions in, and by the connections noticed by Abba Dorotheos [1134] A first Greek edition of theirs was published by J. Grynäus, Orthodoxographa, Basel, 1569; a second edition by Fronte Dicäus, in Actuarium: from Bignes, "Bibliotheca Patrum", Paris, 1624. This was reproduced also in "Bibliotheca Veterum Patrum", in Venice, 1887, and in G.P> 88.

among those, though in The Ladder the order is much more systematic. But Abba Dorotheos often distinguished on himself by undertaking more detailed and more perseverant analyses upon the souly states, unlike The Ladder that preferred the brief style and the paradoxical formulations.

Abba Zosimus, who spoke with great veneration about Dorotheos (Teachings: I: 11; II: 7; VIII: 3, 5) was a great ascetic who, around the year 520, he founded a monastery in Palestine of Caesarea, and that monastery became a great spiritual center.

One must remark that Abba Dorotheos quoted Evagrius as authority, for several times. One can see that before Evagrius was condemned as Origenistic by the Ecumenical Synod V form the year 553, Evagrius enjoyed, as least within some circles, a great cherishing.

Otto Bardenhewer gives also a series of translations of those Teachings in diverse languages[1135].

These Teachings were translated from the "poor Greek language" also in Romanian. The translation was revised (seemingly according to the Paleo-Greek text) by Bishop Filaret of Râmnic and printed in the printing house of that Bishopric, in the year 1784.

[1135] Otto Bardenhewer, quoted work, pp. 67-70. A richer list with copies and translations in diverse languages is given by the edition of the work "Sources Chrétiennes", no. 92, from the year 1962. I regretted the fact that the author of this list didn't mention the Romanian translations as well. We are mentioning here, in addition to the translation printed by Bishop Filaret of Râmnic, from the year 1784, also the Manuscript no. 40 from Neamț Monastery dating from the Century XVIII, that comprises in 247 pages the whole work of Dorotheos and the life of Dositheos his disciple. The Romanian translation of Dorotheos's works, as published by Bishop Filaret of Râmnic, it ends with "The Last Word of Everghetinos" about Zosimus. We also notice in the list given in the edition from "Source Chrétiennes" that the oldest Slavonic translation made by P. Berynda was printed by Petru Movilă at Kyiv, in the year 1628, and reprinted at Moscow in the years 1652 and 1662 (quoted edition, p. 38). In addition to that, we mention the following Romanian manuscripts, from the Library of the Romanian Academia, comprising the entire work of Dorotheos, as much as it has been preserved: no. 3562, f. 12-211ș dating from the year 1678; no. 2950, f. 1-164 dating from the year 1767; no. 2211, f. 5-124, dating from the Century XVIII; no. 3067, f. 13, r. 208 r., dating from the Century XVIII. It seems that the whole work is comprised also in the manuscript no. 2001, f. 6-75, dating from the Century XIX. In the same Library there are also numerous Romanian manuscripts, comprising one or several Teachings belonging to Abba Dorotheos: no. 2664 (Century XVIII); no. 1994 (Century XVIII), no. 2100 (Century XVIII), no. 2115 (The year 1789), no. 5548 (Century XVIII); no. 1621 (Century XVIII). Then another series of manuscripts partially containing the work of Abba Dorotheos date from the Century XIX. As one can see, some translations date previously to Paisius Velichkovsky (no. 3562, no. 2950, and other manuscripts dating from the Century XVIII).

This translation adapted to a contemporary Romanian language circulates today in various typescripts. We have used that typescript belonging to Fr. Protosyncellus Calinic Argatul, from Cernica Monastery. The Teaching are called in it as Words. This translation didn't contain the Teaching XXIV (that is given in the G.P. only in Latin). Then, it also differs a little the order which the Teachings are placed in. Up to the Teaching XV they follow the order from the G.P. The Word XVI corresponds to the Teaching XXII from the G.P. (explaining some troparia used on Easter, explanations formulated by Saint Gregory of Nazianzus); the Word XVII corresponds to the Teaching XXIII from the G.P. (about the songs at the Holy Martyrs, also according to Saint Gregory of Nazianzus). There follows a Letter towards Them Who Live in Monastic Cells corresponding to the Teaching XVI from the G.P. Finally, a Letter towards Protos and Disciples corresponds to the Teaching XVIII from the G.P. These other three answers are also given in the edition from the Sources Chrétiennes also as answers to the questions of the administrator. There follows the answer to that brother who asked about the soul's insensitiveness, and that corresponds to the Teaching XX from the G.P. There are given, next, the eight short epistles from the G.P., and one more epistle. Then there are given the string of short sentences given from Dorotheos, corresponding to the Teaching XIX form the G.P. The whole order from the Romanian translation corresponds to that one from the Sources Chrétiennes.

We also mention that the Romanian translation has, before The Teachings of Dorotheos, in addition to the Foreword belonging to an anonymous, also a Sending Letter and The Life of Saint Dositheus, the disciple of Abba Dorotheos. This Life of Dorotheos was published as well in the edition from Source Chrétiennes, having in addition to the Greek text also a French translation made by P. M. Braun in Orientalia Christiana, XVI, 2, 1932, pp. 103-123.

The introductory study to the newest edition of the works of Dorotheos, supervised by L. Regnault and J. de Préville[1136], one that follows an identical order to that from the one published in Romanian by the Bishop Filaret or Râmnic, it proved that there are two groups of manuscripts (and therefore also of translations) of the works of Dorotheos: the Studite group, having as the oldest manuscript that one form the Codex Paris Gr. 1089, dating from the X Century, and that is followed by the order from Migne G.P. and the Italian-Greek group represented by other manuscripts and that is followed by the edition from Source Chrétiennes and the Romanian translation printed at Râmnic.

2. The Shape and the Content of the Work of Abba Dorotheos

Among the 24 Teaching attributed to Abba Dorotheos, the XXIV – as proven by J. Hausherr – doesn't belong to Dorotheos, but it belongs to John of Daljatha, or John of Sabba, an ascetic Nestorian author who lived during the VIII Century[1137]. The Teaching XV (about fasting) it is contained in the most manuscripts (and in the G.P., in the edition form Source Chrétiennes, and in the Romanian translation belonging to Filaret). The Teachings XII and XIII corresponds to the Teachings XVI-XVII from Sources Chrétiennes and from the translation made by Filaret, but they are rather homilies to some liturgical texts. The Teachings XVI and XVII are advises addressed to some groups of monks. The edition from Source Chrétiennes and the Romanian translation place those among the letters: the Teaching XVII and the Letter II (the Letter I towards Them Who Live in Monastic Cells, the Letter II towards Protos and Disciples). The Teaching XVIII from the G.P. is given as the Letters XXX-VI towards the administrator. The Teaching XIX from the G.P. isn't but a group of sentences from diverse writings belonging to Dorotheos, which are placed by the edition rom Sources Chrétiennes and by the Romanian edition at the end of the Letters.

The Teaching XX, corresponding to the Letter VII from Sources Chrétiennes and from the Romanian translation, it is added to the eight Letters from the G.P., or nine in the Sourced Chrétiennes and from the Romanian translation. The Teaching XXI form the G.P. doesn't contain from Dorotheos but his questions; the answers belong to John.

[1137] Orientalia Christiana Periodica, 1940, pp. 220-221, the edition from Source Chrétiennes, p. 30.

So, by excluding the Teaching XXIV that sems inauthentic, and in which only the questions belong to Dorotheos, the authenticity of the other writings contained by Migne collection, in that from Source Chrétiennes, and in the Romanian translation belonging to Filaret, hasn't been yet questioned by anyone.

The editors of the text from Source Chrétiennes regret that in the edition of the G.P. wasn't included also The Life of Dorotheos, one that contains information which couldn't have been given except by Dorotheos himself.

The Teachings and the Letters are only a part of Dorotheos's work. In the Sending Letter it is regretted the fact that only these Letters belonging to Dorotheos had been found. Even the Teachings have not been preserved in their integral text (to be seen the Teaching I). They rather are sketches. But they are so alive, so familiar, that one can consider that they have been preserved according to the notes taken during the Speeches done by Dorotheos[1138]. This is the main aspect of the Teachings: a natural simplicity, a spontaneity not found in any other spiritual writing belonging to the fathers' epoque; they are not writings but they actually are living speeches belonging to a great spiritual adviser. There is in these Speeches a charming kindness, one characteristic to the great hermits from Egypt, a sense of the real, and the care for remaining simple and profoundly authentic both in their teaching and life. "It is an always direct. Practical teaching, one wonderfully adapted to the auditorium's mentality".

But under the appearances of simplicity there shines a treasure of finesse and of great psychological depths. Abba Dorotheos is a profound observer, and a remarkable psychologist; he goes all the way to the deep of the human nature, bringing new perspectives upon it. The thinnest meanders of the evil tendencies, the subtle illusions of the self-appreciation, and the devil's tricks, are noticed and unveiled with great craftsmanship. Although he didn't want to be an orator or a writer, he built his exposes with great skillfulness. He loved the distinctions, and the systematic ordering of the theme's parts. He always exemplified his teachings with most impressive examples, and he used images of a remarkable beauty and of a great realism[1139].

Tough he was very faithful to the spiritual teaching of the fathers he was not a simple compiler. Being a great analyst, one can also notice at him an effort to synthesize, in order to detach the dominant lines of the Christian spirituality.

He tied the man's effort towards consummation on the man's relation with Christ and on following Christ.

We must conform on ourselves to Chrit's death, by offering on ourselves together with Him, to God-and-the Father. The whole ascesis is tied to the "Mystery of the Easter"; our life must be an Easter in action, a crossing from sin to virtue, form earth to heavens, form creation to God, as a participation to the mystery of the death and of the resurrection of the Savior. Ther is in Dorotheos's teachings a great optimism. The great enemy has been defeated by the death of Christ. So, we can defeat him at our turn. The evil, the demons, they have not such a great power of existence, and therefore not for working as well, except as much as we concede it to them. They are strong only through delusions, through setting ups. The strengthening of the self-conscience, of our spiritual sensitiveness, it will escape us from the inconsistent nets of the passions, of the demons. Out passions work through our "thoughts", better said by crooking out our thoughts. But the passion are constructions helped by us because of our inattentiveness. Our attention can easily scatter them away, and it can heal us up again.

The passions have their support in a deceived and deceiving will of ours. We reckon that by manifesting that will we serve our own interests, while in fact we damage our being. It is a deceiving will that is strengthened by a claim (δικαίωμα), namely by that claim that we a right when following our egotistic interests which shortly after will be proven to be contrary to us.

The self-conscience and the conscience about what we really are, and about the mode which we can strengthen our being in and achieve the eternal live in, on its expenses, it needs watchfulness, and attention, and a continuous taking of heed, and strenuous effort of paying attention to everything we thing and do, in order to notice everything that is deceiving in what seems to us as being favorable to our life, but it actually isn't.

[1139] Idem, p. 35.

By our self-conscience we can distinguish the good from the bad and we can avoid the evil. But the fake love for ourselves makes us to deceive on ourselves in our knowledge. That's why we need an objective and sapient adviser, one animated by a true love for us. One must not trust even the "right-reckoning" of his, especially at the beginning of his monastic life. One always ought to ask an adviser. The passions are a product of the insensitiveness for the self and for others, and of the lack of a true sensitiveness.

One must fight the whole battle for freeing on himself from passions, which represents a sensitization of the conscience towards ourselves and towards others, and whose culminant steps are the humbleness and the love.

One must build up the virtues as a spiritual edifice, as a living building, balanced and harmonious. Ane even each virtue represents an equilibrium of the nature, joining together the freedom and the love for others, the dynamism and the steadfastness, the strength and the gentleness, the watchfulness and the drunkenness of the enthusiasm, the rationality and the feeling.

As John Climacus did too, Abba Dorotheos doesn't want to speak too much about the supreme steps of the climbing towards God, about the sweet and happy living into God, that one that is beyond any passion. Both of them aim to give advises for successfully walk the battle road, the climbing towards that state. One cannot understand the experience of God only by reading others' writings, but it will truly be known when achieved by them who will arrive at the end of the climbing. Both of them say a few words, though these words are very concentrated and endlessly deep, about dispassion, quietude, and living into God. Dorotheos speaks about the "sweetness of being together with God", about a "tasting" of God. Only by experience once can know the joy of encountering God and of living together with God.

Diverse Teachings Useful to the Soul

Foreword of an Unknown

One ought to know that there were two Dorotheos and two Barsanuphius. One of them were ill with the things of Sever[1140]. The other two kept the right-faith and the consummate ascesis. About the last two it is about in the present book. That's why we reckon this book as worthy of being accepted and full of virtue and very useful, as a book truly belonging to the blessed Dorotheos who showed on himself as right-believer and who was known among the fathers, and not belonging to the other Dorotheos of a wrong faith. This thing was taught to us very well also by our father and confessor about Christ, the all-wide hegumen of the Studites' Monastery, in his testament addressed to his disciples, by saying, after he presented the teaching of his faith and after he rejected all-together the miscreant heretics: "And I accept the whole book instilled by God of the Old and New Testaments; in addition to those, also the godlike lives and writings of the holy and godlike fathers, teachers, and ascetics. And he said that because of the damaging Pamphilus who, by coming from the East, he calumniated those pious men, on Mark, on Isaiah, on Barsanuphius, on Dorotheos, and on Hesychius; not on Barsanuphius on Isaiah and of Dorotheos together acephalus with those acephalus and decacherates[1141]and anathemized but the one among saints Sophron in his libelous. Thes is for those mentioned before are others than these ones. I accept these ones on the ground of the fathers' tradition reached at us through the witness of the All-Holy Patriarch Tarasios, him who was a hierarch before, and by the witness of other worthy of being trusted persons from here and from East. And I see [1140] Sever, the Monophysite Patriarch of Antioch, between the year 512-518.

Barsanuphius's image in the adornment of the Great Church together with those of the holy fathers: Anthony, Ephrem, and others. This is for I haven't found in their teachings nothing impious but, on the opposite, very useful to the soul".

Behold how, our great father Theodore, has presented his opinion on the two Dorotheos, and the present teaching he declared it as very useful, as it truly is useful to the soul. He who fits his live according to this teaching, he will truly reach the consummate measure into Christ and the adorning with the crown of the dispassion, and he will be found worthy of the eternal live together with the other saints.

The Epistle towards that Brother Who Asked for Being Sent to Him the Found Words Belonging to Our Father Dorotheos

1) I praise, my beloved brother, your urge, I congratulate your blessed and loving soul, for the true zeal into the good and beautiful things. This is for we ought to praise the virtue of researching with so much effort and to sincerely praise the blessed and truly-worthy-of-God our father, that one called as a gift-from-God. This is because out of praising this blesses father, it will be born also the love for God and the true life. This is for the praise, according to the blessed Gregory, it will cause zeal, and the zeal it will cause virtue. And the virtue, it will cause happiness. So, we must rejoice and we must together-rejoice of this thriving of yours. This is for you prove to be walking on the traces of his who followed the example of that one who was gentle and humble in hearts of that one who, by looking at Peter's rejection and of the other two who were together with Peter, he disrobed on himself of any passion related to what he saw and he surrendered on himself insomuch to the deeds pleasant to God, so that, as you know very well, than he said towards the Savior: "Behold we have left all thing and we have followed You" (Mt. 19: 27).

That's why, by being consummate in a short time, together with God, he reached a great age, not by living in deserts and in seen mountains, neither powerfully mastering upon the bodies-eater wild beast, but by embracing the soul's desert, and by aspiring to get closer to the eternal mountains, by knowing how to enlighten in a wonderful manner and stepping over killer-of-souls snakes and shrews. And he was found worthy to reach in a short time these victories, with the help from Christ, by manly denying his own will. This is for that opened him the non-wandering path of the fathers, and that made his burden blessed and light and the savior yoke as gentle, truly gentle.

2) Out of this he learnt the goof path towards height, namely the humbleness. And by receiving the advice: "Be merciful and gentle" with your deed and according to the word of the holy old men, he was adorned by that with all the virtues. That's why the blessed one always had the fathers' word into his mouth: "He who has reached to cut off his will, he has reached the place of the resting". He has found, for he has searched with worthiness, that the root of all passions is the self-appreciation (φιλαυτια). On this one, as upheld by our sweet-bitter will[1142], it will be totally withered in its root, by suing this powerful medicine; and in the same time with it, it will wither also its evil offshoots. By this he becomes the true plowman of the immortal goods and he will bring fort the fruits of the real life, by earning that treasure hidden into the field and well-searched-for and found by him, and by enriching on himself with the things which can be poured out. I wish I was skillful both with my tongue and with my understanding, so that I would have been worthy to present his holy life in details, toward the common benefit, as a surest as possible example of virtue, by showing how this blessed one ran wonderfully on that narrow and wide path[1143]; narrow – due to its non-straying and to the non-scattering and for it guarded him from sliding towards the precipice on both sides; this is for the friend of God, the great Basil, he defined thus the narrowness of the savior and full of troubles path; and wide – due to its freedom from addiction and due to the confidence it gives into them who advise, to him who choses it as path towards God, and [1142] Our will is sweet and bitter. It is sweet for it satisfied our pride; it is bitter because of bringing us all sorts of troubles. Here is the same ambiguity comprised into the "knowledge of the good and of the bad", in that knowledge coming to us out of our separation from others and from the entire reality.

[1143] Actually, the narrow path is wide in the same time, from another point of view, so that is paradoxical because by its narrowness the soul is elevated to the width of the infinite love of God and into the understanding and tasting of God's borderless live. Only her of him who totally and exclusively loves a person will discover the whole endlessness of that person's charm.

especially for the abundance of the humbleness, the only one that is above the traps of the devil, according to the Great Anthony. That's why it was fulfilled in his case the word: "broad is Your command very" (Ps. 118: 96[1144]).

3) But I will pass this because of being something above my powers. But I know that in addition to all other good teachings, the blesses one gathered also those teaching which are praised by the philosophers from outside. This is for by gathering those too as a truly wide bee and by finding something useful in those teachings, be became an unhesitant teaching in those ones as well, at the right time. Thus, he impropriated the teachings: "nothing too much" and "know on yourself" and others like those, which I was driven towards too, if not by a full of gratitude will, at least by the need of the helplessness.

And what his zealous and loving-of-good soul commanded me, I dared to keep my silence on that, avoiding thus the mistake of the disobedience and fearing the punishment of the idleness. And together with this letter, I have sent to you, you the wisemen sitting at the table with God, the word that was lingering unworked within me, namely the teaching of the blessed one which have been found, those teachings which he was worthy of taking them from the fathers and those teachings which he taught his disciples, composing them and teaching them according to our first and true Savior. If we haven't been able to retrieve all his holy teachings, but only very few of them, and these ones gathered without a connection among them by some of the zealous ones, by the taking care from God, to your skillfulness these teachings will be useful even in this shortness of theirs, according to the word: "Give occasion to the wiseman and he will become wiser"[1145].

[1144] In KJB we have: Ps. 119: 96: "I have seen an end of all perfection: but thy commandment is exceeding broad."; in ROB we have: Ps. 118: 96: "I have seen an end to all consummate things, but I haven't seen and end to Your commandment." (E. l. t's n.)

[1145] This is the text from the G.P. 88, 1613-1618. In the text from "Sources Chretiénnes" and in the text of Filaret, there follow two more chapters which are reiterated in some characterizations of the living of Dorotheos in monastery. But it seems that those are later additions. This is because otherwise they shouldn't have followed after the head no. 2 and before the phrase which the head no. 3 starts with.

Diverse Teachings He Left to His Disciples When He Left the Monastery of Abba Serid and He Founded by the Help of God His Own Monastery, After the Death of Abba John the Prophet and After the Total Silence of Abba Barsanuphius

On Rejection[1146]

1) In the beginning, when God created the man, God placed the man into Paradise, as the godlike Scripture tells us, and God adorned the man with all the virtues. And God commanded the man not to eat out of the tree from the middle of the Paradise. And the man was in the delectation of the Paradise, in prayer, in spiritual view, in a middle glory and honor[1147], by having his senses whole and unharmed[1148], and by being in that state according to nature as he was created. This is for God created the man in His image and likeness, namely immortal, free, ad adorned with all the virtues. But when he transgressed the commandment by eating out of that tree which God forbad him to each out of, the man was removed form Paradise and he fell off the state according to the nature, and he ended in that state contrary to nature, namely into sin, in the love for glory and in the love for pleasures of his life, and in the other passions, by falling under their domination[1149]. This is because the man made himself their servant by his falling. And thus, the sin started to gradually grow up and the [1146] We have preserved the source word by a verbatim translation, though we reckon that renunciation would have been a better rendering. (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1147] In the text from the "Source Chrétiennes" and in the Latin translation (G.P. 88, col. 1618) it is said: "In the whole glory and honor". But it could be that the Grek text is right, because Adam was not at the final end of his glory, but only at its middle.

[1148] Even his senses were unweakened, penetrating, but this was because through his senses worked not only the weakened mind of the man but the Holy Ghost Himself Who kept the human mind in the fullness of tis work.

[1149] According to the Holy Fathers, the state of sin isn't the natural state of the man' the natural state of the man was his state into God. The Catholic teaching is different, by saying his by falling the man lost what was a supra-natural adding and so the man has remained in the state of the pure nature. It isn't natural to commit sins.

death reigned. Honoring God was found nowhere, nowhere was His knowledge, but everywhere was the absence of the knowledge about God. Only a few somebody, as some of the fathers said, were still moved by the natural law, as there were Abraham and the other patriarchs, Noad and James, and, simply saying, a few somebody. There were very rare they who knew God. This was because the enemy stretched the whole his evilness. And by reigning the sin, it started the worshipping of idols, the faith into many gods, the witchcraft, the killings, and the whole devil's evilness.

2) Then the Good God, by having mercy on His creature, He gave to Moses the written law, which some of the evils were stopped, and which He commanded some of the good things to be done, by saying: "You do this, you don't do that". He commanded and said immediately: "Your Lord God is One Lord" (Deut. 6: 4), in order to separate their mind from the multitude of gods. And" You shall love your Lord God with the whole your soul and with the whole your thought" (Deut. 6: 5). You shall announce everywhere that God is One and there is no other God except Him. And He said again in His ten commandments: "You shall worship your God and you shall serv only Him and you shall attach on yourself to Him" (Deut. 6: 13). And "You shall swear in His name". Then He added: "You shall not have other gods, neither in the likeness of anything else which are high in the sky and down on earth" (Deut. 5: 8). This was because they worshipped all the creatures.

3) So, the Good God gave the law towards help, towards turning back, and towards straightening the evil. But it was not strengthened. He sent prophets but neither they succeeded. This was because the evilness was even more strengthened, as Isaiah says: "Neither the cut, nor the wound, nor the bruise were warm anymore, and it was no longer possible to bandage them up, or to anoint them with oil" (Isa. 1: 6). To say so, the evilness wasn't only on one side, neither on a sole place, but it was all over the body. The evilness engulfed the whole soul. The evilness dominated all soul's powers. Al soul's powers were enslaved to the sin, all of them were dominated by sin. This was because Jeremiah says as well: "A have healed Babylon and it hasn't got healed", namely I heralded Your name to Babylon, I have presented Your commandments, Your benefactions, Your promises, I told them in advance about the enemies invasions (Jer. 51: 9) but they still got not healed, namely they didn't repent, they didn't get scared, and they didn't turn away from their evilness. Or as he says in another place: "It didn't accept the rebuke", namely the urge, the teaching. And in Psalm he says: "Their soul got disgusted of any food and they got closer to the gates of the death" (Ps. 106: 18[1150]).

4) Then the Good and loving-of-people God sends the Only Begotten His Son. This was because only God could heal and defeat such a passion. And the prophets knew that. That's why David told clearly: "You Who sits on cherubs, show on Yourself, soar Your mastery and come to save us" (Ps. 79: 2-3[1151]). And: "Lord, lean down the heavens and You come down" (Ps. 118: 5[1152]). And others like these ones. But, also the other prophets, each of them shouted out many such things and diversely, by some of them calling Him to come down, through others reassuring us than He will unmistakingly come down.

So, our Lord came, by making on Himself man for us, for, as Saint Gregory says, to heal the alike with the alike, the soul with the soul, and the body with the body[1153]. This is for Me made on Himself man in all regards, except the sin. He took out being itself, itself the first fruits of our kneading, and He made on Himself the New Adam, in the image of Him Who has created Adam. He renewed what was according to nature so that he made again whole and unharmed our senses, as they were created in the beginning. He renewed the fallen man by making on Himself man, He liberated the one who was enslaved to the sin and driven by the sin forcedly. This was because the man was dragged by force and tyranny by his enemy and almost, even they, who did not want to commit sin, they committed sins forcedly, as the Apostle said on behalf of us: "Because I do not do the good things I want, but the evil I don't want, that one I do" (Rom. 7: 19).

[1150] In KJB we have: Ps. 107: 18: "Their soul abhorreth all manner of meat; and they draw near unto the gates of death."; in ROB we have: Ps. 106: 18: "Their soul hated any food and they got closer to the gates of the death." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1151] In KJB we have: Ps. 80: 1: "GIVE ear, O Shepherd of Israel, thou that leadest Joseph like a flock; thou that dwellest between the cherubims, shine forth."; in ROB we have" Ps. 79: 2-3: "You Who sits on cherubs, show on Yourself // before Ephraim and Beniamin and Manasseh. // Wake up my power and come and save us." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1152] In KJB we have: Ps. 144: 5: "Bow thy heavens, O Lord, and come down: touch the mountains, and they shall smoke."; in ROB we have: Ps. 143: 5: "Lord, bow down the heavens and come down, touch the mountains and make them to smoke." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1153] Word no. 28: 11; G.P. 36: 325 B and Word no. 45: 9; G.P. 36: 633 C.

5) So, God by being on Himself man, He liberated the man from under the tyranny of the sin, He crushed even the sin's strength, and He delivered us, so we won't be enslaved by sin anymore, if we do not commit sins willingly. This is for He has given us power, as He said, to step over snake and shrews and over all the enemy's power (Lk. 10: 19), by being us totally cleaned up by the holy Baptism. This is for the Holy Baptism forgives us of and it erases all our sins. And our Good God by knowing our weakness, and by knowing in advance that we are going to commit sins again after the Holy Baptism as well, as it was written: "Because the man's heart leans intentionally towards the evil things from his youth" (Gen. 8: 21). He has given us again according to His kindness, holy commandments which lean us up, for, if we want, we will be able to clean on ourselves again by keeping the commandments, and not only of our sins but even of our passions themselves. This is because what else is the passion but the sin. Passions are: the wrath, the vain-glory, the love for pleasure, the hatred, the evil lust, and the things alike. And the sins are the works of the passions, when somebody commits the passions with his deeds, when he works through his body those deeds which his passions urge him to. So, it is possible that somebody has the passion but he doesn't work them.

6) So, God has given us, as I said before, commandments which clean us up even of our passions themselves, of themselves the inclinations of our inward man. This is for those commandments sow within the man the discernment between good and evil, and they wake him up, and they show him the motifs which he comes to sin because of. And He says: "He issued as law: you shall not fornicate, and I say; neither you shall lust for. He issued as law: "you shall not kill, and I say: neither you shall get angry" (Mt. 5: 27-28). This is because, if you lust, even if you do not fornicate today, your inward lust won't cease disturbing you, until you will rush to work it. If you get angry and upset against your brother, you will end to slander him and then you will plot against him. And so, by slowly advancing, you will finally end killing him.

Again, the law says: "eye for eye, tooth for tooth" and the followings (Mt. 5: 22). And He urges us not only to receive with long-suffering the hit of him who slaps us in our face, but also to turn him, humbly, our other cheek. The purpose of the law was that of teaching us not to do what we do not want to be done to us. Back then the law stopped us from doing the evil because of fearing not to be that evil done to us. Now it is being tried, as I said before, to remove from within man the hatred itself, and itself the love for pleasure, itself the love for glory and the other passions.

7) The purpose from now of our Master Christ, it is, as I said before, to teach us where we have come from to all these sins, where we have falling off from on all evil days. So, he firstly has liberated us, as I said previously, through the Holy Baptism, by giving us the forgiveness of our sins: and He has given us the power for doing the good, if we want that; and for no longer being us attracted, as one would say, forcedly to evil. This is because he who is enslaved to the sins he will be dragged by them, as he says: “Each one is tied up by the chains of his sins” (Prov. 5: 22). Then He teaches us by His holy commandments how we could be cleaned even of our passions, in order us not to fall by those again in the same sins. And then He shows us the cause where somebody can come from even to despise and to disobey God’s commandments. And thus, He gives us as a present also the medicine for that, in order us to be able to obey and to be saved.

So, what that medicine is and what the cause of the despising is? Hear to what our Lord says: “Learn from Me, for I am gentle and humble in heart and you will find resting to your souls” (Mt. 11: 28). Behold how He taught us here, by a sole word, the root and the cause of all evil things, and its medicine in order to achieve all the good things: He showed us that the pride is the one that brought us down, and that is impossible us to receive mercy except through what is contrary to pride: the humble-cogitation. This is because the pride gives birth to the despise and to the disobedience that destroys us, unlike the humble-cogitation that gives birth to obedience and to the salvation of the souls. And by saying humble-cogitation I mean that true one, and not the humbleness in the simple word and manifested; I mean that inward state humble and born in due manner within the heart itself, within the thought itself. This is for He says: “I am gentle and humble in heart”.

8) So, he who wants to find the true resting to his soul, let him learn the humble-cogitation, and so he will see that in it there is the whole joy and the whole glory and the whole resting[1154], as in pride there are all the opposite things. This is because where have we come to all these troubled from? Why have we fallen into the whole this state worthy to be cried for? It hasn't been that because of our pride? Not because of our lack-of-wisdom? Not because we keep our evil will? Not because it masters within is the bitterness of our will[1155]? But from where? Wasn't the man created into the whole delectation, into the whole joy, into the whole resting, into the whole glory" Wasn't him in Paradise? He was commanded: you shall not do this! But he did it. Can you see here the pride? Can you see here the strength of the stubbornness? Can you see here the disobedience? That's why, when God saw this shamelessness, He said: This one is insane, this one doesn't know how to rejoice on himself. If he doesn't experience bad days, he will totally perish. This is because if he doesn't learn what the trouble is, he won't find out what the resting is. Then God gave the man the things he was worthy of and God removed the man from Paradise. So, the man was surrendered to his love for the self and to his wills, in order him to crush his bones, and in order him to learn not to trust to himself, but to obey God's commandment, so that these misfortunate consequences of his disobedience to teach the man the resting of the obedience, as the prophet says: "You will be taught by your disobedience" (Jer. 2: 19).

But the kindness of God didn't overlook His creature, as I said for many times, but He calls His creature again: "Come to me all of you who are tired and burdened and I will rest you" (Mt. 21: 28. Behold, you have got tired; behold, you have suffered so many hardships; behold, you have been submitted to the temptations of the evil and of your disobedience. Come, finally, turn yourselves back! Come and know your helplessness and your dishonor, come to your resting and glory. Come, turn yourselves through the humble cogitation to the life that you have lost by haughty cogitation. “Learn from Me, for I am gentle and humble in heart, and you will find resting to your souls” (Mt. 11: 28).

[1154] The humbleness is the true resting of the soul who has got rid of discontent that previously was due to non-accomplishing his lusts for pride, for pleasures, and because of the enmities coming out of there. He no longer must fight other for satisfying his ever-bigger lust, but he lives in the endlessness of God, and he must not fight his fellow humans in order to achieve that, but he only must fight his own lusts which disturb him. He fights for quietude through quietude. Where there is pride, there will be the disturbance from ambitions; where there is humbleness, there will be the resting into God for God has in Himself everything. It is not me who fights for passing things, but God gives me the non-passing things and also the passing things, on the small measure that I need those.

[1155] Our will, when unsatisfied as we want, they will often cause us bitterness.

9) Woe, my brothers, what the pride can do! Woe, what the humble cogitation can do! Why all these detours were needed? This is for, if Adam humbled on himself and if he obeyed God and fi he kept the commandment since the beginning, he wouldn’t fall. But even after Adam became ugly, God have Adam occasion to repent and to receive mercy. But Adam’s neck remained stiff. And God cam and said: “Adam, where are you?”, namely: “From what glory to what shame have you gone down?”. And then God asked Adam: “Why have you committed sin? Why have you transgressed the commandment?”. By that God urges Adam to say: “Forgive me!”. But where did God hear: “Forgive me!”? Nowhere could be seen humbleness; nowhere repentance. But, on the opposite: “That woman that You have me”. He didn’t say: “The woman mocked me”, but: “That woman that You gave me, as he would say: “The misfortune that You have brought upon my head”. This is because so it happens, brothers, when the man cannot stand to blame on himself: he won’t avoid to blame God Himself.

Then God asked that one too: “Why haven’t you kept the commandment?”. It was like He said her: “At least say: forgive me! – so that your soul to become humble and to be saved”. But He didn’t hear this time either a: “Forgive me!”, but she answered: “The snake has deluded me”, namely: “If he has committed sin, why would I be guilty”. What are you doing, you the miserable ones? Do you kneel down, do you admit your mistake, do you look at the nakedness of your sin? But no one of them was worthy of blame on himself, no one had any humbleness at all.

10) So, behold, look at where your state has reached at. Behold at what sorts and at how many evil things have brought us our impulse of justifying on ourselves, of trusting to ourselves, of keeping our will. And all of these are daughters of the pride that is the enemy of God, as the humbleness’s daughters are: the blaming on the self, the mistrust in our wisdom, the hatred on our own will[1156]. Through these ones somebody can be found worthy of retrieving on himself and to come back to what he was by his nature, by cleaning on himself with the help of Christ's commandments. This is because without humbleness, one cannot obey the commandments, neither one can come to any good, as Abba Mark said: "Without the crushing of the heart will be impossible somebody to be delivered from sin and to achieve the virtues"[1157]. So, through the crushing of his heart, somebody will accept the commandments, and he will be delivered from sin, and he will achieve the virtues and, finally, he will come to resting.

11) This thing being known to all the saints, they hurried on themselves up by the whole their behavior, to unite on themselves with God. This is for some of them became loving-of-God, namely they from after the holy Baptism they not only cut off the ties with the works of the passions, but they wanted to defeat also the passions themselves and so they to become dispassionate. Thus were the Saints Anthony and Pachomius, and the other of-God-bearer men. Aiming these two to clean on themselves, as the Apostle says, of all the defilement of their bodies and ghosts, they experienced that the soul is being cleaned, as I said before, by keeping the commandments. This is for the mind itself gets cleaned by that and it will see anew and it will turn back to its state according to nature. This is for "the luminous commandment of the Lord it enlightens the eyes" (Ps. 32: 9[1158]).And they understood that while in the world they cannot easily achieve the virtue and that's why they conceived and chose an unusual living and behavior, namely the lonely one, and they started running away from the world and inhabiting the deserts, and to spend their time in fasting, in communication. And they last only by that. That's why the pride is also the cause of the general disharmony; because of the pride all the things go squeaky, all of them suffer of a general illness because of the pride. They cannot totally separate from one another, but they neither are fully and healthily articulated with one another. I say this thinking at creation. This is because God doesn't suffer this disharmony within Himself, but He suffers for the sufferance of His creation, of His work. The creation opposes His attention also in order to blame Him for the sufferance the creation endures as His work. The denial of the own will it is the denial of that will that opposes God's will Who wants to keep all realities in harmony. The humbleness means to be content with the own framing into the general whole, in the whole's harmony, that as such is also in harmony with God.

[1157] Mark the Ascetic, About Them Who Believe…, 1971, G.P. 65: 1961 A.

[1158] In KJB we have" Ps. 33: 9: "For he spake, and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast."; in ROB we have: Ps. 32: (: "For He said and they were made, He commanded and they were created." (E. l. t.'s n.)

sleeping on the floor, in taking vigils, and in other heavy sufferings, in rejecting their country, their kinships, the money, and their own wealth; and simply speaking, they crucified the world to themselves and they kept not only the commandments but they brought gifts to God, and behold how:

The commandments of Christ have been given to all Christians and every Christian owes to keep them. This is for, they are, as somebody would say, the taxes owed to the emperor. Who will escape the punishment if he says: "I do not pay the taxes to the emperor"? But there are in the world great and illustrious people who not only pay taxes to the emperor but they even bring him gifts. And these ones will be found worthy of great honor and of great gifts and offices.

12) So, thus the fathers too, they not only that kept the commandments but they also brought gifts to God. And those gifts are: the chastity and the non-gathering-of-wealth. These is because those ones are not commandments but gifts. This is because nowhere has been written: Do not take woman, do not make children. Neither Christ issued a commandment when He said: "Sell you wealth". This is for, when the law man came to him, saying: "Good Teacher, what should I do to inherit the eternal life?", he answered: "You know the commandments: do not kill, to not commit adultery, to not steal, do not bear liar witness against your neighbor" and the others (Mt. 19: 16-21). And that one saying: "All of these I have been keeping them from my youth, Christ added: "If you want to become consummate, sell your wealth and shar it to the poor" and the others. Behold that He didn't say: "Sell your wealth" by giving him a commandment, but He advised him. This is because, by telling him: "if you want", He showed that He didn't command but He advised.

13) So, as I said, the fathers brought to God, in addition to the other virtues, as gifts: the chastity and the non-gathering-of-wealth, and as I said before, they crucified the world to themselves and they lived in ascesis in order to crucify themselves too, to the world, as the Apostle says: "The world has been crucified to me, and I to the world" (Gal. 6: 14). What is the difference here? The world will be crucified to the man if the man rejects the world; namely when the man embraces the lonely life and he forsakes his parents, his kinships, his money, his wealth, his businesses, and his deals. Then the world will be crucified to him. And this will be because he has forsaken the world. This is what the Apostle says: "To me the world has been crucified". Then he adds: "and I to the world". So, how is the man crucified to the world? When after his deliverance from the external things he will even fight his pleasures, even the lusts for the things and for his needs and he will kill his passions. Then he will crucify on himself to the world and he will be found worthy, according to the Apostle, of saying: "To me the world has been crucified, and I to the world".

14) So, the fathers as I said, by crucifying the world to themselves, they strived through ascetic toils to crucify on themselves as well, to the world. We reckoned that we crucify the world to us when we left the world and came to monastery; but we do not want to crucify on ourselves too, to the world. This is because we still have the pleasures towards the world, we still have our addictions to the world, we still are addicted to the worldly glory, we still are addicted to foods and clothes. This is because if there is a beautiful tool and we are addicted to it and if we allow this small tool to dominate us, as Abba Zosimus said, by cherishing it as it would have been a hundred kilos of gold, even if we reckon that we have exited the world and we have forsaken the world's things and we have come to monastery, we actually still are addicted to the world through unimportant things. We suffer that because of our much lack of mind, because of forsaking the great and valuable things we still fulfill our passions through some very small things. Each of us for forsook what he had, he who had big things he forsook big things, he who has something he forsook that something too, each one according to their power, and we have come to monastery; and as I said, through unimportant things we still satisfy our addiction. But we mustn't do that. But as we have rejected the world and the things from within world, let's also reject our addiction to the things from the world, and let's know what the rejection is and what we have to monastery for, and what the monasticism is, and let's match ourselves to it, and let's live in ascesis as our (spiritual, t. n.) fathers did and do.

15) The shima we bear is the sleeveless colovion[1159], a leather girdle, the analav[1160] (the periman[1161]) and the long monastic robe[1162]. These ones are symbols and we need to find out what the symbols (the images) of our shima mean. Why do we wear the long monastic robe (the gown) sleeveless? If all others have sleeve, why don't we? The sleeves as image of the hands and the hands mean the work. When it comes to us a thought to work something belonging to the former man by using our hands, for instance to steal, or to hit, or simply to commit any sin by using our hands, we have to take heed at our shima and to find out that we have not sleeves, namely we have no hands to do the things of the former man. But our monastic robe has also a sign of porphyry (of purple). What does the purple sign want to say? Anyone who serves in the emperor's army has on his cloak a purple sign. This is for the emperor wears purple clothes, so all his soldiers attach porphyry on their cloak, namely they wear an imperial coat, and that shows that they belong to emperor's army and they serve him.

[1159] We haven't found this word in the Romanian Explicative Dictionary, so that we have decided to give it as it is spelled in the source text. (E. l. t.'s n.)
[1160] Vid supra.

Likewise, ourselves: we take the porphyry sign from on out monastic long robe, by showing that we have entered Christ's army, and that we owe to endure all His sufferings as He endured for us. Actually, when our Lord suffered, he wore the porphyry vestment. Firstly, as Emperor. For He is "The emperor of the emperors and the Lord of the lords" (Apoc. 19: 16). And then as One Who was mocked by the lawless people. So, at our turn, by having the porphyry sign, we announce, as I said, that we endure all His passions. And as the soldier doesn't leave his army in order to become a plowman, or a merchant – because by that he would fall off his army (as the Apostle says: "No one while serving in the army intertwines on himself with the businesses of the life, so that he will be pleasant to the army commander" (2 Tim. 2: 4) – likewise us, we must fight and we must not worry about any of the things of the present world, and to serve only God, as they say, for the virgin to sit down next to him, unscattered (1 Cor. 7: 34).

16) But we also have a girdle. Why do we wear it? The girdle we bear is firstly a symbol that we are ready to work. This is for anyone who wants to work, they firstly put on their girdles, and then they start working, as it was said: "let your waists be girdled" (Eph. 6: 14). And again, like the dead body is girdled, likewise us too let's kill our lust. This is for the girdle is place around the waist. For there are the kidneys, which they say there is in them the lusting part of the soul. This is what the Apostle says: "Kill your limbs from on earth, the fornication, and the uncleanness" and the others (Col. 3: 5).

17) We have also the long monastic robe[1163]. This one is being placed in the image of the cross on our shoulders. It is the symbol of the cross borne on our shoulders, as He says: "Take your cross and follow Me" (Mt. 16: 24; Mk. 8: 34). And what the cross is else than the consummate killing done within us by our faith into Christ? This is for the faith, as again says the Paterikon, it always removes what impedes us and it makes unimpeded our work that leads us to such a consummate killing, or it makes somebody to be dead towards all the realities of the present world. And if somebody left his parents, it will help him fighting his addiction to them, as also to money and riches, or to any thing he has rejected, as I said. It makes him to reject even the addiction itself. And this is the consummate rejection.

But we also put on a culion (cuculion[1164]). And this is the symbol of our humbleness. This is because the innocent children wear round hats. So, we wear this monastic hat in order us to be children in what regards our evilness, as the Apostle says: "Brothers, do not be children in your mind, but regarding your evilness" (1 Cor. 14: 20). But what does it mean being children in what regards your evilness? The little child has not evilness, if he is not honored, he won't get angry, and if he is honored, he won't get full of vain-glory. If somebody takes his things, the little child won't be bothered, for he is little child in what regards his evilness. He won't avenge, he won't crave for glory. The monastic hat is also a sign of the grace from God. This is for like the round hat covers and warms up the little child's head, likewise the grace from God coves our mind, as they say in Paterikon. This is for the monastic hat is the symbol of the grace of our Savior God, that covers our cogitation and warms up our childhood into Christ, against the devils which always attempt to hit and wound us.

[1164] We are given here the Romanian words. Descriptively, the Romanian Explanatory Dictionary tell sus that it is about small round hat, made of velvet.

18) So, lo, we have also the girdle on our waist, that is the killing of the irrational lust; and the periman on our shoulder, that is the cross. Lo also the culion, that is the sign of the innocence and of the childhood into Christ. Let's therefore live according to our shima, as our fathers said, and let's not wear a foreign shima. And, like we have forsaken the big things, let's forsake the small things as well. We have forsaken the world, let's also forsake our addictions to the world. This is because the addictions, as I said, they tie us up to the world also by some small and without value things, even without us knowing it.

19) So, if we want to be delivered and to be freed consummately, let's learn to cut off our wills and so, by advancing little by little, by the help of God, we will reach the dispassion. This is because nothing is so beneficial to the people as the cutting off of their won will is. Out of this thing somebody will truly advance almost over all virtues. And like the man walking on a road and finding a tree and removing that he will still walk a good part of that road, likewise it is in the case of him who advances by cutting off his will. This is for by cutting his own will off, he will gain the dispassion by dispassion, and he will with God to the consummate dispassion[1165]. He can, for a short distance on that road, to cut off ten of his wills. He sees something and his thought tells him: "take heed there", and he tells to his thought: "I won't take heed"; and so, he will cut off his will. This is because he doesn't take heed[1166]. Again, he finds out about some people who slander him, and his thought tells him:' Tell this word, at your turn". And he cuts off his will and he won't say that word. And again, his thought urges him: "Go and ask the cook what he is boiling". And he doesn't go and so he cuts off his will. Again, he

[1165] The own will is reckoned as one with the addiction. It is not a neutral will, but it is always in the service of some passion. The addiction consists of as many wills as the man has passions, or of as many forms it will take in a circumstance of another a passion of another of the man. The will is actually the movement of a passion towards being satisfied. That's why, this will, it is on one hand one, but on the other hand this will is many. Maybe this order of the advancing in dispassion influenced John Climacus to speak firstly about the external rejection and then about the internal rejection by cutting off the will or by obedience. These ones are as well the first three steps at Saint John Climacus.

[1166] He who travels his road with his thought at God, he always experiences thoughts attracting his attention, and deviating him, and the man must always tell to that thought: "I am not interested in what you are saying" and by that the man cuts off his will own will Properly said, this one is no longer his will).

sees something, and his thought asks him" "Ask who brought that?". And he cuts off his will and he won't ask. And by cutting his own will like this, he will reach the habituation of cutting it off and by starting from the small things he will reach to cut off, peacefully, the big things as well[1167], and he will reach to have not will in anything. And anything that happen to him it will let him peaceful (it will rest him, t. n.) as that things would have been his own (according to his will, t. n.). And thus, without willing to do his own will, he will always be fulfilling his will. This is for, by not having anything as his own, everything he does will be his own[1168]. And so he is, as I said, as not having an addiction and out of removal of his passions, as I said, he will come to dispassion.

20) Behold what advancing is bringing us to, little by little, the cutting off of our own will. Out of the example of this blessed Dositheos, you hear from what life and from what delectations and softness he left, he who never heard before the word of God, and to what measures he was taken, in a short time, the fact that he obeyed and he cut off his will. And how God glorified him and God didn't let this virtue of Dositheos to be forgotten, but God unveiled that to the holy Oldman, so that this one saw Dositheos as enjoying the happiness among all those saints.

21) But I am going to tell you also another thing that happened alike and close to me. This one, in order you to learn that the man can escape even his death by obedience and by cutting off his will. I was once as Abba Serid[1169], when a disciple of a great Oldman from the region of Escalon came and brought and answer from his Abba. And he had the commandment to turn back to his monastic cell before evening. Meanwhile a storm started, accompanied by rain and thunders and the nearby creek was entirely filled up with waters. The disciple wanted to leave, according to the word of his Oldman. And we were begging him to stay because we reckoned as impossible

[1167] Cutting the resting with the bitter things, it means cutting them off painlessly and effortlessly.

[1168] By being all things dome by the will of God, and him by impropriating the will of God to himself, everything he does, he will reckon that that will have been done according to his own will. He will benefit even from the seemingly opposite things, by receiving those things patiently, and out of his patience and kindness he does from his part everything he can do best, both to the others and for the general plan of God.

[1169] In Serid Monastery.

that creek to be crossed. But that one didn't listen to us. We decided to accompany him to the river. We thought that if he saw that river, he would turn back. On the river bank, he took off his clothes and tied them up in a bundle and he jumped into the river. We were on the river bang scared and trembling because we though he had been drowning. But he floated and he quickly arrived on the other side of the river. He put on his clothes, he kneeled and gave thanks, and he left from there running away. And we remained wondering and amazed by the power of his virtue. This is because we watched him fearfully but he crossed that river without any danger, due to his obedience.

22) Let's remember that brother too, who was sent by his Abba for some need of theirs, to that one who was occupying on himself with the monastery's businesses, in the nearby village. When that brother saw on himself drawn by that one's daughter to ugly mixing, he said only this: "My God, escape me for the prayers of my father" and he immediately found on himself on the road to the hermitage towards his father. Can you see the power of the virtue, can you see the work of the word, how much help it provides, when somebody asks for the prayers of his father? This is for, only by saying: "My God, through the prayers of my father, escape me", he immediately found on himself on the road[1170]. Can you see the humbleness and the piousness of both of them? And he didn't tell him: "Go!". But he told him: "Do you want to go?". Likewise, the brother didn't say: "I will go", but he told him: "I will do what you want". This is because he feared the offenses too, but he also feared not to obey his father. And then, when they reached the trouble, the old man told him: "Get up and go!". And he didn't tell him: "I trust my God that He will cover you". But he told him: "I trust the prayers of my father that they will cover you". Likewise, the brother when he was tempted, he didn't tell: "My God, escape me", but: "My God, for the prayers of my father, escape me"[1171]. And each of them trusted the prayers of his father. Can you see how they yoked up the obedience with the humbleness? This is because, as two horses are yoked up to a chariot and one cannot take it in front of the another because that chariot will break up, likewise the obedience needs to be yoked up with t humbleness. And who somebody could be found worthy of this grace, if he doesn't strive on himself to cut off his wills and to surrender on himself, according to God, to his father, by not doubting at all and by doing everything, as those two brother did, with the conviction that they obey God? Such a brother will be found worthy of mercifulness, such a brother will be found worthy of salvation.

[1171] The appeal to the prayers of others has also the purpose of upholding within each believer the humbleness, of reckoning that others are better than him, so that their prayers have a surer entrance to God, entering by love more in the atmosphere of God's love. This is what the Protestant do not understand, and in this is shown an individualistic pride.

23) This word brings our mind also to Saint Basil, who was visiting once his congregational monasteries, he asked one of the hegumens: "Do you have somebody who is being saved?" And Abba answered to Saint Basil: "Through your prayers, master, we all want to be saved". Saint Basil asked him again: "Do you have somebody who is being saved?". And the hegumen understood (for he was a spiritual man as well), he answered to Saint Basil: "Yes, I do!". And the Saint told him: "Bring him to me". And that brother came and the Saint told him: "Give me to wash on myself". The brother left and then brought the things needed for washing. After Saint Basil washed himself up, he took the water and said to the brother: "Accept and wash on yourself with the same water". And the brother took the water from the Saint and without hesitating, he washed on himself too. After the Saint tested that brother thus, the Saint told him: "When I enter the altar, you come to me and remind me to ordain you". That one obeyed again, without thinking. And when he saw Saint Basil inside the alter, he went and reminded the Saint to ordain him. And the Saint ordained him and took that brother with himself. This is for whom would have been allowed to be together with that of-God-bearer saint if not to that blessed brother?[1172]

24) You do not know about the thing of the obedience without choosing. Neither you know its resting. I once asked Abba John of Abba Barsanuphius and I said: "Master, for the Scripture says that we enter the Kingdom of Heavens through many troubles (Acts 14: 22), and I see that I have no trouble, what must I do lest I will lose my soul, because I have no trouble and no worry?". And if it happened to me to have any thought, I took the tablet[1173] and I wrote to the Oldman. This was because I asked him through letters, before I served directly to him. And even before I received back his commandments, by writing I felt the benefit of the alleviation. So big was the lack of worried and the resting. Bu because I didn't know the power of the virtue and because I heard that we must enter the Kingdom of Heavens by having many troubles, I feared the fact that I had no troubles. So, when I asked the old man about that, he told me: "Do not be troubled. You have no reason for that. This is for, each one by surrendering on himself to his father (spiritual father*, t. n.*), he will have this lack of worries and resting".

II

About the Humble Cogitation

1) Somebody among the old men said: "Before anything, we need the humble cogitation, in order us to be ready to answer any word we hear by saying: "Forgive me!". This is for, by the humble cogitation, all the enemy's things will be broken"[1174]. Let's study what the meaning of the old man's word is. Why he tells: "Before everything we have the humble cogitation" and not rather: "Before everything we need the restraint"? This is for the Apostle says: "He who fights, he restrains on himself from all things" (2 Tim. 2: 5).

Or, why doesn't he tell: "Before everything we need to fear of God"? This is for the Scripture says: "The fear of God is the beginning of the wisdom" (Prov. 9: 10). And again: "Because of fearing the Lord everyone avoids the evil" (Prov. 16: 7). Why doesn't he say: "Before everything we need mercifulness, or faith"? For it is said: "Through mercifulness and faith the sins will be erased". And the Apostle says: "Without faith there is impossible to be pleasant to God" (Hebr. 11: 6). So, if it is impossible to be pleasant to God without faith, and if the sins are erased by giving alms and by faith, and by the fear of God everyone avoids doing the evil, and the fear of God is the beginning of the wisdom, and he who fight will restrain himself from all things, why does he say: "Before anything we need the humble cogitation"? And why he left aside all of these which are so much necessary? The old man wants to show us that neither the fear of God, nor the giving of alms, neither the faith, nor the restraint, neither any of the virtues can be achieved without the humble cogitation. That's why he says: "Before anything we need the humble cogitation, to be ready to answer any word we hear, by saying: forgive me! For by the humble cogitation all the enemy's things will be broken".

[1173] We kindly warn the reader that it is not about the tablet as computing and communicating device, but back then the tablet was a slab of special stone which they wrote with a lead pencil on. And that writing could be erased and they could write again other texts. We thought this clarification was needed for we have entered since the year 2022 the Space Era and, after another one million years when this text will be read, it will be difficult to know what the word tablet meant in Saint Dorotheos time. (E. l. t.'s n.)

2) Behold, can you see brothers how big is the power of the humble cogitation? Can you see what work it has the words: "Forgive me!"? But what is the devils called for not only as enemy but also as opposant? He is called as enemy for he hates the people, and he hates the good, and the contrives plots. And he is called as opposant because of him trying to impede any good thing. Does somebody want to pray? That one will oppose him by impeding him with sinful memories, by enslaving him, and by laziness. Does somebody want to give alms? That one will impede him by the love for money, by hesitation. Does somebody want to take vigil? That one will impede him by idleness, by carelessness. That's why he is called also opposant and not only enemy. So, through the humble cogitation will be broken all the things of the enemy and of the opposant.

3) Truly great is the humble cogitation and each of the saints traveled with it and through tiredness they shortened their trip. This is for he says: "See my humbleness and my tiredness and forgive all my sins" (Ps. 24: 19[1175]); and "I humbled on myself and the Lord saved me" (Ps. 114: 6[1176]). This is for even the humbleness by itself it can bring us inside (in the Kingdom of Heavens, t. n.) - as Babba John said -, but with a little delay. Let's, therefore, to humble on ourselves a little, and [1175] In KJB we have: Ps. 25: "Look upon mine affliction and my pain; and forgive all my sins."; in ROB we have" Ps. 24: 19: "See my humbleness and my tiredness and forgive all my sins." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1176] In KJB we have: Ps. 116: 6: "The Lord preserveth the simple: I was brought low, and he helped me."; in ROB we have: Ps. 114: 6: "He Who guard the little children is the Lord; I have been humiliated and I have been saved." (E. l. t.'s n.)

we will be saved. And even fi we cannot live in ascesis, because of our helplessness, let's strive to humble on ourselves. And I believe in God's mercy, that for that little done with humbleness, we too will be in the place of those saints who toiled and who served God much. Yes, we are weak and we cannot toil. But cannot we humble on ourselves?

4) Blessed is, brothers, him who has humbleness; great is the humbleness. Well depicted that saint on him who has true humbleness, by saying: "The humbleness doesn't get angry, neither it angers on somebody". Some people think that this is an odd thing. Actually, only the humbleness is resisting the vain-glory and it guards the man against that. But someone can get angry both for money and for foods. How can he say, then: "the humbles doesn't get angry neither it angers someone?"[1177]. The humbleness is great, as I said, and it has the power to attract the grace of God within the man's soul. So, the grace itself by coming, it will cover the man's soul against these two heavy passions. This is because, what it is worse than getting angry, and worse than angering your neighbor? That's why, someone said that "it is totally foreign to the monk to get angry"[1178]. But if he is not covered with the truth by humbleness, he will slowly come to the state of a devil, troubling and getting troubled. That's why he says that the humbleness doesn't get angry and it doesn't anger anyone.

5) But why am I telling you that the humbleness covers us against two passions? Because the humbleness covers our soul against any passions. It covers our soul against any temptation. When Saint Anthony saw all the traps of the enemy set, and he sighed and he asked God: "Who will cross over all of these?" what answered him God? - "The humbleness crosses all of the over" and He added a wonderful thing: "And they won't touch it". Can you see the humbleness's power? Can you see the grace of the virtue? Truly, there is nothing stronger than the humble cogitation. Nothing can defeat the humble cogitation. Any upsetting thing that happens to the humble ones, the humble one will immediately start against himself, and he will judge on himself as being worthy of that upsetting thing; the humble one won't endure that somebody else would be blamed, we won't endure that the blame to be cast upon somebody else. And so, he passes, undisturbed, without upset, and with the whole resting. That's why he neither gets angry, nor he angers anyone. That's why the saint said correctly: "That before anything, we need the humble cogitation".

[1177] Apophthegm belonging to Paul Everghetinos, I, 45, p. 165.

[1178] This sentence is not from Evagrius, as the text from "Source Chrétiennes" affirms, but it is quoted by Zosimus under the name of Makarios, in Paul Everghetinos, Constantinople, 1861, vol. II, 35, p. 112.

6) But there are two kinds of humbleness, as there are also two sorts of pride. The first sort of pride is that when somebody despised his brother, when he reckons his brother as being nothing, and when he reckons on himself as superior to his brother. This one, if he doesn't quickly wake up on himself, and if he won't strive to get rid of his pride, he will slowly come to the second sort of pride, which he will be proud against God too[1179], and he attributes his feats to himself and not to God.

Rightly so, my brothers, I saw once somebody who reached this pitiful state. At the beginning, if somebody among his brothers told him something about another brother, he despised each of them, by saying: "Who is him? There is no other (good) except Zosimus and they who are together with him". Then he started to despise those ones too and to say: "There is no other (good) except Makarios". And after a while" Who is Makarios? Nobody. There aren't (great) except Basil and Gregory". Then, after a while, he started despising those ones too, by saying: "Who is Basil? And Who is Gregory? Nobody. Only Peter and Paul (are great)". And I told him: "Truly, brothers, after a short while you will despise these ones too". And believe me, that after a short while he started saying: "Who is Peter and who is Paul" Nobody, only the Holy Trinity (is great)". Then he got haughty against God Himself and thus he went out of his mind. That's why we must fight, brothers, against the first sort of pride in order us not to slowly fall into the fuller sort of pride.

7) There is a lay pride and there is a monastic pride. The lay (worldly) pride is shown when somebody gets haughty against his neighbor, for being richer, or more beautiful than that one, or as better clothed up, or a having a nobler lineage. So, when we see on ourselves that we are dominated by vain-

[1179] There is a tight connection between the sins against God and the sins against our neighbor. He who gets haughty against his neighbor, he will get haughty against God too; and vice versa. The support of the good deeds and of the good behaviors towards our neighbor it is our faith in God. Either the love extends in all directions or it is incomplete and it won't last, because of showing a soul that is not entirely loving.

glory in these regards, or that our monastery is bigger, or wealthier, or that we have more numerous brothers, we must know that we still are mastered by the worldly vain-glory. It sometimes happens that somebody suffers of vain-glory also for some natural gifts he has. For instance, somebody can suffer of vain-glory because of having a nice voice and he sings nicely, or because he is gentle, or because he serves with cleanness. But these too belong to the worldly vain-glory.

And the monastic pride is shown when somebody suffers of vain-glory because he takes vigil, because he fasts, or because he is pious. And sometimes one can even humble on himself for the sake of his vain-glory. These things belong to the monastic pride. If we are unable not to take pride in anything, it is more appropriate us to take pride in the monastic things than in the worldly things.

Behold, I told you which is the first pride and which is the second pride; likewise, this is the worldly pride and which is the monastic pride. Let's find out now which are the two kinds of humbleness too.

8) The first humbleness consists of reckon your brother as wiser than you are and as surpassing you in all aspects and, simply speaking, as that saint said, in reckoning on yourself as inferior to everybody. And the second kind of humbleness consists of attributing to God all your feats. This is the consummate humbleness of the saints. This humbleness is naturally born within soul out of working the commandments. This is for, as when the trees bear a lot of fruits, the fruits will bow down the branches and pull the branches downwards, and that tree that doesn't bear fruits will stay upright and high – but there are some trees which won't bear fruits just because their branches grow upright and if somebody hangs some stoned on those trees' branches those trees will start bringing forth fruits – likewise is in the case of the soul too: when the soul humbles on himself it will bring a lot of fruits, and the more fruits the soul brings the humbler that soul will be. So, the saints, the closer they get to God, the sinner will they reckon they are.

9) I remember that I once was talking about humbleness, and somebody among the great ones from Gaza who heard us saying that, that the closer one gets to God the sinner he will reckon on himself, he wondered and said: "How could that be?". And because of not knowing the motif, he wanted to find out. So, I told him: "Mister, who are the first one among the people here, please tell me, how do you reckon on yourself within the city?". And he answered me: "I reckon on myself as the greatest and the first within city". I told him again: "And if you go to Caesarea, how will you reckon about yourself there?". He answered: "I will reckon about myself as the less important one among the greatest ones from there". And I told him again: "And if you go to Antioch, how will you reckon about yourself there?". He answered: "I will reckon myself as one from the countryside". I told him again: "And if you go to the city of Constantine, close to the emperor, how will you reckon about yourself there?". And he answered me: "I will reckon myself as a poor". The I told him: "Lo, likewise are the saints: the closer they get to God the sinner they reckon on themselves. Abraham, when he saw the Lord, he called on himself as dust and ashes" (Gen. 18: 27). And Isaiah said: "Woe to me, because I am unclean" (Isa. 6: 5). Likewise, Daniel, when he was into the lions' pit and Habakkuk went with food at him, saying: "Take the food sent you by God", what Daniel said then? "Did God remember about me?" (Dan. 14: 36). Can you see what humbleness had his heart, when he was into the lions' pit and the lions didn't harm him? – and not only once, but twice. And after than he wondered and said: "Did God remember about me?".

10) Look at the humbleness of the saints, in what feeling their hearts were! Not even when there were sent by God to help the people, they didn't accept, and they ran away, because of their humbleness, from the occasions of being extolled. This is because, as somebody who is totally dressed up in porphyry, but somebody wants to sew up a dirty path on his coat, he will run away in order his honored coat not to be dirtied, likewise the saints who are dressed up in virtues they run away from the human glory in order they not to be dirtied up by it. And they who lust for glory, they are like a naked man who always wants to find even a small patch of cloth, of anything, in order to cover his ugliness. Likewise, he who is void of virtues, he will search for the glory from people.

So, when they are sent by God to help the people, the saints, due to their humbleness, they won't accept. So said Moses: I beg You, send a stronger one, because I have a weak voice and I stutter" (Exod. 4: 10). And Jeremiah said: "I am too young" (Jer. 1: 6). And, simply saying, each of the saints had this humbleness consequently to their work of commandments. Nobody can tell by word what this humbleness is like, or what this humbleness is born within soul like, if the man cannot find it out by experience. But by word nobody can learn this humbleness.

11) Once, Abba Zosimus was speaking about humbleness and a philosopher was there and by hearing what Abba Zosimus was saying, the philosopher told him: "Tell me, why do you reckon on yourself as sinner? Don't you know that you are saint? Don't you know that you have virtues? You do see that you work the commandments. How then, by fulfilling these ones, you reckon on yourself as sinner?". And the old man because of not finding out how to answer him, he said: "I do not know, but that's how I am". The philosopher insisted because he wanted to find out how that can be. But the Oldman because of not finding out how to explain him that thing, he started telling him in his holy simplicity: "Do not twist me up, for that's how I am".

When I saw the Oldman not knowing what to answer to the philosopher, I told to the philosopher: "Isn't this as the philosophy and the medicine are? When somebody learns them well and he practices them, he will gradually reach the status of a master in philosophy or in medicine. But he cannot tell nor explain how he has reached to learn that thing. His souls learnt, as I said, gradually, and unnoticedly that craftsmanship out of working. It is likewise in the case of the humbleness as well: out of working the commandments it will be born a habit of the humbleness that cannot be explained by words[1180]. When Abba Zosimus heard that he rejoiced and he embraced me, and he told me: "You have found out the thing, it is like you said". And, also the philosopher was satisfied and he admitted my argument.

12) But the old men too, they said some things which let us understand what the humbleness is. But how this inward feeling is born, nobody could tell. When Abba Agathon was about to expire, the brothers asked him: "You fear too, father?". And he said: "I have been doing everything I could in order I to keep the commandments. But I am only a man too. Where could I know if my work was pleasant to God? This is because another is the judgment of God and another is the judgment of the people"[1181]. Behold how he opened our eyes and he showed us the path in order us to understand it. But what it is like and how it is born within soul, as I repeated for many times, nobody could tell, neither could anyone understand it by words, of his soul wasn't found worthy of knowing it by deeds. But what it is that what produces it, the fathers told us, for it is also told in the Paterikon, that a brother asked an old man, saying: "What the humbleness is?" and the old man answered him: "The humbleness is a great and godlike thing, and one reaches the humbleness through knowledgeable bodily toils and by reckoning on himself as inferior than everybody and by always praising to God". This is the path of the humbleness. And this humbleness is godlike and impossible to understand.

13) But why does he say that the bodily toils will bring the soul to humbleness? What is the reason why the bodily toils are virtues of the soul? As I said before, by reckoning one as inferior to everybody he will oppose the first sort of pride. This is because, how could one reckon on himself as more important than his brother, or to get himself haughty due to something, or how could one defame or despise on somebody, if he reckoned on himself as inferior to anybody?

Likewise, it is obvious that the ceaseless prayer resists the second sort of pride. This is for it is obvious that the humble one, the pious one, by knowing that he cannot achieve any good in his soul without the help and the sheltering from God, he won't stop from ceaselessly praying to God, in order God to have mercy on him. And him who always prays to God, if he is found worthy to succeed in something, he will know whom the help come to him from, and he won't be able to get pride in his achievement, neither will he attribute his success to his own power; but he will attribute all his achievements to god and he will give thanks to God, and he will always pray God while trembling not to fall off God's help and thus his weakness and helplessness to be exposed. And thus, by humbleness he prays and by prayer he gets humbler and if he succeeds in anything, he will always humble on himself, and the more he humbles on himself the more he will be helped and he will advance through his humble cogitation.

14) So, why does he say that the bodily toils will bring forth, as fruit, the humble cogitation? What the connection would be between the bodily toil and the soul's feeling? I am going to tell you that:

The soul, by falling from commandments through disobedience, the soul has surrendered on himself, as Saint Gregory says, to the love for pleasure and to the strayed self-leading[1182], and the soul loves the bodily things and somehow the soul has become one with the body and the whole man has become a body, as it is said: "My Ghost won't remain into these people, for they are bodies" (Gen. 6: 1). And thus, the wicked soul; suffers and feels at his turn, together with the body, the things done by the body. That's why the old man said that the bodily toils too, it leads to humbleness. This is for the soul of the healthy one is into another feeling that the soul of the sick one; in another feeling is the soul of the hungry one, and in another feeling is the soul of the satiated one. Likewise, another is the feeling of that soul that rides on a horse, and another is the feeling of him who sits on a throne, and another is that of that one who sits on the ground. Also, another is that of the one who wear s beautiful clothes, and another is that of him who wears dirty clothes. So, the ascetic toils humble the body and the humbled body will humble, together with himself, the soul too. Therefore, he said right that the body's tiredness too it leads one to humbleness. That's why, Evagrius, when he was tempted by blasphemy – a sone who had knowledge and he knew that the blasphemy comes out of pride, and if the body is submitted to humbleness the soul too will come to humbleness – he stood for forty days without entering under a roof, so that his body, as the writer says, it roared as the animals do[1183]. Thus, he didn't do the ascetic toils for blasphemy, but for humbleness. So, the old man rightly said that the bodily told lead one to humbleness. May the good God give you humbleness, as a gift, for the humbleness escapes the man from many evil things and it defends the man against many temptations.

About Conscience

1) When God made the man, God sowed in him something godlike, as a hotter and luminous thought, having the quality of a spark that illuminates the mind and that it shows the man the difference between good and evil. This is called conscience and it is the law of the man's nature[1184]. The conscience is symbolized by the wells dug up by James (Gen. 26: 13-14), as the fathers said, and which were filled up by Philistines. By listening to this conscience, all the patriarchs and all the saints, before the written law was given, they were well-pleasant to God. This one by being covered up and trampled by people because of the advancing of the sin, we needed the written law, we needed the holy prophets, we needed our Master Jesus Christ to come, in order us to uncover the conscience and to wake it up, to ignite again that covered spark, by keeping His holy commandments. So, now it depends on us, either us to cover it up again, or make it to illuminate us, [1184] The conscience is the thought sowed by God within man, as a hot and luminous spark. The conscience fully illuminates the mind and forces the mind to discern between good and evil. In the conscience the human meets the godlike. The conscience belongs both to God and to the man. Through his conscience the man in an ontological-dialogical connection with God. The conscience is the man's face turned towards the Sun of the existence. The conscience is a thought of God, but one sowed within man, and by that the conscience belongs to the man. Through his conscience the man speaks to himself, but through himself the man sees God and he answered to God. Through the commandments and through the reproaches of an absolute character of the conscience, speak to us the commandments and the reproaches from God. The man is a pole of God. A conscience cannot work without mind or without rationality. But neither those ones can work without a conscience. That's why the man's mind or rationality is luminous as well, but it is also hot, for it has within is the hot desire not only for knowing an indifferent truth, but for knowing the truth as the good, as that one that can make the man happy and good. That's why the rationality is never cold in its work. Even when affirms the objectivity of its knowledge, it affirms it with warmth, for it is tied to conscience and in objectivity there cannot be absent the good. In addition to that, the truth, which the rationality is given for and which the rationality aspires towards, the truth requires itself warmth to him who is searching for the truth, and for the truths to be upheld. And for the rationality has such a warmth, it manifests passion also in upholding the lie with truth appearances, because it seems to it that that it makes it happy. And this is for the truth is good and beautiful and the man's happy life depends of the truth. That's why the truth represents also the good, while the lie represents the evil. That's why the rationality is tied to the conscience that occupies itself especially with the good or bad aspect of the truth, of because the truth is the fire that requires to be noticed by a rationality imprinted by the conscience and warmed up by the fire of the truth.

if we obey it. This is because, when our conscience tells us to do this, but we despise its voice, and it tells us again and we do not do it, but we remain trampling on it, we actually cover it up again, and it no longer will be able to limpidly speak under the burden we placed upon it. But as a candlestick shining through a fog, it starts showing us the things in a foggier manner, more darkened, and thus, because of the advance of the sin, nobody will be able to limpidly see his face, but only as in a mirky water full of much garbage[1185].

Thus, we will no longer feel what our conscience tells us, so that we seem as not having a conscience at all. But there is nobody not having a conscience. This is because the conscience is something godlike, as I said before, and it will never be lost, but it will always remind us what we owe to do. But we do not feel it, by the fact that, as I said, we weaken it up and trample it.

2) That's why the prophet wept for Ephraem, saying: "Ephraem has become master upon his opposant and he trampled the judgment" (Hosea 10: 11). By his opposant he understood his conscience. That's why it is said in the Gospel too: "Reconcile with your plaintiff until you are on the way with him, lets he will give you in the hand of the judge, and the judge will give you in the hands of the servants, and they will throw you in the prison. Amen, I say you, you won't get out of there until you will pay back even the last penny" (Mt. 5: 25-26). Why does he call the conscience as opposant? For our conscience

[1185] In the clean conscience we hear the voice of God, we hear on ourselves, or vice versa. This is for our conscience speaks us about ourselves with the clarity it speaks to us about God. Or God speaks to us with His unconditional and non-rejectable by us His strength, about what we ought to be and what we actually are. That's why, through our conscience, we properly-said see our face, for we see our face in the light of God, the only one that illuminates it. When our deviation from on the path we can develop on ourselves as what we are and as what we should be, or when the stains which we stained it with are not too big, we will see on ourselves and rebuked by our conscience. But is we have advanced much into sins, our conscience will be covered up, or its voice is clogged for a certain period of time, or forever and totally – and also the voice of God together with it. But only rarely can the conscience be definitively covered up. Its voice will often be heard unexpectedly from under the huge burned we have placed on it, but sometimes we will no longer have the power to strengthen on ourselves. It will talk to us as it would have been a dead man whom we killed and the dead man is myself. But dead, I will be held accountable for my death and for another's death. This is because nobody is entirely dead. So, our conscience will talk to us, through a dreadful and relentless reproaching in the future life. It is a mode of our eternal relationship with God. The game of the relationship between me and my fellow humans, between me and the godlike subject, it is of an endless variety.

always resists our evil will and it rebukes us when we do not do what we are supposed to do and when we do what we mustn't do. And our conscience complains about us. That's why he called it as opposant and plaintiff and he commanded us saying: "Reconcile yourself with tout plaintiff as you still are on the way with him"[1186]. And the way is, as Saint Basil says, this world[1187].

3) Let's strive therefore, brothers, to guard our conscience as long as we are in this world, by not letting it to reproach us concerning anything, by not trampling it even in the tiniest thing. This is because from the small and unimportant things we reach to despise the great things as well. This is because, when somebody starts saying: "What if I say this word? What if I eat this tiny piece of food? What if I look at this thing?", from this question: "What if this or that?", one will take the bad and evil state and he will start despising also the big and heavy things and he will start tram-pling on his conscience. And by advancing thus, he will gradually endanger on himself to fall into the total insensitiveness. That's why you take heed, brothers, at not disregarding the small things neither reckoning them as nothing. Because they are not small but they are a beginning, and they will cause a bad habit. Let's take vigil, let's take care of the easy things, for they are easy, in order they not to become heavy. Working the virtues and the sins tarts with the small things and it leads to the big things, either good or bad. That's why, our Lord commands us to guard our conscience and he tells to each of us, individually: Whach out what you are doing, you the lawless one, take vigil! "Reconcile with your plaintiff as long as you still are on the way with him". And he adds, telling him to fear the danger of that thing, saying: "lets you will be given to the judge and the judge will give you to the servants and they will throw you into jail". "And what will follow? Amen, I say to you, you won't get out from there until you will pay back even the last penny". This is for our conscience proves us, as I said, both in what is good and in what is evil and it shows us what to do and what not to do. And it will complain about us in the age to come too[1188]. That's why [1186] Let's reconcile with our conscience as long as we still are alive.

[1187] Saint Basil the Great, Homil. in Psalm. 2; G.P. 29: 220-221 and G.P. 231: 544 A.

[1188] We cannot enter the Kingdom, until we will reach to be unburdened by the evil which we did to someone, or towards God. That's why, after we die, because of no longer being us able to remove from us the evil we did towards God, or to our fellow human, it remains us the

He says: “lest he will give you in the hands of the judge” and the others.

4) And guarding our conscience if of many kinds. Ona can guard his conscience towards God, towards his fellow human, and towards the things. And somebody can guard his conscience towards God when he doesn’t despise God’s commandments even in those things which he won’t be seen by any man and even in those things which are not required him by somebody. That one guards his conscience towards God hiddenly. For instance: When we disregard the prayer, when a passionate thought climbs to our heart, and we do not take vigil and we do not restrain on ourselves, but we agree that thought; when we see our fellow human saying or doing something and we suspect him and we condemn him. And simply speaking, all the things done hiddenly, known to nobody except to God and to our conscience, we must guard all those things. This is the conscience towards God.

5) And the conscience towards our neighbor is when somebody doesn’t nothing that he knows about as troubling or hurting his neighbor, either with the deed, or with the word, or with the countenance, or with the look. This is because our countenance can hurt our neighbor, as I said for so many times. And simply speaking, everything that one knows that it could cause some thought to his neighbor, which he stains his conscience through as well, or which he knows that it will offend or trouble on somebody. He must guard on himself against all of these and not to do them. This means to guard ones’ conscience towards his neighbor.

6) And guarding one’s conscience toward the things consists of not using bad a thing, in not breaking anything, or in not throwing a thing, and even if one sees some thrown thing he won’t overlook that but, regardless how unimportant that thing would be, to lich that thing up and to put in in his place[1189]. We must not use our vestments wrongly. Suppose possibility that to be done and our conscience to be unburdened by our descendants of by the Church, through their great love.

[1189] To the Christina all the components of the nature are gifts from God give us towards our benefit. Through all of them we see the kindness and the care of God for us. Despising or breaking them up, it means despising the care of God for us and it also means reducing the possibilities of living of our fellow humans. But in addition to that, elements of the creation are also the objects which the work of our fellow humans has been concretized in: the bread, the wine, the tools, and the artworks. Despising and breaking the things up means despising that one can wear a coat for another week or two, but he washed it up before time, or he cuts it off, and instead of using it for another five months – or even for longer than that – he wears it out and by washing it too often he makes it useless. This is contrary to conscience. It happens likewise with the beddings. Often, somebody may use a smaller mattress but he looks for a bigger one, or he has a wool blanket but he wants to change it for a new one that is more beautiful, because of desiring luxury or because of drowsiness. One may be satisfied with a pillow filled up with straws but he looks for a pillow filled up with feathers, and he strives to obtain one and he get upset because of not succeeding in that. And he starts looking at his brother and saying: "Why this one has one and I don't. How happy is him!" Greta progress! Again, somebody stretches his coat of his blanket in the sunlight but he doesn't take care of taking it at the right time and the sun burns it. This too is against conscience. Likewise with the foods. Somebody can satiate his need with a few raw or dry vegetables, and with a little oil, but he is not content only with that and he searches for tastier and richer food. All of these are against conscience.

7) And the Holy Fathers say that the monk mustn't ever let his conscience tormenting him, in anything. So, brothers, we need to be woken all the time and to guard on ourselves against these things, in order us not to fall into danger. And our Lord too asked us to do that, as I said before. May God give us power to obey and to guard these, in order the words of our Holy Fathers not to become condemn us.

About the Fear of God

1) Saint John says in his general epistles: "The consummate love gets the fear out" (1 Jn. 4: 18). I wonder, what the saint wants to tell us? What fear and what love doesn't he speak about? The Prophet says in his Psalms: Fear the Lord, all the work of our fellow humans. Breaking up the prepared objects and searching for other objects to replace the broken, it will require a new work and the man won't have time to occupy on himself with the salvation of his soul. We have a responsibility for everything. This is because through all the wrongly used things the people can be hit and God can be despised.

His saints" (Ps. 33: 9[1190]). And we find many words like these ones in the Holy Scriptures. So, if even the saints, who love our Lord so much, they still fear Him, how he says: "the love gets the fear out"? The Saint wants to show us that there are two fears: one beginner, and one consummate; and that one belongs to the beginners, as somebody would call them: to the worshipper of God; and another belong to the saints and consummate ones, who have reached the measure of the love for God. For instance: somebody fulfill the will of our Lord because of fearing the torments. This one is, as I said, a beginner. He still doesn't do the good for the good itself, but because of fearing the beatings. Another does the will of God, by living on God Himself, and by keenly wanting to be pleasant to God[1191]. This one is him who has the true love called by the saint as consummate love. And this love leads him to the consummate fear.

One like this will no longer fear and he will guard the will of God not because of fearing the beatings, or because of fearing the punishment, but because he has tastes out of the sweetness of being together with God. He fears of falling off that sweetness, he fears of being deprived of it. This is the consummate fear born out of this love. This fear removes the beginner fear. But it is impossible one to reach the consummate fear without crossing firstly through the beginner fear.

2) There are three soul's states which, as Saint Basil says, we can cross through in order to be well-pleasant to God[1192]: either we are pleasant to God by fearing the torments, and therefore we are in that feeling characteristic to the slave; or we fulfill the commanded things aiming to gain the reward, namely for our benefit, and by that we resemble to hirelings; or we do the God for God Himself and in this case we will be in the

[1190] In KJB we have: Ps. 34: 9: "O fear the Lord, ye his saints: for there is no want to them that fear him."; in ROB we have: Ps. 33: 9: "Fear the Lord you all His saints, for they who fear Him lack nothing." (E. l. t's. n.)

[1191] The good itself is God as Person Who springs up consummate love and power and endless life. You love any person for herself or for himself, for out of that person spring up or it can spring up love, and therefore life. All the more on God. One loves for herself or for himself only the thing. When loving a person, one cannot separate the love for that person from the love for himself. Everything is given together. You will be happy when you are with the other person. But you can be eternally only with God, and only into God you can be also be eternally with the other persons, while remaining yourself eternally through their love and through your endless love for them.

[1192] Saint Basil the Great, Introduction to the Broader Rules; G.P. 31: 896 B.

feeling of a son. This is for when the son reached the sapience, he will do the will of his father not because of fearing to be beaten, neither for taking rewards from his father, but because he loves his father and he guards the love he has for his father, and he honors his father as his parent and he is convinced that everything he has it belongs to his father. One like this will be found worthy of hearing: "You are no longer servant, but you are inheritor of God, through Christ" (Gal. 4: 7). One like this, as I said, he will no longer fear God with that beginner fear, but he loves God, as Saint Anthony said: "I no longer fear God, but I love Him"[1193]. And the Lord saying to Abraham after Abraham accepted to bring his son as sacrifice: "Now I know that you fear God", He spoke about the consummate fear, that fear that is born out of love. This is because otherwise why would He have said: "Now I know"? He said that because He had mercy on him, for he did so many things, and he obeyed God, and he left everything of his own and he moved in a foreign land and in the middle of a people who were worshipping idols, where was no form of honoring God and he endured even this preparation for sacrificing his son. After all of those, God told him: "Now I know that you fear God". It is obvious that God spoke about the consummate fear of the saints. This is for the saints no longer fulfill the will of God because of fearing the torments, or for reward, but for they love God, as I said for many times, they fear of doing something contrary to their beloved One. And that's why he says: "The love removes the fear". This is for they no longer do His will because of fear, but they fear Him because they love Him[1194].

3) This is the consummate fear. But it will be impossible, as I said before, that somebody will reach this fear if he doesn't have, in the first place, the beginner fear. For he says: "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of the wisdom" and: "The fear of [1193] In "Apophthegmata Patrum", at Cotelerius, Monumenta Ecclesiae Graecae, tome I, p. 351, no. 52, where he says: "Abba Anthony said: I no longer fear God, and I love Him, for the love gets the fear out".

[1194] This is an inversion: the beginners do the will of God because they fear Him; the consummate ones love God and they fear of falling off that love and that's why they do God's will. The fear that is born out of love is different from that love that is born, out of fear, with difficulty. It is something else when I fear of losing somebody's love, and something else is when I fear not to be punished by that person. In the first case, the man has tasted the sweetness of the communion with the beloved person and he fears of losing that person; in the second case, the man thinks at himself, namely he thinks at the punishment that could come from not fulfilling that person's desire.

God is the beginning and the end" (Prov. 1: 7). He calls as beginning the beginning fear. After that one, there comes the consummate fear, that fear that is characteristic to the saint. The beginner fear belongs to our composition. This fear guards the soul, as the knowledge too, against all sins. For he says: "Because of fearing God everyone deviated from evil" (Prov. 15: 27). So, if somebody deviates from evil because of fearing the punishment, like that servant that fears the master, that one will gradually come to do the good and by doing the good he will gradually come to hope a certain reward for working the good, as the hireling does. And by persevering in doing the good, as I said, and in running away from evil, because of his fear and like a servant, and by doing the good due to his hope, as the hireling does it, and by spending his time in the company of God for a long time and into the good, he will be united by that, to the extent of that accompanying, with God, and so he will state God and he will reach some feeling of the true Good Himself, and he will no longer want to be separated from Him. This is because who will be able to separate him, as the Apostle said, from the love of Christ (Rom. 8: 35)? Then he will reach the measure of the sun and he will love the good for the good itself and he fears because he loves it. And this is the great and consummate fear.

4) That's why, the prophet too, by teaching us the difference between these two fears, he said: "Come, my sons, and listen to me, and I will teach you the fear of the Lord" (Ps. 33: 11[1195]). Direct your mind at each of the prophet's words. He firstly says: "Come to me" calling us to virtue. Then he adds: "sons". This is because the saints call as "sons" on those who are transformed by their word, crossing from sin to virtue. So, it says the Apostle: "My little children, which I am again enduring the birth-pains, until Christ will take image within you" (Gal. 4: 19). Then, after he called us and urged us towards this transformation, he says: "The fear of the Lord I will teach you". Can you see the daring of the saint? When we want to say something good, we always say: "Do you want to talk together about the fear of God and us to get accustomed to it, or to another virtue?". But the Saint didn't do like that, but he said

[1195] In KJB we have: Ps. 34: 11: "Come, ye children, hearken unto me: I will teach you the fear of the Lord."; in ROB we have: Ps. 33: 11: "Come sons, listen to me, the fear of the Lord I will teach you;" (E. l. t.'s n.)

daringly: "Come, sons, listen to me, the fear of the Lord I will teach you. Who is that man who wants the live and who loves to see good days?" (Ps. 33: 11-12[1196]). Then, like somebody would have answered his question, saying: I want that, you teach me who to live and how to see good days", he teaches and says: "Stop your tongue from evil and your lips not to speak cunningness" (Ps. 33: 12-15[1197]). Lo how he cuts off, firstly, with eth feat of God, the working of the evil. This is for: "Stop your tongue from evil" means: "do not hurt, by anything the conscience of your neighbor, do not slander, do not sanger anybody". And by adding: "and your lips not to speak cunningness", he says: "Do not behave cunningly towards your neighbor". Then he adds: "deviate from evil" (Ps. 33: 13[1198]). He mentioned, in the beginning, some individual sins: the slandering, the cunningness, and then he added, comprisingly, all sins: "deviated from evil", namely run away from all evil, deviated from all things causing sins. And he didn't stop there, but he also added: "and do the good". This is because when somebody doesn't do the evil, he won't necessarily do the good by not doing the evil, and he won't necessarily have mercy on his neighbor. And if someone doesn't hate, that won't mean that he loves. So, the prophet rightly said: "avoid the evil and do the good".

Lo how he shows us one by one of the three states which we previously spoke about: how through the fear of God he guided from avoiding the evil and then he urged to step on doing the good. If somebody will be found worthy of deviating from evil and to run away from evil, that one will naturally work the good being guide by the saints. By saying all of these very well, and at their turn, he adds: "Search for the peace and follow it". He didn't say only: search for it", but he also said: "follow it", so that you to grab it.

[1197] Vid supra. Also: In KJB we have: Ps. 34: 14-15: "Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from speaking guile. // Depart from evil, and do good; seek peace, and pursue it. // The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their cry. // The face of the Lord is against them that do evil, to cut off the remembrance of them from the earth."; the corresponding verses in ROB are: Ps. 33: 12-15: "(Who is the man who wants the life, who loves seeing good days?) Stop your tongue from evil and your lips not to speak cunningness. // Avoid evil and do good, search for the peace and follow it. // The eyes of the Lord towards the righteous and His ears towards their prayer. // And the face of the Lord towards them who do evil deeds, in order their remembrance to perish from on earth." (E. l. t.'s n.)

5) Focus your mind on these words, and look at how much care the saint says them with. When somebody is found worthy of deviating from evil and after that he strives to work the good with God, immediately will come upon him the wars from the enemy. Therefore, he lives in ascesis, he toils, he crushes on himself, not only because of fearing the turning back again to evil, as I said about the servant, but also by hoping, as I said before, for gaining the rewards for the good, as a hireling. This is because he does the good while being warred by and while fighting and battling the enemy; that's why he does the good with much trouble and with much crushing of his heart. And when help from God comes to him and he starts gaining a habituation into good, then he will see the resting, then he will gradually start tasting the peace, then he will feel what the trouble of the war is and what the joy and the gladness of the peace is. Then he will search for it, he will strive and he will run towards it, aiming to consummately earn it, so that the peace to dwell within him. And what is happier than that soul who has been found worthy of such a measure? One like this, as I said for many times, he is at the measure of the son. This is for "blessed are the peacemakers, for those ones sons of God will be called" (Mt. 5: 9). Who could say that such a soul does the good for something else than the joy for the good itself? Who will know that joy if not him who has experienced it? One like this will know then also the consummate fear, as I said for many times.

Behold, we have heard what the consummate fear of the saints is, and what the beginner fear of our state is, and where somebody starts from and where he reaches through the fear of God. Now we want to find out also how the fear comes from God; and we also want to tell which are the things separating us form the fear of God.

6) The Holy Fathers said that the man achieves the fear of God by having the remembrance of the death and of the torments and by studying on himself on each evening how he has used the daytime, and on the morning, again, how has he crossed the night; then, out of non-daring and out of the attachment to a man who fears God. This is for they say that a brother asked a certain old man: "What should I do, father, in order I to fear God?". And the old man told him: "Go and join a man who fears God and out of his fear you too learn how to fear God"[1199].

And we banish away the fear of God form us by doing the things opposite to these ones: by not having the remembrance of death, neither of the torments, by not taking heed at ourselves, by not studying how we have spent our day, and by living carelessly and by occupying on ourselves with meaningless things, while showing on ourselves as full of daring. This is the worst thing; this is our total perdition. This is because, what else banishes away the fear of God form our souls as the daring does? When Abba Agathon was asked about daring, he said that that is alike a great heat, and when that comes everybody run away from it and it destroys the fruits of the trees[1200]. Can you see the power of the passion? Can you see its fury? And again, when he was asked: "Is it the daring so awful?", he said: "There is no other passion more awful than the daring is". He said very well and wisely, that the daring is the birth-giver of all passions, because of banishing the fear of God from within soul. This is because, if due to the fear of God each one deviated from evil, unmistakingly, where there is not the fear of God, there will be all the passions. May God deliver our souls from the destructive passion of the daring!

7) But the daring is of many sorts as well: somebody dares by word and by word also by touching and by touching also by looking. From daring he comes also to the vainly-speaking and form speaking the worldly things he comes to make jokes and to stirring up the impious laughter. The daring[1201] is also the touching of something or of somebody unnecessarily, stretching one's hand against somebody, for laughing, or to push somebody away, or to steal something from somebody, or to look at somebody shamelessly. All these things are being done by the daring. All of these will come into the soul when there is no fear of God. From these things somebody will gradually come to fully despise others. That's why God, when He gave the commandment of the Law, he said: "Make pious the sons of Israel" (Lev. 15: 31). This is because without piousness

[1200] Apopht. Agathon 41; G.P. 65: 109 A.
[1201] The daring he speaks in these paragraphs is that daring that doesn't fear God. But there is also mentioned a commendable "daring" in The Lives of the Saints and in the spiritual writings. That is the daring had by the saint and generally by the clean ones, they who fully trust God. That daring gives them a hope that their prayers will be answered.

nobody will honor God, neither will one take heed any commandment of God. That's why there is nothing worse than the daring. This is because the daring is the mother of all passions: this is because the daring removes the piousness, because it banishes away the fear of God, and because it gives birth to contempt.

Through the daring you have among you, and through the shamelessness of ones towards others, you speak ugly among yourselves and you hurt on one another. And if one you see something useless, he will leave and he will chatter about that and he will sow it in the heart of another brother. And by that he won't hurt only on himself but he will hurt his brother too, by throwing evil venom into his hear. This is because that one, often when having his mind to prayer, or to some other good thing, this one going to him, he gives him something which that one to occupy on himself with, uselessly. And not only that that impeded that one from what is useful to him, but it will bring him a temptation too. And there is nothing worse than this, neither more destructive, that one to hurt not only on himself but also on his neighbor[1202].

8) That's why, it is good us to have piousness, brothers, in order us to fear of hurting others, so that we will honor on one another and we will strive for not even raise our look at the face of another. This is for this one is also a sort of daring, as somebody among the old man said[1203]. But if it happens that one sees his brother committing sin, let him not despise that brother, and let him not by keeping his silence to let that brother to be lost; but let him neither defame of gossip that brother, but with the together-suffering and with the fear of God, let his tell him who can correct that brother, or to talk himself to that brother, with love and humbleness, saying: "Forgive me, brother, because though I am disorganized, it seems to me that we do not do this thing correctly". And if that [1202] It is graver when someone brings another to perdition - by his example, or by his urge - than him to destroy only on himself. Sure thing, that one will draw on himself too into precipice, while otherwise that one could have been drawn to good by them who are at good. My salvation depends more on my work for others' salvation, than on my egotistic work for my own salvation. The sigh that you are on the road of your salvation is the overcoming of your egotism not only in what regards working for another as him being a passing, relative existence, and by helping him to the earthly things, but also in working him as for an existence destined to eternity. This is the supreme cherishing of him by you.

brother doesn't listen to him, let him tell to some other brother whom he sees that the sinner trusts to, or let him tell to that brother's spiritual adviser, or to Abba, according to the gravity of that one's mistake, and then let him have no worries about that. But as I said, let him tell those ones on the purpose of correcting that brother, and not for much-speaking or for gossiping him; not by despising, him, not by wanting to give him as a bad example to others, not condemning him, not pretending that he allegedly does that for correcting that brother by actually having within him all the mentioned evil things. This is because even if somebody says what he knows to Abba himself, but not aiming to correct his neighbor, or not because of being hurt, that one will commit sin. Because that is slandering. So, let him study his heart in details, if he wants to tell what he saw out of mercy and for the benefit of that brother, or he is troubled within also by some passionate thought and urged by that to tell Abba about that one's mistake, saying: "My conscience bears witness to me that I want to talk about that in order to correct my brother, but I feel in my heart a mixed thought. I do not know whether I want to tall that because I have something against my brother; I do not know either if some envy wants to impede me from telling what I know"[1204]. And then Abba will tell him to confess what he knows, or not to.

But sometimes one doesn't say not even for the benefit of his brother, neither because he is hurt, nor because he keeps in his mind something bad about his brother, but he simply tells it because of an urge to uselessly peaking. But what is that gossiping good to? And often the brother finds out what he said about him and he gets upset and out of that will come some trouble, and therefore he adds to damage. But when somebody tells, as I said, only for his brother's benefit, God won't allow there to be any disturbance, any trouble, or any damage.

9) So, you strive, as I said, to guard your mind against thinking evil about your brother, and against hurting anybody, either by word, or by deed, either by countenance, or by anything else. Let's yourselves not to be too sensitive when pinched, lest when somebody hears some words from his brother to feel himself pinched, and then to answer his brother with evilness, or to feel the urge to defend on himself against that brother. These things are inappropriate to them who live in ascesis. You achieve the fear of God, but piously, to that you will welcome on one another by bowing down your heads before your brother, as I said, each of you getting humble in front of God and in front of his brother, and cutting off your will, for God[1205].

It is truly a good thing when somebody commits a certain good deed and he attributed that deed to another brother and let him take the bigger honor. He who is lenient, he will benefit more than another. I do not know about myself whether I have even done something good. But if I have been defended by this reckoning, I know that that has happened to me because I haven't placed on myself before my brother, but I have been always placing my brother before me.

10) When I was once at Abba Serid's monastery, the servant of Abba John got sick, who was with Abba Barsanuphius, and Abba allowed me to serve myself the Oldman[1206]. And I embraced the door of his monastic cell form outside[1207], as somebody embraces the honored cross. This is for who wouldn't want to be found worthy to serve such a saint? And the saint also had a wonderful word. And on each time, after I finished serving him, I bowed before him in order him to approve me to leave. And he always told me something. And the Oldman had four words. And I said, it was evening, and when I wanted to leave, he always told me one of his found words. And he told me so: "Once and for all (this was the habitual phrase which the Oldman always started each of his word with), once and for all, brother, may God guard the love. Our fathers said that guarding the conscience or our neighbor it will give birth to the humble cogitation"[1208]. On another evening, he also told me: "Once and for all, brother, May God guard the love. The fathers

[1205] He who humbles on himself in front of another, by cutting off his will for showing on himself as superior to that one, he will determine that one too to cut off his will of showing on himself as superior to him. Thus, the humble one cuts off not only the will of his own pride, but he will also cut off the will of another's pride. The will of another won't be cut off through a superiority of worldly order, but by the will of the own humbleness, that attracts after itself our humbleness. In this position and in the following positions is being described the saints' gentleness, one that cuts off the root itself of the passions, and that not only cover those up.

[1206] When the servant to Abba John, who had also the surname "Oldman", Dorotheos took, by the will of Serid, upon himself, to serve Abba John.

[1207] Namely he ceaselessly stood at the door of the Oldman John.

told me: "I have never placed my will before the will of my brother"[1209]. On some other occasion he told me: "Once and for all, brother, may God guard the love. The fathers said: "Bear the burden to one another, and you will truly fulfill the law of Christ"[1210]. Thus, the Oldman always wanted to give me an advice by these four, when I was withdrawing on the evening, as he would give somebody victuals. And so, I have taken those under my guard for the whole my life.

And though, despite I had such a trust in the Saint, and despite I had such a great desire to serve him, when I heard that a certain brother was upset because of that, because he wanted too to serve the Saint, I went to Abba and I begged him, telling him: "That brother is worthier to serve the Oldman, Abba, if you wish". But neither Abba nor the Oldman himself (John) allowed me to be replaced for that brother. But I did everything I could to give my brother primacy. And while I served there for nine years, I know that I didn't tell anybody an ugly word, despite I had that job, so that no one could tell that I had no job.

11) And believe me, I know that a brother came once after me from infirmary to the church, reproaching me. And I was walking before him, and I answered him nothing. And even when Abba found out about that, because somebody told him, and Abba wanted to rebuke that brother, I insisted, kneeling at his feet, and I told him: "No, for the sake of the Lord, I did wrong, what is the brother guilty for?". And another brother, either because of temptation, or because of simplicity, God knows why, he was pissing over my head so that even my bed's linens were wet. Likewise, some other brothers they were coming daily and they shock their mattresses in front of my monastic cell's door, so that such a multitude of bedbugs invaded my cell than I wasn't even able to kill them. Because they were countless because of the heat. And when I went to sleep, all of them gathered on me and, despite a fell asleep because of tiredness, when I woke up, I saw my entire body bitten. And I never told anyone of them: "Do not do that!", or: "Why do you do that?". Neither I know on myself as having uttered ever some word that upset or wounded somebody.

You too, learn to bear each other burdens, learn to respect on one another. And if somebody of you hears a word that he dislikes, or if somebody suffers, unwillingly, from another, let him never get discouraged, let him never feel stung, let him not have during the ascetic toils or benefit, as having his heart bitter, drowsy, weak, not being able to receive any temptation, as a water melon that, if even a small stone comes closer to it, it will immediately be wounded and it will make it rot. But let yourselves to have your heart strong, let yourselves to have long-suffering, so that your love for one another to defeat everything that happens among you.

12) And if somebody has a job, or if somebody from among you has something to ask either the gardener, of the administrator, or the cook, or on anybody of them who serve among you, let both him who asks and he who was asked to guard, before anything, their internal state, and let them never surrender on themselves to any disturbance, neither to any enmity (antipathy), nor to any addiction, neither to let their will of the asking for his right to deviate him from the commandment of God. And no matter what thing it is about, either big or unimportant, let them despise that thing and disregard that thing. And neither somebody to reckon anything as above his inward state, so that to harm his soul in order him to succeed in that thing. In any of the things you are caught, even if that thing needs to hurry up and it is very important, I do not want you to do that thing with strife and disturbance, but I want you to be convinced that anything you do, big or small, it is the eighth part of what you are searching for. And the guarding of your inwards state, even if by doing that you will be unable to fulfill your job, it is four parts out of eight[1211]. See what big the difference is.

13) So, when you do something, if you want to do that consummately and entirely, you will strive yourselves to do both that thing that is only an eighth and also to preserve unharmed your souly state as well, that is a half of the eight parts, namely four out of eight[1212]. And if you need to do that thing and to fulfill the commandment, pay attention not to harm on yourself and on others; know that it is not good to somebody to lose four eighths, or half, for guarding an eighth.

[1211] It is a greater thing not to disturb your state of peace and your gentleness towards others, than to fulfill some duty of your job.

[1212] The made thing is an eighth of duty, and the undisturbed souly state is four time that.

And if you know that somebody does this thing, one like that doesn't accomplish his job consciously. This is because he perseveres, by rebuking and by tormenting on himself and of his neighbor, because of his vain-glory and for being pleasant to people, in order him to hear after that that nobody could defeat him. Woe! Great valiantness! This is not a victory, brothers; this is loss, a perdition. Lo, I am telling you, that if I send somebody of you to any necessary thing, and if he sees some disturbance, or other harm, he must stop from doing that thing. And you must never harm on yourself and on others. It is better that thing not to be accomplished (but it is rather better not to happen that), in order not to upset on one another. This is because otherwise, as I said, you will lose half or four parts out of eight. And this is an obvious insanity.

14) And I am telling you these things not in order you not to get discouraged immediately and so you to stop working, or you to become careless and to at once throw away all things and you to trample on your own conscience, by wanting to get rid of worries, not in order you to become disobedient, by saying each of us: "I cannot do that, I am getting harmed, this doesn't concern me". This is because on this reason you won't even accomplish any job, neither will you be able to ever fulfill any commandment of God. But I am telling you thing in order you to advance towards fulfilling any job which you are appointed to, with love, with humble cogitation, bowing down to one another, honoring on each other, and praying for one another.

Nothing's stronger than the humble-cogitation. So, if somebody sees his neighbor, or even on himself, as troubled for a while, stop yourselves, be lenient to one another, and do not insist as long as the harm lasts. This is because, as I said for many times before, it is better not to accomplish what is needed, as you want, but it is better to do that according to your need and not according to your will, or according to one's right. Even when a thing seems to you totally justified, do not get troubled and do not trouble others, so that you avoid losing half, or four out of the eight parts. This is because the difference between losses is great. But it often happens that somebody loses even the eighth itself and he won't accomplish quite nothing. This happens consequently to strife. We do all the things in order us to benefit out of them. But what will we benefit if we do not humble on ourselves towards others, but, on the opposite, we trouble and upset on one another? And you not what is said in Paterikon: that from our neighbor comes both our life and our death[1213]. You cogitate these things always within yourselves, brothers, in order you to learn the words of the Holy Fathers, in order you to strive for searching, and you to benefit and to be beneficial to others, with love for and with fear of God. Thus, you can benefit out of everything that happens to you, and you can advance with the help from God. And our God Himself, for He loves the people, He will bestow us the fear of Him. This is for he says: "You fear God and keep His commandments, for this is what He asks from people" (Eccl. 12: 13).

About the Need for Not Trusting Somebody His Onw Wisdom

1) In Proverbs is said: "They who have not ruling, they will fall like the leaves, and the salvation consists of much advising" (Prov. 11: 14). Take heed, brothers, at the meaning of this word; take heed at what the Holy Scripture teaches us. It urges us not to trust in ourselves, not to reckon on ourselves as wise, not to think that we can guide on ourselves. We need help; we need him who rules us according to God. Nothing is more pitiful, nothing is more destructive, than not having somebody to guide us on the path to God. This is because, what it is said?: "They who have no ruling, they will fall like the leaves". The leaf is always green from the beginning, and growing up, and pleasant, and then will gradually wither and fall. And at the end the leaf will be despised and trampled. Likewise happens to the unguided man. In the beginning he always has warmth for fasting, for vigil, for appeasement, for obedience, and for other good things. Then that warmth, by getting gradually quenched, [1213] Apopht. 9; G.P. 65) 77 B. It is a wonderful summarization of a great truth. In this sentence are comprised countless meanings, which all of them can be illustrated by the concrete relationships among people. We lose on another, we will lose on ourselves; we love on another and he loves us, and this is our life. He prays for us, he helps us, we will be saved; he doesn't pray for us, he doesn't help us, we will be lost.

and because that man doesn't have an adviser who to refresh and to rekindle his warmth, he will unnoticedly wither and fall and become slave to the enemies who make of them whatever they want.

And about them who confess all their things and who make all their things after being advised, he says: "The salvation consists of much advising". He doesn't say: "of much advising" meaning that one must ask anyone for advice, but meaning that one must seek for advice in all his things, and without any shadow of doubt, one must ask for advice only him whom he ought to trust. Neither one must keep his silence about something, and tell his adviser only what he wants, but let him confess everything and ask his confessor for advice, as I said. This is "the salvation consists of much advising".

2) If the man doesn't confess all his things, especially when he comes from a bad habit and living, the devil will find within him a will and a desire for justification, and by that the devil will defeat him. This is because, where the evil sees somebody as not wanting to commit sin, it is not so unskilled in doing the evil than to suddenly attract him to some of the obvious sins. He won't tell him: "Do and fornicate!", neither; "God and steal!". Because he knows that we do not want to do that. And he doesn't want to tell us what we do not want to do. But he finds us as having, as I said, a certain will and urge to justify on ourselves, and through those he will wound us, with an apparent justification. That's why he says also: "The cunning one does the evil when united with a will of justification" (Prov. 11: 15). The cunning one is the devil. So, he is the one doing the evil, when united with a will of justification, namely with a justification provided us by ourselves. Then he harms us more. Then he works strongly. This is because, when we keep our will and when we found on ourselves on our right, then we will plot against ourselves and we won't realize that we will destroy on ourselves. This is because, how could we know the will of God and how could we search for the will of God, when we trust in ourselves and we keep out will?

3) That's why Abba Poemen said that "the will is a brass wall between man and God"[1214]. Take heed at the meaning of this word. And he also added: "It is a stone that bounces back and his you, because of resisting the will of God and it his it.

[1214] Apopht. Poemen, 54; G.P. 65: 333-336.

That's why, when the man forsakes it, he says: "By my God I will cross over the wall. My God, His way is righteous" (Ps. 17: 30-31[1215]). He spoke wonderfully. This is for somebody will see the righteous way of God only when he has forsaken his will[1216]. But when the man is compassionate on his will, he won't see the righteous way of God. And whatever the man hears in his support, he will immediately defame that, and mock that, and resist it. This is because, how could one who cherished his own will to admit or even listen to an advice? Then the Oldman said about the urge towards self-justification: "If the self-justification works together with the will, that man won't turn himself back easily". Woe, how can be that tied among the words of the saints? There is a true death when the urge is united with the will. This is for then will be a great danger, a great fear. Then the misfortunate will totally fall. This is because of who will be able to convince a man like this one, that some other man knows better what is beneficial to him? Then such a man will decide to totally obey his own will and to his thought, and therefore the enemy will roll him down as he wishes. That's why was said: "The cunning one does the evil when united with the urge towards justification". It was said that the enemy hates even the sound (the echo) of the support (reassurance).

4) Because of the cunning one that not only hates the support (the reassurance), but he cannot even hear the voice of

[1215] In KJB we have: Ps. 18: 29-30: "For by thee I have run through a troop; and by my God have I leaped over a wall. // As for God, his way is perfect: the word of the Lord is tried: he is a buckler to all those that trust in him."; in ROB we have: Ps. 17: 32-33: "For I will be delivered with you from temptation, and with my God I will cross over the wall. // My God, righteous is His way, the words of the Lord are tried in fire; shield is Him to everyone who hope in Him."

[1216] Mak the Ascetic, About the Spiritual Law, 31; G.P. 65: 909 B. The egoistic will; of the man lead towards himself, it is confounded to himself; in him, he who is locked up in himself, in his monotonous and dark limitation. The will of God leads to the endless and luminous width of the life of God and of the life or everyone in Him. By His will, God opens on Himself to the man, and to the man's inside. But then the man will have become transparent for the endless width of God. The individualistic way of the man will quickly come to a blockage. The way of God leads endlessly to His endlessness. In the will of God there meet everyone's wills in their endless advance into God and into their reciprocal love and understanding into God. The will of God is that will that comprises all the things, and it upholds and it promotes all the things into a harmonious advance, according to their rationalities united in Him. BY conforming on himself to the will of God, the man doesn't annul either his will, but he values it in its true aspiration of developing on himself realistically in the infinity of God, in union with all things. By renouncing to his egotistical will, the man has torn down the artificial wall that kept him separated from God and from all thing.

this support. He hates the sound itself of the support, namely right the fact that somebody speaks something for supporting him[1217]. For instance: Before doing something, he who should ask about the benefit of that thing, before the enemy know that that one will or won't guard what he hears, he hates even the fact itself that that one asks somebody and the fact of hearing the good advices, and he rejects even the voice or the sound (the echo) of such words. And I am telling you why's that. He knows in the cunningness he contrives that if that one asked, he would become accustomed to obey a useful advice, and the enemy doesn't hate anything so much than such a word to be experienced and known. This is because, if that was the case, he wouldn't be able to plot as he wishes. This is because if the souls was strengthened by confessing all his thoughts and by hearing the advice from a knower: "Do this, or do not do this, this is good, but thig is not good, this is a self-justification urge of yours, this is a will of yours", or if the heard, also: "it is not the right moment for that", and on some other time: "now is the moment", - the devil wouldn't find what cunningness to use in order to harm on him who asks and obeys the advices he receives, or to roll him down, for he would always be guided and supported from all quarters (reassured), and it would be fulfilled within him the word: "the salvation consists of much advising". But the cunning one doesn't want this, but he hates this. This is because he wants the man to do the evil and he rejoices more of them who "do not have ruling, because they fall down as the leaves do".

[1217] The monk as a man who started with the whole his assertiveness on the road of the consummate good, he trusts the advice of his confessor as rightly choosing between good and bad. But the evil urges the monk, and by and large on any human being, to trust only in himself, just in order not to find any reassurance that he is doing the good. The in order to do that the devil uses the man's will for self-affirmation and for becoming ever bigger, and that will easily end into pride when the man doesn't want to progress into God, but by his own. Actually, no man can fully know on himself without being helped to that buy others; and, especially, the man doesn't know all the possible consequences of his deed, because of his inexperience, as long as he still is inexperienced. The knowledge is a common thing: "co-gnoscere". The human being is whole only together with others, and in the last analysis, only together with the Supreme Subject. The reassuring, the strengthening of each one is given by the special "sound" or "voice" of another subject, which the man hears it as coming from another person. Maybe this one called as "echo" also for in it's the man truly retrieves on himself. The devil wants the individual to be totally separated from the communion with others, in order him to be able to totally empty up the man of his life, and to collapse the man into the desert void of the loneliness.

5) You recall that brother loves by the cunning one and whom Abba Makarios said about: “I have a brother and when he sees me, he swirls like a windmill”[1218]. The cunning one loves people like him. Of people like these ones, he rejoices always, namely those who do not entrust on themselves to him who can help them according to God, and who stretches his hand to them. This is because, did not come this devil near to all brothers, which the saint saw him carrying all sorts of food in vessels? And didn’t he offer those foods to everyone? But each brother, by feeling the devil’s plotting, he ran and confessed his thoughts and he found help in time of temptation and that’s why the enemy wasn’t successful against them. The devil found only that miserable who trusted on himself and not having any help from somebody else. And thus, the devil had him like a toy and that’s why he withdrew thanking him and cursing the others. But immediately that he told to Abba Makarios that, and the name of the brother, and the saint ran to him, he found out what the cause of his falling was: he found out that he didn’t want to confess, he found out that he didn’t have the habit to unveil on himself. This is for, when he was asked by the saint: “How are you, brother”, he answered: “By your prayers, I’m well!”; and the saint asked him again: “Aren’t you warred by thoughts””, but he answered: I’m well”. And he didn’t want to confess anything until the saint convinced him, by using a great craftsmanship, to tell his things. And the saint, by uttering him the word of God, he strengthened him and he turned him back. And when the enemy came again to him, according to his habit, wanting to tip him over, the enemy got sad. This was because the enemy found him strengthened; the enemy no longer found him as prey to his mockery. Thus, the enemy left without fruit, he left from this one too, ashamed. That’s why, when asked by the saint: “How is that brother, that friend of yours?”, he no longer called that one as “friend” but as enemy, and he cursed him saying: “This one has been broken as well, neither him obeys me, but he has become more savage than all of them”.

6) Behold why the enemy hates him who has a support: because our enemy always wants our perdition. Behold why he loves them who trust to themselves: because they collaborate with the devil, and they plot against themselves. I do not know another falling of the monk except that one coming out of the trust he has in his heart. Some people say: the man falls because of this, or because of that. And I, as I said, I do not know happening any falling except because of what I said. Do you know someone who has fallen? Know that he trusted to himself. Nothing is more dangerous, nothing is more destructive, than somebody to trust to himself.

God covered me and I have always been fearing this danger. When I live into the congregational monastery, I was trusting everything to Abba John. I didn't allow on myself, as I said, ever to do something without his advice. O occasions my thought told me: "Won't the Oldman tell you this? Why do you want to trouble him for?". And I was saying to such thoughts: "Let anathema be to your judgment (to your right-reckoning) and to your knowledge and to your wisdom and to your science, because what you know you know from the devil"[1219]. So, I left and asked the old man and sometimes he told me exactly that word that I thought at. Then my thought told me: "What do you have to say now? Lo that he told you what I told you before. Haven't you disturbed the Oldman unnecessarily". I answered that thought: "Not it is good, now it is from the Holy Ghost. What it belongs to you, it is sly, it is from the devils, it is from a passionate state"[1220]. And thus, I have never allowed my thought to make me trusting to myself, without asking for advice.

[1219] Everything that occurs in the sphere of an individualistic thinking, it is by itself deprives of the broader sight, one that take in account, in a balanced, the inter-conditioning of everybody. It is from the devil who wants to tear apart the creation and to sing everyone in a, extremely reduced existence, in a tormented existence, in a shadowy existence, in an existence of a disordered, irrational, and contradictory motion of the shadows. Everything is a false knowledge, because of being a knowledge of the strap, one that is not fully real, because it is not in the fabric of the whole, in communication of live with among all realities. The right-reckoning", so praised in the Easter spiritual writings, it comes out of a long experience of the life in community, of together-advising with others. It takes heed at all reality's sides, at all possible viewpoints, in the judgment it formulates. That's why is required the advice especially from the "old men", who have gathered along years much life experience and many opinions from very numerous people.

[1220] Even if the judgment one gives to himself regarding some deed it is identical to that he has received from an experienced adviser, it is better that he asked. This is for he got rid of pride, or of the self-trusting, which can accustom him not to ask for advice even in the cases which he could judge wrongly. And by and large, any pride as closing up of the man within himself, it will bring within that man a state of callousness, of dehumanization. And the Holy Ghost will be there where the hearts are open to others, where the people are mellowed by feeling and by communicability.

And believe me, brothers, that I was in a great peace, in a great lack of worry, so that I complained about that, as I know that I said you on a different occasion. This is for I heard that "through many troubles we must enter the Kingdom of God" (Acts 14: 21), but I saw on myself as having no trouble and I feared and I was worried, because I didn't know the cause of the peace I had until the Oldman told me: "Do not be troubled, for anyone who surrenders on himself to the obedience, he will have this peace and this lack of worries"[1221].

7) Strive, brothers, to ask and to not trust to yourselves. Learn what lack of worries this thing brings, what a peace, and what a joy! But because I said that I was never troubled, listen to this thing that happened to me back then. While I still was in the congregational monastery, it happened to me a big and unbearable sadness and I was in such a pain and tribulation, that I was about to yield my soul. And that trouble came to me because of the devils' plotting, because such a temptation is brought due to their envy. It is a very hard, dark, non-comforted temptation, one that doesn't allow any resting. It is a pressure from all quarters, and it is a chocking from all directions. But the grace of God comes quickly within the soul, because otherwise no one could endure that. I was, as I said, in such a temptation and tribulation. Then, on one day, while I was standing in the monastery's yard, and I was discouraged and I was praying God for that, I suddenly looked at the Church and I saw somebody dressed up as a bishop who was about to enter the altar. I never got close to a stranger, without a need of a commandments. But then, as something was dragging me, I entered after him. And he remained inside for quite a long time having his hands stretched towards the sky. I was standing behind him, praying with a great fear. This was because I was afraid of seeing him. After he finished his prayer, he turned around and came to me. And the closer he got, the more I felt my sadness and my fear removed from me. Arrived in front of me he stretched his hand and he touched my chest, and he knocked on my chest, saying: "Waiting, I have been waiting for my Lord and He took heed at me and He heard my prayer and He got me out of the pit of my troubles and out of much mud. And He set my feet on rock and He directed my steps and He put in my mouth a new song, praise to our God" (Ps. 39: 2-

[1221] See About Rejection, head no. 25, in this writing.

4[1222]). And he said all those verses for three times, knocking, as I said, on my chest. And then he went out. And immediately occurred in my heart light, and joy, and comforting, and sweetness, and I felt myself totally different. I went out running after him for I wanted to find him, but I didn't find him, for he disappeared. Since then, by the mercy of God, I do not know myself as being troubled either by sadness or by fear, but the Lord has covered me until now, by the prayers of those old saints.

8) I have told you these things in order to show you how much resting, lack of worries, and support (reassurance) has he who do not trust to himself, and who surrenders his things to the Lord and to them who can advise him according to God. Therefore, you to brothers, learn how to ask. You learn that it isn't good to trust to yourselves; you learn that this is humbleness, it is resting, and it is joy. What it is needed for, that somebody to crush on himself vainly? One cannot be saved except on this way.

Maybe somebody will think that he has nobody to ask, so what should him do? But if somebody really wants to do the will of God with the whole his heart, God won't forsake him ever. And God will unmistakingly advise him according to Hid will. If somebody truly open his heart to God's will, God will enlighten even a little child to tell him God's will. And if somebody doesn't want to truly do the will of God, even if he goes to see a prophet, God will give into the prophet's heart to answer him according to his crooked heart, as the Scripture says: "If the prophet is deceived and speaks, I, the Lord, I have deceived that prophet" (Deut. 13: 1-3)[1223]. That's why we owe to correct on ourselves

[1222] In KJB we have" Ps. 40: 1-3: I WAITED patiently for the Lord; and he inclined unto me, and heard my cry. // He brought me up also out of an horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock, and established my goings. // And he hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God:"; in ROB we have: Ps. 39: 1-4: "Waiting I have been waiting for the Lord and He leaned towards me. // He heard my prayer. He got me out of the pit of the wickedness and from the clay of the mud. // And He set my feet of the rock and He directed my steps. // And He put in my mouth a new song, singing to our God;". (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1223] On one hand, finding out the truth regarding what you must do, it depends on your will to do the will of God; on the other hand, this will of yours must find a strengthening in another's word. In the dialogue of both of them there will speak God. Each one finds God by searching for Him. But the confirmation of the finding out of the will of God it will be gained out of the dialogue between two who search for God's will: "Where there are two of three gathered in My name, there I will be too amidst them" (Mt. 18: 20). It is not despised either the individual's will to find out the will of God, but neither is despised the communion between with the whole our power, in order us to do the will of God, and not to trust to our heart, even if it would be a good thing (what we think at), and let's hear also from a saint that that would be a good thing. Let's not trust to ourselves, even if we have started working well, and let's not reckon that it must turn out rightly. But we must do everything in our power, and on the other hand we must tell to another how we have been working and so we can find out if we have worked well. And let's not even after that be us careless, btu let's wait for the judgment of God, as Saint Abba Agathon said. This if because he, when asked: "Do you fear too, father?", he answered: "I have been working according to my power, but I do not know if my thing has been pleasant to God. This is because other is the judgment of God and other is that of the people". May God defend us against the danger of us trusting to ourselves, and may Him found us worthy of keeping the way of our fathers, who were well-pleasant to Him.

VI

Let's Not Judge Our Neighbor

1) If we could remember, brothers, the words of the old saints, if we could always think at those, we would hardly commit sin, and we would hardly fall into carelessness. This is for, I those ones said, if we do not despise the small things which seem to us unimportant, we won't fall into the big and difficult things. I always tell you that out of these small things, out of saying: "What is this, what is that?", it will be born without our soul the evil habit and our soul will start despising the important things too.

Do you know what a big sin is to judge your neighbor? This is because what could be graver that this? God is disgusted by anything more than that, as our fathers told us, two or more. When I do not want to fulfill the will of God, neither the prophet can unveil or impose God's will to me, but the prophet strengthens me into my straying. When I want to do the will of God, even a little child can confirm me into that. But in both cases God is The One working. In the first case God lets me in my individualistic ambition, while in the second case God confirms me in feeling His will. The confirmation in straying or in truth it always comes to me through another. Such is our nature made. God confirms me even through a child, for even a child can get me out of my opinion that I own the whole truth.

and there is nothing worse than to judge on another. This is because, from this seemly unimportant thing, somebody comes to a very grave evil. This is because, from admitting a tiny suspicion against the neighbor, from saying: "What will be if I listen too to what this brother tells" What if myself tell thig word? What if I see what this brother of what this stranger does?", the mind starts forgetting about its own sins and it starts occupying on itself with the neighbor's sins. And from here comes out of the urge to judge, to slander, and to despise. And then, from here comes to the falling into what one judges. This is because, by not taking care of his own sins, and by not crying for his death, as the fathers told us, the man cannot straighten on himself in anything, but he will always occupy on himself with the thing of his neighbor. And nothing angers God so much, and nothing empties the man so much, and nothing drives the man to his forsaking (by God), as the slandering, the Judging, and the despising of his neighbor[1224].

2) Something else is slandering, somethings else is judging, and something else is despising. Slandering is telling about somebody: "He lied, or he got angry, or he fornicated, or he did similar things". By saying that, he slandered that one, because of saying something against him, because of telling another's sin passionately.

And the judgment is to say: "Somebody is a liar, somebody is a furious man, somebody is a fornicator". BY saying that, one judges the inward state of that soul, and he expressed on himself about that one's whole life, by saying that that one is so, and he judged that one as such[1225]. And this is a [1224] The preoccupation with another's sins it will make the man to forget about his own sins, and by and large to forget about his duty to clean up and to consummate on himself. He finds out an excuse in another's sins, he finds on himself as less guilty than another, and he opens his path to advance further in his sins. By that he neglects studying on himself, intending to truly know on himself, to clean himself up of sins, to find forgiveness for his own sins. Judging on another it will by and large bring a lack of knowledge about ourselves. A contrary, looking attentively and admiratively at the kindness of another, it will make us judging on ourselves, to know our own shortcomings, and to try and correct them. That gives birth within us to the fear of the future punishment. Thus, judging on another will influence us in an evil manner, while cherishing on another will influence us in good. That's why, by judging on others, we will be found worthy to be ourselves judged.

[1225] The slandering refers to a deed or another done by somebody; judging refers to the itself the person of that one, as a whole. By judging one draws the conclusion out of an somebody's evil deed that that person is always like that, that that person cannot work but exactly as he did, because of that being that person's nature, or that that evil deem comes from a habit of doing that evil which the author won't escape ever.

very grave thing. This is for it is something else saying that "he got angry" and it is something else saying that "he is furious" and so expressing, as I showed, against that one's whole life. Judging any man so gravely that Christ Himself says: "You hypocrite, get firstly out the beam from your eye and then you will see how to get out the straw form the eye of your brother" (Lk. 6: 42). He likened the sin of the neighbor to the straw, while He resembled the judging of the neighbor to a beam. Can you see how bad a thing is to judge? It is almost worse than any sin. And that Pharisee praying to God and thanking to God for his virtues, he didn't lie, but he told the truth. And he was not condemned because of that. This is for we owe to thank God when we have been found worthy of doing anything good, for God helped us and He worked together with us. That's why, as I said, he wasn't condemned because he told: "I am not like the other people", but when, turning himself towards the publican, he said: "neither like this publican". Then he burdened on himself. This is because of judging the person of that one as such, itself the inward state of that person and, shortly, the whole that one's life[1226]. That's why the publican left more corrected than the Pharisee.

3) There is nothing graver, nor worse, as I said for many times, than to judge or to despise your neighbor. Why don't we rather judge on ourselves in order us to know our sins in details, which we are going to be held accountable by God? Why do we steal the judgment from God? What do we want from the [1226] Judging on somebody means to draw, from a mistake seen at another, the conclusion that that one is wholly and always as he was on that moment which we saw him committing that mistake on. It means condemning the whole person by and large, as having nothing good in him, nothing able to save him. It means declaring that person as worthy of eternal damnation, as incapable of doing anything good, as eternally lost. But this comes out of the fact that he who judges on that person he has never come closer with his heart to that person, and therefore he hasn't seen anything good too in that person, and how that person internally fights the sin he has committed, and he who judges hasn't made any effort to wake up through his heart the another's heart. Such a judgment comes out of lack of knowledge, out of lack of communication, in order to truly know that person and eventually to help that person to correct himself. In this is also a lack of love. But by that the person who judges proves on himself to be a merciless person, one lacking any interest in and love for the persons he judges. And therefore, he who judges will be condemned more rightly than will be him whom he judged. That's why the Lord said: "Do not judge so you won't be judged". Let's leave the judgment to God Who really knows the man's inside and God know whether there is also something good in that man, or whether there is nothing good. By doing so, we won't exclude that within that man there can be something good too.

creature of God?[1227] Let's tremble by hearing what happened to that great old man, who heard about a certain brother who fell into fornication, and the old man said: "He wronged!". Because you know what fearsome thing is said about him in Paterikon: An angel brought the soul of him whom he sinned and said: "Lo him whom you judged! He died. Where do you command me to take him: into Kingdom or in hell?". Can there be a more fearsome burden that this: "Because you are the judge of the righteous and of the sinners, you tell me what do you command regarding this humble soul? Will you have mercy on him? Or will you send him to torments?"[1228]. Scared by that, the saint spent the rest of his life in sighs, in tears, and in thousands of toils, praying God to forgive him for that sin. And this he did after he fell on his face at the feet of the angels and took forgiveness. This is because the angels by telling him: "Lo, God has shown you what a burden brings judging on another; do not do it anymore!", and this word was the proof of the forgiveness. Still, the old man's soul couldn't get appeasement out of his crying until his death[1229].

4) This is because what do we want from our neighbor? Why must we burden on ourselves with his burden? We have plenty of what we should be worried about, brothers! Let each of us take heed at himself and at his sins. Only to God is due to justify and to condemn. This is because only God know the inwards state of each one, and the behaviors, and the gifts, and the nature, and the skillfulness, so that Only God can judge accordingly to each one, as only He knows. This is because differently judges God the things of the bishop and differently the things of the ruler; differently judges the things of the adviser from those of the disciple; differently those of the old man from those of the young man; differently of the sick one from of the healthy one. And who can know these judgments except Him alone Who created all realities and Who conceived all of them and Who knows all of them?

[1227] The creature of God doesn't owe us anything, so that we have not right to judge her of him. But the creature of God is debtor to God. This is for God has brought that creature to life and He sustains that creature.

[1228] Apopht. belonging to Isaiah of Theba.

[1229] We have no right to judge others, not only because it wasn't us who brought them to existence and therefore, we cannot impose them any debt towards us, but also because we cannot extend their existence by sending them into the Kingdom of Heavens, neither can we diminish their existence forever by sending them to torments. He who has no power to proceed to a judgment, or he who is not delegated to do that by the executive forum, that one neither had the right to judge. Only Him Who has given us the degree of earthly life, only Him can diminish this degree all the way down to a minimum in hell, or He can increase this degree at maximum into the Kingdom of Heavens, by the fact that this increase or diminution has brought me closer to Him or it has taken me far from Him at maximum.

5) I remember that I heard that once happened this thing: A ship carrying slaves arrived to a city. And in that city was a very holy virgin who was taking much heed at herself. When she found out that that ship was coming there, she rejoiced. This was because she wanted to buy for herself a very little girl. She reckoned like this: I will take that little girl and I will raise her as I wish, so that she won't know anything about the evilness of this world. So, the virgin summoned the captain of the ship and she found out from him that he had two very little girls, as the virgin wanted, and she gladly paid for one little girl and she took that girl with her. But immediately after that captain left with the other girl, he came across with a dancer of immortal habits who saw the other little girl and she wanted to buy her and she did that. Can you see the mysteries of God? Can you see His judgment? Who can find out the meaning of His judgment? So, the holy one takes the little girl and she will raise her in the fear of God, teaching her all the good things and teaching her the whole monastic rule and, simply speaking, the whole good fragrance of God's commandments. While the dancer taking the other little girl she made that girl the tool of the devil. Because of what else could that insane woman teach that girl except the perdition of her soul! What could we say about this fearsome judgment of God? Both girls were little, both were sold without knowing where they were going, and one ended in the hand of God while another fell in devil's hands. So, can we say that God will ask from one the same things which He asked from another? How could God do that? If both girls fell into fornication, or in some other mistake, it could be possible to say that both will have the same judgment. But since one has learnt about judgment, about the Kingdom of God, and she has been cogitating day and night at the word of God, while the wicked one didn't know and she has never heard a good thing, but all she has been hearing have been evil things and devilish things, how one could ask from both of them the same fulness of accomplishing the commandments of God?

6) Therefore, the man cannot know anything about the judgments of God, but only God alone knows everything and He can judge anybody's things, as only Himself knows. There can happen, indeed, that a certain brother can do some wrong things due to his simplicity. But he has a thing that is pleasant to God more than the whole life of that brother. But you judge him and by doing so you will condemn you soul. And if a falling happens to that brother, where could you know from how much he has been fighting against that and for how long he bled before committing that mistake, and if his mistake is not almost a righteousness to God? This is for, by seeing his tiredness and the trouble that one had, God will have mercy of him and God will forgive him. You know that mistake of his, but God has mercy on him. You condemn him and so you will lose your soul. Where could you know from how many tears he shed before God for the mistake he committed? You can know his sin but you cannot know his repentance[1230].

But sometimes it happens to us that we do not only judge, but we also despise. This is because it is different judging from despising. The despising takes place when somebody doesn't only judge be he also despises as well. This one is disgusted of his neighbor, as of an ugly thing. And this is worse and more destructive than judging.

7) But they who strive for being saved they won't take heed at the shortcomings of their neighbor, but let them take heed at their own: and by that they will progress as well. So did that one who, when seeing his brother committing sin, he said: "Woe me, because today he has sinned, but tomorrow I will unmistakingly sin". Can you see how he strengthens (reassured) on himself? This is for, by saying: "Tomorrow I will unmistakingly sin myself as well", he sowed fear to himself and worry for the sins he followed, allegedly, himself to commit. And he wasn't content only with that much, but he placed on himself lower than the sinner he saw, by saying: "This one repents for his sin, but I will unmistakingly not repent". Can you see the enlightenment of this godlike soul, that he not only was able to shun himself from judging the another, but he even placed on himself lower than that one?

[1230] It is here being exemplified the fact that we, by not knowing the whole inward of our fellow human, but only an external deed, we cannot judge his whole person. Only God can do that, for only God knows the whole being of that one. That's why, the judgment from God is gentler, because God know the whole man's inward struggle and the fewness of the human powers in comparison to His almightiness. And there is almost no man who is only evil, or diabolical, as Dostoevsky described a few.

And we, the misfortunate, we judge him indifferently, we are disgusted by him, we despise him for anything we hear or see or suspect him for. And what is even more awful, it is that we do not stop only to harm on ourselves but, when we come across with some brother, we immediately tall to that one too: "This and that happened". And we harm that one too, by casting the sin within his heart. And we do not fear him who said: "Woe him who waters his neighbor with mirky drink" (Habakkuk 2: 15), but we are instead doing the devils' thing and we do not care about that. This is because of what else having the devil to do except disturbing and harming? And we are together-working with the devils to ours and our neighbor's perdition. This is because of him who harms a soul he helps the devils and he together-works with them, unlike him who makes beneficial things to a soul and so he is together-working with the angels.

8) But what we are suffering that for, if not because we don't have love? This is for, if we had love, joined with the mercy and with the pain, we wouldn't take care of seeing our neighbor's shortcomings. This is for he says: "The love covers lots of sins" (1 Pt. 4-8); and again: "The love doesn't count the evil, it covers everything" and the others (1 Cor. 13: 5). Therefore, us as well, as I said, if we had the love, itself the love would cover up any mistake, as the saints do as well, by seeing the crushing of the people. For the saints are not blind. But they though not see the people's sins[1231]. On the other hand, who hates the sin so much as the saints do? But the saints do not hate the sinner, neither the saints judge him, nor the saints avoid him, but they together-suffer with him and they advise him and the comfort him and they serve him and they heal him as a sick limb; and they do everything to save him[1232].

[1231] They who have analyzes the feeling of the love (e.g. L. Binswanger, Grundformen und Erkentnis menschlichen Daseins, Zurich, 1942) they ascertained that the love created, to him whom is loves, a consummate image. And this is not an ineffectual imagination, but it is one succeeding in transforming the beloved one in the reports with the one who imagined him, in what that one has imagined her or him. He who loves is cannot but to imagine the beloved one (einbilden) as being very good and very beautiful. But through that imagination is noticed what is virtually given into the beloved one, and that helps the beloved one to actually become like that. If all of us love a human being, it would be impossible that one to be evil.

[1232] The saints hate the sin, but they don't hate the sinner. They hatred towards the sin is shown in the fact that they sun on themselves against sin and they help others, by love, to defeat the sin. The saints see in the person such a deep and wonderful mystery than they intuit in that person possibilities of surpassing any sin and any temptation. But these possibilities

Look the fishermen: when they throw the fishing line into the sea and they catch a big fish and they fell that fish as fighting back, they do not pull back immediately, by forcing over measure, because that would sever up the fishing line, and so they would lose the fish. But they skillfully loosen the fishing line and they let the fish go wherever it wants. But then, after they realize that the fish got tired, they start pulling that fish out. So do the saints as well, by long-suffering and love, and they do not get far from the sinner because of getting disgusted. This is for, as a mother having an ugly baby she won't get disgusted on her own baby, neither will he leave her baby, but she love adorning her baby and doing anything to make her baby more beautiful; the saint as well, they help him who has mistaken, in order they to correct him in time and either not letting others to be harmed by that one, but all of them to progress in the love for Christ.

What did Saint Amon when those disturbed brothers came to him and told him: "Come and see, Aba, that there is a woman in the monastic cell of this brother"? How much mercy Abba showed to that brother, how much love his soul had! This is for Abba knew that the brother hid that woman under a barrel, he intentionally sat on that barrel, and after that he told to those brothers to search everywhere in that monastic cell. And because they didn't find anything, Abba told them: "May God forgive you". And so, he ashamed them and helped them not to easily believe what is against their brother, and he helped the sinner to reach righteous, for Abba not only covered him up according to God, but Abba also corrected him at the right time, for after all the brothers went out of the monastic cell, Abba took that brother's hand and told him: "Takle care of yourself, brother!". And that brother was immediately appeased and pricked into his heart, for the love for people of the Abba immediately worked within that brother's soul[1233].

9) So, let's earn love to our turn, let's earn mercy on our brother, in order to protect us against the evil-slandering and from despising somebody, and let's help on one another as must be actualized by the power given to the saint by their love for the another. The person-to-person connection it really is a communication resembling to that among the body's limbs. A sick limb cannot be healed without being communicated to it the blood of the healthy limbs. That is being done among people by love.

[1233] Apopht. belonging to Abba Amon 10; G.P. 65" 121. We have here an example of what one could call the saint's delicateness.

some limbs belonging to each other. Who is that, by having a wound at his hand of at his leg, or at some other limbs of his, he will get disgusted on himself[1234], or to cut off his limb even though that limb would have puss, and he won't rather clean his limb up and wash it up and anoint his wound and bandage it up and he will spray it with holy water and he will pray for his limbs and he will beg the saints to pray for him, as Abba Zosimus said too? And in any case, he won't leave his limb and he won't get far from his limb, neither from its stanch, but he will do anything to heal his limb up. So, we owe to suffer ones from others, to support on one another, and through others who are stronger than us to contrive and to do everything to help on ourselves and on others. This is for "limbs to one another we are", as the Apostle says; this is "for all of us are a body and all of us limbs to others", and "if a limb suffers all the other limbs will suffer as well" (Rom. 12: 5; 1 Cor. 12: 16). What do we reckon that the congregational monasteries are? Don't we reckon that they are a body and, those living within such monasteries, they are limbs to one another? They who lead they are the head; they who pay attention and direct, they are the eyes; they who utter words which are beneficial to others, they are the mouth. And the ears are they who obey; and the hands are they who work and the feet are they who are sent (to necessary jobs) and they who have different jobs. Are you a head? Lead! Are you an eye? Take heed, and know! Are you a mouth? Speak, be useful! Are you an ear? Listen! Are you a hand? Work! Are you a foot? Serve! Let each one serve the body according to his power and let yourselves strive always to help on one another, either by teaching and by sowing the God's word with the brother's heart, or by comforting him in time of trouble, or by giving him a hand to help him finish his work. And let each of you, as I said, according to his power, to strive and united among yourselves. This is for, the more one united [1234] He who gets disgusted of his own limb, he will get disgusted of himself, because of himself being whole in every limb of his. So, by cutting off his limb, he will make on himself less complete. Likewise, the existential connection existing among us, it makes myself to be within each one of the others, and by letting one of them dying, or to become useless to me, are even more dangerously through sin, I will deprive on myself and I will endanger on myself, or I will souly lessen on myself, at least partially if not completely.

on himself with his neighbor the more he will unite don himself with God[1235].

10) And let me tell you a parable from the holy fathers, so that you will be able to understand this word. You suppose that there is a circle, a round cut, made from the center of the pair of compasses. Its center is the most-middle part of the circle, until the center as such. Think with your mind at what I am saying you. You reckon that this circle if the world, and that in the middle of that circle is God, and the lines leading from periphery to the middle are the ways of the human livings. So, the more the saints enter towards the things from the middle, due to their desire to come nearer to God, the more they come closer to God the more they will be closer to one another; and the more they will come closer to one another the more they will be closer to God. Think similarly on separation too. This is because when people part with God and turn themselves to the outside things, they obviously by getting far from God they will get far from one another; and the more they get far from on another they more they will get farer from God. It is thus the nature of the love. As we are outside and we do not love God, to the same extent we will be far from one another. And if we love God, the more we get nearer to God by living Him, the more we will be united with, by love, with our neighbor; and the more we get united with our neighbor, the more will us be united with God. May God make us worthy of hearing the things which are useful to us and us to accomplish those things. This is for, the more we take care and strive to work what we hear, the more will God enlighten us and teach us to always do His will.

[1235] We must signal here two things: first, that the union among the brothers from monastery and among the believers, by and large, it is a union increasing by deeds, namely each one does something from another, and not by simply declaring his love. By his deeds for another, each one progressed into another's being. Secondly, that by us advancing one into the another's being, we will advance into God, into the union with God. This is for God in within the unity of love among several people. God is the spring out of Whom the love springs out, through them who united with one another. God is the Supreme Subject Whom the human subjects are united within.

VII

About the Blaming on Himself

1) Let's try to find out why we often hear somebody saying something upsetting, but we don't care about that, while on some other times we get disturbed because of that? Which is the cause of this difference? And does this difference have only one cause, or it does have several causes? I reckon that it has several causes. But there is one cause giving birth, as somebody says, to all the several causes. And I am going to tell you what is that like. First, one happens to be at prayer, or having a good setting, or as somebody would cay, he is in a good inward state, and then that one would bear his brother and he overlook (that one's word), without being disturbed. It happens as well, that somebody has an addiction to somebody and that's why he endures, without getting troubled, the things said about him. Then it happens as well that somebody despises him who wants to hurt him, so that he reckons as insignificant the things that one and he won't even reckon him as a human being, or he won't even reckon as worthy to be noticed the things said and done by that one.

2) And I am going to tell you something similar, in order I to make you wonder: There was a certain brother in the congregational monastery before I felt from there. And I never saw him disturbed, or upset with somebody, despite I know many brothers who rebuked him and disgusted him in diverse ways. But that young man endured all those things from each of them as nobody would have upset him. So, I was wandering about his overwhelming power not to keep the evil in mind and I wanted to find out from him how had he achieved that virtue. And once I took him apart and I bowed myself before him and I asked him to tell me what thought he had always in his heart that he could show so much long-suffering, either while being rebuked or while suffering something else from somebody. And he answered me naturally and directly, saying: "But I must take heed at my non-consummations and to receive those things from them as a gentle dog would receive the things from humans". And when I heard that I told to myself: "This brother has found the way". And by marking upon myself the sign of the cross I left praying God to cover up me and him.

3) It happens, so, as I said, that somebody not to be disturbed also because he despises them who rebuke him. But this is an obvious perdition. But the trouble endured by somebody from a brother who upsets him it happens either because he is not on that moment in a good mood or because he has some disgust on that brother. But there are also many other causes which have been told in many ways.

But the cause of any disturbance is, if we search for that in details, it is the fact of not blaming us on ourselves. That's why we have all this grief; that's why we never find resting. That's why, there is no wonder that we hear from all the saints that there is no other road (to resting), except this one; and we can see that nobody has ever travelled another road to find the resting. But we except to get rest, or to keep in all aspects the right way, while not enduring ever to blame on ourselves. Rightly so, even though the man achieved thousands of virtues, but he still doesn't keep this path, he won't ever cease getting upset and he will lose all his toils. But what a joy, what a resting he will have, wherever he would, he who, as Abba Poemen said, he will blame on himself[1236]! This is for any loss, any dishonoring, or any trouble happened to him, if he reckoned on himself as worthy of those, he wouldn't ever get troubled. And I wonder who could be more worriless than this one?

4) But if somebody said: "But if a brother troubles me and, by inquiring on myself, I found out that I did not give him any reason for that, how could I blame on myself?". But if one inquires on himself with the fear of God, he will unmistakingly find out that he has given to that brother some reason, either with the work, or with the word, or with the countenance. And if he sees on himself, as he says, that he still doesn't find any reason given by him to that brother to trouble him, one could suppose that he upset that brother on other occasion, either with the work or with the word or with something else, or he troubled another brother, and because of that he owes to suffer; or, often, for another sin of his. So, if somebody inquires on himself in details, as I said, with the fear of God, and if he will inquire his conscience in details, he will find out that he is, without any doubt, guilty[1237].

It happens sometimes that somebody sees on himself as sitting peacefully and serenely, but when a brother tells him a word that upsets him, he will get upset and he will reckon that he has justly got upset, by saying against that one: "If he didn't come and if he didn't speak to me and if he didn't disturb me, I would not commit sin". But this is a laughable thing, it is a crooked judgment. This is for, did that one - who told him that word - sow in him the passion? That one only showed himself the passion that was within him for, if he wanted, he could repent for it. He is like a flower beautiful outwardly but containing ashes inside and when broken it shows the ugliness it contains. Likewise, this brother sat in peace, as he reckoned, but he had within him the passion without knowing that. It sufficed the brother to tell him a sole word and he brought to light the mud he had hidden within him. So, if he wants to find mercy, let him repent and clean on himself and progress and then he will see that he rather has to thank to that brother as to one who was the cause for this benefit.

5) Then the trials do not pressure him so hard, but the more he progresses the more they will be easier. This is for the more the soul progresses the more the soul will become stronger and the soul will have power to endure the things coming upon him. This is like a powerful animal, if it is burdened with a big weight, that animal will carry that wight without getting tired, and if it stumbled it would immediately get up and it wouldn't feel as if stumbled. But if it is a weak animal, it will feel any wight as a big weight, and if it fell, it would need much help to get up again. It is likewise in the case of the soul. The more the soul commits the sin the wicked will become because of that. And if the sin is cause for weakness and it makes drowsy on him who commits the sin, anything happens to that soul will be perceived like a burden. And if the man progresses, the things seeming burdening to him before, they will gradually become lighter to him. So, it will do us much good and it will bring us to much resting and progress the fact [1237] He hasn't always been perfect, he said on some occasion something to somebody, and the fame got spread about him of not being so good. And those things made him not to be pleasant to all brothers. And he who rebukes him without a present motif, he worked that by being pushed by that fame.

of blaming on ourselves and not on another for what it happens to us. This is especially for nothing happens to us without the taking care from God.

6) Maybe somebody would say: "How can I not feel troubled if I need something and I cannot achieve that? For that thing is necessary to me". But neither this one has any reason to blame somebody else, or to trouble somebody. But, if he really needs something, as he says, but he cannot get that thing, he must say: "Christ knows better than me what must rest me, and He Himself will make on Himself to me instead of this food"[1238]. The sons of Israel ate manna in the desert for forty years. And the manna was one, but it became to each one that what he needed: him who wanted something salty it was salty; him who wanted something sweet it was sweet. And manna became to each one, shortly speaking, something that matched his nature[1239]. So, is somebody needs an egg but he only received vegetables, let him tell to his thought: "If it was useful to me, unmistakingly God would send that to me. But God can make an egg even out of this vegetable". Ald let him believe in God that that will be dome to him, towards witnessing God's work. And truly so, if there is somebody worthy to be rested (to be strengthened with food), God will urge the heart of the Saracens to have mercy on him according to his need. And if he is not worthy to be rested, or that is not necessary to him, even if God has made him a new earth and a new heaven, he still won't find rest[1240]. That's why, sometime one is in resting (in strengthening with food) even over he needs, while on some other times he won't find even that much as he needs. This is for God, by being merciful, He gives to each one according to his need, and sometimes God gives one more than that one need, in order God to show him the overwhelming greatness of His love for people and in order God to teach him to thank Him. But when God doesn't give him that what fits his need, God will make by His word that the given thing to fulfill that one's need, while teaching him in the same time to be patient.

That's why, we must take heed in everything at the things I said above, either it comes something good or something bad [1238] Mark the Ascetic, About the Spiritual Law 2; G.P. 65: 905.

[1239] Saint Basil, G.P. 32: 700 C and Saint Gregory of Nyssa, G.P. 44: 368 C.
[1240] So, one can understand that the sinners won't be able to enjoy the new heavens and the new earth of the Kingdom of God.

from somebody; let's look at the things from height and let's thank for what happen to us, by enduring everything with the self-blaming and by saying, as the fathers told, that if somebody good happens to us it will be from the oikonomia of God, and if something bad will happen to us it will be because of our sins. This is for, if the saints suffer, they suffer for the name of God, or in order their virtue to be shown in order to be beneficial to many, or in order their payment from God to be multiplied. But for us, because of being us wicked, how could we tall this? This is for we commit sins daily and by searching for justification for our passions we have left the right-path shown us by our fathers, namely that one of blaming on ourselves. And we travel on the narrow path by blaming our neighbor[1241]. And each of us strives in anything to blame his brother and to cast the burden upon him. Each of us disregards (the commandments of God) and he doesn't keep any of them, but he asks his brother to observe the commandments.

7) On one occasion, two brothers who were troubling on one another came to me. And the older said about the younger: "I command him a thing and the get troubled and I get troubled too, because of reckoning that if he had faith and if he had love for me, he would accept with trust what I command him". And the younger said: "Forgive me, father! He doesn't speak to me with the fear of God, but like one who wants to command me and I reckon that's why my heart doesn't get entrusted (about him talking to me from God), as the fathers say"[1242]. Take heed at how they were blaming on one another and no one blamed on himself. Others two, because of troubling on one another, despite they bow before one another, they remained without trusting in one another. One of them said: "He didn't bow before me with the whole his heart and that's why I haven't gain trust in him. This is because the fathers said so". And the another said: "Because of him not having a loving mood towards me, before I bowed before him (in order to ask him for forgiveness), that's why I didn't trust him". Can you see how both of them were prey to the mockery (from the devil)? Can you see what a twisted thinking? God knows, I fear that even the words of the fathers we understand them according tour evil will and towards losing our souls. It must each of them to take upon himself the guilt and to say: "I didn't bow down before my brother with the while my heart and that's why God didn't give me entrustment"; and the another must say: "I wasn't in a loving mood towards my brother before he bowed down before me and that's why God didn't give him entrustment". The two brothers I mentioned before must do likewise. The first one must say: "I am speaking with pride and that's why God doesn't' give entrustment to my brother". And the another must cogitate: "My brother commands me with humbleness and with love, but I am disobedient and I have no fear of God". But none of them found the way of self-blaming, so that each of them was burdening their brothers.

8) Lo, this is why we cannot progress, this is why we cannot ever succeed in anything, and so we all the time remain poisoned by our thoughts which we have against others, grinding up on one another. This is because each one thinks himself is right, each one allows to himself not to observe the commandments, as I said, but he claims his brother to keep the commandments. That's why we can't get accustomed to the good. This is because even though we achieve a little light, we immediately will ask that from our brother, by blaming him and by telling him that he owed to do that and why he didn't do it? Why we do not rather ask from ourselves to fulfill the commandments and why don't we blame on ourselves because of not keeping the commandments?

Where is that old man who, when he was asked: "What have you found better on this way, father"", he answered: "To blame on myself in everything". That was praised too by him who asked. That's why he said: "There is no other way except this"[1243].

Abba Poemen too, he said with a sigh: "All the virtues have entered this house, except one. And without that one, the [1243] Apopht. belonging to Theophilus 1, G.P. 65: 197 CD. Always blaming on yourself, it means no longer seeing the evil elsewhere, but only within you, and by that you will be able to truly heal it. This is because one cannot forcedly heal others, but you can willingly correct on yourself. Or, you can always stop the apparition of the evil within yourself and you can stop the evil's flowing from you and you can become a spring of the ceaseless stream of the good. This is the only method for stopping the evil, and for working to overwhelm the evil with the good.

man hardly can stop (the evil)". And they asked him: "Which is that?" And he said: "the man to blame on himself"[1244].

And, also Saint Anthony said that this is the great work of the man, to cast the mistake upon himself before God, and to wait for temptations until his last breath[1245].

And we can find out everywhere that the fathers kept this commandment and they placed everything in connection with God, down to the smallest of things; and thus, they found resting.

9) So, he did that holy Oldman whom, while he was sick, the brother who was serving him mistakenly placed in his food instead of honey some rapeseed oil that is very damaging[1246]. Despite to that, the old man said nothing and he silently ate a piece of vegetable, and then a second piece, as it was necessary, while not blaming the brother for anything in himself and by not thinking at all that that brother despised him. And the old man said nothing about that. And when the brother realized what he did, he started troubling on himself, saying: "I have killed you, Abba, and you have put the sin upon me because you have kept your silence"[1247]. Why? He said: "Yes, but if God wanted me to eat honey, the brother would put honey"[1248]. And he said that despite the old man was very ill and he couldn't eat any food for so many days. Still, the old man didn't get upset on that brother but he put that happening on behalf of God. And the old man was right. If God wanted him eat honey, God would transform that bad-smelling oil into honey.

10) But we start blaming our neighbor in everything, by blaming him that he despised us and he worked contrary to conscience. And when we hear a word, we immediately [1244] Apopht. belonging to Poemen 134, G.P. 65: 356 D. The evil wills top only if you do not answer to another's evil with the evil from within yourself, by blaming him. The evil coming from another it will be drowned in the ocean of your forgiveness. Properly said, that evil is melted down before reaching you, by the fact that you do not see that evil. Somewhat, the evil is also the product of an imagination, a hallucination. The origin of the evil is the imagining of the evil. We give the evil the power to exist and to torment us, by imagining that the evil exists. This is both the inconsistency and the consistency of the evil. By this we can uphold the inconsistent evil into eternity (the hell).

[1247] If the old man put the sin upon the brother, he wouldn't actually put the sin upon that brother; he put that sin upon that brother by not putting that sin upon that brother.

[1248] Here is a great optimism affirmed. You must enjoy your troubles as bringer of the mercy of God. Thus, nothing will cause you sufferance and sadness anymore.

misinterpret it saying: "If he didn't want to hurt me, he wouldn't say that". Where is that saint who said about Simei: "Let him curse, for the Lord told him to curse on David" (2 Kings[1249] 16: 11). God told the killer to curse the prophet. Hos could that be? The prophet, by knowing that nothing brings so much mercy from God over a soul as the trials do, and especially those trials coming and pilling up in time of trouble and tribulations, he said: "Let him curse David, for the Lord told him to do that". What for? "In order God to see my humbleness and to turn me the good things instead of his curse". Can you see how the prophet knowledgeably said that? That's why the prophet even humbled on himself before them who wanted to defend him, saying: "What I and you have to do with that, sons of Zariah? Let him curse for the Lord told him to do that.

And we cannot stand saying about our brother that the Lord told him to do that. But if we hear a word, we will immediately suffer the things of the dog. This is because, if somebody throw a stone at the dog, the dog will immediately leave what it was doing before and it will go and bite that stone. We do the same. We leave God Who allows to be brought upon us the trials in order our sins to be cleaned up, and we start against our brother, saying: "Why did he told me that? Why did he do me that?". And despite we could benefit a lot out of those, we rather plot against ourselves things which will hurt us. This is because we do not want to know that all the things are done according to the taking-care of God, towards the benefit of each of us. May God make is wise by the prayers of the saints. Amen.

About Keeping the Evil in Mind

1) The fathers[1250] said that: "it is a foreign thing to the monks to get angry; and likewise, they to anger somebody". And again, that "if somebody is dominated by anger, he is dominated

[1249] In the KJB this is usually called as 2 Samuel. (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1250] In the Edition from "Sources Chrétiennes": "Evagrius said, that that is a foreign thing" etc. In other manuscripts: "Evagrius said that the fathers said". In other manuscripts: "Somebody among the old man said". Apopht. belonging to Makarios, 11, quoted by Zosimus in P. Evergetinos, II, 35, p. 112.

by devils; and if somebody is defeated by this passion, he will be totally a stranger to the monastic life"[1251]. And the other things. So, what must we say about ourselves, for we do not stop from wrath and from anger and we go all the way to keeping the evil in mind? And what must we do else except to deplore such a pitiful and inhumane state of ours? So, let' stay woken up, brothers, and let's help to ourselves, according to God, in order us to be delivered form the bitterness if this destructive passion.

This is because it happens sometimes that somebody bows down before his brother, as it is due, when some trouble or grief occurred between them, but he remains upset even after that and he thinks thoughts against his brother. One like this must not overlook his thoughts but he must immediately cut them off. This is because such thoughts mean keeping the evil in mind. And one needs much watchfulness and much repentance, as I said, in order those thoughts not to remain within him for a long time and to him to endanger on himself. This is for, by bowing down before his brother, he did that for commandment, and he momentarily healed his anger, but he didn't fight the keeping in mind of the evil. And that's why he remained with the upset upon his brother. This is because something else if the keeping of evil in mind, something else is the wrath something else is the disturbance.

2) I am going to give you an example, in order you to understand. He who lights up the fire, he has, in the first place, a piece of ember, and that is the word of the brother who upset him. For now, that is only a piece of ember. But what is the word of your brother? If you bear with him, you will quench out that piece of ember. If you keep cogitating: "Why did he tell me that? I am going to answer him for that. And if he didn't want to upset me, he wouldn't tell me that. Believe me, I will pay him back for that", lo, thus you have placed some fuel on that fire and shortly after the smoke will arise, and that is the disturbance. And this disturbance is the movement and the pilling up of the thoughts, which stir of the heat and fill the heart up with daring. And the daring is the urge for revenge on him who upset you. This advances to boldness, as Abba Mak said: "The evilness by moving within thoughts, it will make the heart bold. But when abolished by prayer and by hope, it will crush the heart"[1252]. If you endured the small work of your brother, you would quench off, as I said, even that small piece of ember, before the disturbance was born. But if you want, you will be able to quench of even on this one, because it still is fresh, by keeping your silence, and by prayer, and by repenting with the whole your heart. But if you remain smoking, as one who gives his heart daring, and fi you stir your heart up, by keeping the evil in memory: "Why did he tell that to me" and "I am going to pay him back for that!", right out of this pilling up of thoughts, which upset and make the heart hot, it will be produced the ignition of the wrath. This is for the wrath is the boiling of the blood around the heart, as Saint Basil says[1253]. Lo, the wrath has occurred, and it is, as some people say, the movement of the gall. If you want, you will be able to quench off even on this one, before reaching to anger. But is you stay troubled and mad you will be like one fueling up the fire; and that fire will burn even stronger and so will result, out of that, burning coals. And this is the anger.

3) This is what Abba Zosimus said, when he was asked what is it the word that says: "Where there is no wrath, the fight is appeased"[1254]. This is because if at the beginning of the disturbance, when somebody starts, as I said, to smoke up and to cast sparks, he goes ahead and blames on himself and he bows down before catching fire and before the wrath occurs, he will appease on himself. But if doesn't appease on himself even after the wrath has occurred, but he insists in getting disturbed, in advancing into daring, he will be, as I said, like him who fuels the fire and who remains burning until he will produce big pieces of ember. And as the burning coals become big non-burning pieces of coals and kept in a place they won't break for several years even if one throws water on them, and they won't detach, likewise is the anger, if prolonged for a long time, it will become keeping of evil in the mind and if somebody doesn't shed his blood drop by drop, he won't be delivered from that[1255].

[1252] Mark the Ascetic, About the Spiritual Law 14, G.P. 65: 908 A.

[1253] Saint Basil, At Isaiah, G.P. 37: 948. It remains to the biologists to confirm hos a fiery thought moves the blood more quickly.

[1254] P. Evergetinos II, 35, p. 11.

[1255] One is asked to fight to the blood against himself, in order him to be able to melt away the keeping of the evil from within himself in his mind. In this case the tears of the feeling are insufficient, and one need toils to the blood. The fathers have given, by and large, a scheme of

Lo, I have described to you these special steps, in order you to understand. Lo, you have heard what the first disturbance is, what the wrath is, what the anger ism and what the keeping of evil in mind is. Can you see how it went from a word to such a big evil? But if he cast upon himself the blame and if he endured the word of his brother, and if he didn't want to seek revenge and instead of a word to say two or five and to answer evil to evil, they would escape all these evil things. That's why I am telling you: cut the passion off while they are still young, before they get strong against you. This is because is this is the case you will become wicked (you will become weak). This is because something else is to pluck off a small plant and something else is to uproot a fully grown tree.

4) I wonder nothing more than the fact that we do not know what we utter in psalms. This is because on a daily basis we say into psalms and we rebuke on ourselves, but we still don't understand. Don't we owe to know what we say in psalms? This is because we always say: "If I rewarded evil with evil, let me fall because of my enemies into desert" (Ps. 7: 4-5[1256]). What it is: "To fall"? Until somebody stands, he will have power to resist his enemy: the hits and he gets hit, the is victorious and he is defeated' for he still stands. And if he reached to fall, he will no longer be able to fight his enemy while lying down. But we pray not only for not to fall from the side of our enemies, but also not to fall empty.

But what is somebody to fall empty from the part of his enemies? I said, that to fall somebody it means no longer having power to get up from the ground. And "empty" stands for somebody no longer having anything good within himself, so that he no longer can get up. This is for, he who stand up, he will be able to take care of himself again and to enter the battle again.

the man's advancing from bait to passion (bait, dialogue with it, agreeing with it, committing the sin, getting addicted by accustoming to the sin). But I have nowhere seen as at Abba Dorotheos the applying of this scheme to the forming of the special passion of the keeping of the evil in mind, neither a so detailed description of these development.

[1256] In KJB we have: Ps. 7: 4-5: "If I have rewarded evil unto him that was at peace with me; (yea, I have delivered him that without cause is mine enemy: // Let the enemy persecute my soul, and take it; yea, let him tread down my life upon the earth, and lay mine honour in the dust. Selah."; in ROB we have: Ps. 7: 4-5: "If I rewarded evil to them who did me evil and if I robbed my enemies without reason, // Let the enemy persecute me and let him destroy my soul and catch my soul, let him trample my life to the ground and to lie down my glory to the dust." (E. l. t.'s n.)

Then we say: "Let the enemy chase away my soul and to catch my soul"; not only to chase my soul away, but also to catch my soul, so that we will be the subjects of the enemy, to be defeated by our enemy in all aspects, and our enemy to bring us down in each thing, if we reward evil to them who did evil to us.

And we pray not only for this, but also for "let him trample our life to the ground". What is our life? Our life is the virtues. So, we pray to be trampled our life to the ground, in order to become totally earthly, by having the entire cogitation down to the earth. "And my glory to dwell into dust". But what else is our glory than the knowledge that comes into the soul by keeping the commandments[1257]? So, we ask for our glory to become our shame, as the apostle says (Phil. 3: 19), and our enemy to lie down our glory on the ground, and to make earthly our life and our glory; so that we will no longer think anything according to God, but us to think bodily all the things, all of them according to the flesh, as those whom God said about: "My Ghost will no longer remain into these people, for they are only bodies" (Gen. 6: 3). BY saying all these things, we curse on ourselves, if we reward the evil with evil. And how many evil things we do not reward with evil, but we still remain indolent?

And one can rewards the evil with evil not only with the deed but also with the word and with the countenance[1258]. There are some people who appears not to reward the evil with evil by their deeds, but they reward the evil with evil with their words and with their countenance. This is because it sometimes happens that one adopts a countenance, or he makes a move, or he cats a look which he troubled his brother with[1259]. But [1257] It is a constant teaching of the fathers that the knowledge isn't gained by a rationality separated from the effort to clean ourselves of passions, or separated from the consummation effort by fulfilling the godlike commandments. The knowledge comes out of our closeness to God, after we will have removed the separation wall of the sins, of the egotism, and of our turning towards our void. The knowledge is glory out of God's glory; the knowledge is the beauty of God's light shining into the mirror of our being as cleaned up of egotism and rinsed by love. And this opening towards God, or the tearing down of the wall that separated us from God, it is done through virtues. That's why the virtues are "our (true) life", for they place us in communication with God and with our fellow humans, they place us in accord to God's will, and they do not let us locked up within ourselves and within our bodily and perishing interests.

[1259] The fact that the people throw to one another the evil things (and the good things) also by words and by looks and by countenances, it shows that there is among people an indissoluble this too means rewarding the evil with evil. Another strives not to reward the evil with evil either by deed or by word or by countenance. But he has within his heart a grievance on his brother and he is upset with him. Can you see how diverse the moods can be? Another has no upset on his brother, but if he hears that somebody troubled his brother or murmured against him or gossiped on his brother, he will rejoice by hearing all of these. This still means rewarding the evil with evil. Another doesn't keep any evil thought against that one, neither he rejoices by hearing some gossip against that one who has upset him, and he even gets sad if that one is troubled; but he neither is content if that one does it well and he will get troubled if he sees that one glorified or living in quietude. This still is a sort of keeping the evil in mind, without any doubt a lighter one, but it still is one.

But there is somebody who wants his brother to rejoice and to have peace and he wants to do everything to the good of his brother and to undertake anything for his brother's honor and resting.

6) But I said at the beginning of my speech, that there is somebody who bows down before his brother, but after that he leaves from there while still being upset with his brother. We say about such a brother that, by bowing down before his brother, he has healed his anger by doing that, but he still hasn't fought the keeping of the evil in mind. But there is another brother who, if it happens to him to be upset by somebody, and if they bow down to one another and if they reconcile with one another, he will achieve the peace towards his brother and he will no longer have any evil memory against his brother. But if it happens again that that brother tells him something upsetting, he will start remembering the previous things and he will get upset not only for the present things but also for the previous things. This brother is like a man who, by having a wound and by anointing that wound with medicine connection of being; The separation doesn't' even become total among people, as there would be among monades. Among people there is not only an understanding but there is also a crossing of being from one within another. The good or bad mood is communicated from one to another. On the other hand, I can stop the crossing of the evil from another within me, by my will. I keep the evil exterior to me. And when I receive that evil within me, it means that I will have impropriated that evil to me and I will turn that evil back as being mine, namely multiplied. And this will multiply the evil within him who has been the initial source of the evil.

and by bandaging it, that wound has healed and it had closed up, but that place it still is weak and if somebody hits him there, that place will easily get hurt again and it will immediately start shedding blood. Likewise, it happens to this brother: he had a wound and he healed that first wound. Namely he healed his anger and he even started to take care of removing the keeping of the evil from his mind, by forcing on himself not to keep any evil memory in his heart. This means that his wound has cicatrized, but it hasn't been totally erased, and he still has a trace of the keeping of the evil in mind. This is the scar that by being hit, it will fall and the wound will open again. So, he must strive to erase even the trace of the scar so that that place to reach to be covered in hair and there no longer be any trace, neither one could see that there would have been a wound.

But how can he reach that? By praying with the whole his heart for that one who has upset him, by saying: "My God, help my brother and me through his prayers". And so, He will be praying for his brother, and that is a proof of compassion and of love, and by getting humble by the fact that he asks God for help for the prayers of that brother of his[1260]. And where is compassion and love and humbleness, what could the wrath still do? or better said the keeping of the evil in mind or any other passion? This is for Abba Zosimus said: "If the devil with his devils moved all the spells of his evilness, all his plots would remain powerless and they would be crushed by the humbleness (of fulfilling) the commandment of Christ"[1261]. But [1260] Only the appeal by prayer to somebody who is above both brothers, namely God, it will be able to fully heal both of them of the wound of the upset and of the keeping of evil in mind. Only thus can both of them overcome on themselves, in the reports between them. That's why, one by praying God for another, he asks God for giving to his brother too, prayer for himself. But this is a new humbleness both towards God and towards that brother. But by asking God for another's prayer, we also ask God that that brother of ours too to reach to humbleness and to the overcoming on himself joined with the love. We need the another for our fully healing. But we need him in a state of humbleness and of love. And we cannot reach the full humbleness towards one another except by strengthening this humbleness towards one another out of our humbleness towards God. Only in report with God can we humble on ourselves to the very end, and only out of this humbleness to the very end towards God will us be able to reach the humbleness to the very end towards one another. This is for the another unveils his endless value in front of us only because that value of his is covered by the infinite value of God.

[1261] Cf. G.P. 78: 1688 A. Zosimus refers to Apopht. belonging to Daniel 3, G.P. 69: 156 A, where a monk was hit upon his cheek by a possessed man, and that monk turned him the other cheek and the devil ran away shouting out: "The commandment of Christ is banishing me another old man says too: "he who prays for his enemies he won't keep the evil in his mind"[1262].

7) Work and you will understand well what you are hearing. And if you are unable to work them you will receive them only by word. And who is that man who by wanting to learn a craftsmanship, he learns that only by word? Without any doubt, he firstly perseveres in doing and undoing, and then in making a breaking. And thus, little by little, by toiling and enduring, he will learn that craftsmanship. This is for God, by looking at that one's assertiveness and toil, God will work together with him. But we want to impropriate the craftsmanship of the craftsmanships only by word and without working. And who will be us able to do that? Let's take heed, therefore, at ourselves, brothers, and let's work zealously, while we still have time. May God help us to remember and to keep what we have heard, so that those things won't become condemnation to us on the judgment day.

IX

About the Lie

1) I want to remind you, brothers, a few things about the life. This is because of seeing you as not striving too much in order you to keep your tongue under control and that's why you are drawn in many things. You see, my brothers, that in everything, as I am telling you, there is a habituation in good or in bad. One needs much watchfulness, in order him not to be stollen by lie. This is because nobody united himself with God while lying. This is because the lie is foreign to God[1263]. This is away". The urge from the devil, to answer the evil - done to us by somebody else - with evil, it is being fueled up by our pride. That's why, when the evil done to us encounters our humbleness, it will be melted down by it. The superficiality of the evil done to us isn't upheld by our superficiality, so that it will drown within the infinity of our existence into God and into our conscience about God.

[1263] He who lies he keeps his soul separated from him whom he lies to. He doesn't give his soul to that one. Only him who tells the truth will surrender on himself to another.

for it has been written: "The lie is from the cunning one"; and also: "That one is liar and father of the lie" (Jn. 8: 44). Behold he calls the devils as father of the lie. For Himself says: "I am the way, the truth, and the life" (Jn. 14: 6). Can you see whom we part with and whom we unite with by lying? It is obvious that by lying we unite on ourselves with the cunning one. So, if we truly want to be saved, we must love with the whole our power and with the whole our diligence the truth, and we must guard on ourselves against any lie, so that no lie to separate us from Him Who is the Truth and the Life.

2) But there are three sorts of lies. There is him who lies in thought, there is him who lies by word, and there is him who lies with his life itself[1264].

He who lies in his thought is him who admits the suspicions. If he sees somebody speaking to his brother, he suspects and he says: "They talk about me". And if those ones interrupt their dialogue, he again will suspect that they have done that because of him. If somebody says a word, he will suspect that brother of doing that in order to upset him and, shortly speaking, he suspects his neighbor regarding everything, by saying: "He did that aiming at me, he said that aiming at me". This is him who lies in his thought. This is because he doesn't cogitate anything true, but only suspicions. Out of this come the spying, the gossiping, the enmity, and the condemnation. If somebody hears with his ear something said about himself, and that is haphazardly true, because of that, by allegedly wanting to correct on himself, he will start spying always, because he says: "If somebody talks against me, I want to know what is the mistake he defamed me for, so that I will be able to correct my mistake". So, even the beginning is from the cunning one. This is because of everything starting from a lie, because he didn't know but he suspected what he didn't actually know[1265]. And how could the bad tree bring fort good fruits? And if he wants to correct on himself in all aspects, [1264] Throughout all this chapter the lie is seen not as a simple theory, but as a deed that damages him who practice is and the other people. But I was also a lie that saved on somebody, that is not reckon as a like a such. (The case of that old man who sat on that barrel which a brother hid a woman under, so he saved that brother from his plaintiffs).

[1265] It could happen that one rightly said about him, or he was rightly told that he did something inappropriate. That one told the truth. The said thing is not a lie. But him whom that thing was told, he started suspecting that he was told that with enmity and in a liar manner.

when his brother tells him: “Don’t do that!” or: “Why have you done that”, let him not get troubled, but let him bow down before that brother and thank him; and then he will be straightened. And if God sees that this is his decision, God won’t let him ever straying, but God will send him the brother who must correct him. And if he says: “I believe my suspicions, for I want to correct on myself: and that’s why he starts leaning his ear to everything he is told and he starts spying, this imaginary straightening comes from the devil who want to plot.

3) Once, while I was living into the congregational monastery, I was tempted to suspect the inward state of somebody by his way of moving. So, the following thing happened to me: when I once stood looking, a woman crossed carrying a vessel of water; and I do not know how, I was kidnapped and I looked her in her eyes. And my thought immediately whispered me that that woman was a whore. I was very troubled by that and I went and told Abba John about that: “If unwillingly I see somebody’s movement and my thought urged me to suspect the inwards state of that one, what must I do?”. And the old man answered me: “What do you reckon? Doesn’t one always have a weakness in his nature and by fighting that up he will correct it? One cannot find out the inward state of somebody out of that. So, you won’t ever believe your suspicions. This is for a crooked rule will crook even the straight things. The suspicions are liar and therefore they harm”. Since then, when my thought told me about sun that it is sun, or about darkness that it is darkness, I haven’t been believing it[1266]. This is for nothing is more dangerous than the suspicions are. The suspicions are even more harmful when, by being prolonged within us, they start convincing us that we clearly see things which doesn’t exist or happen.

4) And I am telling you, in this regard, a strange thing seen by me while I was still living into monastery. I have there a certain brother who was very troubled by this passion. He believes his own suspicions because he was convinced about each of his suspicion that it was necessarily as he thought whispered him about, and it couldn’t have been different. So, this evil thing by progressing within him in time, the devils [1266] Namely, I do not believe my thought but I believe my sight; and in the spiritual things, I believe to experience. Not believing my thought means not believing my imagination as a subjective contrivance. I the case of the malevolence, the evil is its fruit.

persuaded him to delude on himself so much, so that once entered the garden to see what was happening in there. This was because he was always stalking and eavesdropping. And by looking through that garden and by hearing what actually wasn't happening, he seemingly saw a brother stealing figs and eating. Abd it was Friday and not even the second hour (7 in the morning). And by convincing on himself that he truly saw that thing, he hid on himself, sort of speaking, and he left the garden in silence and he looked again at the time of the gathering (to the religious service) to see what that brother was doing in the congregation. It was about that brother who allegedly stole figs and ate them. And when he saw that brother washing his hands in order to enter and to be imparted, he ran and told to Abba that that brother entered to be imparted with the Holy Impartation together with the brothers. "So, you command not to be him given the impartation. Because I saw him this morning stealing figs form the garden and eating them". Meanwhile, that brother was approaching, with a great pricking of his heart, the Holy Impartation, for he was among the most pious ones. When Abba saw him like that, he called that brother to him before the priest gave him the Holy Impartation, and Abba told him: "Tell me, brother, what have you been doing today?". That one wondered and said: "Where, master?". Abba told him: "This morning, when you entered the garden, what did you do there?". The brother told him again, bewildered: "Master, I haven't even seen the garden today, nor I was here in the monastery this morning, but I have just arrived from travelling. This was because the administrator sent me, immediately after we finished the vigil, to accomplish a certain task". And the place he was sent to, it was several miles far from there and the brother arrived right at the time of the gathering (of the Synaxis, of the Liturgy). Then Abba sent after the administrator and asked him: "Where did you send this brother?". The administrator answered the same thing as the brother did, saying: "Forgive me, master, I sent him to that village", and the administrator bowed before Abba and said: "Forgive me, master, you were resting after vigil and that's why I didn't let him ask you for permission". When Abba found out everything he needed, he let those go and be imparted, with his blessing. And by calling that brother who suffered of suspicions, he rebuked him and stopped him from the Holy Impartation (αφορίζει). And not only that, but Abba called all the brothers, after gathering (synaxis), and he unveiled them, in tears, the happened things, and he rebuked the brother who was asked to stand in front of all brothers. By that he accomplished three things: he shamed the devil, by exposing him who sows suspicions, he forgave the brother's sin, by making him to endure that dishonor and by making him ask God for help, and he strengthened the brothers in order they no longer to trust their own suspicions. And by giving them many advices, in this regard, both them and to the brother, Abba said that there is nothing more damaging than the suspicions and he showed that by the example of that happening.

5) And the fathers told us other diverse similar things in diverse ways, so that they strengthened us against the damage coming from suspicions. Therefore, brothers' let's strive with the whole our power not to believe our own suspicions. Nothing separated the man so much from God as that of not taking heed as his own sins, but to always spy for sins not belonging to him. Nothing good is born out of that, but only thousands of disturbances and thousands of troubles, and that's why the man won't ever have any resting for achieving the fear of God. Even though are sown within us cunning suspicions because of our evilness, let's immediately turn those kinds of thoughts, and those suspicions won't hurt us. This is because the suspicions are evil and they won't ever allow the soul to gain his peace. This was the lie from the thought.

6) And he who lies by word is, for instance, him who is lazy to get up for vigil and, instead of admitting that by saying: "Forgive me, because I was too lazy to get up for vigil, he says: "I had fever, I was dizzy, and I couldn't get up, I had not power". And he says ten liar words, avoiding to bow down and to humble on himself. And if somebody blames him for something, he will change his words and beautify them, because he doesn't want to endure the blame. Likewise, if it happens to him having something to do with some brother, he won't start justifying on himself, by saying: "But you said that, you did that. I didn't say that, but that one said that, and this, and that", let he will humble on himself. And if wants something, he cannot stand saying: "I lust for that", but he twists his words and say: "I suffer of this and I need that, or I have been ordered that". And he tells so many lies until he will satisfy his lust. This is because any sin is committed either for the love for pleasure, or for the love for money, or for the love for glory. That's why the lie too is said because of these three. Somebody lies either for not to be blamed and humiliated, or for satisfying his lust, or for gaining something. And he doesn't stop tuning here and there, contriving all the things by word, until he will reach his purpose. But one like him wont' ever be believed. Even when he told a true word, nobody could believe him anymore, and even the truth he said would be doubted.

7) But sometimes occurs a circumstance of a great need to hide something, because otherwise that circumstance would become a cause of my disturbance and trouble. So, when such circumstance comes, and somebody found himself forced not to tell the thing as it is, in order to avoid - as I said - a big disturbance and trouble to be caused. This is for Abba Alonius said to Abba Agathon: "Behold two people perpetrated a murder, and you were their protos. One of them hid in your monastic cell. And the judge is searching for that one and the judge asks you: "Was there any murder perpetrated under your command?". If you didn't want to contrive something, you would give that man to death"[1267]. But let them not do that carelessly, despite such a great need has occurred, but let them repent and cry before God, and let them reckon that as a test. And let them not do that continuously, but only once of many cases. This is because, as the medicines for nerves and for cleanness, if they are taken ceaselessly, they will harm the patient, but if taken by somebody once in a long time they will help him, likewise must be this deed used by somebody; let him use it for a great need, but not ceaselessly. Let him use it, as I said, when he sees that there is a great need for that and only once of many cases, and then to unveil with fear and tremble, to God, his purpose and the need which he has done that for, so that him to be covered. This is because this one too will harm him.

8) Lo, I have told who is him who lies into thought, and who is him who lies by word. We want to tell, in the end, who is him who lies with itself his life. With his life lies, for instance, somebody who is unrestrained but he pretends to be restrained, or while being covetousness he speaks about giving alms and he praises the mercy, or who is proud but he praises the humbleness, or who doesn't love the virtue but the praises it and he says he admires the virtue. This is because, if he aimed at a good purpose, he firstly must humbly confess his weakness, by saying: "Woe to me, the wicked, that I am empty of any good". And only after he confessed his helplessness, he should admire and praise the virtue. But his purpose in praising the virtue isn't either that of not offending on somebody, because even in such a case he should cogitate like this: "Yes, I am wicked and passionate! But why should I offend another" Why should I harm another soul and to bring burden upon myself?". In this case, despite sinning for himself, he would reach the good too. This is for it is a deed of the humbleness somebody to cry for himself as for a wicked, and it is a deed of the mercy somebody to spare his neighbor.

One like this doesn't admire the virtue for some of the mentioned purposes, but he only uses the name of the virtue in order to cover up his ugliness, and he speaks about virtue as he would be one of them who fulfill that virtue; or, for many times, in order to harm and delude on somebody. This is because nor sin, no heresy, not even the devil himself, they cannot deceive somebody except by putting on the countenance of the virtue, as the Apostle says: "because the devil transforms himself into angel of light" (2 Cor. 11: 15). So, there is no wonder then, because of his servants as well pretend to be servants of the righteousness. Thus, the liar as well, either for he fears the shame of being humiliated, or because he wants to charm and to delude on somebody, he speaks about virtues, he praises the virtues, and he admires the virtues, as one who has tried and impropriated the virtues. This is the one lying with itself his life; this is not a simple man, but he is a twofold man; he is another inwardly, while he is another outwardly. So, he has his life too, as twofold and worthy to be laughed at.

Lo, I have said about the lie too, that it comes from the cunning one; and I have said about the truth as well, that the truth comes from God[1268]. Let's run away from lie, brothers, in order us to be delivered from the side of the enemy, and let's strive to achieve the truth, in order us to be united with Him [1268] The truth is taken here as practical sincerity in everything, as an undeceiving word and life, unlike the lie is. But undeceiving is only the cleanness and the love for people. The truth is tied with those ones. Only God has the power of the entire truth. God Himself is the truth in this sense as well.

Who said: "I am the truth"[1269]. May God find us worthy of His truth.

About the Need for Travelling the Way of God with a Good Purpose and with Watchfulness

1) Let's take care of ourselves, brothers, in order us to live with watchfulness. Who will give us this time, if we lose it? We will really search for these days without finding them again. Abba Arsenius always said to himself: "Arsenius, why have you come out"[1270]. But we are in such a state of perdition and of laziness, that we do not know either what we have come out for, nor what we have wanted by doing that. That's why, not only that we do not progress, but we have ceaseless troubles too. And this happens to us also because of not having watchfulness within our heart[1271].

And actually, if we wanted to strive on ourselves even for a little while, we wouldn't suffer so many troubles, neither would us strive so much. This is because, even in the beginning something forced on himself, but by striving little by little, he would advance little by little, and at the end he would make that with resting. This is for God sees him forcing on himself [1269] Only those who are sincere to one another can unite, among themselves and with God. They who belong to the devil they won't be able to truly united. They can be together, but only tormenting on one another and not by being united with one another.

[1270] Apopth. Belonging to Arsenius 40, G.P. 65: 105 C.

[1271] The Christian faith gives an unlimited value to the time. We won't have another time for repairing what we have broken in our being in the present time. We do not relativize the importance of the present time as they do in the reincarnationist theories. If we devaluate the present time, consequently we will devaluate any other time. We won't ever reach a true seriousness, or an absolute good. Everything will become an eternal boredom. But the devaluation of an eternal temporality it will mean not to value the taking heed at ourselves, in eternity. It will mean eternally remaining us in a non-focusing in our essence, and therefore in non-encountering God – Who is the supreme essence - through our essence. But we often waste our time by not using it for knowing on ourselves and for consummating on ourselves. The fact that out time is short it won't impede us from fulfilling this purpose of it. Right the awareness of this shortness of our time can help us to know our provisory existence on this earth and therefore to use our time with maximum intensity. Right this shortness of our time requires a focused taking heed as ourselves.

and God will give him His help. Let's force on ourselves as well, to set a beginning, and at least us to want the truth. Even though we are not yet in the consummate state, itself the fact of wanting is the beginning of our salvation. This is for, from wanting, we come to God, with ascesis, and through ascesis somebody will be helped to achieve the virtues. That's why somebody among the fathers said: "Give blood and take Ghost"[1272]; namely: "Fight and you will reach the habituation of the virtue".

2) When I entered the things of the external science, I was making big efforts. And when I reached the book, I was like one who touched a wild beast. But by persevering to force on myself, God helped me, and so I reached to get accustomed to it, so that I was no longer knowing what I ate or drank, or whether I was sleeping, because of the fever caused me by what I was reading. And I was never attracted to some feast with any of my friends. And I didn't go even to meet them while I was reading, despite I loved hanging out with my friends. When the teacher released us (the sophist[1273]), I took a bath (for I needed a daily baht because of getting dry due to my readings)[1274], and I withdrew on myself at the place where I was living, not even knowing what I followed to eat. This was because I wasn't able to stop myself from studying, not even in order to prepare for myself something to eat. But I had a faithful servant and he was preparing whatever he wanted. So, I was taking whatever I found prepared by him and, by taking my book in bed with me, I was eating and reading in the same time. And I used to fall asleep keeping, in the same time, the book next to me, on a stool. And after taking a nap, I immediately jumped up and continued reading. In the evening, when I withdrew myself, after Vespers, I lit the light and I read until midnight. And I was so that I didn't feel any other sweetness except that provided me by readings. So, when I came to monastery, I told to myself: "If for the external teaching such a desire is born and such a fever is caused by it, by the fact that somebody occupied on himself with the reading and he gets accustomed to it, how much more will be the virtue such?". And I was taking much power out of this thought.

[1272] Apopht. belonging to Longinus 5, G.P. 65: 2576. You thin up your body through ascesis and do you will fill your body up with ghost. Hurt your body through effort and you will open your body to the ghost. Do not barricade on yourself within your body. Do not thicken your body. The virtues represent the strengthened ghost into that body that has become transparent.

[1273] The "sophist" stands for professor of oratory.

[1274] On the custom of the students from then to take a bath between classes, to be seen at A. J. Festugière, Antioch, p. 448; according to the Edition from "Source Chrétiennes", p. 338, note no. 3.

Thus, if somebody wants to earn the virtue, he must not be careless and letting his mind scattered. This is for, like him who wants to learn the craftsmanship of the carpenter, he mustn't pay any attention to any other craftsmanship, likewise it is with them who want to earn the spiritual work. They mustn't pay attention to any other thing, but let them cogitate at it, day and night, on how they could achieve it. And they who do not start doing something like this, not only they won't progress, but they will be crumbled too, because of wandering without purpose.

3) This is for the virtues are middle states, they are the imperial way, which that Holy old man said about: "Walk the imperial way and measure the stadia"[1275]. So, as I said, the virtues are in the middle between abundance and lacks. That's why it has been written: "Do not deviate either to the right or to the left" (Prov. 4: 27), but "walk on the imperial way" (Num. 20: 17). And Saint Basil said: "Righteous in his heart is him who doesn't have his thought leaning either towards abundance, or towards lack, but aiming at the middle of the virtue"[1276].

For instance: the evilness in itself is nothing, because of not being a certain being and neither has a hypostasis[1277]. But when the soul deviates from virtue it becomes passionate, and thus the soul will give birth to evilness. That's why too the soul is tormented by evilness because there is not natural resting into evilness[1278]. Take, for instance, the wood. The wood doesn't have the warm in itself; but if the wood rots a little, out of that [1275] Apopht. 5, G.P. 65: 145 A. The "imperial way" of the virtues, it has been studied at the antique philosophers and at the fathers by F. Tailliez, S. I., Basili Odos; Orient. Christ. Period., 1947, pp. 299-354.

[1276] Saint Basil, At Psalms, VII, 7, G.P. 29: 244 D. Barsanuphius and John also spoke about the "Imperial Way" (Nicodemus the Hagiorite, p. 226) and about their place in the middle, between the right and the left (Nicodemus the Hagiorite, p. 140).

[1278] This is a worthy to be memorized conclusion, out of the idea that the evil doesn't have an existence in itself. This is because, by being the evilness an unnatural state of the soul, the soul cannot have rest in what doesn't naturally belong to the soul. The evilness is like a poison which, once entered into organism, it will no longer let the organism resting but it will keep the organism in a continuous state of boiling.

rottenness will occur the warm and that warm will eat the wood. It is likewise in case of the brass too: the brass itself produces the rust and itself will be eaten by rust. And the cloth produces the moth and the moth born out of it, it will destroy that cloth.

The same is with the soul as well. The soul produces the evilness which was nothing before and which didn't have any hypostasis before, and then the soul will be tormented by evilness. Saint Gregory said correctly: "The fire is a product of the matter and it consumes the matter, as the evilness consumes the evil ones"[1279]. It can be seen this in case of the ill bodies. If somebody lives a disorganized life and he doesn't watch over his health, there will be produces either too much or a lack of something, and from there comes the disorganization (unbalance). Before that the illness wasn't within that body, namely the illness was nothing. And again, after that body becomes healthy again, that illness will no longer be within it. The soul's evilness, as well, it is an illness of the soul that lacks the health characteristic to that soul by nature. And this health is the virtue[1280].

That's why I said that the virtues are in the middle. For instance, the manhood is in the middle between fear and naughtiness, the humble cogitation is in the middle between pride and the desire to be pleasant to the people; likewise, the decency is in the middle between same and shamelessness. And similarly in case of all the other virtues. So, if somebody is found worthy of these virtues, he will be honored at God. He always shows on himself as eating and drinking and sleeping like all the other people, but he is honored for the virtues he [1279] Saint Gregory of Nazianzus, Word 23, 1, G.P. 35: 1152 C; Cf. Word 40, 38, G.P. 36: 412 A.

[1280] We must notice this definition of the virtue as health or as balance of the nature. The evil was called as "illness of the soul" by Saint Basil, Homilies to Hexaemeron, G.P. 29: 196 B-C; Evagrius, The First Hundred 41; Patr. Orient. 28: pp. 36-37.

By being in the middle, or the imperial way, the virtue makes possible to be activated, in the complex ensemble of the human being, all the human being's powers. From here results a rich and unique symphony in its specificity, of the man and of each person individually. Any predominance of one of those powers, any exaggerated attention paid to one of them, it will disturb the human being, or the human being's specific unity. The virtue, is, therefore, also the most authentic expression of the unique specificity of each person. The virtue is an expression, by excellence, of the unique person. That's why, the same virtue it differs at each person. This is for in virtue there is manifested the person's authenticity. And each complete person is such a synthesis of all virtues.

has. But if he doesn't remain watchful, and if he doesn't guard on himself, he will easily deviate from the way, either towards the things from the right, or towards the things from the left, namely either towards what is in excess, or towards what it lacks, and that will give birth to the illness that is the sin (the evilness).

4) This is the imperial way traveled by all the saints. And the stadia are the lengths which somebody must always measure up, in order him to see what stadium he has reached at, namely what state he is in. For instance, all of us, we are like some people having as our target to travel towards the Holy City[1281]; and leaving a city, some of us traveled five limes (stadia) and then they have stopped; others traveled ten stadia; others traveled until they have reached the middle of the road; and others haven't advanced at all, but they left the city, and so they have remained outside the gates in the whole bad smell of that place. And others, while they have been travelling, they have travelled for two miles, and they have got strayed and they turned back for two miles too; others have travelled ahead for two miles and then have turned back for five miles. Finally, others advanced all the way to the city itself, but they have remained outside and they haven't entered the city.

Behold, these ones are us. This is because of being among us some people who left the world and who entered the monastery, having as purpose to gain the virtues. And some of us advanced for a little and then they have stopped; other advanced for a little further; other have reached the half of the road and they have stopped; others haven't advanced at all, but they seem as they left the world, but they have remained in the things of the world, to passion and to their bad smell. Others earn a little good but then they lose it again; others lose more than they have earned. Others have achieved the virtues but, because of being dominated by pride and by despise towards their neighbor, they have remained outside the city and they haven't entered the city. But neither they have reached their target. Despite they have reached the city's gate they have remained outside. So, they too have fallen off their target.

[1281] Evagrius compares the spiritual life to a travel towards the holy city (the Upper Jerusalem). This city is the contemplation. Epistle no. 39, Frankenberg, Evagrios Ponticos, p. 591.

So, let each of us find out where he is: whether he left his city but he has remained outside the city's gate, in the bad smell of that place; whether he has advanced a little or more, or whether he has reached the half of the road; whether he traveled for two miles but he has also lost two miles; whether he travelled for two miles but he has lost five miles. Whether he has advanced until reaching the city and he entered Jerusalem; whether he has reached the city but he has been unable to enter Jerusalem. Let's each of us find out what is his state like, and where he is at.

5) There are three states within man: (one is that state which the man is in, t. n.) he who works the passion; (another, that which he – t. n.) is the one who stops the passion; and (another, that which he is in, t. n.) is him who uproots the passion. He who works the passion is him who passes the passion into deeds; he who fulfills his passion. He who stops his passion is him who neither works his passion nor cuts off his passion, but he wisely restrains his passion, passing by it, but he still has that passion within him. And he who uproots his passion is him who strives to work the things which are contrary to his passion. These three states are very broad.

Tell us, for instance, about a passion, or shows us a passion, and we are going to unveil the aspects characterizing that passion. Do you want us to talk about pride Do you want us to talk about fornication? Or do you rather want us to talk about vain glory, because of being very defeated by it? We see the last one when somebody cannot stand to hear a word from his neighbor. This is because when somebody hears a word and he tells back five words, of even ten words instead of one and he fights and the gets disturbed, and when he stops fighting he still remains further thinking at evil things against that one who told him that word; and he keeps in mind the evil caused him by that brother and he is full with upset because he hasn't told more than he has had, and he prepares in himself even heavier words to tell to that brother; and he continuously says to himself: "Why haven't I told him this one too?" and: "I am going to tell him this"; and he constantly get infuriated. Behold one of the states. This is he who has made of evil a habit of his. May God deliver us from this state. Because such a state is doubtlessly submitted to the eternal damnation. This is because any sin with the deed is submitted to the hell. Even if someone like this wanted to repent, he wouldn't be able to defeat his passion by himself, and he would need some help from the saints, as the fathers said. That's why I am always telling you, strive to cut off your passions before you reaching to get habituated to passions.

There is also somebody who, because of hearing a word, he will get disturbed and he will say at his turn five or maybe even ten words against that one word, and he get upset because of not telling some other three timed heavier words and he gets upset and he keeps the evil in mind. But he spends in this state for a few days and then he changes. Another remains in this state for a week, and then he changes; Another rebukes, fights, get disturbed, disturbs, and then he changes. Lo some differences amongst the states. But still, all of them are submitted to the hell, because of working the passion.

6) Let's say something also about them who stop the passion. One hears a word and he gets troubled within himself. But he gets troubled not because he has been rebuked, but because he hasn't endured that[1282]. This one belongs to those who are in the state of that ones who live in ascesis, namely those who stop the passion. Other lives in ascesis and he toils, but in the end, he will be defeated by the fact that he still remains under the burden of his passion. Another doesn't want to answer evil to evil but he is kidnapped by his habit. Another he fights not to ever say anything evil, but he is sad for being rebuked, and he is discontent with himself and he repents for getting upset. Another doesn't get sad because of being rebuked, neither he rejoices. All of these they stop the passion. Two of them differ from all others: he who is defeated in fight and he who is kidnapped by habit. These ones are dominated by the fear of falling into the danger of putting the passion in work. I said that they belong to those who stop the passion, for they stop the passion by their inward feeling and they didn't want to work the passion, but their ascesis still is accompanied by sadness. And the fathers said that all the things the soul doesn't want they will last only for a short while[1283]. Therefore, they must study on themselves lest, even though the passion isn't being maintained, still some of the passion's causes are being maintained, and that' why they will be defeated and kidnapped.

There are also some people, as he says, who fight for stopping their passion, but by using another passion. This is because one keeps his silence because of his vain-glory, another for being pleasant to people, another for some other passion. These ones heal the evil with evil. But Abba Poemen said that the evilness doesn't abolish the evilness by any means[1284]. The ones are reckoned together with those who work the passion though they laugh at those.

7) We want, in the end, to talk about them who uproot their passion. Somebody of them enjoys to be rebuked, but for reward. This one is among them who uproot the passion, but not with conscience. Another rejoices when rebuked and he reckons the owes to endure the reproach because he has bene the cause for that. This one uproots his passion with conscience[1285]. This is for accepting the reproaches and attributing those reproaches to himself, namely accepting those reproaches coming upon him because they are due to him, it is characteristic to the conscience. This for each of us who pray God: "Give me humbleness", they must know that they ask for one to be sent to rebuke them. So, when one is reproached about something, he owes to rebuke on himself and to despise on himself in his thought, so that the rebuker humbles him externally while he humbles on himself inwardly[1286]. And there is another who not only that he rejoices when he is rebuked and he blames on himself, but he also gets sad because of the disturbance he has caused to him who rebukes him. May God bring us to that state[1287].

8) Can you see how big is the broadness of the three states? Let each of you find out, therefore, as I said, what state

[1284] Apopht. belonging to Poemen 177, G.P. 65: 360 A.

[1285] In the original text we have the "knowledge" in both cases. But it is about conscience. The last one has the conscience of his sin, while the first one doesn't have it. Of course, the "conscience" of the a true "knowledge" about the sin and about yourself too. The first one doesn't have this "knowledge". The first one knows within himself, by the reproach form another, only something that discontents another and which he hasn't been aware of until reproached.

[1286] Lo how somebody can agree another not only when the another loves him but also when that one rebukes him. It is more useful to agree him who rebukes you. Then you will actually widen the circle of understanding among people.

[1287] This is the culminant form of the saints' delicateness: to get sad for the disturbance caused by you to him who has rebuked you.

he is in: whether he still willingly works his passion and satisfies it; whether he doesn't willingly fulfill his passion, but he is defeated or kidnapped by his habit, and he works his passion and after working his passion he will feel troubled and he will repent because of working his passion; of whether he forces on himself to stop his passion into conscience; or whether he fights against his passion with another passion, as I said; this is because there is one who keeps his silence because of his vain-glory or because he wants to be pleasant to people or, simply speaking, because of some human thoughts; or whether he started uprooting his passion; and whether he uproots his passion with conscience and whether he does the things contrary to his passions. Let each one find out where he is and what stadium he is at.

And we owe to study on ourselves not only daily[1288], but let's say on each year and month and week: "During the first week I was burdened by this passion. How am I now?". Likewise, let's say on each year: "During the previous year I was defeated by this passion. How am I know?". Also, let everyone to search on themselves on each day by asking on themselves: "Have I advanced even a little or am I in the same state, or have I fallen into a worse state"?[1289].

9) May God give us power, so that even if we cannot uproot our passion, at least us will be able not to work our passion and to stop it. This is because of being a really grave thing working your passion instead of stopping it.

And I am going to tell you an example in order you to see whom he who works and satisfies his passion is like to: he is like the one who, when being the target of the arrows of his enemies, he catches the arrows with his own hands and stab on himself with those arrows[1290]. And he who uproots his passion is like him who being the target of the enemy's arrows he catches those arrows and he breaks those arrows up or he turns those arrows back towards the heart of the enemy, as it is said in the psalm: "May their sword enter their heart and they bows to break up" (Ps. 36: 15[1291]). So, let's strive ourselves too, brothers, that even though we cannot turn their word into their heart, at least not to accept their arrows and not to stick those arrows up into our heart, but let's put on breastplates so that we won't be wounded by those arrows anymore. May the good God cover us up against those arrows and may God give us watchfulness and may God guide us on His way.

About the Need for Us to Strive to Quickly Cut off Our Passions, before Our Soul Reaches the Bad Habit

1) Take heed, brother, at what the things are and take care not to let on yourselves to be careless. This is because even the smallest carelessness can lead us to great dangers. I yore met a brother and a found out that he was ill, and, as we talked together, I found out that he had fever only for seven days but another forty days passed after that and he still didn't fully recover. Can you see, brothers, how much weakness it can bring somebody's falling into a state of disorder? The man always despises the small rules and he doesn't know if the state of his body reaches to get a little sick and especially is he is a weaker type, so that he needs mush toils and much time for getting corrected. That poor brother had fever for seven days and behold that so many days had passed after and he didn't recover.

It is likewise with the soul too. Somebody sins a little but his blood will drip for a long time before getting corrected. IN the case of the bodily illness this takes place because of diverse reasons: either because the medicines are old and unworking, or because the physician is unskilled and he prescribed another medicine than that needed for that patient, or because the patient doesn't obey the things prescribed by the physician. In the case of the soul, we cannot tell that the physician was unskilled and therefore he prescribed inappropriate medicines. This is because the physician of the souls is Christ and He knows everything and He gives us the medicine matching each of our passions. So, to the vain-glory He gives the commandments of the humble-cogitation; to the love for pleasure the commandments of the restraint; to the love for money those the giving alms. And, simply speaking, each passion has as its medicine the commandments opposite to that passion. This is for the physician isn't unskilled. And one cannot tell that the medicine, for they are old, they won't work. This is for the commandments of Christ never get old. This is for, the more they are worked the more they will be renewed[1292]. So, nothing impeded the healing of our soul except our irregular life.

2) So, let's take heed at ourselves, brothers. Let's be wake until we still have time. Why won't we take care of ourselves? Let's do any good, so that we will find help in time of temptation. Why would us lose our life? We hear so many things, but we don't care, we disregard those things. We see our brothers kidnapped from amid us but we still do not stay wake, despite we know that we little by little getting closer to our death. Behold, as we are sitting here speaking, we have lost two or three hours from our time and we are getting closer to our death; and we see that we are losing our time but we still do not fear[1293]. Why don't we remember the saying of that old man who said: "If one loses gold and silver he could find replacement, but he who loses his time by living in non-working and carelessness, he won't be able to find another time"[1294]? Rightly [1292] The more one restrains on himself the more easily he will do that.

[1293] "Losing one's time" is in the Christian faith a motif for great concern. This is because, by "losing our time" we will lose the eternal happiness. "Losing our time, having fun" it doesn't belong, here, as a part of the program of the human life. Instead of becoming a means for restoring the physical powers, the losing of our time becomes an occasion for weakening the soul's attention paid to himself, of soul's powers of mastering upon the passionate impulses, upon the thoughts which tend not to remain focused on the man's self and on the man's eternal destiny. It becomes an occasion for letting the sin to take place and to become a habit.

[1294] Apopht. Patr. Lat. 73: 939 A. No hour, no moment is like another. What we would have been able to do in it, we won't be able to do in another. Our development takes place differently when we have lost a moment without working anything. Still, a great repentance can restore us. But when we lose our time thinking that we will restore on ourselves by a later repentance, we will get accustomed to let the moments to always pass, by waiting for another moment for repentance, and so we will no longer have the power to use any moment for repentance. Losing our time will become a habit itself. That won't be only an external thing, but it will be also an internal thing. "A la recherche du temps perdu" cannot be a search for so, we will search for an hour of this time and we won't find it[1295].

How many people are there wanting to hear a word of God, but they do not find it? But we, despite of hearing so many, we despise them and we do not wake on ourselves up[1296]. God knows, I fear of your souls' insensitiveness, because we can save on ourselves but we do not want that. This is for we can cut off our passions as long as they are fresh, but we do not take care of that, but we let our passions to get callous against us, so that we do the later evil even bigger. This is because something else is, as I told you for so many times, to uproot a plant when we can do that immediately, and something else is to uproot a bid tree[1297].

3) A great old man[1298] was resting with his disciples in a place where there were diverse big and small cypress trees. And the old man said to one of his disciples: "Plock of that cypress tree". And that tree was very small. And the brother plucked it off with only one hand. Then the old man pointed at a bigger tree and said:" "Pluck off that one too!". And the brother, by shaking that tree with both his hands, he plucked it off as well. And the old man pointed at a bigger tree. The brother, by shaking that tree a lot and by sweating very much, he plucked off that tree too. Then the old man pointed at a bigger tree; the brother, despite making great efforts was unable to pluck that tree off. So, when the old man saw him unable to do that, he commanded to another brother to help the first brother; and b0oth brother were able to pluck that tree off. And then the old man said: "Lod, alike are the passions, brothers. As long as they are small, if we want, we can pluck them off easily. And if we despise them for being small, they will get callous; and the more callous they get, the more effort they will require to be removed. And if our passions get even stronger against us, we won't be able anymore to pluck them off by ourselves, despite our efforts, some identical occasions, but it can only be a great repentance. But "the lost time" is an internal weakening of ours in what concerns our power to make a decision. The "lost time" works against us. It is a growing up worm.

[1295] We won't find anymore an eternity of the time which we could change on ourselves in. In eternity we are already in a fix state.

[1296] "Using the time" is a matter of strained attention. Losing our time is a soul's habituation to scattering, to self-forgetting, and to person's dissolution.

so we will need the help form some saints who to uphold us according to God".

Can you see how much power have the teaching of the holy fathers. And the prophet too teaches us about that in his psalms, where he says: "Daughter of the Babylon, the weak one (the wicked), blessed is him who will reward you the reward that you rewarded us with. Blesses is him who will catch and hit your children against the rock" (Ps. 136: 8-9[1299])[1300].

4) But let's present the said things one at the time. By Babylon we understand confusion. This is because so is interpreted Babel, that is Sichem. And by the daughter of Babylon, you will understand the enmity. This is because initially the soul gets confused and then the soul will give birth to the sin (the evilness). And he calls this as "weak" (wicked), because our sin, as I said on some other time, it lacks an own being or hypostasis, by being born out of our indifference, born out of what doesn't exist, and through our straightening the sin will perish and will again be nothing. This is for the saint tells him (to the sin, or to the evilness): "Blessed is him who will rewards you the reward which you have rewarded us with" (Ps. 136: 8[1301]). Let's find out what we have given and what we have taken in exchange and what are we going to give in exchange[1302]. We have given our will and we have taken the sin. So, the word congratulates them who have given the sin back (as reward). And giving back means no longer committing the sin. Then he adds: "Blesses is him who will grab your children and hit them against the rock" (Ps. 136: 9[1303]). Namely, blessed will be him who will destroy the thing born by you initially, namely the cunning thoughts, by not giving time to the evil to grow up and to work within him an even bigger evil; but quickly, until those thoughts still are children, before getting nourished and before growing against him, he will grab those [1299] In KJB we have: Ps. 137: 8-9: "O daughter of Babylon, who art to be destroyed; happy shall he be, that rewardeth thee as thou hast served us. // Happy shall he be, that taketh and dasheth thy little ones against the stones."; in ROB we have: Ps. 136: 8-9: "The Daughter of the Babylon, the wicked one! Blesses is him who will reward you the deed you have done it to us. // Blessed is him who will grab your children and hit them against the rock." (E. l. t's. n.)

thoughts and he will hit those thoughts against the rock, Who is Christ, and so he will destroy those thoughts.

5) Behold how the Holy Fathers and the Holy Scripture congratulate, with one voice, on them who fight and who cut off their passions while those passion still are young, before tasting their pain and bitterness. Let's stive, therefore, brothers, to receive mercy. Let's strive a little and we will find much resting.

The Holy Fathers told us that each of us must clean on himself thoroughly, to inquire on himself in each evening what that day passed like, and in the morning, again, what the night passed like; and let him repent to God as it is due, for his mistakes. And because we sin a lot, we need, because of our forgetfulness, to inquire on ourselves and to repent on the sixth hour (at noon) as well, how we have passed our time until then and what sins we have committed. And let each of us saying: "Haven't I spoken something that wounded my brother? Haven't I seen my brother doing some things and judged him or despised him, or have I gossiped him? Haven't I asked the administrator for something and that one hasn't given me that thing and I have spoken against him? Haven't I told to the cook something that troubled and shame him, or haven't I shamelessly mumbled something against him because he hasn't boiled something well?". This is because if we mumble on somebody even within ourselves, we will still have committed a sin. And let him say again: "Hasn't told me the conductor of the singing, or some other brother some word and I didn't accept that and I resisted that?".

So, on each day, we owe to inquire on ourselves, how we spent that day. Likewise, somebody must inquire on himself how he spent his night, whether we zealously wake on ourselves up for taking vigil, whether we got upset with him who wake us up, or whether we mumbled against him. Everyone must know that him who wakes us up for taking vigil, he does us a great good and that will bring us great goods. This is for that one wakes us up in order us to talk to God, and us to pray for our sins and for us to get enlightened. How much must we thank him who wakes us up? Rightly so, that one owes to do that, for he almost gains him salvation only by doing that.

6) I am going to tell you, in this concern, a wonderful thing that I heard from a very spiritualized old man. This one, when the brothers started singing, he saw within church somebody bearing a light as exited form the alter and holding some sort of vessel containing holy water and a little stick. And he soaked that little stick into that vessel and he went to every brother and marked all of them. And he marked also some of the places of the brother who were not present there, while he left other places unmarked. And at the end of the religious service the old man saw against that somebody doing the same thing. Once the old man threw on himself at that somebody's feet and begged him to tell what he was doing and who he was. And that light-bearer told him: "I am the angel of God and I have been commanded to place in synaxis (in the liturgical assembly) this seal on them who are within the church at the beginning of the singing and also on them who remain until the end, for their zeal and industriousness, and for their good decision". And the old man asked him: "And why do you seal also the places of some of the brothers who are not present?". The holy angels told him: "All those bothers who are zealous and good in their decision, but they are missing because of some need, with the blessing of the fathers, or they are occupied with a task they obey to, and therefore they aren't here, they still receive the seal for in their inward state they are here and singing. Only to them who could be here but they miss because of their indifference, I have been commanded not to give them the seal, because they have become unworthy of it"[1304].

Can you see what a gift offers him who wakes up his brothers in order to participate to the canon of the taking vigil within church? So, strive on yourselves, brothers, in order you not ever to lose the seal of the holy angel. And if somebody happens to be scattered and somebody else reminds him his mistake, let him not get upset, but by thinking at the good that one does it to him, let him thank him who drew his attention, no matter when that takes place.

7) When I was into monastery, Abba made me, with the advice of the old man, as receiver of strangers. But I was after a heavy illness. So, the strangers arrived and I occupied myself with them, in the evening; and there arrived camel drivers, and I accomplished the things they needed. And often, after I went to bed, there occurred some other need and they woke me up. Meanwhile the hour of the vigil arrived and, because I was [1304] Anyone who attends the Holy Liturgy or any other religious service will be imprinted in the soul, and so their betterment will increase.

napping a little, the chief-singer woke me up again. But either because I was tired, or because of the helplessness caused me by the illness, I was stolen again by sleep and weakened by a slight fever, so I lost control on myself. That's why I was answering him, while being sleepy: "Alright, father, may God mention your love, so that Him to give you rewards for you have commanded me! I am coming, father". Then, after he left, I fell asleep again, and I was very upset that I was late to wake up vigil into church. And because that one couldn't stay all the time with me, I askes two brothers, one to wake me up and one not to let me sleep during vigil. And believe me, brothers, I honored them very much, for I reckoned them almost as some whom my salvation was being worked through.

All of you owe to have this feeling for them who wake you up to the churchly program and to all the good thing.

8) So, as I said, each of us owes to inquire on himself how he spent his day and his night: whether he stood with watchfulness at singing and at prayer; whether he was enslaved by the passionate thoughts, or whether he listened attentively to the godlike readings; whether he left the singing and existed the church, walking from here to there.

If somebody inquires on himself thus, daily, and if he strives on himself to repent for his mistakes and to correct on himself, he will start to diminish his passion (his evilness); if he committed that sin for nine times, he will commit it only for eight times; and so on, by slowly advancing towards God, he won't let the passions get fortified within him. This is because there is a great danger to somebody to fall in the habituation of the passion. This is because, as I said, even though somebody like this wanted it, he wouldn't be able to defeat his passion by himself, if he had not help from some saints.

9) Do you want me to confess something about one who had the habit of the passion? Listen to a worthy of being deplored thing. When I was into the congregational monastery, I do not know how, the brothers enjoyed to confess their thoughts to me. So, Abba commanded me, with the advice of the ole men, to take this thing upon me and to take care of it. So, on one day, it came to me some brother and told me: "Forgive me, father, and pray for me, because I steal and eat". I told him: "Why do you do that? Are you hungry?". And he told me: "Yes, I can't get enough at the common table and I cannot ask for more". I told him: Why don't you go and tell that to Abba?". He answered: "I feel shame". I told him: "Do you want me to go and tell Abba?". He told me: "Do what you wish, father".

And went and told Aba that thing, and he answered me: "Have love and take care of him whatever you could". Then I went together with that brother to the administrator and I told the administrator: "Have love and regardless the hour this brother comes to you, give him all he wants and do not stop him from anything". The administrator told me: "I will do what you have commanded me". So, that brother do that for a few days. And then he came to me and told me: Forgive me, father, for I started stealing again". I asked him: "But why" Doesn't the administrator give you everything you want?". He said: "Yer, hi gives me everything I want, but I feel shame to ask him". I asked him: "Don't' you feel shame of me?". He answered me: "No.". I told him: "Then come and take from me whatever you want and do not steal anymore". But after a few days he started stealing again and came and told me: Lo, I am stealing again". I asked him: "But why do you do that? Don't I give you anything you want?". He said: "Yes you do". I told him: "Do you still feel shame for taking from me?". He told me: "No.". Then I asked him: "Then, why are you stealing?". He told me: "Forgive me! I do not know what I am stealing for. I simply steal for no reason". Then I told him: "Tell me the truth: what do you do with the food you are staling". He answered me: "I give the food to the donkey".

And it was found out that that brother was stealing beans, branches of willow and of fig tree, onions, and simply anything he could and he hid some of those in the beddings, other somewhere else. And in the end, because of seeing those rotting and because of not knowing what to do with those, he went and throw them to the garbage pile or he gave those to the animals.

10) Lo, can you see what does it mean having the habit of a passion? Can you see what insanity, what wickedness is that? He knew that what he was doing was bad, he was upset because of that, he cried because of that, but the miserable was still attracted by his bad habit he acquired by his previous carelessness. Abba Nisteros says rightly that, if somebody is attracted by a passion, he will have become that passion's slave. May the good God deliver us from the bad habit, so that Him not to tell us too: "What use I have for my blood, because I descent into corruption?" (Ps. 29: 9[1305]).

I told you in diverse ways about how one falls into habituation. This is because not him who hasn't even got angry will him be called as non-angry man. Neither him has fornicated once will him be called as fornicator. Neither him who has given alms once will he be called as merciful. But the virtue and the sin sow the habituation within soul by the fact that they are continuously worked, and in the end the habit itself will bring the eternal torment or the resting. And how the virtue gives rest to the soul and how the passion (the evilness) torments the soul, I told that on diverse ways. This is for the virtue is natural and it is within us. This is for unerasable are the seeds of the virtues. So, I said that, on the measure we work the good things we will reach to get accustomed to the virtue, namely we will receive our own habit, or we will turn on ourselves back to our health, as from some blindness to our own light, ore as from some illness to our natural health. But regarding the evilness the things aren't like this. But, by working the evil, we will receive a certain foreign and contrary-to-nature habit, and we reach to get accustomed to that as to a leper, and that's why we will no longer be able to get healed without much help and without man prayers and without many tears which can move towards us the lenience of Christ.

It is what we find too in the bodily things. This is because there are some foods which cause to some people a bitter juice, as for instance: the cabbage or the lentils and other things alike. But not if they eat cabbage or lentils once or twice, but if they eat that often and therefore too much, a bitter juice will occur within them and it will give them fever and stomach burn, and it will cause to some of them other troubles too. It is likewise in the case of the soul. If somebody perseveres in committing sins, that will become a bad habit within his soul and that will bring him to torments.

11) But you must know this too, that when the soul tends towards a passion, even if that soul falls only once in working that passion, that soul will endanger on himself to reach accustomed to that passion. The same thing takes place regarding the body things. If somebody has in the mix of his juices more bitterness, because of some previous carelessness, almost only one food will be able to stir up and to ignite within him the juices.

So, one needs much watchfulness, zeal, and care, not to fall into a bad habit. Believe me, brothers, that if somebody has even only one passion as habit, he will be submitted to the eternal punishment. This is because if somebody has ten good deeds and one bad deed because of habit, that one evil deed will overcome all his good deeds. A vulture having one of its legs tied up, that will cause him to lose all its power. Won't the hunter be able to easily kill that vulture that has one let tapped in a snare? It is likewise to the soul. If the soul has even only one passion as habit, the enemy will destroy that soul whatever he wants, through the mediation of that passion. That's why I am telling you: Do not let the passion to become habit within yourselves. But let's pray the good God for us to fight, day and night, not to fall into temptation. And if we are defeated, as human beings, and if we slip into mistake, let's strive to immediately get ourselves up and to repent for that mistake; let's pray before God's kindness; let's take vigil, let's fight. And God Who sees our resoluteness, our humbleness, and our crushing, He will give us His hand and He will have mercy on us. Amen.

XII

About the Fear of the Future Torments and about the Need for Him Who Wants to Save on Himself Never to Forget about the Care for His Salvation

1) I had sore feet and I got sick because of that, and some of the brothers came to visit me and asked me to tell them the cause of that illness that I had. I reckon that they aimed by that to two things: on one hand to comfort me a little in my pain, and on the other hand they wanted to give me the occasion to tell them something useful. But because my pain didn't allow me then to tell them what I wanted, so that you must listen now about that. This is because telling the story about your trouble is pleasant after that trouble went away. This is because on the sea as well, when the storm has started, everyone will be in trouble, but after the storm has passed, everyone will tell their story joyfully to one another, and they get delighted with those.

Sop, it is good, my brothers, as I always tell you, to attribute everything to God and to tell that nothing happens without God, but doubtlessly, it happens as God knows it as good and useful, and so will God do that thing, even if that thing has outside some reason as well[1306]. For instance: I could tell you that my stomach was burdened with foods because I ate with the strangers and I forced on myself a little bit in order to rest (satiate) them; and so, a leaking happened into my feet and that's why the rheumatism was set in working. But I could also mention other causes as well, for I could find enough of them. But the surest and the most beneficial is that God knew that that was beneficial to my soul, and that's why that happened to me. For there is nothing evil amongst the things done by God and everything God does is very good. So, nobody must get sad because of what is happening to him. But all those things, as I said, let him put them in the care of God and let his rest on himself by keeping this in mind.

2) But there are so people who get so burdened by the troubles happening to them that they would renounce to their life itself and they would joyfully die to escape that. But this happened to somebody because of his lack of courage and out of much nescience because of not knowing the fearsome tribulation following to the exit of the soul from the body.

It is a great love of God for people, brothers, to be Him within us in this world. But we, because of not knowing the things from beyond, we reckon the things from here as difficult. And it is not so. Don't you know what it is written in Paterikon? A very worker brother said to an old man: "My soul wants the death". And the old man told him: "Your soul wants the death because of wanting to run away from trouble and because of not knowing that the future trouble is worse than this from here". And another brother asked another old man: "Why do I get sad because of my idleness sitting in my monastic cell?".

[1306] Each thing from nature has outside a certain natural causality, for instance, an earthquake. But the ultimate cause of each thing is God. This is for out of the multitude of strings which can result out of each causal point, God will choose this or that string, like the man can determine a river to flow on one direction or on another, and to use that river to something else.

And the old man answered him: "This is because you haven't yet seen either the hoped resting or the torments to be. This is because if you saw these ones as they are, even if your monastic cell was crammed with worms, and you sank in worms up to your neck, you would endure that without getting sad"[1307].

But we want to be saved while sleeping, and that's why we get discouraged in troubles when we rather should thank God, for we are found worthy by Him to be us a little troubled here, so that us to find there a little resting.

Evagrius said too that him who prays for his exit to come sooner, he is like a man who asks the carpenter to break the sick man's bed[1308]. This is because through this body our soul is distracted, it forgives a little of his passions and he is comforted by his passion: he eats, he drinks, he sleeps, he dialogues with others, he loved with his beloved ones[1309]. But when the soul leaves the body there will remain the soul alone with his passions and forever tormented by his passions, occupying on himself only with his passions and being torn apart by his passions, so that no longer will be able even to remember about God[1310]. And the remembrance of God comforts the soul, as it is said in psalms too: "I remembered God and I got gladdened" (Ps. 76: 4[1311]). But his passions do not allow him to do even that.

[1307] P. Evergt. III, 13, p. 40.

[1308] Evagrius, The IV Hundred, 76, G.P. 28: 168.

[1309] Evagrius, The IV Hundred, 82, G.P. 28: 172. While into body, the soul is not only tormented by passions, because the soul is not so focused on himself and the soul doesn't only endure the passions' torment. The body gives to the soul also a distraction from the passions, or also a certain comforting, of course mixed with the sin. But in hell the soul will have only the torment consequently to his sins and not also the pleasure.

[1310] This is an admission of the positive role of the body, from this point of view too. The body relieves a little the soul from his loneliness. Of course, this loneliness will awful only when the soul is occupied exclusively with his passions. Properly-said, this coexistence with the passions increases the egotism at maximum, and consequently the loneliness of the subject. That's why, especially the lonely commit suicide, namely lonely because of the discouragement which they have been brought at, because of not being able to satisfy their pride, or other passions. He who is together with the things and with the people, he won't necessarily be with God as well; but at least he is not totally caught into the insupportable loneliness.

[1311] We have found the only verse in the Book of Psalms containing the expression: "I remembered God", but it has an opposite content to that of the paraphrase; in KJB we have: Ps. 77: 3: "I remembered God, and was troubled: I complained, and my spirit was overwhelmed. Selah."; in ROB we have: Ps. 76: 3: "I remembered God and I was shaken; I though and my ghost weakened." (E. l. t.'s n.)

Do you want to find out, by hearing an example, what it is that what I am saying? Let somebody of you come and I lock him up in a dark monastic cell, and I won't give him anything to eat, neither to drink, I won't let him sleep, neither to meet anybody, nor to sing Psalms, neither to remember about God, and this only for three days. And he will find out what his passions do within him. And this while he still is here. How much more wont' this happen to the soul after the exit from the body and after that soul will be surrendered to his passion and that soul will be alone with his passions?

3) So, you can understand from the things said here, what the miserable soul will suffer from passions and which troubles the soul will have there. When somebody is burnt, he doesn't know what is that burns him; what fire and what wood cause him that burning. But if somebody has within his body an admixture of biter juices, won't that admixture itself burn him and won't that always disturb him and won't that trouble his life? It is likewise with the passionate soul. That miserable soul is always being tormented by the evil habits from within him, by always having the bitter memory and the painful occupation with the passions, which always burn him and make him hot. In addition to that, who can describe, brothers, those fearsome places, those tormenting bodies serving towards such a suffering of the soul, without breaking up, and then that unspeakable fire, the darkness, those fierce and punisher powers, and the other thousands of tormenting means, as are described in the godlike Scriptures, all of them matching the evil deeds of the souls and their evil memories? As the saints receive some luminous places and an angelic joy, on the measure of their good doing, likewise the sinners receive some dark places, foggy, full of fear and of dread, as the saints tell us. This is because, what could me more fearsome and more miserable than those places where the devils are sent? And what can be more dreadful than the torment which the devils are condemned to? And also, the sinners are tormented with the devils themselves, as he says: "Go away from Me into the eternal fire, which is prepared for the devil and for his angels" (Mt. 25: 4, 41).

4) But what is ever more fearsome, it is what Saint Chrysostom says: "Even if there didn't flow a river of fire and even if the fearsome angels weren't present there, the simple fact that some people are summoned to glory and to honor while other people are removed with dishonor in order they not to see the glory of God, wouldn't that be more bitter than any Gehenna, that torment of that shame and of that dishonor and that pain of falling off such goods?"[1312].

This is because then, itself the reproach of our conscience and the memory of the committed things, as I said, they will be worse than thousands of unspeakable punishments. This is because the souls will remember all the things form here, as the fathers say: words, deeds, thoughts, and we won't be able to forget any of those[1313]. This is because what is said in the psalm: "On that day all their thoughts will perish" (Ps. 145: 4[1314]), it is said about the things regarding the goods of this world, namely regarding the houses, the places, the parents, the children, or the trades. These sorts of thoughts will perish once the soul has exited the body, and one will remember nothing about these ones, and he won't take care of any of these ones. And he will remember the things he did according to the virtue or to the passion, and nothing of those will be lost[1315]. And also, if he was beneficial to somebody, he will forever remind that and him whom he was beneficial to, as he will also remind him who was beneficial to him and what he benefited from that one. Likewise, he will always remember is the harmed somebody or if he was harmed by somebody[1316]. Nothing, as I said, of the things he did in this world, won't be lost by the soul, but the soul will remember all the things after existing the body, and the soul will remember those even more [1313] The memory of our evils will ceaselessly be sharpened during that endless existence, which the soul wont' have anything exterior to occupy on himself with, or the soul will no longer be able to make any plan which fulfillment that soul to be occupied with. That soul will be totally turned towards its past, towards a past that shames him up, that torments him, especially by seeing around him all of them whom he caused, by urges, by advices, and by examples, similar torments.

[1314] In KJB we have: Ps. 146: 4: "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."; in ROB we have: Ps. 145: 6: "Their ghost will exit and they will turn back into earth. On that day all their thoughts will perish." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1315] Properly-said, the souls will be emptied of plans. And the memories of the plans the soul made while on earth, and the memories of the soul's ambitious unrests for accomplishing those plans, they will appear in their total nothingness. There will remain only the memory of the evil deeds committed during the implementation of those plans, and occasioned by those plans. This will be the sole reality from within souls.

[1316] The persons remain in their memory with the evil and with the good they did, or that was done to them. Only the persons have eternal existence.

limpidly, more obviously, as one who has been delivered form this earthly body[1317].

5) A once discussed about this with a great old man. And this old man said that the soul remembers, after exiting the body, the passion that soul worked and therefore also the sin committed and the person whom that sin was committed with. And I was telling to that old man: "It might not be so, but the soul could maintain the habit born within him out of working that sin, and that will torment the soul". And we parted by each one maintain his opinion, because we wanted to find out the truth, and that old man didn't allow on himself to be persuaded, because he said that the soul will remember also the kind of the sin and even the place where and the person whom that soul committed the sin with. If it is so, we will have our last things even worse[1318], if we do not take heed at ourselves.

That's why I am always telling you: strive and take care of good thoughts, so that those will be which you will find them there. This is because, what somebody has here, what somebody leaves from here with, that will be what he will have there[1319]. Let's take care of delivering on ourselves from such a narrowing, brothers! Let's strive on ourselves and God will have mercy on us. This is for God is, as it is said in the psalms: "The hope of all the edges of the earth and of them who are at sea, [1317] The imperishable value of the person is shown in the fact that everything a person did, good or bed, it will remain within us as indelible memory, or as an echo, as a wound and not as an impersonal adding, but as a wound or as an adding tied to the memory, to the imprinting of that person within us, and even of that person's presence in front of us, in tormenting connection with us. It will pain us or it will rejoice us not what a person did evil or good to us, but that attitude which that person unveiled on herself or on himself to us in, an attitude that that person remained into or that that person changed it. Also, there will be our attitude we have towards that person. There won't pain 0or rejoice us the impersonal happening that occurred to us, but the persons themselves. And in this is hidden our conviction that those persons will persist in existence. In essence, this is what the existence of the Paradise or of the hell consists of: in our eternal persistence in the memory of the good or of the evil done by us, or done to us by some persons who continue to persist, they too keeping in mind the good or the evil we did to them or done by them to us.

[1318] The author of the writing declares that himself agrees the old man's opinion, in the sense of the things we said previously. If the person is that one that pains us or that eternally rejoices us by what that person did, then we will be pained by and we will rejoice on ourselves of concrete things, for the person is a concrete and unique reality; and equally unique are the person's deeds. Only the principle is general and abstract. A certain concrete person pains us, for the evil that person did to us.

[1319] He who leave from here carrying within him good thoughts about persons, he will be there with the respective persons; he won't be alone.

far away" (Ps. 30: 7[1320]). They who are at the edges of the earth are them who are in the ultimate evilness; and they who are far away at sea, are them who are in the ultimate nescience. And still Christ is their hope too[1321].

6) One needs only a little effort: us to strive to find mercy. If one has a field and he doesn't take care of that field and that field becomes covered in brambles and in thorns. And when he starts cleaning that field, won't his hand shed blood depending on what measure that field was full of thorns in, because of his carelessness? This is because it is impossible one not to reap what he saw.

But he who wants to clean up his field he firstly needs to thoroughly uproot all the weeds. This is because, if one doesn't pluck off well all the weeds' roots, btu he only cuts their superior part off, the weeds will again sprout out. So, he must pluck off, firstly, the roots themselves and then he will plow up that field, and he will well prepare that field, and only after that he will have sown in it the good seed. This is because, fi after he has done that good preparation (φιλοχαλίαν) he still let the field baren, the weeds will again sprout out and, by finding there a good and soft ground due to that good preparation, the weeds will stretch their roots deeply and they will become stronger and they will multiply in that field.

7) With the soul it is likewise. Somebody must firstly cut off his former addiction and his usual evil deeds. This is for there is nothing worse that the evil habit. This is because Saint Basil says: "It is not required only a little fight for defeating the habit. This is because the habit that has been straightened for a long time, it will often take the power of a nature"[1322]. So, it is required that those ones to fight, as I said, not only their evil habits and their passions, but also the causes of those one which are their roots. This is because if one doesn't pluck off

[1320] It is actually about: KJB: Ps. 65: 5: "By terrible things in righteousness wilt thou answer us, O God of our salvation; who art the confidence of all the ends of the earth, and of them that are afar off upon the sea:"; in ROB we have: Ps. 64: 6: "Hear us, God, our Savior, the hope of all the edges of the earth and of those who are far away at sea;" (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1321] If the persons whom we did something good to, or whom we thought something good of, they will be with us, all the more will be God with us, if we believe in Him. This is for God is present everywhere with an infinitely more accentuated intensity than any person, as being Him Who will give us joy if we have believed in Him and if we have loved Him, and He will be Him Who will make our conscience to torment us if we haven't believed in Him and if we haven't done to others the good as God wanted.

the roots, the brambles will immediately sprout out. Thus, the envy is nothing in itself, but it has some causes, among which there is also the love for glory. This is because by wanting one to be glorified he will envy the glorified one, or him who more honored that himself is. Likewise, the ager is born out of other causes, and especially out of the love for pleasure. Evagrius too mentioned this, by saying about a certain saint that that one was saying: "That's why I pluck off my pleasures, in order I to cut off the causes of the anger"[1323]. And all the fathers say that each passion is born out of these three: the love for glory, the love for money, and the love for pleasure, as I said to you in diverse modes.

8) p. 604, par. 2, r. 1So, if somebody wants to cut off not only his passions but even their roots, let him take care (φιλοχαλησαι) firstly of his morals, by repentance and crying, and then him to start sowing the good seed, which is the good deeds. This is because, as I said about the field, if after its cleaning and good preparation somebody won't throw in it the good seed, the weeds will sprout out again, and they will find out the soil good and leveled by that good preparation, and the weeds will stick even deeper root in that soil, likewise it is in the case of the man. If, after he has taken care of his behaviors and he has repented for his previous deeds, he doesn't take care of doing good deeds and to achieve the virtues, it will happen to him that what the Gospel says: "When the unclean ghost leaves the man and the ghost crosses through places without water, searching for resting and not finding, the ghost says: "I am going to turn myself back to my house where I have come out from" and by coming and by seeing that house emptied, I mean of the whole virtue, and swept up and adorned; then the ghost goes and take with him other seven ghost even more evil that he is and entering that house they will live there and the last things of the man will become worse than the first things" (Lk. 11: 24-27).

9) This is because it is impossible to the soul to remain in the same state. But the soul advances either towards better or towards worse. That's why the one who want to be saved, he must not only to not do the evil, but he also must work the good: "Shun yourself from evil, and do the good" (Ps. 236: 17). He didn't say only "shun yourself from evil" but he also said "do the good". For instance, if somebody got accustomed to do injustice, it won't suffice only to no longer do injustice, but he must do justice too. If he has profligate (debaucherous), it won't suffice if he only stops being a profligate, but he must also restrain on himself. If one was an angry man, if won't suffice if he only stops getting angry, but he must also achieve the gentleness. If he was daring, it won't suffice only to stop being daring, but he must also humble on himself. This means one shunning himself of evil and doing the good. This is for each passion has a contrary virtue. The pride has the humble cogitation, the love for money has the giving of alms, the waste has the restraint, the discouragement has the patience, the anger has the gentleness, and the hatred has the love. Shortly speaking, any passion has, as I said, a contrary virtue.

10) I've been telling you these things for several times. So, as we have removed the virtues and we have planted the passions contrary to them, likewise we must toil not only to remove the passions but also to sow the virtues and to place them where they ought to be. This is because we are given the virtues from God by nature. This is for, immediately that God made the man, God sowed within man the virtues, as He says: "Let's make man in our image and likeness" (Gen. 1: 26). He said "in the image", for God has made the sol as incorruptible and free; and He said also: "in our likeness", namely "according to the virtue"[1324]. This is for He says: "Be merciful, as your Father form heavens is merciful too" (Mt. 6: 36); and: "Be holy, for I am holy" (Lev. 11: 44; 1 Pt. 1: 16). And again, the prophet says: "Kind if the Lord to them who suffer" (Lamentation 3: 25). And others like these. This is "in the likeness".

So, God has given us the virtues by nature. But we do not have the passions by nature. This is because neither the passions have any being or any hypostasis; btu they are like the darkness that doesn't exist (doesn't subsist by itself) according to the being, and they are like an illness (a passion) of the sky, as Saint Basil says, that occurs afterwards (παρυφιστάμενον), because of the absence of the light[1325]. The soul, by deviating from virtues to the love for pleasure, the soul has given birth to [1324] Namely the soul isn't only free and incorruptible, namely in the image of God, btu the soul is called to virtue too, namely to the likeness to God. This is for God is not only incorruptible and free, but God is also the Kindness.

[1325] It occurs like a false existence (παρυφιστάμενον)

the passions (illnesses) and the soul has strengthened the passions against himself[1326].

11) But one needs, as I said, that in that field, after that field was cared (μετα φιλοχαλίαν), to be immediately sown the good seed, for the good seed to bring forth its good fruits. In order to do that, the sower after he has finished sowing his field, he must hide that good seed up and to deepen that seed into the ground. This is because, otherwise, the birds will come and steal that good seed and destroy it. And after he has hidden that good seed up, he will wait for the mercy of God until God will send the rain and make the seed grow up. This is for even the plowman comes for thousands of times to clean up his field and to prepare his field (φυλοχαλων) to sow his field up, if God doesn't send rain over his seeds, the plowman will do the whole his toil vainly.

This is in our case as well. This is for after we have done some good, we must hide that good up through our humble cogitation and to strengthen our helplessness and to throw in at God, begging Him to be lenient towards our toil, because otherwise the whole our toil will be in vain.

12) But sometimes happens that even after it rained and the seed has sprouted out, if the rain doesn't descend upon it at [1326] Neither the virtues stand by themselves, because we cannot find the kindness standing by itself. The kindness always belongs to somebody. We love a good man. We are comforted by somebody's kindness. We are not comforted by the kindness as such. But the virtue or the kindness is being naturally spread out of the person, as the light or the meaning are spread as well. But the evilness or the meaningless are not being naturally spread out of the person. These ones appear as a false existence, as a minus, by the lack of the kindness, of the virtue, and of the light. They aren't but an illness of the existent persons who, in a natural manner, they spread out of themselves the kindness and the light, which are as irradiations of their being. Without any doubt, we feel the passions painfully, but we feel the passions as a lack of what should be, as diminutions, as an illness, as a weakness of the being, as an impossibility of the being of manifesting the own positive content. In evilness there is a helplessness, but it is a helplessness that torments him whom that helplessness comes out from, and on him whom that helplessness is inflicted upon. And him whom that evil comes upon, he often opposes the same willing helplessness, so that he will increase too his helplessness too. If he opposed the irradiation power of his being, he would help it strengthening. If he opposed his strength, namely his virtue, he would infuse to his neighbor a strength too, and he would help him get healed as well. He who suffers of the helplessness of the evil, he reckons to heal on himself by searching for some equally inconsistent means. The egotist, because of suffering of his own shortcomings, he tries to heal those up, by searching for inconsistent goods too: passing pleasures, passing foods, false praises etc. Thus, because of his helplessness, the evil will increase into his helplessness. That factor that irradiates the evil, he feels his own helplessness, as it is felt also by that one whom the evil is inflicted upon; but that is a helplessness which both of them do not want to fight against.

due time, the crops will wither and be lost. This is for as the seed needs the rain, likewise the sprouted-out crops need the rain too, until it gets strengthened. But the care mustn't stop either then. This is because sometimes, even after the crop grew up and formed wheat-ears, there come the storm and the hails, or something similar, and the crops will be lost. It is likewise in the case of the soul too. This is because after the soul toiled and cleaned himself up, as I said, of all his passions, and after he strived with all virtues, he must take heed at the mercy of God and at the shelter from Him, so that him not to be forsaken and lost. This is because, as I said about the seed, that after sprouting out and growing up, if there doesn't rain again, it will wither away and be lost, likewise it is in the case of the man. If after the man has done all of these God removes His shelter and forsake the man even for a little, the man will be lost. For instance: when somebody is pious but he becomes indifferent, or when somebody is humble but he becomes daring. And God won't forsake so much the indifferent because of becoming daring, as God forsakes the pious because he has become indifferent, and on the humble because of becoming daring. This means somebody committing sin against his own state. Out of this there comes the forsaking. That's why, Saint Basil was judging differently the sin of the pious from the sin of the indifferent.

13) But when somebody guards himself against these things, he must take heed lets, if he did a small good, he would do that for his vain-glory, or in order to be pleasant to the people, or according to some worldly thought, and so he will lose that small good he did, as I said, by storm, by hails, or by something similar. There can happen also that the crops don't suffer anything in the field, but it still must be guarded until harvesting. Therefore, neither then the plowman must be careless. And even after the plowman reaped the field and the whole his toil has come to an end, there comes an evil man, with hatred, and he sets the plowman's harvest in fire and the plowman will lose everything he earned. That's why the plowman must not be careless until the has gathered his harvest and he had stored in in the barn. And even after the man passed through all of these things, he mustn't be careless even then. This is because it happens that after all of these things, the still finds a possibility to delude the man, either by self-justifications, or by pride, or by throwing within him some thoughts of disbelieve or of cunning heresy; and he not only will lose all his toils but that will even separate him from God. And if the devil wasn't able to do something evil to the man by deceiving him to do evil deeds, the devil will harm the man by a sole thought. This is because even a sole thought will be enough separate somebody from God, if the man admits that thought and consents to it[1327]. Therefore, he who wants to truly live, let him not forsake the care until his last breath. So, one needs much toil and much care, and ceaseless prayer to God, for God to cove us and to save us by His kindness, towards the glory of His name.

XIII

About the Need for Withstanding the Trials without Disturbance and Gratefully

1) Well said Abba Poemen that the sign of the monk is shown in trials (temptations)[1328]. This is for the monk who has come to truly serve the Lord, that monk must wisely prepare his soul for trials, and him not to wonder about and neither to be disturbed by what happens to him, by reckoning that nothing takes place without the God's taking of care, and unmistakingly what is happening it is good and beneficial to his soul. This is for everything God does with us He does that for our benefit and loving us and sparing us. That's why we owe, like the Apostle said, to thank in everything to God's kindness (1 Thes. 5: 18); and let's never get sad and lose our courage in what happens to us. And let's receive, without disturbance, the things coming upon us, with humble cogitation and with the hope in God, [1327] "Even one thought will be enough to separate the man from God, when the man admits that thought and he consents to it". This is because in such a case the man's inward being itself has been detached from God. This is because in that thought the man himself has taken an attitude. This is for the man is, in essence, ghost and freedom, and God is likewise. So too, the devil separated himself from God. The whole darkness entered the devil after this separation from God Who is light. The perversity, the crocked cogitation, the lack of love darkened the devil. What benefit will be there, if a man is next to us outwardly, but his inward is totally against us?

being us entrusted that, as I said, everything God does to us He does that out of Hid kindness, and loving us, and He does that well. And nothing could be done well if God didn't have mercy on us.

2) If somebody has a friend and he is entrusted that he is love by that friend, even if he suffers something from that friend, and even if that thing is some trouble, he will be convinced that that friend has done that out of live and he will never believe that his friend has wanted to harm him. How much more must us think at God Who created us and who brought us to existence out of nothingness, and He embodies on Himself for us, and He died for us, that He does everything to us out of His kindness and by loving us? I also can think about a friend that he does some things for me for he loves me and for he takes care of me. But I cannot reckon about any friend of mine that he has such a wisdom that he can rule everything regarding me at it's due. That's why a friend can also harm be, despite he doesn't want that. But I cannot say that about God. Thid is for God is the spring of the wisdom and He know all the things beneficial to us, and He guides towards that all our things, even the most insignificant of them. Some other times, on can say about a friend that he loves me and he spares me and he guides everything regarding me, but also that that friend doesn't have the power to help me to those things he reckons as beneficial to me. But we cannot say about God either that. This is for everything is possible to God and nothing is impossible to God.

So, we know about God that He loves and defends His creature, and that He is the spring of the wisdom and He know how to guide our things and that nothing is impossible to Hod and that everything serves God's will; and we must know that everything God does are beneficial to us and we must welcome that, as I said, by thanking Him as a good and benefactor Master, even if that is intertwined with trouble. This is for everything is done with right-reckoning by God and He won't overlook either the trouble happening to us.

3) But the man often doubts on himself, and he commits sin out of the tiniest trouble, intertwined with the things coming upon him, by saying: "How could these be beneficial to me?". But we commit sin in the things coming upon us only because we are impatient in pains, because we do not want to bear even a small trouble, neither to suffer something outside our goal.

This is for God doesn't allow coming upon us anything above our power. This is for the Apostle said: "Faithful is God Who won't let us be tried above what we can" (1 Cor. 10: 13). But because we are impatient, we do not want to suffer even a little, neither we want to receive anything with humbleness. That's why we a crushed, and the more we strive to get rid of troubles, the more we feel on ourselves as burdened by their heaviness, and the more we get weakened in our courage and we won't be able to get rid of those[1329].

There are some people swimming for some need, in the sea, and if they know the craftsmanship of the swimming, when a wave comes against them, they will dive under that wave until it passes, and so they will remain unharmed. But if they want to resist that wave, that wave will push them back and it will increase the distance (to their target). And when they start swimming again, another wave will come upon them and by resisting that wave again they will be again pushed back. And so, they always strive but they will gain nothing. But if, as I said, they dive under that wave and they get humble under that wave, that wave will pass over them without causing them any harm; and they will remain swimming as long as they want and so they will accomplish their thing. It is likewise in the case of the trials. If somebody bear patiently and humbly the trial, he will go through is unharmed. But if he gets troubled and disturbed and he blames everybody, he will torment on himself [1329] Our trouble gets inflated because of our subjectivity. We get weak souly because we give proportions to our trouble, and by giving proportions to our trouble we weaken our soul ever more. And thus, anything, regardless how tiny, it will take the form of an unendurable trouble, and so the whole our life will become a chain of troubles. By not understanding that during this life there cannot be any fully-satisfactory circumstance, one comprising the plenitude (this is because the more we have more goods, the more we want to have more, because of not being satisfied with the limitation of what we already have; the more we are praised, for instance, the more we want to be praise even more etc.), we transform almost any circumstance in a trouble which we give exaggerated proportions to, and that will be weakening our souls continuously, increasing our irascibility, our irritability, our discontent, our urge to criticism, out suspicion on anybody, upon God too, and that will make us impossible people. On the opposite, he who doesn't give proportions to his troubles, but he reduces them to the unavoidable limitation and relativity of the external situation occurring during this life, he will discover the possibility of endlessly progressing in his understanding, in loving God, in loving the people, and he will find even in his "failures" and "troubles" new occasions of understanding his possibility of endless spiritual progress. Therefore, he will benefit even of his failures and troubles. This is an idea exposed by the author in the followings.

and he will make difficult any of his attempts and, instead of benefitting of it he will be harmed by it.

4) This is for the trials are very beneficial to them who endure them undisturbedly. Ehen if we were upset by a passion, neither then should us be disturbed because of that. This is because if somebody is disturbed because of a passion upsetting him, that will be a sign of his nescience and of his pride, and of his non-knowing of his own state, and of his running away from toiling, as the fathers said. We neither are patient in the thing we start, but we want to achieve the virtue effortlessly. This is because, why the addicted will get disturbed when a certain passion troubles him? Why will him get disturbed if he has worked that? You have that addiction and you get troubled by it? You have its earnest and you say: "Whyt does it trouble me?". You better endure, fight, pray God, because of being impossible not to have any trouble him who has fallen into working the passions[1330]. Their vessels, as Sisoes said, are inside you. Give them their downpayment and they will go away"[1331]. He called as vessels their causes. If we loved them and we worked them, it wouldn't be possible not to be us enslaved by the passionate thoughts, and so being forced to work the passions, even unwillingly, for we have willingly surrendered on ourselves in their hands.

5) This is what the prophet said about Ephrem who defeated his enemy (Hosea 5: 13), namely his conscience, and he trampled the judgment, because he searched for Egypt and he was taken into slavery by Assyrians (Hosea 7: 11). The fathers call as Egypt the bodily will that makes us tending towards the bodily resting and it teaches our mind how to search for the passions' sweetness. And Assyrians they called the passionate thoughts which disturb and bewilder the mind

[1330] The passions have an infinite lust. That's why, as we satisfy our passions, they will ask for even more satisfaction, and if our passions aren't provided with the occasions to be satisfied, they will cause us even bigger discontent than in case we would have never satisfied them. This is because their continuous satisfaction, or always reworked, it depends on the external condition that sin not always available to us (woman, money, flatterers etc.), and on the other hand that causes us much discontent, because of their insufficiency, because of their claims, and because of their insincerity. On the other hand, satisfying the soul's desires for infinite progress, it doesn't depend on external conditions, or these conditions are continuously granted to our soul: most of the people open themselves to the good you do it to them, to the love you show it to them, or all of them offer to one another circumstances they must endure, which you must receive humbly, with understanding etc.

and they fill the mind up with unclean idols and they take the mind forcedly and unwillingly to working the passions.

So, if somebody willingly surrenders on himself to the sweet indulgence with his body, he will be taken forcedly and unwillingly to Assyrians to be slave to Nebuchadnezzar. This being known by the prophet, he cried and said: "Do not descend into Egypt" (Jer. 42: 19). "What are you doing, you the miserable ones? Get a little humble! Lean your shoulder and work for the emperor of Babylon and stay in the land of your parents". And he wakes them again, by saying: "Do not fear his face, for God is with us, in order Him to get us out of his hands" (Jer. 42: 11). Then he predicts also the trouble following to come upon them, if they do not obey God: "If you enter the Egypt, you will be in an untrodden place and enslaved and towards curse and damnation" (Jer. 42: 15-16). That's why they answer him: "We won't inhabit this land but we will enter the Egypt and we won't see war and we won't hear trumpet sound and we won't hunger for bread" (Jer. 42: 13-14). So, the descended to Egypt and they willingly enslaved on themselves to Pharaoh, and then they were forcedly be brought to Assyrians and unwillingly enslaved.

6) Look with your own mind at the said things. Before one setting his passion in work, even if his thoughts started fighting him, he would still be in his own city, still free, and he would have God as helper. So, if he humbles on himself to God and if he bears the yoke of his trouble while thanking God, and if he fights a little, the help from God will escape him. But if he runs away from toiling, and if he descends to the sweet delectation of his body, he will be forcedly and unwillingly taken into the land of the Assyrians and he will be slave to them unwillingly.

Then the prophet tells us: "Pray for the life of Nebuchadnezzar. For in his life is your salvation" (Baruch 1: 12). Nebuchadnezzar means one not to get discouraged by the trouble of his trial happening to him, neither to shun from that, but to bear it humbly, as owing to suffer it, and cogitating that is in unworthy of being delivered from his burden, but rather his burden to be extended and strengthened against him and, whether he know the cause of that a within him, of whether he doesn't know that at that moment, him to believe that nothing comes without judgment and unjustly from God. So said that brother too, when he got sad and cried because God has taken the trial from him: "Lord, am I not worthy to be trouble even for a little?"[1332]. And it has been also written that a disciple of a great old man was warred by the thought of the fornication. And when the old man saw him, he asked him: "Do you want me to pray God to ease your war up?". And the disciple said: "Despite I am toiling, Abba, but I do see out of toiling a benefit within me. You better pray God to give me patience"[1333].

7) Lo, these ones are them who truly want to be saved. This means bearing the yoke with humble cogitation and praying for the life of Nebuchadnezzar. That's why the prophet said: "For in his life is your salvation". This is identical to what the brother said: "I see a benefit in me out of my toil". This is also said by the old man: "Today I have known that you are progressing and surpassing me".

This is for, when somebody fight the sin with his deed and he starts waging war and he humbles on himself for his passionate and reckless thoughts, and he crushed on himself, and he lives in ascesis through the trouble of the toils, he will gradually clean up on himself and he will come again to that state according to nature.

So, as I said, when somebody is upset with his passion and he get disturbed because of his nescience and pride, he rather must see his on measures and to endure zealously, until God will have mercy on him. This is because if one doesn't get tempted and if he doesn't know the trouble of the passions, he neither will fight nor will get cleaned[1334]. The psalm says about this: "When the sinners sprout out as the grass, there will appear all of the who work the lawlessness, to be they lost forever" (Ps. 11: 8[1335]). The sinners sprouting out like grass are the passionate thoughts. This is because the grass is helpless and has no strength. When the passionate thoughts sprout out [1333] P. Everget. II, 25, p. 73.

[1334] The temptations are a means which one can know his weaknesses through. But the temptations provide the tempted also with occasions to fight against those weaknesses, namely occasions for strengthening. This is because without fight nobody can get strengthened, likewise without movement nobody can strengthen the muscles of the hands and of the feet. We are called to grow up by our effort. And the effort is occasioned by trials, by temptations, and by troubles. In our fight with the temptations, we do not fight so much against some foreign factors, but rather against some weaknesses of ours and for our strengthening.

[1335] In KJB we have: Ps. 12: 8: "The wicked walk on every side, when the vilest men are exalted."; in ROB we have: Ps. 11: 8: "Because, when the wicked accede to power, the lawless sneak around everywhere." (E. l. t.'s n.) within soul, there will appear, namely then will show themselves all of them who work the lawlessness, which are the passions, for they to be destroyed forever. This is for, when the passions appear within them who fight, then the passions will be destroyed by them.

8) Take heed at the chaining of the word. Firstly, there sprout out the passionate thoughts, then the passions, and then they are destroyed. All of these are characteristic to them who fight. But we who commi6t the sin with the deed and who always ask for right on behalf of our passions, we do not know when the passionate thoughts sprout out, neither when the passions occur, so that to fight them. And we still are low in Egypt, in the miserable work of the bricks of Pharaoh. And who will help us so that we to come at least to the feeling of our bitter slavery, in order us to humble on ourselves and to strive to gain mercy?

When the sons of Israel were in Egypt and the slaved to Pharaoh, they were making bricks. And they who work for making bricks are always low, looking at the ground. It is likewise that soul that is mastered by the devil and who commits the sin with the deed, that soul will trample on his cogitation and he makes his cogitation thinking at nothing spiritual, but to always think at and to do the earthly things.

Then the built up to the Pharaoh, with the brick they made, three fortified cities: Pithon, Ramses, and On, that is Illiopolis. These ones are: the love for pleasure, the love for glory, and the love for money, and every sin consists of these.

9) And when God sent Moses to get them out of Egypt and from the slavery of Pharaoh, this one made they works harder and said: “Youa re lazy, you do not work, and that’s why you say: we want to leave and to serve our Lord God” (Exod. 5: 17). Likewise, the devil too, when God deigned to have mercy on the soul and to ease the soul from passions by His word, by through some of His servants, the devil will make even harder the passions against that soul and he will wage war to that soul even more powerfully. And the fathers, by knowing that, they strengthen the man with their teaching and they do not let the man be engulfed by fear. One of them says: “Have you fallen? Get up! And if you have fallen again, you will get up again”[1336]. And the other things likewise. Another says: “The strength of them who want to earn the virtues is that, if they fall, let them not get discouraged, but let them take care again"[1337]. And each of the fathers gives a hand, one like this, another differently, to them who are warred and troubled by the enemy. And the fathers took this from the Holy Scripture, that says: "Doesn't him who fall get up again? Or he who goes away, won't he come back? Turn back to Me My sons and I will heal you up all your wounds, says the Lord" (Jer. 3: 22). And the things alike.

10) And when the hand of God got heavier upon Pharaoh and his clerks, so that those wanted to send away the sons of Israel, Pharaoh said to Moses: "Leave, serve your Lord God, but let me your sheep and oxen" (Exod. 10: 24). These are the thoughts from the thinking which Pharaoh wanted to remain master upon, hoping that through those him will again attract the sons of Israel to him. But Moses said: "No, but you will give us sacrifices and burnt offerings, which we are going to bring to our Lord God; and our cattle will go together with us, and we are not going to leave here even a hoof of theirs" (Exod. 10: 25-26).

And when Moses brought the sons of Israel out of Egypt and he crossed them the Red Sea, by wanting to take them to the seventy palm trees and to the twelve water springs, he firstly took them at Mera and the people got troubled because of not having what to drink, for the water there was bitter. And through Mera Moses took them to the place of the seventy palm trees and of the twelve water springs.

11) It is likewise in the case of the soul, when the souls tops sinning with the deed and the soul crosses the thought sea (of the thoughts, of the evil ghosts), the soul will firstly toil by fighting and by getting much troubled, and then after the soul will enter the holy resting. "For through many troubles we must enter the Kingdom go Heavens" (Acts 14: 21). This is for the troubles move the mercy of God towards the soul, as the winds move the rain. And like the rain by falling on the ground for a long time, if the crop is still frail, the rain will make it rot and the harvest will be lost, but the winds coming with measure will dry the crop up and strengthen it, likewise it is in the case of the soul. Weakening the fight, the carelessness, and the resting, they make the soul drowsy and they scatter the soul, while the trials gather the soul together and they unite the soul with God, as the prophet said: "Lord, into my trouble you have remembered about me" (Isa. 26: 18). So, as I said, we must not get troubled, neither must we get upset and drowsy in trials. But let's always endure and give thanks to God into the whole our humbleness, so that He will have mercy on our helplessness and He will cover us up against all temptations, towards His glory. Amen.

About the Building and about the Good Composition of the Soul's Virtues

1) The Scriptures says about the middle-wives keeping alive the male children of the Israelites, that, because those middle-wives feared God they had built to themselves houses. Could that be about seen houses? And what does it mean that the middle-wives built homes to themselves for the fear of God? Because we learn the opposite, namely at the right time, for the fear of God, we will leave the houses we have. So, the Scripture says not bout the seen house but about the house of the soul. And this house of the soul is built up by somebody by keeping the commandments of God. The Scriptures teaches us by that, that the fear of God makes the soul keeping the commandments, and by commandments is built up the soul's house. Let's take heed, us too brothers, at ourselves, and let's fear God, and let's build up a new house to ourselves, so that we will have a cover during winter, against rains and thunder bolts, because he who doesn't have a house will be in a big trouble during winter.

2) But how is built the soul's house? We can learn his craftsmanship right from those who erect the seen house. He who wants to build up this house, he must strengthen it from all quarters, and to erect the building from all four sides, and not to take care only of one side while neglecting others three sides. If he does the opposite, he won't benefit anything and he will fail his purpose, and he will spend and get tired uselessly.

It is likewise in the case of the soul. The man mustn't disregard any side of the building, but he must erect it equally and balanced. This is what Abba John Says: "I want the man to take a little form every virtue, and not like some people do, who keep a virtue and work only that virtue, and they take no care of the other virtues"[1338]. The maybe reach a special strength in that virtue, and that's why thy might not be burdened but that virtue's opposite passion. But they are stollen by the other passions and burdened by them, because they do not take care against those passions, but they reckon that they have something great within themselves. These ones resemble to somebody who erect a big wall and by looking at the height of that wall they reckon they have built something big, but if a wind comes that wall will be torn down. This is because that wall is alone and not connected to other walls. That wall is uncovered because of the lack of the other parts. And he who wants to build up his house and to put a roof to it, he rather must build it from all quarters and to strengthen it everywhere.

3) And I am telling how: first, let him lay down the foundation. This is because "without faith", as the Apostle says, "it is not possible one to be pleasant to God" (Hebr. 11: 6). And then let him build up, on this foundation, the house according to the plan. Does he meet the obedience? Let him lay down a stone to the obedience. Is him met by some anger form some brother? Let him lay down a stone for the long-suffering. Is him asked to restrain? He must lay done a stone to the restraint. Thus, out of any virtues he meets, he must lay down a stone to the building, and so he will erect that building in a circle, with a stone of the mercy, with the stone of the cutting-the-own-will-off, with a stone of the gentleness and so on. But in all of these he must take care of patience and manhood. This is for these ones are the angles and through them the building is getting tight, and one wall will be united with another wall, and the building won't lean, nether the walls will separate from one another. This is because without these ones, no virtue can be streng6thened and consummated by anybody. This is because if one doesn't have manhood in his soul, he won't either be patient. And if somebody doesn't have patience, he won't be able to succeed in anything. That's why he says: "Into your patience you will gain your souls" (Lk. 21: 9).

[1338] Apopht. belonging to John Colovos, 34; G.P. 65: 216 A. Likewise at Evagrius, Gnost. 100 and Epistle 2, Frankernberg, Evagrius Ponticus, Berlin, 1912, p. 582.

Also, he who builds, he must set each stone on clay (of mortar). This is because fi he placed the stoned without clay, the stones will shift and that house will collapse. The clay is the humbleness. This is because of being out of ground and trampled by everybody's feet. And any virtue added without humbleness, it won't be a virtue, as it is said in Paterikon: "This is because as it is impossible one to build a ship without using iron spikes, likewise it will be impossible somebody to be saved without the humble cogitation"[1339]. So, he who wants to do a good, he must do that good with humbleness, so that he will be able to keep, through humbleness, what he has done.

The house also must have some connections (ιμαντώματα), which are the right-reckoning. This is for the right-reckoning fortifies the house and it keeps the building tight, and in addition to that, the right-reckoning will give the building a beautiful countenance.

And the roof is the love, which is the consummation of the virtues, like the roof is the consummation of the building. Then, after finishing the rood, there follows the roof's railing. What the roof's railing is? It has been written in the Law too: "If you build a house to yourself and you put a roof to it, you will make also a railing to the roof in order your children not to fall off the roof" (Deut. 22: 8). The railing is the humbleness. This is for the humbleness crowns up and guards all the virtues. Like each virtue must be strengthened with humbleness, as I said that each stone is placed on clay, likewise committing any virtue will need humbleness. That's why the saints, by naturally advancing into virtue, they reach at humbleness as well. This is because, ads I told you, the more one comes closer to God then more he will see on himself as more sinner.

But what are the children whom the Law spoke about, and whom we must take care of not to fall off the roof? The children are the thoughts born within our soul. We must guard these thoughts with humbleness, in order they not to fall off the roof that is, as I said, the consummation of the virtues[1340].

4) Thus, the house has been completed: it has the connections, it has the roof, and it has the roof's railing. In one word: that house has been consummated.

[1339] Apopth. Belonging to Syncletica; G.P. 28: 1521 B.

[1340] An Epistle of John the Prophet (Nicodemus the Hagiorite p. 442).

But is there anything missing? We still have left something aside. But what is that? It is a master mason. This is because, if the mason is not a master, he will build a crooked building and that building can fall anytime. The master is him who follows into knowledge. This is because there can happen that the toil of the virtue is accomplished, but because it is not accomplished into knowledge, the effort will be wasted, the work will be reckless, and the things won't be fully accomplished. And he sets down a stone but he removes another stone. For instance, behold that some brother comes and tells you a word that upsets you, or it wounds you, and you keep your silence and bow down before him. Behold, you have set a stone. But then you go and tell to another brother: "That brother has rebuked me; he told me this and that; and I not only have kept my silence, but I have even bowed down before him". Lo, you have set down a stone but you have removed two stones[1341].

Again, somebody bows down because he wants to be glorified and behold that the humbleness is intertwined with the vain-glory. This means laying down a stone and removing another stone. But he who lays down the humbleness into knowledge, he undoubtedly convinces on himself that he was the one who mistook and he persuades on himself that he is guilty. This means bowing down into knowledge. Another works the silence. But not into knowledge. But he who keeps his silence into knowledge, he will reckon on himself as unworthy of speaking, as the fathers said[1342]. This is the silence into knowledge. Again, he who believed that himself doesn't have a high-opinion on himself, but he still reckons that he does something great by humbling on himself, let him know that he actually doesn't have anything, and that he is unworthy to be counted with the people, as Abba Moses said: "You, black skin of clay, who is not a man, why do you come among people?"[1343].

5) Another, again, he nurses an ill man. But he does that in order to be paid. Neither this is into knowledge[1344]. That's

[1344] In all of these, the "knowledge" must rather mean "conscience". All the deeds which are not done out of the conscience of a real duty we have as sinners, and without being us aware of the fact that we do all of those deeds with the help from God, because by ourselves we are why, any motif for sadness would occur to us, it will stop us from doing the good deed and we won't reach to accomplish that good deed, because of not doing it into knowledge. But he who serves into knowledge, he serves in order him to gain mercy, in order him to gain the feeling of the mercifulness.

He who pursuits a good purpose, no matter what happens to him, except for a trouble coming from outside, whether the sick man himself troubles him, he will bear all the things untroubled, while looking at his purpose, and knowing that rather the sick man serves him that he serves the sick man[1345]. So, you must believe that he who serves a sick man into knowledge, he will find relief of passion and wars. This is because I know a brother who was warred by an ugly lust, and for he serves a man sick with dysentery, he has been delivered by that war.

And also, Evagrius says about a certain old man, that he delivered one of the brothers from the hallucinations which were troubling him at night, by commanding him to serve the sick people and in to fast in the same time. And when asked about the meaning of that, he said that "nothing quenches such passions as the mercy does it"[1346]. But if some lives in ascesis either for vain-glory, or by reckoning that he thus fulfills a virtue, somebody like this won't live his ascesis into knowledge[1347]. Such a brother will start by that to despise his brother, and to reckon on himself as somebody great. And thus, he will not only be laying down a stone and removing two stoned, but he will even be in danger to make the whole wall collapse, by condemning his brother. But he who restrains on himself, into knowledge, he won't reckon that he fulfills a virtue; neither will he want to be praised as one who lives in ascesis. But he wants to achieve his righteousness, by his ascesis[1348], and by that he wants to reach the humbleness. This is for the fathers say that "the road to humbleness consists of the bodily nothing, those deeds won't have a real value and they won't build up virtues within us. Only when one doesn't trust in himself in anything, only the he will be into God and he is truly great, for he absorbs out of God's power, and for he has torn down the wall of the pride between him and God.

toils into knowledge"[1349]; and the similar things. And shortly, one must work each virtue so that he will achieve that virtue and he will reach to get habituated to it. Thus, he will be a good master, a mason being able to build a fortified house.

6) But he who want to reach with God to such a good state, he must not say that the virtues are high and he cannot reach them. That would be characteristic either to him who doesn't hope in the help from God, or to him who is lazy and avoid starting to do something good. This is for, you tell me what virtue you want to achieve, and let's start the toil for it. And you will see that it depends on you to achieve that virtue. Lo, He tells us: "Love your neighbor as on yourself" (Mt. 5: 43). Do not think how far you are from this virtue, so that you will start to fear and say: "How could I love my neighbor as on myself? How can I take care of his troubles as of my own, and especially those hidden within his heart, which I neither see or know, as I do with mine?". Do not worry by thinking at that and do not reckon this virtue as overwhelmingly high and difficult to achieve. But you do the beginning, while believing to God. You show God your assertiveness and zeal, and you will see the help He will give you in order you to achieve this virtue.

For instance, they say that there are two ladders: one leading upwards to the sky, and one leading down to hell; and you stand on earth between the two ladders. Do not start thinking and say: "How could I fly from earth and suddenly I to be up, on the top of the ladder?". Because that is impossible and not even God asks that from you, but you rather guard yourself, for now, at least not to go downwards: do not do evil to your neighbor, to not hurt him, do not gossip him, to not rebuke him, and do not despise him. And then start doing a little good, by serving your brother with the word, by having mercy on him, by giving him something when he needs it, and so, by climbing one step at a time, you will reach with God, the top of the ladder too[1350]. This is for, by helping your neighbor a little at a time, you will also reach to want that what is beneficial to him, as that would be beneficial to you. And this is to "Love your neighbor as on yourself". If we search for, we will find, and if we ask God for it, He will enlighten us. This is for is it said into Gospel: “Ask for and you will be given; search for and you will find; knock and it will be open to you” (Mt. 7: 7). “Ask for”, He says, for us to ask in prayer. And “search for”, He says, for us to search and find out what this virtue comes like, what brings this virtue, and what must we do in order to achieve this virtue. “Search for and you will find”, it means searching on each day. And “knock” means working the commandments. This is for everyone who knock they knock by using their hands. And the hands mean doing.

[1349] P. Everget. I: 45.

[1350] The idea of the "ladder" started to preoccupy the monks living near to Mount Sinai, even before the apparition of the work belonging to John Climacus.

So, we must not only to ask for, but we also must strive to search and to do, as the Apostle said: “Prepare towards all the good thing” (2 Cor. 9: 18). What does it mean: “prepare”? When somebody wants to build a ship, he first prepares everything one needs for a ship, down to the tiniest pieces of wood and tar and fabrics. Likewise, when the woman wants to set up the loom, she will prepare it down to the smallest pin and thread. Thus, being “prepared” means having prepared everything you need for your work.

7) Thus, therefore, we have to be prepared towards all the good things, by having the whole our preparedness to do the will of God, as He wants and as He likes it. But what does the Apostle mean: The will of God good and well-pleasant and consummate?” (Rom. 12: 2). All the done things are done either by the lenience of God or by His benevolence, as the prophet says: “I am the Lord and I make light and I build up darkness” (Isa. 45: 7). And again: “There is no evilness into the city, which not to have been done by the Lord” (Amos 3: 6). Evilness he calls all the upset, or all the troubles happening to us towards our rebuking, because of our evilness. These ones are: hunger, earthquake, drought, diseases, and wars. These ones do not happen by the will of God, but by His lenience. This is for God allows them to be brought upon us towards our benefit. So, God doesn’t want us to desire these things neither us to work together with Him to their committing. For instance, it is the will of God, as I said, by His lenience, that a city to be torn down. But God doesn’t want for it is God’s will that city to be torn down, us too to set that city in fire and to burn it down, neither to take our axes and to destroy that city. It happens again, by the lenience of God, that somebody is troubled or sick. But God doesn’t want us, because it is His will that that somebody is troubled, us too to trouble that one, or to say that, because it is the will of God that somebody is sick, we must not have mercy on him and take care of him. God doesn't want us to serve such a will of His. God wants us to be kind, meaning that God doesn't' want us to desire the same things He does.

But what does God want us to desire? God wants us to desire His "good" will, that one that is done, as I said, by God's benevolence. This consists of all the things done according to the commandment: Let's love on one another, let's have mercy, let's give alms, and all the similar things. This is God's good will. But what God's "well-pleasant" will? This is for, when somebody does a good, it won't necessarily mean he does something well-pleasant to God too. And I am going to tell you what is that like: It happens that somebody find an orphan and poor little girl, but beautiful, and he likes her for her beauty and he takes her and he raises her, by reckoning that he does that because that girl is orphan. This is God's good will, but it is not well-pleasant as well. The well-pleasant one is when somebody give mercy not for some human thought, but for the good itself, out of mercy. This is something well-pleasant to God[1351].

And "consummate" is when somebody gives alms not with parsimony, not with difficulty, neither with sadness, but with the whole his power, with the whole his assertiveness, by giving as he receives, by doing the good as it is done to him[1352]. Then is being done that consummate will of God. Then will be somebody that good and well-pleasant and consummate will of God, as the Apostle says. This means working into knowledge[1353].

8) One must know that the good of the giving of alms has such a great grace than it can bring the forgiveness of the sins. This is for the prophet says: "The redemption of the man is his richness itself" (Prov. 13: 8). And again, in another place he says: "Redeem your sins by giving alms" (Dan. 4: 24). And the [1351] We must do the good for the good itself, namely for another person and not due to some interest of ours. This is the act of our true self-surpassing.

[1352] Everything we have he have received and we are receiving in continuation, from God. And God doesn't give us with parsimony and with sadness, but with the whole His heart. We must do likewise. All the more is that because we do not give something that is properly-said ours, but what we have received from God.

[1353] In all the good deeds, in all the virtues, Abba Dorotheos shows us their inward steps, or our inwards steps, which are ever easier steps, steps which are ever lass impeded by the sin of the egotism. Committing the good is a simple and equal thing, to everyone and in all circumstances. Doing the good inscribes an upwards movement, made with efforts, with difficulties; it is a gradual plucking off our egotism.

Lord Himself says: “Be merciful as your Father in heavens is” (Lk. 6: 36). He didn’t say: “Fast, as your Fathers in heavens fasts”. Neither He said: “Be non-earning, as your Father in heavens is non-earning”, but He says: “Be merciful, as your Father in heavens is merciful”. This is the virtue that especially takes God as example. This is for the mercy is a feature characteristic to God (it characterizes God). That’s why, we must take heed, as I said, at its purpose and let’s give alms into knowledge.

This is because there is a great diversity in the purpose of the giving alms too. This is because it happens that one gives alms for his field to be blessed and God will bless his field. Another gives alms for his ship to be saved. And God will escape his ship. Another does it for h8is children and God delivers and guards his children. Another does it for being glorified; and God will glorify him. God doesn’t let anyone unrewarded. And God gives to each one what that one wants, when by doing that that one’s soul won’t be hurt. So, everyone takes their payment. This is because nothing has been set aside by God[1354]. This is because their purpose they followed wasn’t beneficial to their soul. Have you given alms for your field to be blessed? God has blessed your field. Have you done it for your children? God has guarded your children[1355]. Have you done it in order you to be glorified? God has glorified you. So, what else does God owe to you? God has given you the reward for what have you done.

9) But there is another who gives alms in order him to be delivered from the future torments. He does that for his soul. He does that according to God. But he doesn’t do that as God wants it to be done. This is for he still is in the feeling of e slave. And the slave doesn’t do the will of his master willingly, but because he fears of being beaten. Likewise, this one does it in order him to be delivered form torments. And God delivers him from torments[1356]. Another gives alms in order him to take his reward. But neither this one is, still, as God wants. This is because he isn’t in that feeling of a son. But he is like the [1355] This doesn’t contradict the commandments of praying for others. This is because we must overcome our egotism in prayer as well. But we must pray not for the worldly goods, or only for those, but we must pray for the salvation of the people.

[1356] If one leaves this world with this feeling, he won’t be tormented but neither will he feel the whole joy of the love from God.

hireling who does the will of his master only for being paid and for earning, likewise does this one too.

There are three souly states which we can do the good in, as Saint Basil says[1357]. I told you about these on some other occasions. We do the good either because we fear the torments, and then we are in the state of the slaves; or in order us to be paid, and then we are in the feeling of the hireling; or for the good itself, and then we are in the feeling of the son[1358]. This is because the son doesn't do the will of his father because of fearing his father, neither as one who wants to be paid for that, but as one who wants to serve on himself, and as one who wants to honor and to rest his father within himself[1359]. So, we too must give alms for the good itself, by suffering together with others, as they would be our limbs. We must serve somebody as we would be the served ones. We must give as we would receive[1360]. This means giving lam into knowledge. So can be, as I said, in the son's feeling.

[1357] In G.P.: Gregory.

[1358] Abba Dorotheos reckons as one and the same thing "doing the good for itself" and doing it in the feeling of a son, namely out of our filial love for our Father God. Only in the love for God we live the good in itself. This is for the true good is the relation of love with another person and, in last analysis, with God Who you can be with in a relation of eternal love, a love that won't tire you. The "good in itself" isn't something that cannot be live by our person, but it is that good that is true good; it is "the Person Who is Good in Himself" and so the spring out of which the good spring eternally, and even towards us, of we open through our love to His love. The fear keeps you exterior to the person, and it doesn't allow you to feel being overpoured within yourself that person's kindness; the interest in rewards is the same: you still are locked up into yourself though you know about the Person of God and you reckon Him as Superior to you. But you still haven't set yourself in communication with the Person of God. Because of still not having that feeling of a son, you do not feel that all the things of the father are yours too, namely that His heart is being overpoured within your heart. As long as you are in the feeling of the hireling, God will give you something belonging to Him, but He won't give you on Himself neither will He give you all His things so that Him to have everything in common with you. Only in the last case you have "the Good in Himself".

[1359] The servant doesn't refer with his person to the Person of Him Whom he serves to, but he refers to the payment he has to receive; the servant doesn't want to give joy to that Person by proving Him his love. The servant doesn't give on himself to that Person, neither does he serve that Person for that Person Himself, but he does that for himself. The servant doesn't serve the "Good" (or the Person Who is the spring of the good" for Himself; he doesn't love the "Good" in Himself. He doesn't' fully reestablish the direct relation between self and God. That's why the servant won't folly enjoy the full life represented by that Person and communicated him in that relation.

[1360] By showing love for God Himself, for the direct relation with God, he does that also for the person himself of another man, by entering the direct relation with him. This is for that person too is a good in itself. And from that person too it comes life to us, as it doesn't come from material things. He who has become accustomed to feel God as Person, and in the real

10) No one can tell: I am poor and I have nothing to give alms. This is because, if you cannot give as those rich people throwing their gifts into treasury, you will give two pennies as that poor widow did (Mk. 12: 42; Lk. 21: 1), and God will appreciate that form you more than those rich gifts. Don't you either have that much? But you have power to serve the sick people and to give them, as alms, your service. Can't you do even that? Then you still can comfort your brother by word. So, give him, your comfort by word, as alms, and listen to him who says: "the good word is above gifts" (Wisdom of Sirach[1361] 18: 17)[1362].

Let's suppose that you cannot be useful to another either by word, but you still can have mercy on your brother when he gets infuriated, by enduring him during his disturbance, because you see him as tempted by the common enemy; this is because, instead of telling him a bad word and thus troubling him even more, you keep your silence and have mercy on him and on his soul by plucking him off the mastery of the enemy. You can too, if your brother wrongs you, to have mercy on him and to forgive his sin so that you too will take forgiveness from God. This is for he says: "Forgive and you will be forgiven" (Lk. 6: 37). And you will be found as giving alms to your brother by forgiving him of what he has wronged you. This is for God has given us the power to forgive, it we want, to one another, the mistakes done to us[1363]. And if you cannot have mercy on his body, you still can have mercy on his soul. And what mercy can equal the mercy on somebody's soul? This is for, as the soul is life coming him from God, that one has discovered also the value of his fellow human as person, a value that exceeds infinitely the material things. So, by doing the good for God as Person in order to please God, we do also the good for people as persons loved by God. And inversely, when we have truly discovered the value as person of our fellow human, as non-passing spring of happiness, and of attention for me, as subject conveying God's love, then we will have discovered God's mystery as Person too.

[1362] There are too words which the life is communicate by, even more directly than through material goods, when those words start from within heart and reach the heart.

[1363] God has given us power to forgive on one another, meaning that what we forgive to others and they forgive to us, it will actually be forgiven by God too; we won't be judged for those mistakes. On that purpose, God ceded us His power. But God didn't cede form His power of Judgment, because we proved to make bade us of it even without having it but only by imagining that we have it. God allows his kindness to circulate among people, as a water through the subterranean channels of His field, as from a plant to another.

more honored than the body is, likewise the mercy had on the soul is bigger than the mercy had on the body.

Therefore, nobody can tell: "I cannot give alms". Each one can, according to his power, and according to the state of his soul, to give alms, but let's strive to do that good into knowledge[1364], as I said about each virtue. This is for, I said that him who does the good into knowledge, that one is the experienced mason and the master building the fortified house. About this the Gospel says too: "The wise one builds his house in stone" (Mt. 7: 24) and nothing among the opposite things could shake such a house. May God Who loves the people, give you to obey and do the things you hear, lets these words to be towards your condemnation on the day of judgment. For the glory is forever His. Amen[1365].

[1364] To do it "into knowledge" for he does that for the salvation of the another and of himself, so that for honoring God too. Let him do that in the broad horizon of knowing the eternal value of the human person, an eternal value rooted into the relation with the Person of God and in order to strengthen this relation.

Towards Some Who Lives in Their Monastic Cells and They Asked Him about Meetings

1) The fathers say that sitting into the monastic cell it is half, and meeting the old man is half too[1366]. This word means that both for sitting into the monastic cell and for existing that cell, one needs equal watchfulness, and he need what he is appeasing on himself for, and what he needs to meet the old men and the brothers for. This is for, if one looks carefully at the purpose of those, he will strive to do as the fathers said: when siting into his monastic cell he will pray, meditate, do a little handwork, take care – according to his power – of thoughts; And when he ever meets somebody, he will find out and he will see the state of that one, namely he will see if he can benefit or not of the state of the brothers, and if he can go back to his monastic cell while unharmed. And if he sees his brother harming him in something, he will discover his helplessness; he will discover that up to that day he will have not achieved anything out of appeasing on himself and he will turn back to his monastic cell humiliated, crying, repenting, and paying God for his helplessness. And so, he will further sit into his monastic cell, by taking heed at himself. Then he turns back to people and looks at himself if he still is easily to be defeated in the first things or in another things, and then he turns again back to his monastic cell by doing the same things: crying, repenting, and praying God for his state. Thus, the cell elevates on one, while the people test out. So, the fathers said right that sitting into the monastic cell is half and meeting the old men is half too.

[1366] Apopth. Belonging to Poemen, Cod. Paris Greek, no. 1598, f. 73.

2) So, you too, when you meet on one another, you must know what are you going out for, and never to go out without a clear purpose. This is because him who wanders without purpose, as the fathers said, he will toil vainly. So, each one of us when doing something, he mandatorily needs to have a purpose and to know what he is doing that for.

So, what is the purpose we must have when going to visit on one another? Firstly, for love. This is for he says: "You have seen your brother, then you have seen God"[1367]. Secondly, in order you to hear the word of God. This is for among multitude there is moving the word of God. This is for, that what one doesn't know, he can ask another about it[1368]. Then also in order us to know, as I said before, our state. For instance, one think that going to somebody to eat there, he will know on himself and he will see on himself, as if there is served good food and he will be able or not to restrain himself from it, or if he will force on himself not to do injustice to his brother by taking more of that food, or if he forces on himself to take the smallest portion. This is for there is, on occasions, somebody who shies to change his bigger portion for the smaller portion of his brother[1369]. But what would be the significance of the difference between the bigger and the smaller portion? Regardless how tinny that difference would be, couldn't one see [1367] Apopth. Belonging to Poemen 168; G.P. 65: 361 C. And extraordinary concise paraphrasing of Jesus' word: "When you did it to one of these too small brothers of Mine, you did it to Me" (Mt. 25: 45). Withing our fellow human there is God not only because he wears the image of God, but also for he has his foundation into God and he is maintained as human by the ontological dialogue he has with God, even if he is not aware of that. Through man one can see God, the man leads us to God, by the fact of the freedom, f his thinking. The more the man becomes more accomplished, the more he himself will become aware of that and he is felt as such by his fellow humans. By any human "you" we stand in front of a godlike "You", full of an unconditional responsibility. That's why, in another's mirror, the man knows his own state, as it will be said further on. What the man often wants to know about himself he will find that out, unwillingly, from another. Either that one tells him, or he sees on himself in a responsible satisfied or unsatisfied relation with that one and in a comparison between what he is and what he should be. Only by being both of them together they will see their shortcomings in a more accentuated manner, or their insufficiencies in fulfilling their reciprocal duties, but in connection, of course, with that "You" Who unveils to them, even without they willing it, the norm of the true man.

[1368] This is an extraordinary valuation of the man in God.

[1369] In the spiritual advices for cleaning up our passions, we can find behavior rules of an amazing decency; advices expressing and aiming an ideal of great delicateness. That is the delicateness of the saints which exceeds any code of good manners. This is because they do not aim only to a formal covering up of the interested rudeness, but they also aim to pluck of the roots of what causes that rudeness.

out of it the fact that one is greedy and so he sins against his brother? Again, by participating to agapes one can notice if the can abstain from eating too much, when in front of diverse foods, so that he will satiate on himself; also, he can notice if he guards on himself against daring, when seeing his brother surrounded by more honor or served more than he is; and if he doesn't duffer because of seeing another speaking daringly to somebody or speaking to much or not-gathered in himself; if he doesn't pay attention to that, neither he judges that brother, but he rather looks at the more pious one; if he forces on himself, as they say about Sabba Anthony, that by visiting the brothers, he saw something good in all of them, and that was what he kept about them: form one: gentleness, from another: humbleness, form another: peace, and he was having all of those as within himself.

Lo, we must do the same too. And that's why we meet with one another. And when we turn back to our monastic cells, let's study on ourselves and let's find out what have we benefited of, or what has harmed us. And immediately that we find out that we have been covered up, let's give thanks to God Who have been covering us up so that we have been able to pass unharmed. And let's repent for what we have done wrongly, let's weep for that, and let's deplore our state.

3) This is for each of us is harmed by or he benefits of something, because of his own state. This is for no one harms on another. But if we are harmed, as I said, it will be because our state which we are in. This is for we can, as I am telling you always, if we want to, to benefit of or to be harmed by anything[1370].

Let me give you an example, in order y0ou to see that the things are so. It happens that somebody stays over night in a certain place; I do not say that he is a monk, but somebody form that city. And three people walk past him and. One of [1370] Even as fallen as it is, the creation remains the gift from God. But it depends on us to use this gift towards our good or towards our perdition. We can benefit even of the heavy and burdening things because they could strengthen our ghost if we endure them. Neither by falling has the creation become a unilateral and fatal a good of an evil, but the creation has still remained as a tool that can be used for good or for evil, by our freedom. God has left everything to our decision. This is a great honor he has made us, but this honor implies a great responsibility and a great risk. It depends on us to discover the greatness of the creation and the generosity that God showed to us, by creation, so that we can reach through creation even to deification, or we can made of creation an occasion of blasphemy against God and us to fall though it into the eternal damnation.

those reckon that that man is waiting for somebody to go and fornicate together; another reckons that that man is a thief; and the third one reckons that that man has been summoned by some friend of his, from the next house, and he waits for that friend to come out and to go together somewhere to pray. Lo, all three have seen the same man in the same place but they still haven't had all three of them the same thought, but they have thought differently according to their own state. Some of the bodies produce bitter and evil juices and those bodies transform any food in unpleasant juices, despite that food being a good food. So, not what they eat is the cause, but those bodies themselves, as I said, because of having a bad mix of juices and therefore they mandatorily work upon and transform any food according to their mix.

It is likewise in case of that soul that has a bad habit. That soul is harmed by anything despite that thing being beneficial. Suppose that there is a pot with honey and somebody throws in is some absinth. Won't that little liquor destroy all the content of that by bittering the whole honey" We do the same. We throw a little bitterness of ours and we will destroy the whole good of our neighbor, because we see that good according to our evil habit and because we change it according to our habit. And they who have a good habit, they are like one who, by having good juices within his body, even if he has eaten something harmful, he will transform that in his good juices (in his good humoral mixture), according to his mixture, and so the bad food won't to him any harm. This is for, as I said, his body as a good mixture of juices (a good humoral mixture) and it will transform that food according to his mixture. And as I said about the first tone that he transforms according to his evil mixture even the good food, likewise the second one will transform even the bad food according to the good mixture of juices.

Let me give you an example, so you can understand it better. The pig's body has a mixture of very good juices. And its food is fruits and branches of palm tree and things from the mud. And still, because it has a body with good juices, despite eating such food, it transforms it in good juices. Us too, if we have a good habit and a good state, as I said, we will be able to use each thing even if a certain thing is useless to us. The prover says rightly: "He who looks at things with gentleness, he will be saved" (Prov. 28: 13). And in another place: "The insane man is opposed by all things" (Prov. 14: 7).

4) I heard about a certain brother who, when we visited some of the brothers and saw an untidy monastic cell, he said to himself: "Blessed is this brother for not worrying about the many things, or better said he doesn't worry of anything of the earthly things, and thus he has taken the whole his mind up. This is because he doesn't waste any time even for cleaning up his monastic cell". And again, when visiting some other brother and he saw that brother's monastic cell as very neat, clean, and adorned, he again said to himself: "Like this brother's soul is, likewise his monastic cell is clean. Sand I can see the state of his soul by looking at the state of his monastic cell"[1371]. And he never said about some brother that this one is lazy, or this one is profligate, but he used everybody according to his good state. May the good God give us too a good inward state, in order us too to be able to benefit from each one and us never to see the sin of our brother. And if we see his sin, or if we suspect him, we do that because of the evilness from within us, let's immediately turn our thought into a good cogitation. This is for, the non-seeing of the sin of our neighbor will give birth within us, by the help of God, to that kindness which we are well-pleasant to God by. For His is the glory forever and ever. Amen.

To the Protos and to the Disciples from Monastery about How the First One Must Advice the Brothers and on How the Brothers Must Obey the Protos

1) If you are an adviser of the brothers, take care of them with the harshness of the heart and with the merciful love. Teach them with your deed and with your word the things they must do, but mostly with your deed. This is for the examples are more working. If you are strong, you will be them example in the bodily thing as well; and if you are weak, you will be example to them through the good settlement of your soul and through the fruits of the Ghost enumerated by the Apostle: love, long-suffering, joy, peace, gentleness, kindness, faith, and by restraining yourself from all passions (Gal. 5: 22). And do not get too upset because of the mistakes which take place, but show, without disturbance, the harm coming out of mistake; and if you must rebuke, you will do that accordingly to the person and to the moment[1372].

Do not judge the small mistakes with the same harshness which you judge your own mistakes, neither ceaselessly reproach those. This is because that is hard to bear and getting habituated to reproach it will lead the reproached to insensitiveness. Do not command with haughtiness, but advise the brother humbly. This is for this word has power of advice and it persuades more and it will rest the brother.

2) And during the time when some brother resists you, you will guard your tongue not to utter something angry by any means; and you won't let your heart to get haughty against that brother, but you will remember that that brother and limb into Christ and the image of God is tempted by our common enemy, and you will have mercy on that brother lest being him enslaved by the devil through the strike of the wrath, the devil to kill him with the keeping of the evil in mind, and because of our carelessness to be lost a soul whom Christ died for. Think at the fact that you too are submitted to the same judgments of the anger and, by knowing your helplessness, you will take care of your brother and you will thank that you have been given an occasion to forgive the brother, in order your big and many mistakes to be forgiven to you too, by God. "Forgive and you will be forgiven" (Lk. 6: 37). Do you reckon that your brother will be harmed because of your long-suffering? But the Apostle commands us to overcome the evil with the good (Rom. 12: 21); and not the evil with the evil. This is for the fathers say also: "When rebuking on another you are stirred up towards anger, you will have fulfilled your passion"[1373]. And no wise man tears down his own house in order to build up another's house.

3) And if the disturbance persists, you will force your heart and pray, saying the followings: "You God Who loves the people, You Who into Your unspeakable kindness have made us [1372] According to the state which that person is in at that moment.

[1373] Apopth. Belonging to Makarios 17, G.P. 65: 269 B.

our of nothing towards being us imparted with Your goods and, because we have got far from Your commandments, You have called us again to You through the blood of Yor Only Begotten Son, of our Savior, You come not too and help our helplessness and as You yore appeased, by rebuking, the stormy sea, likewise You appease by rebuking our heart's disturbance and do not renounce to Your children and in the same time do not renounce to both of us who are killed by sin, and You do not tell us: "What avail in (of) My Blood, when I descend into corruption" (Ps. 29: 20[1374]); and: "Amen I and saying to you, I do not know you" (Mt. 25: 13), because you candles got quenched because of the lack of the oil".

And after this prayer, for you heart has got tamed, then you will be able, according to the Apostle's commandment, to reproach and to rebuke and to comfort (2 Tim. 4: 12) with understanding and with humbleness and to heal and to correct mercifully the sick limb. This is for then the brother too will accept the correction with conviction (from God, t. n.), and he will rebuke on himself harshly. And through your peace, you will reconcile his heart. So, let nothing to remove you from the holy teaching of Christ, taught us: "Learn from Me for I am meek and humble in heart" (Mt. 11: 29).

Therefore, we must take care, in the first place, of having a peaceful state of our soul, so that neither for right reasons nor for the sake of the commandments, allegedly, us not to let our heart troubled, but let's be convinced that we fulfill all the commandments through love and through the cleanness of our heart. By advising the brother thus, you will hear that voice that says: "If you do an honest man out of worthless, you will be lie My mouth" (Jer. 15: 29).

4) And while being in the state of the obedient, you mut never trust your heart. This is because your old addictions blind you up. And to not trust your judgment in anything. Do not decide anything by your own without asking for advice, and to not think and reckon that your opinions are better than those of your adviser. Neither make of yourself judge of your adviser's deeds. This is because you will be deceived for many times. This is because that is a deceit from the evil one, in order to impede you from obeying faithfully in everything and to impede you from a sure salvation; obey silently and you will travel without danger and without straying on the way of the father (spiritual, t. n.). You force on yourself in everything and you cut off your will and by getting accustomed, by the grace of Christ, through habituation, to cut off your will, so that you will reach to do that effortlessly and without getting upset as it would always be done your will, as you wish. This is for you won't want the things to be done as you wish, but you will wish the things as they are done. It happens so to them whom the transgression of God's commandments is no longer within, neither is there the transgression of the fathers' (spiritual, t. n.) commandments, t. n.).

[1374] In KJB we have: Ps. 30: 9: "What profit is there in my blood, when I go down to the pit? Shall the dust praise thee? shall it declare thy truth?"; in ROB we have: Ps. 29: 9: "What will You benefit of my blood if I descend into corruption? Will the dust praise You, or will it herald Your truth?" (E. l. t.'s n.)

You fight to be blaming on yourself in all the things and persevere in accomplishing what is not decided by you, into knowledge[1375].

Believe that all the things are done under God's taking care, until the most insignificant things of ours, and you will bear without any disturbance the things coming upon you. Believe that the dishonoring and the defamations are healing medicines of the pride of your soul and you pray for them who mock you, as for some true physicians of yours. Be convinced that him who hates the dishonor, he hates the humbleness too, and he who runs away from them who trouble him, he run away from gentleness. Do not try to know your neighbor's sin, and do not accept any suspicions against him. And if these are sown within you by the evilness of others, you will strive to transform those by good interpretations and give thanks in everything by kindness and holy love.

Before anything, let all of us guard our conscience in all things, in those regarding God, our neighbor, and the material things. And before saying or doing something, let's inquire if that is according to the will of God. And then, after we have prayed, let's say and work and throw our helplessness before God. And His kindness will come to help us in everything[1376].

[1375] This expression is taken by Abba Pistos from on the lips of Abba Sisoes, G.P. 65: 373 B, according to "Sources Chrétiennes", p. 504, note no. 1.

THE ROMANIAN PHILOKALIA

- VOLUME X -

“So, the inward man is reckoned as the imageless state of the mind. In that indefinite, by missing any narrowing through the successive images of the things and of the imaginings, there can dwell Christ Who by the fact that He is God He matches that indefinite place, and by the fact that He is man He is felt close to us and in connection with us. The mind becomes focused on Him and only on Him. He is being explained what Saint Mark the Hermit says in the Word about Baptism (The Romanian Philokalia, volume I), where Christ is seen, in His quality as Hierarch, as receiving all our thoughts on the altar of our hearts, from their first occurrence within mind. But Saint Isaac completes the idea, by specifying that Christ as Hierarch, He fill up everything within us, and He spreads around His good fragrance in the indefinite precipice into the depths of the soul, filling us up with good fragrance. The bottomless precipice of the soul it is so kindred to the bottomless precipice of the godhead that one cannot see a border between them two. You only feel that you heart is not unveiled as precipice, except for there is another precipice more capable of maintaining itself as such, and you feel that your heart discovered or it actualized also the precipice of your heart. Of you feel the difference only in that that your precipice prays to the precipice of Him Who fills your precipice up as another abyss. And then you feel that not only Christ spreads around the good fragrance of the incense, but yourself do that to, by bringing on yourself as sacrifice to Christ. By living on yourself as precipice and by living on Christ as precipice within yourself, you will dare in your prayer. This is for you are no longer separated from Christ by something, but you feel Christ sunk within you and you feel yourself as sunk into Him, but without Him to be confounded to you."

Saint Isaac and His Work

1. The “Ascetic Words” or “about ascesis” belonging to Saint Issac the Syrian, have been used extensively in the Easter monastic life. Proof to that are the numerous codices comprising them. They were translated form the Syriac language to the Greek language by two monks, Avramie and Patrichie from Saint Sava Monastery, near to Bethlehem. The number of the Words varies, as some of their parts have been rounded in separate Words, or they have been framed within other Words. By and large, their number varies between 85 and 99 Words. To these are added four epistles. Neither the order of the Words is always the same. The most information in the field of the matter is given by Nicephorus Theotokis in the Introduction he wrote to his edition form the year 1770, at Lipsca, the first printed in Greek edition of the Words of Isaac the Syrian.

The text printed by Nicephorus Theotokis, and reprinted in the year 1895 at Athens, by hieromonk Joachim Spetzieri, it is full of grammatical and syntactical mistakes. Nicephorus Theotokis ascertained that the texts is the same in all the codices he came across, and that’s why he reckoned that that was due to the translators themselves. This determined any translation done by him to be rather a true rebuilding, more or less corresponding, of the content deriving form the author. The same aspect determined the Romanian translation published at Neamţ Monastery, by the zeal and taking care of Archimandrite Ilarie, who was the abbot of Neamţ and Secu Monasteries, to be very difficult to understand, because it was translated verbatim after the so faulty Greek original. The newer Romanian translation, non-printed, it is, at its turn, quite far from the content of the Greek text.

We have been striving to render a translation, on one hand, as faithful as possible, and on the other hand, in as intelligible as possible sentences.

Nicephorus Theotokis, based on the Epistles sent by Saint Isaac to Simeon, and by reckoning that this Simeon was the Young Simeon the pillar-hermit (who lived between the year 531-596), he reckoned that Isaac lived in that century too, and he ended his life before the year 600.

O. Bardenhewer declares that, based on the "newer researches", this Isaac would have lived around the end of the Century VII[3].

H. G. Beck goes even further, by affirming that Issac was, during the Century VII, for a few months, a Nestorian Bishop at Nineveh, and through him the mystique of Evagrius entered Byzantium. His translators in Greek attribute the texts quoted by Issac from Evagrius under the name of Saint Gregory od Nyssa. "Although Issac knew Dionisius the Pseudo-Areopagite, he follows in the first lie to the system of Evagrius"[4].

We reckon that the problem of Issac's identity sill isn't solved, as also the Syriac basis of the Greek text requires extensive studies before being solved. This is similar to other cases which conclusions were drawn in but they later have been proven as wrong (Makarius, Diadochus, Saint Maximos the Confessor etc.).

Identifying our author to a Nestorian bishop of Nineveh it raises some questions difficult to be solved in the frame of such a hypothesis. For instance: how could a follower of Nestorianism – that strictly separates within Christ the godlike person from the human person – to adopt Evagrius' mystique that almost confounds the godlike to the man's deep? Then, how could a follower of Evagrius to so frequently quote from Dionysus the Areopagite who was at the antipode of Evagrius, by placing God in such an accentuated transcendence? Then, there are in the text some sentences directly opposing the Nestorianism. For instance: "Christ renewed our nature through His hypostasis" (Epistle IV). But it is a known fact that the Nestorianism spoke about two hypostases into Christ. Contrary to Nestorianism are also affirmations like these: "And as an end to these ones was given by God and Lord, for His love, His Son through cross to death" (Word LXXXI). It is a known fact that according to Nestor not the Son of God died in His human nature, but the man Jesus.

Then it is also a curious fact that Isaac frequently used Dionysus the Areopagite, but he didn't know Saint Maximos the Confessor. Could Issaac overlook the great ascetic-mystical work belonging to Saint Maximos, if he lived after Saint Maximos, or if he was contemporary to Saint Maximos, more precisely, if he wrote after Saint Maximos finished his ascetic-mystical work (626-634)? Likewise, our author doesn't mention John Climacus (579-649), whose work – The Ladder – had become famous in the monastic life immediately after being issued.

Issac often quotes authors from the Centuries IV and V (Dionysus the Areopagite would be the last one having his work dating from around the end of the century V). This is a sign that our author belonged to an epoque not so far from the end of the Century V. But the spiritual preoccupations of his work are very close to those from The Ladder, but they are expose to Isaac in a less organized manner, and on the other hand the ascetic themes are more widely analyzed, and in addition to them it is given a more extended space to the description of the spiritual experiences of the union with God and of "seeing" God. This leaves us the impression that John Climacus used the work of Isaac the Syrian, by organizing its themes and by focusing their presentation, and not the other way around.

To the eventual objection that the "Nestorian" Isaac could not use Orthodox authors as John Climacus and Maxim the Confessor, despite living later than they did, one can ask: then hos could he use Dionysus the Areopagite who, according to the opinions of those (Occidental) authors was close to Monophysitism, and therefore on the opposite extreme to Nestorianism? Of course, there remains the question which id difficult to be answered: why wouldn't John Climacus quote Isaac, if Isaac lived before him? It could be that both of them lived and wrote around the same time, by using a monastic experience circulating among the monks from Syrian and Sinai, among whom, of course, there were certain communications. Or maybe the short time past between the apparitions of their works didn't give to any of them the authority of being quoted.

Saint Isaac occupies on himself in an especially intense manner with four capital themes, which are connected to a multitude of other subordinated themes: a) the importance of the ascetic toils and of the hardships for the consummation of the man, a theme which he manifests in a kinship with Mark the Ascetic; b) the importance of the humbleness, which he can be the greatest of the masters in; c) the knower role of the "feeling", which he is a predecessor in, to Saint Simeon the New Theologian; d) the insistent description of the state of quietude, tightly related to that state of the ceaseless prayer and of the love.

About humbleness he says: “Speaking about humbleness means speaking about God Himself”. “The humbleness surpasses the whole creation”. “The humbleness is a power that tames the wild beasts and it annuls the snakes’ venom” (Word XX). “The humbleness is the coat of God”, he said in another place.

The quietude isn’t a simple ceasing of any inward life, but in it are set in more intense work the inward feelings, but through the Ghost, or better said insomuch through the Ghost, that the man no longer feels any worry, and he no longer pays any effort to maintain that state. These feelings, or better said the Holy Ghost through these feelings, it perceives at peak the deeps of God. “The quietude, says Saint Isaac, it kills the external feelings and it wake up the inward feeling” (Word LXXXV).

The quietude is reckoned as a big deep or as a great height, as a shore of the mysteries reached by one who floats on the “harsh sea” of the ascetic toils. It is reckoned as a tall building, one built in layers, or as a climbing to ever-higher mysteries, to an ever-advanced consummation. It is a movement of elevation, or of continuous diving into the godlike mysteries, and not a petrifaction into the void of absence of any spiritual life. The quietude is a diving into the “sea of the quietude”, or into the quietude’s infinity that is one with the infinity of God. That’s why, the ultimate “bosom” of this sea will remain ever-unreachable, and always craved for. It is an abyss and therefore it has not border; it has limitless depth and width. It is the bosom of the supreme non-understood-meaning that needs to be evermore understood. It is the “bosom” of the supreme non-comprisable love, which we desire to embrace it with an ever-fiery longing, with a never-quenched thirst and always drunk with the joy of living it (Epistle III). The quietude is a kidnapping of the look at the deeps of God, which are never fully seen, but which are always felt into their infinity. That’s why nothing could attract outside on them who have reached it, and nothing could bother them. They who entered the area of the quietude, they are together with the angels, united through quietude and through that silence amazed of God Who is hidden into His quietude. “The Lord Himself is within them who have entered the quietude, and He unveils on Himself to them as irradiating out of Him that quietude heavy with endless meanings, or, better said, that quietude as unspeakable fulness of all meanings, though it is wrong even to use the word "all" for the infinity of the godlike meanings" (Ibid).

One reaches the quietude though, on one hand by cleaning off his passions, and on the other hand through the ceaselessly prayer, which, at their turn, they are indissolubly united. This is for the man get far from his passions – or he forgives about them - especially by praying.

About the prayer Saint Issac says: "Without prayer you cannot get close to God" (Word XIII). This is for the prayer cleans the soul up of other thoughts and, itself, only by being cleaned of any other thought it will get fully united with God, of course, if it is winged by the love for God and it won't remain in a neutral void.

The prayer, by cleaning up one's mind and heart, it makes shining within them their godlike Sun, says Saint Isaac, anticipating the declarations of the hesychasts from the Century XIV. "I think – he says – that he who is righteous and humble in thought… when he stands to prayer, he sees within his soul the light of the Holy Ghost and he startles with the lightnings of the light and he rejoices of seeing the glory of that light and he rejoices of the changings of his soul in the likeness of that light (Word LXII).

But the quietude is a state superior even to this clean and freed of any thought and ceaseless prayer. This is because the quietude is the state of that soul kidnapped by seeing God, when any movement ceases within that soul. "And from the clean prayer to the inward realities, after having crossed this border, the cogitation will no longer have neither the power to work, either in prayer, or in movement, either in crying, or in the self-mastery, either asking or desiring, either pleasure for something among the things hoped in the present life or in the future age. That's why, after the clean prayer, there is no other prayer… After crossing that border, there will take place a kidnapping and not a prayer. This is for the things of the prayer will have stopped and there will occur a certain seeing. Every kind of done prayer, it is done by movement. But when the mind enters the movements of the Ghost, there will be no prayer" (Word XXXII).

The quietude following after prayer it is united with the drunkenness of the love for God. Thus, not only the prayer, but the love too has a tight connection with the quietude. They who have reached the quietude are kidnapped and drunk by the sweetness of the endless love being overpoured out of God and they will be filled up with the love for God. But within the love for God there is comprised the love for people too, and the love for all creatures, even if they cannot show that by deeds. Their heart is burning with the love for everybody and for everything. "This is for all the saints reach this consummation, when they reach to be consummate and they resemble to God in the abundant springing out of their love for all the people" (Word LXXXI).

About that love from this state of quietude, Sain Isaac tells us, among other things: "He who has found the love, he eats Christ; he eats Christ on each day and on each moment, and he becomes immortal by doing that". God will not longer let dying him who loves God so much and him who answers God's love with his love. Everything that exist, it exists as work of love and it is maintained into eternity by love. "Blessed is him who eats the bread of love that is Jesus" (Word LXXII).

I do not think that anyone else said deeper and more beautiful words on quietude and on love than Saint Issac the Syrian did.

In tight connection with the love there stays the knowledge. The Paradise is the love of God which are comprise in the delectation and all the blessings. That is the place where the blessed Paul was nourished with above-nature food. And after he tasted out of the tree of life, he shouted out saying: "The things unseen by the eye and unheard by the ear and which haven't ascended to the man's heart, those have been prepared by God to them who love Him" 0 1 Cor. 2: 9 – (Word LXXII). Only him who love he knows the spiritual, interpersonal plan. Only him who loves a person will open on himself and that person will reveal to him. Only him who loves God he will also know God on the measure he loves God. In quietude there is a supreme knowledge, for there is a supreme love. This kidnapping into the love and into the knowledge of God Who is the spring of the love and by right by that He is the spring of the life too, (this kidnapping) makes to fade away all the attractions coming from the things and form the pleasure which can be provided by the things sometimes in a passionate manner. This is the positive content of the quietude.

Of course, this knowledge in in the same time a feeling, it is tasting the life and the truth that is the Person of Christ. Any person you know by loving that person, it will communicate you a certain life. But the Person of Christ communicated infinitely more His love through love and through knowledge. (About the theme of the knowledge Saint Isaac the Syrian to be seen the study belonging to father archimandrite Iustin Popovici, Théorie de la connaissance de Dieu chez Saint Isaac le Syrien, in "Contacts", Paris, no. 69-70, 1976).

Related to the love for the neighbor, Saint Issac writes as deep and as palpitant rows about having mercy on our neighbor. The mercy, according to Saint Isaac, it doesn't mean only giving somebody your exterior goods, but it means giving on yourself, it means burning with your heart for that one's pain. Only thus you can truly comfort him, by healing him of the deadly sadness of the conscience of his loneliness (Word XXIII).

But a satisfactory summarization of the work of Saint Issaac is difficult to be made. Almost each row of it, it is a lightning illuminating depth which are rich in thoughts and in life, and which need to be extensively exposed and commented. We are signaling, in addition to the sentences from above, a few other which sparks in concentrated spiritual truths of great depth and of rich complexity: "The weakness (of those who are souly ill) cannot meet the flame of the things, that uses top weaken the strength of the passions and to resist the passions" (Word XXIII). "Hold on tight on these ones (throw yourself day and night before the crops of Christ) and then it will the sun dawn inward you and you will reach being as a flourished Paradise" (Word CXXVII). "If you have no deeds you won't speak about virtues. God cherished more the troubles endured t for Him than any other prayer of sacrifice. And the smell of the sweat is above all spices" (Word LVII). "The faith is the door of the mysteries" (Word LXXII). "The quietude is the mystery of the age to come. And the words are the tools of this world" (Epistle III).

But almost the whole Saint Issac's work is a spiritual poem of an unspeakable beauty. Saint Issac convinces us that the spirituality cannot be expressed except in poetry. The poetry is the sole means for expressing the truth of the spiritual plan of the existence. The poetry and the truth go together on this plan.

2. The works of Saint Isaac the Syrian has been copied and translated in many Romanian manuscripts and that proves that it was zealously read in our past. Only in the Library of the Romanian Academy there are ten manuscripts comprising the whole work of Saint Isaac the Syrian and other 26 manuscripts comprising parts of it.

The manuscripts comprising the whole work of Saint Isaac the Syrian are: no. 1649 dating from the Century XIX (1806); no. 1920 dating from the Century XVIII (1794); no. 1927 dating from the Century XVIII; no. 1963 dating from the Century XVIII (1778); no. 2113 dating from the year 1811); no. 3724 dating from the year XVIII; no. 3725 dating from the year XVIII.

The manuscript no. 1963 was written in the year 1778 by Hieromonk Terapon in the Sihăstria-Secu Monastery, and it comprises 86 Words and four Epistles, but without the Introduction written by Nicephorus Theotokis, and without the Foreword following after that Introduction. The manuscript no. 1927 has the same number of Words and Epistles, and an identical text, but it is preceded by the Foreword written by an anonymous author, but it doesn't' contain the Introduction written by Theotokis. The text of the two mentioned manuscripts seems to be identical but the copyists were different. Also, without containing the Introduction written by Theotokis, but containing the footnotes, it is the text that was printed at Neamț Monastery in the year 1819.

The notes show that the Romanian translation of this edition knew the text printed by Theotokis in the year 1770, but the fact that some paragraphs were omitted while others added, it proves that the Romanian translation used other texts in manuscript too.

A translation according to the edition issued by Theotokis is that from the manuscript no. 2580, one that has both the Introduction written by Theotokis and the Foreword of the anonymous.

Among the manuscript not comprising the whole work of Saint Isaac we are mentioning here that one with the no. 3562, 3which between f.1-211r, it comprises the work of Abba Dorotheos, and between f.211-215 v. it comprises: "for the rule and learning of the young beginners" (it corresponds to Word VII from our text). It was written in the year 1676 by Hieromonk Vasilie, during the rule of Ghica Vodă and of Metropolitan Barlaam. But the Introduction must have been done before that, some somebody else. This Word is also comprised by the manuscript no. 1621 from century XVIII; no. 1877 from Century XIX; no. 2221 from century XVIII; no. 3306 from century XVIII (years 1777-1778); and no. 3607 dating from the Century XVIII.

Hieromonk Nicephorus Theotokis towards Readers

It was appropriate that not even Isaac the Syrian to hide on himself until the end. Therefore, by remaining undiscovered for many centuries, he has been waiting for him who was to discover him and make him known. And who was that one it is shown limpidly by the facts. He was not unskilled in what he wrote, neither one who tastes only by the tip of his lips the Words of Saint Isaac, but he was a good knower and one who imparted himself to the satiation with them and who studies them in a consummate manner, somebody who was tall in virtue, rich on knowledge, tireless in the zeal for the good things and in the fruitful work of what can be useful to anybody. This was the Patriarch of the Holy City of Jerusalem, Ephraem, the true and legit descendant, and not less in virtue, in the chair of Jacob, the brother of the Lord.

This one, by finding in the Lavra of Saint Sava from Palestine, the letters of Isaac, he studied them with a trained attention. And researching them, he didn't stand not to share them with others too. And the task of editing the work fell on me. It was something that I couldn't refuse, though I knew it was tiresome. I accepted that task for the worthiness and for the virtue of the man and for the duty and special veneration I have for him. By accepting the task of this work, I am going to firstly speak briefly about Isaac, and then about his works and about the present edition.

Issac, by being born in East, where sprouted out and started from all the things of the salvation, he was Syrian according to his name, and his country was Nineveh[5]. We do not know who were his parents. By parting with the world from his early youth, and since the age of his flourishing he entered - with a blood brother – the monastery called Mar Mathew, when many live an angelic life while into body, he embraced the monastic countenance and the lonely life. By accustoming on himself there with the toils of the ascesis, and by reaching a satisfying measure of the virtue, he felt himself dominated by the longing for a deeper appeasement, and he felt his heart burning by the fire of the reclusion. So, by leaving far from the coenobitic community and dwelling in a monastic cell somewhere in the wilderness, he lives a totally lonely and unmixed life, by thinking only at himself and a God. His brother, by being appointed to rule the already mentioned monastery, he didn't cease to ask him, in insistent letter, to leave the wilderness and to come back to monastery[6]. But he attached on himself so much to the wilderness, so that he didn't want to part with it even for a short while. But what the prayer of the mentioned brother didn't succeed in, it was done later by the doglike unveiling[7]. But not listening to his blood-brothers, though that one was urging him to turn back into monastery, he obeyed the Father who called him from above, buy accepting the care of steering the ship of the Church of the Ninevites. So, he left the wilderness which longing was still burning within his heart, and he accepted to be ordained as Bishop of Nineveh. This was because he ought not to hide the light under the bushel of the wilderness, but he ought to place it in the candlestick of the shepherding, and to spread the shiny rays of its enlightening power as far a possible. But that happened for a very short time, because he barely saw the light rising and he withdrew again. It seems that the world wasn't worthy of this man. It happened to him what it happened yore to the godlike Gregory the Theologian, who, when he was ordained as Bishop of Sasime, he thought to run away immediately after his ordination, and that seems to them who love God as not happening because of an unrestraint thought of self-loving (and therefore neither condemnable), but because of the [6] "The second of his Epistles contains his answer to his brother, but it is entitled Towards a Natural and Spiritual Brother Who Lives Within World, either for he mentioned the coenobitic community as world (because by calling his brother not only natural but also spiritual, it is proven that that one was a monk), or for Isaac had another brother who lived within world".

[5] "Assemani, in "Bibliotheca orientalis", tome I, p. 463, and the author of the Foreword say that Isaac was born, grew up, and studied in Mesopotamia, not far from Edessa".

[7] Nicephorus Theotokis refers again to a place from the Foreword belonging to the anonymous, that follows in his edition.

consummation of the men. For these ones were without blemish in the other things and impossible to be condemned and ghost-bearers. And he who is spiritual, he judges all things but he won't be judges by anyone.

And what happened then to his was this: on the very day that his ordination take place, he was sitting at the house of the bishopric, when two individuals came to him, one complaining about a credit he granted, and the another admitting that he owed that but asking for a short postponing of the payback. But the creditor told him: "If he refuses to pay me immediately, I am going to give him in the hands of the judge". The godlike Isaac told him: "If, according to the commandment of the Holy Gospel, you must not ask even for the things taken from you, all the more you must endure and give him one more day to pat you what he owes you". But that one answered mercilessly: "Forgive about those of the Gospels". Then Isaac said: "If this one doesn't obey the commandments of the Gospel and of the lord, what am I myself going to do here?". And by seeing that his lie accustomed to silence, non-troubled and undisturbed, it followed to be scattered and troubled with worries, he withdrew from the episcopal chair and turned back to his beloved monastic cell into wilderness, where he remained until his death. And how many battles he fought against the devils and against his body and how great he reached to be in his virtue, in that one required by the doer life and by the seer (contemplative) life, and what consummation of his soul he reached at, and how much grace he enjoyed while still alive, it is superfluous to say. This is because these things can be easily found out from his writings.

This is for in the Word XXIII he says: "As he who doesn't see with his eyes the sun, he won't be able to describe the sunlight to somebody only by hearing about it, likewise is him who hasn't tasted with his soul the sweetness of the spiritual deeds". And in the Word XXVI, he says: "By trying for a long time the things from the right side and those form the left side and by tasting on myself for many times in these two ways and by receiving countless wounds and by being found worthy of hiddenly receiving many helps, I have earned an experience of many years and I have learnt these by trying them, by the gif from God". And in the Word XV, he says: "I have written these for my remembrance and for everyone who read this writing, as I received from studying the Scriptures and out of true mouths, and a little, out of the experience itself".

Do you see how he tries everything before writing about them, and how he was a teacher with the deed of the thing taught by him. His teaching truly is godlike, by setting as foundation the higher virtue, and getting up to the peak of the consummation. That's why the teacher too is godlike and high and consummate. This is for he tries the things he learnt from the godlike grace, and so he taught and wrote them. By not being the blesses one able to lock with the silence the powerful and all-sweet work of the grace within himself, he explained it cloudier in some places and more limpidly in other places, by saying: "Often as I was writing those, my fingers stop on the paper and I was unable to endure the pleasure occurring within my heart, one that silenced my senses".

But we owe also to wonder about this virtue of this man: while separated from all people, he was being sweetened with the love for them, as himself confesses. This is for he says: "My beloved ones, because I have made on myself crazy, I do not stand to keep my secret in silence, but I make myself crazy (he talks here as the Saint Apostle did: "I have made myself crazy by praising on myself" (1 Cor. 11: 11), for the benefit of the brothers. This is for this is the true love, that one that cannot stand to keep a secret from its brothers". This is for he was overflowing waves of wisdom even from wilderness, which he was abundantly watering the brothers' souls, by ceaselessly springing wisdom to them.

An anonymous[8], by telling briefly the things referring to Isaac, he says these words: "By being teacher to the monks and savior shore to everyone, he wrote four books of much beauty ibn speaking".

The same one talks also about the times which Isaac live in: "This saint lives at the beginning of the seventh thousand of years since the creation of the world". These ones are in accordance to what Isaac says: "You are dogmatizing against the things existing from six thousands of years". From here is obvious that when he wrote have passed six thousands of years

[8] "These ones are preserved in the codices form the Library of Vatican, written in Arab and Syriac, in the Introduction of the four books of Isaac, which I am going to speak about further on. These ones have been translated in Latin by the Syrian Maronite Assemani. Out of these I have selected those said about Isaac".

since the world has been created. But we can find out in more details from His epistle sent to the wonderful Simeon. This is for he lived for seventy-five years, or since the year 4 of Emperor Justin the Old, who were in the year 521 since Savior Christ, until the year fifteen of Emperor Mauritius, namely A.D. 596[9]. And because Simeon was very young when he embraced the living on a pillar, and Isaac appears as an adviser in his epistle and he presents Simeon the first rules of the appeasement life[10], so Isaac sent him his epistle before Simeon climbed on that pillar, out of this one can easily see that Abba Isaac was around the year 534 or the godlike oikonomia, in the prime of his life, being him consummate not only in his virtue but also in his age. So, even if he reached a very old age, he moved to the tents, without any doubt, before A.D. 600.

Some people mistakenly reckoned that our Isaa is that whose life was describes by one among saints Gregory the Dialogue[11]. The whole his life, our Issac moved from his country to monastery, from monastery to wilderness, and from wilderness to Nineveh and, from here, to wilderness again. While that one moved from East to West, namely from Syria to Italy, at Spoleto. And we also can sharply distinguish between the two men from the epistle sent to Simeon. The Dialogue says that his Isaac came to Italy without his disciples knowing about that, and he changed his name during the first years of the Goths' rule, which must be understood as close to A.D. 541, when Totilas started to rule Italy, and he lived until the last years, namely until 553, when Teios was killed and Italy got rid of the Goths' rule. This Isaac hid his real name and he was expose only by the unclean ghost he cast out of somebody. So, it seems untrue, or it is even impossible to admit, that during those years, Simeon, who lived as a monk in the wonderful mountain from near Antioch, to would have written to Isaac in Spoleto, where Isaac was unknown, and Isaac to would have answered Simeon. These things, concerning Isaac. And in the followings, we are going to talk about his writings.

About the fact that the true father of these rules of the ascesis, published now, this Isaac confesses, together with the two codices which we own, and the old codex preserved in Lavra of our pious father Sava, from Palestine (that one could have been written by our pious father Abraham and Patrik, and that was read by the all-blessed Patriarch, as I said, for many times, while he was living there; then there is that one from Corfu City, from the Monastery of the Saint Martyr Ecaterina, one seen by myself; likewise, that one from the Cesarian Library[12]. The title of this one is the following: "Of the One Among Saint Our Father Abba Isaac the Syrian, the Hermit, Who Was Bishop of the Loving of God City of Nineveh, Words about Ascesis, Interpreted by Our Pious Fathers, Abba Patrik and Abba Abraham, Philosophers and Hesychasts from the Lavra of the One among Saints Our Father Sava. The Word Comprised by It are 87 in Number".

Then there is that one too, from the Coisliniana Library, bearing the name of Isaac the Syrian, the hermit and the Bishop of Ninevah, and comprising 92 Words, which are comprised among also scholia from the words of form the writings of: Anastasius, Antioch, Anthony, Arsenius, Athanasius, Barsanuphius, Basil, the Bulgarian (Theophylact), Abba Cario, the Carpathian, John Chrysostom, John Climacus, Copris, Cyril, Diadochus, Dorotheos, Ephraem, Isaiah, Evagrius, Gregory the Theologian, Hesychius, John the Monk, Josephus, Isidoros, Abba Longinus, Makarios, Mark, Maximos, Nilus, Abba Nisterus, Abba Peter, Peter of Alexandria, Poemen, Abba Sisoes, Simeon, Thalassius, Theodor Nonus, Zigabenos, and Zosimus[13]. This is a truly precious codex, and if it was available to me, it would be very useful to the present edition. We have also to mention the codices from the Library of the Vatican, no. 23, 101, 505, and 737, each of them containing 98 Words, translated from Syriac to Grek by Patrik and Abraham, monks from Saint Sava Monastery[14]. The catalogue of the manuscripts form England describes 99 Words about Ascesis, translated in Greek by Abraham and Isaac (Patrik is wrongly called as Isaac or a Cave), monks form Saint Sava Monastery[15]. It also mentions three other writings belonging to the same [12] "I saw that one a few months ago, and I compered back then some of the interpretations with those form this edition and I found them as identical. I was impeded from doing a thorough comparison by the careful librarian Kollar".

[13] "This one is mentioned by Montfaucon, Biblioteca graeca, the book 5, chapter 41, p. 471".

Isaac, written in Syriac, and preserved in Codex 72 from Bodleian Library[16].

And Ebed Iesha writes in the catalogue of the Chaldean books: "Issac the Ninevite composed seven tomes about the ruling of the ghost, about the godlike mysteries, about judgments, and about living"[17]. We cannot tell if that is another Issac than our Isaac, or if there were other writings belonging to our Issac. We cannot tell if the tomes on the godlike mysteries and on the judgment are lost, or if they are preserved somewhere and we do not know where. The Words on the rule of the ghost, namely on the soul, may be the same with the Words 56, 57, and 59 from another edition, while the Words about living may be the same with the Words 1, 9, and 10, about the monastic living, from the present edition.

Mentioning about these seven tomes, Assemani says in "Bibliotheca orientalis" composed by him: "We reckon that one of these tomes was written in Syrian, and four other books, immediately after, in Arabic". He presents, in the first place, the four books from the Syrian, Arab, and Greek Codices, from the Vatican Library, studies by him. Among those ones, from the first one he gives 28 titles of Words, together with their beginnings: from the second one 45, from the third one 44, and from the fourth one 25 (he mentioned also which ones are preserved only in Arabic, or only in Syrian, or only in Greek). Then he speaks about the tome, saying: "In the Library of the Maronite Gymnasium (from Rome) there is a manuscript divided in nineteen writings, whose title is: "Common books for all nations, or about the cause of all causes". It beginning is: "You eternal God, You Who are from eternity without beginning and always unchangeable". This sufficiently shows that that is the product of a certain Isaac, Bishop of Edessa, and not of the Bishop of Nineveh.

And the 138 Words from the four books (I mean also their t9itles and beginnings), some of them are the same with these edited now, and others are part of these. Others have the same title, but a different beginning; other, on the opposite; and others seem to totally differ.

[17] "Idem, ibid".

By indicating here the four mentioned books, we have placed them at the end of the book[18]. We have given in Greek the titles and the beginning of the Words reckoned as inedited here, by mentioning also the codices comprising them; at each Word from those given in the present edition, we have noted aside also the identical one from the four books. Thus, everybody can recognize the edited and inedited Words belonging to our Pious Isaac[19].

But neither in the Greek codices mentioned before the number of the Words is the same in all of them. In some of them this number is bigger, as this from the present edition. Bu the quantity of the content of the Words can be the same in all of them, only the numbers being inequal, because of different division. Also, between the two codices of ours the number of the Words is inequal, but not their content, as one can see out of the numbers given in the list from the beginning of the work and out of the footnotes. The inequal division comes from the fact that some of the Words contain chapters, questions, answers, and prayers, and form the fact that one and the same often contains diverse themes and it is composed of several Words. This is for in the library of the fathers[20] too, there are some very large Words edited only in Latin (form that one we took in the present book some fragments in Latin). There one can see also a book about despising the world, which is divided in 53 chapters and it is wrongly attributed to Saint Isaac the Syrian, the presbyter from Antioch. This Issac lived under the rule of Emperor Leon the Great, who took the scepter in the year 457 and who died in the year 474. In the present edition this Word is composes of 15 Words[21]. And enough about these.

The two codices available to us, were written by an ancient hand from the same century and they were contemporary to that one preserved in the Cesarian Library, as one can see by comparing the letters and the paper. One of them belonged to His Eminence Neophyte Metropolitan of Arta, [18] We think that that is about the titles placed after the Foreword, which follow after this preface wrote by Nicephorus Theotokis.

[19] We are not going to give this dialogue of titles from the Edition made by Theotokis, because we reckon that the problem of the identity of the Words from the diverse codices remains to be accomplished by him who will undertake a critical edition of the work of Saint Isaac.

[21] Namely: Word 23, and the list is: 5, 56, 21, 11, 22, 13, 24, 85, 27, 46, 17, 72, and 18".

who left the metropolitanate and dies in ascesis, not so long ago, in Athos, and who gave this codex to the all-taught teacher, Pious Neophyte, the hiero-deacon from Peloponnese; the second codex belonged to all-taught predicator Agapius, the protos of the Saint Nicholas Church from Galata, and I do not know where he obtained from. I uses the second one, that one belonging to Agapius, as a prototype, and from the first one I noted some differences of small importance. In this one is placed, before Isaac words, also the Foreword about silence and quietude, which is given in Neophyte's manuscript only an abstract written by a newer hand, and in the common dialect.

The content of this Foreword (which was printed here for it offers some short data on Isaac) it is childish, and the Word is prolix and the use of the quotes from the Holy Scripture is inappropriate. Its composition lacks the skillfulness, and it follows a disordered listing, which the author strives to cover it up by adding a vain-speaking, attempting to reconcile the irreconcilable thing[22].

Who could be this one: Abraham or Patrik? This is for it seems very plausible that they who translated Isaac's writings they also wanted to praise him. Besides, itself the translation of the Words we reckon it as on a very low level, maybe done verbatim and totally disregarding the grammar rules. From here comes also the big lack of clarity of the Words. Experiencing difficulties to understand them, we have attempted, not by an arbitrary will but with the approval from His Beatitude Patriarch, to solve that lack of clarity as much as possible, by adding notes, and by correcting not a few obvious and easy to fix mistakes[23].

But because in the two codices of ours there is not the same chaining of the Words and there is a different order in the [22] It might be that Theotokis' appreciations are too harsh. But it is right that: the Word eposes in a too prolix manner the theme of the silence. That's why are not going to give in this volume that Foreword. A contrary, the text printed in the year 1819 at Neamț, and the newer one, typed, they give this Foreword and not that belonging to Nicephorus Theotokis.

[23] The corrections made by Nicephorus Theotokis in notes, being too few, we have added many more in our translation. He couldn't correct the Greek text that he was publishing according to manuscripts. We have been able to correct in the Romanian text the unclean meanings which are very frequent in the Greek text. We have given the notes belonging to Nicephorus Theotokis between quotations marks, while ours not. Some of the notes belonging to Nicephorus Theotokis give the version, sometimes different, of the codex he received from Neophyte of Arta. The text the manuscript received from Agapius, as Theotokis confesses himself.

Cesarean codex too, and there is a different order in the books published by Assemani, and even in the same ones there are also mixed the question-answer chapters and the Epistles, we decided to compose the present book in a different manner, so that the Words somewhat close to other to follow to those ones. But in the prototype, we have made no change either in division, or in titles, but we have called all of them as Words, except the Epistle. But one must know that neither the second one nor the seventh one are written by our Isaac, as Assemani confesses too. But the first one if the twentieth, the another is the eighth one of Saint John Sava the Monk, born at Nineveh and living around the middle of the sixth century of the oikonomia into body, in the monastery called Dilaiti[24], from beyond Tiger.

Therefore, by God called and pious fathers (though Isaac's urges are characteristic and appropriate especially to us), you who have taken on your shoulders the gentle yoke of Christ, with spiritual love, in the coenobitic communities from Palestine and from Mount Sinai and in the great monasteries and hermitages and reclusories from Athos and from elsewhere, and you have decided to appease on yourselves and to bear the angelic live into your bodies, you who have touched the first steps of that ladder that climbs to heavens, and you who have touched the middle of that ladder, and you who have reached the highest step of that ladder, the ones from now and the ones from after those – you have this holy book as bets adviser in the whole work of the ascesis. This is for this book explains very well the true rejection of the world and from the things from within world, the knowledge of all the temptations coming from him who wages war to us, the detailed description of the much-intertwined passions, the prayer of the mind and the souly ascension, the consummation into ascesis and into appeasement and, shortly speaking, all the seer and doer virtues. This book explains in details the most secret states and works of the monastic living, which are presented cleanly and they are made known only by experience. By reading this book, you ask for rich rewards for him who was the cause of this edition: His Beatitude Patriarch Ephraem. And to me (if I contributed with something), it will be enough what is usually said about us: “May God forgive him”.

[24] We haven't been able to identify the original name, neither and eventual English translation, so that we have transliterated the name according to the source text in Romanian.

But once I have reached here, I won’t hesitate, by being forced by the duty for telling the truth, to mention what is worthy to say and to mention. Nectarios and Dositheos and Hrisant the forever remembered Patriarchs of the Holy City of Jerusalem, they yore composed many books too, and so they presented very useful teachings belonging to those who taught rightly the word of the truth, and powerful weapons against those who deviated from the right-faith. His Beatitude Ephraem, by following their example as a true descendant of theirs, he also published quite a few savior books; and I know that he is going to publish other books as well.

So, they who bring their gift to the All-Holy and of-God-receiving Tomb, they are not only followers of the example of the old and pious Christians who saved and gathered for Jerusalem their savings on a Saturday (1 Cor. 16: 2), but they are also defenders of those all-honored Places, being done the fulfilling of the piousness of the believers, the all-clear proof of the divine-human oikonomia of the Word, Dog, and Man, and the praise and the shininess of the nation of the right-believers, but also defenders of the orphans and of the widows from there, and of the poor, and upholders of many souls menaced by shortcoming and needs, upheld by their piousness and delivered by the help granted them by the of-Life-receiver-Tomb. And above all of these they showed themselves as upholders and benefactors of the general accomplishment of the Church. This is for by their gift, Their Beatitudes Patriarch publish books which can be useful to all every right-believer soul. Therefore, ones like these, they are going to be, obviously and doubtlessly, be imparted with the thousandfold rewards of the Great Rewarder. This is for they bring Him a consummate, holy, well-pleasant, and fruitful gift[25].

Word I

About Rejection and about the Monastic Living

The fear of God is the beginning of the virtue. And about it they say that it is the fruit of the faith and it sown within heart when the mind parts with the scattering within world, by gathering its thoughts - which wander because of the scattering - into the cogitation at the future resettlement[27]. This is for nothing helps somebody better than setting the foundation of the virtue, that keeping on himself stranger to the things of the life and remaining in the law of the light of those holy and straight paths, which the Psalmist mentioned, into Ghost. This is because there hardly is a man able to bear this honor[28], or maybe there isn't somebody everywhere, even if he would be equal to the angels. And this is because of quickly receiving the change, as somebody would say.

The beginning of the way of the life consists of the mind cogitating at the word of God and to live in poverty. This is for the watering with these words help to consummation into poverty. Or the escape provided by the cogitation at the words of God it will help you to achieve the poverty. And achieving the poverty will give you resting, so that you will achieve the cogitation at the words of God. And these two will help you climbing, in a short time, the steps of the entire building of the virtues.

No one can come closer to God except by getting far from the world. And I call as getting far from the world not the getting out with the body, but the getting far from the world's things. This virtue consists of resting or emptying the thought of the world's things. This is because the heart cannot get appeased, neither can the heart be delivered of imaginings, as long as the senses work; neither the bodily passions stay non-working nor the evil thoughts cease except in wilderness. But until the soul achieves the drunkenness of the faith in God, by receiving the [27] Restoration in the state had by mind at the beginning.

[28] He who received honors from people he will hardly be able to escape the traps of the pride. That's why the Master of everybody deplores him who is praised by people, by saying: "Woe to you, when all the people will speak well about you".

power of feeling it, that soul won't be able to heal the weakness of his senses[29], neither will that soul be able to powerfully step over the content of the seen things, which is a separating wall in front of the inward realities. Neither can be felt before that the rational fruit of the self-control. And shunning from sins it is the fruit of both of those. Without the first one there cannot be the second one too; and when the second one steps rightly, there it is controlled the third one too[30].

When the grace gets multiplied within man, then, by aspiring to righteousness, he easily despises the fear of death[31], and his soul urges him to endure the trouble for the fear of God[32]. And all the things which can harm the body and all the things unexpectedly coming upon the nature and are added as suffering, they are reckoned as nothing in the eye of the soul, in comparison to those realities hoped even since now.

It will be impossible to us to know the truth, if there don't come upon us the temptations out of lenience[33]. And if one receives this entrustment, he will understand how much taking-of-care God has for man and that there is no man not being under His taking-of-care; and that God's taking-of-care looks in a luminous manner especially at them who search for Him and He bears their suffering for Him as He would point His finger at them.

But when the lack of the grace gets multiplied within man, then the things opposite to the things mentioned by us they will be close to that man. Then the knowledge will be bigger than the faith, because of the inquiring, and that man won't trust God in anything. One like this is under them who

[29] The drunkenness of the faith is a power from God, a power that overwhelms the tendency of the senses towards the external realities, by giving the soul power to see and to attach on himself to the inward realities and, through those, to God.

[30] "The father maybe tells this: that out of the getting far from the world and out of the drunkenness of the faith it comes the shunning of sins. This means that they who part with the world and who are filled up with faith, they will escape the snares of the sin. The first one, he says, is the separation from the world; the second one is the drunkenness of the faith; the third one is the self-control. He also adds that: without the separation from the world nobody can be filled up with faith. And within that soul who has been filled up by with faith, the self-control is kept under control by the fear of God".

[31] The aspiration to "righteousness" is that aspiration to all virtues. When the grace of God is being multiplied within man, the man despises the fear of death, in his fiery striving for achieving the virtues.

[32] The fear of God strengthens the man against the fear of death.

[33] Out of the lenience of God for our strengthening.

aim their arrows at him, during the moonless night, and he is stalked about those ones.

The fear of God is the beginning of the true life of the man. But this one cannot persist within soul together with the scattering. This is for the heart will part with the sweetness of God when serving to the senses. This is for the meanings of the inward realities are impeded by senses, which should serve them.

The doubt of the heart brings fear to the soul. And the faith can strengthen the decision even at the time of cutting off the limbs. As long as the body's lust overwhelms within you, you won't be able to achieve the good daring and the lack of fear towards the many resistances rising in your way towards the desired One.

He who lusts for honor he won't be able to escape the traps of the sadness. This is for there is not man in the middle of the changing things, who does not receive in his cogitation the changing of the present things. While the lust is a poison to the senses, let be silent them who say that the guard the peace of their mind together with the scattering.

Wise is not him who says that into toil and in the time of the fight and of the war cease the ugly thoughts within him, but wise is him who in the truth of his heart he wises up the sight of his mind, in order this mind not to shamelessly look at the debauched thoughts. That one, into the decency of his conscience, even when he confesses through the look of his eyes what belong to the faith, the shame still hangs over as a curtain over the hidden place of the thoughts. This one guards his righteousness as a wise virgin, through his faith into Christ. Nothing is so appropriate to remove from the soul the thoughts of the debauchery which dominated the soul before, and to banish away the awakened memories moving through his body and igniting the flame of the disturbance, as there is the diving into the desire of the learning and of the walking on the traces of the deep of the meanings of the godlike Scriptures. When the thoughts will be sunk into the sweetness of the searching for the wisdom gathered into the treasuries of the words, with the decision to wither up from within them what they have as appearances, the man will leave behind the world and he will forget about all the things from within world and he will erase from his soul all the memories which bring the images, and often even the thought of the usual natural needs. And the soul himself will persevere in this getting beyond himself in the answers coming from the great mystery of the Scriptures[34].

But even if the mind floats at the surface of the waters, namely on of the sea of the godlike Scriptures, and the mind cannot sink its understanding into the entire depth of this sea, in order to understand all the treasures from its deep, it will suffice to the mind even a research done with longing, in order to tie up its thoughts powerfully into the sole thought of the wondering, in order to impede them to run towards the body's nature, as said somebody among the wisemen into the godlike things. This is because the heart id delicate and it cannot endure the evilness coming from those whoa re outside and from the wars from inside. And you know that the evil thought presses heavy[35]. And if the heart doesn't occupy on itself with the knowledge[36], it won't be able to endure the disturbance caused by the body's urge. And as the weight of the burden on one hand of the scale it will quickly attracts the needle's leaning, and it won't obey the wind's need, likewise the shameful thing and the fear they will attract the cogitation. And as accepting the shameful thing and the fear become to the mind, on their measure, a cause for relentless wandering, and now the needle of the scales' arm, by getting disturbed, it moves from here to there, likewise the self-control increases on the measure of the removal of the fear form the heart.

Finally, as both sides of the scales are weighed with a bigger wight and so the scales won't wobble under the blowing of the wind, likewise the mind weighed under the fear of God and under the shame won't be moved easily by those who shake it[37]. And to the extent of receiving the fear within mind, to the same extent the mind will be overtaken by motion and change.

[34] Saint Issac proved to be a great poet in expressing his thoughts. The Scripture's words have at surface the pleasant moisture of the juicy countenances of the things which serve as images to some dry incorporeal meanings. The min passes from ecstasy to ecstasy, as there occur answers to the mind, and new happenings into the endless sea of meanings of the Scripture's words.

[35] The evil, envious, full or worries, lusting for pleasures thought, it is difficult to be endured, and it is difficult too to be chased away. Such a thought is relentless. Such a thoughts requires to be fulfilled. And by being fulfilled it will receive a new power.

[36] The knowledge related to the godlike meanings of the Scriptures.

[37] This text has some obscurities. In the first place, the shame and the fear disturb the mind, then they make the mind steadfast. Probably, in the first place was about "the shameful thing" and about the fear of death; and here is about the sentiment of shame and about the fear of God. Further on, it will again be about the shameful thing and the fear of death.

Get yourself wise and set as base for your travel the fear of God, and in a few days, you will resettle on yourself at the gate of the Kingdom, without detours on your way.

In all the things which you come across with in the Scriptures, you search for the purpose of the word, in order you to deepen into yourself, and you to understand with great understanding the deep of the meaning of the saints who, by being guided and enlightened in their life by the godlike grace, they always feel a certain ray advancing in the middle of the written things and that illuminated before their understanding, so that they can discern between the simple words and the meaning contained by those words, with much understanding, into the understanding of their soul.

To that man who reads with an empty mind the things contained in the difficult verses, his heart will be emptied and it will be quenched from within his heart the godlike power that bestows to the heart the sweetest tasting, in the wonderful understanding of the soul. Anyone uses to run towards what he is kindred with. That's why also that soul having fellowship with the Ghost, when such a soul hears some word that has within hidden a godlike power, it will fierily attract its content. Not any man is wakened up by a thing that is said spiritually and that has hidden in it a power, so that that man to wonder about that word. The word about virtue needs a heart that rests from the realities belonging to the earth and from the occupations with those. The things of the virtue do not wake up the thoughts of that man whose cogitation toils with the care for the passing things, in order him to desire them, to search for them, and to try to earn them.

The detachment from the bodily things take place before the birth of the relation with God, though at some people, in the oikonomia of the grace, this connection often precedes that detachment, like a desire hiding another desire. The rule of the oikonomia differs from the usual rule from among people. But you guard the usual rule. If the grace precedes within you, you will know that this is his will. And if not, you continue climbing towards the top of the spiritual tower, on the way traveled by all people, which the climbed on, according to the rule.

Everything one works is contemplation and he fulfills it through commandment for it, it is totally unseen by the body's eyes. And everyone working with the deed a joined thing, because the commandment of the deed, despite of being one, it needs both of them: contemplation and deed, due to the bodily and incorporeal realities. But the joining of the two one, it is one.

The deeds taking care of cleanness, they do not remove the memory of the past mistakes, but they will remove form the mind the memory of the sadness, and from here forwards, the coming of the memory into cogitation it will be useful.

The soul's greediness for getting rich in virtue it overwhelms the seen lust of the together-yoked body.

The measure is the adornment of everything. This is because, without measure, even the things reckoned as good they will be damaging.

Do you want to have fellowship (communion) with God in your mind, in achieving that feeling of the pleasure that is not enslaved by senses? - pursuit the mercy that, when it is within you, it will take within you the image of that Holy Beauty which you have become alike to. The most comprising trait of the mercy plants within you, without the mediation of a certain time, in addition to the union into glory and shininess, also the impartation with godhead.

The spiritual union is an unsealed memory burning within your heart with a fiery longing, by taking the power of the connection out of persevering near to commandments, not by wrongly employing those, neither naturally. This is for within them there is the life-give-food for strengthening the souly sight. Through that it comes within our heart the first kidnapping, in order our heart to close its twofold senses: the bodily senses and the soul senses.

There is not other path towards the spiritual live, that paints the unseen image, except that starting with the mercy, as our Lord told us. That leads towards the consummate Father. This is for he commanded so to them who obey Him, to place the mercy as foundation[38].

Other is the word of the deed and other is the beautiful word. And without trying the things the wisdom won't know how to adorn its words and how to speak the truth, because of not knowing the truth. Neither could one unveil the virtue if he has never experienced it. The word out of deed is a treasury of the hope, while the non-doing wisdom is a repository of shame.

[38] "Where did the Lord command? In: "be yourselves merciful, as your Father is merciful" (Lk. 6: 36) and in: "If you want to be consummate, go, sell your wealth and give it to the poor and you will have a treasure in heavens, and, by coming, follow Me" (Mt. 19: 21) and in: "Be therefore consummate, as your Father in heavens is consummate" (Mt. 5: 41).

As an artist paints the water on the walls but he cannot quench his thirst with that image of the water, and like a man having nice dreams, likewise is the non-doer word. He who talks out of his experience about virtue, he shares it to the listener as somebody shares the money he earned.

And he who sows the teaching our of the things he earned, in the ears of them who listen to him, he daringly opens his mouth towards his spiritual sons, as the old James who told to Joseph: "Lo, I have given you a bigger share than those of the brothers; it is that share that I took with my sword and with my bow from Amorites" (Gen. 48: 22).

Each man having a defiled life he lusts for the temporary life. And such a man is lacking the knowledge. Well said someone that the fear of death saddens that man who is burdened by his conscience; and he who has within himself the good witness he desired the death as the life. Do not reckon as true wiseman him who enslaves his cogitation to this life, because of his cowardice and fear. You reckon that all the good and the ab things happening to the body are like some dreams. This is for not only at the time of your death you will be untied of them, but often even before your death they forsake you and they leave. But reckon those which have any partaking with your soul as being your riches in this life and that they will go with you in the future life[39]. And if they are good, you give thanks to God in your thought, and if they are evil, get sad and sigh and search for being delivered of them while you still are into your body. Any good thing you have it working within you, you keep it hidden. And the baptism and the faith have become mediators to you towards this good, for through them you have been called by our Lord Jesus Christ to His good deeds, together with the Fathers and with the Holy Ghost Whom are due the glory, the honor, the thanks, and the worshipping, forever and ever. Amen.

[39] Thew things transforming your soul according to their image in this life and which will belong to the soul after death too. The evil things will make your soul forever lacking God, while the good things will keep your soul forever good and united with God Who is the spring of the kindness.

Word II

About the Rejection of the World and about the Restraining from the Daring towards the People

When we want to run away from the world and to become strangers to the worldly things, nothing separates us so much from the world and nothing kills so much the passions from within us and nothing wakes up us and reinvigorates us so much towards the spiritual things, as the crying and the pain of the heart do, joined with the right-reckoning. This is for the face of the shy one takes as example the face of the Loved One. And again, nothing makes us spending so much time within world with the drunkards and with the profligates, and nothing separates us so much from the treasuries of the wisdom and of the knowledge of the mysteries of God, as the laughter and the scattering, joined with the daring. These are the occupations of the devil of the fornication.

So, because I have tested your love for wisdom, I beg you, my beloved, with love, to guard yourself against the temptation from the enemy, and you to avoid cooling down your soul by uttering unrestraint jokes, because that takes your souls off the warmth of the love for Christ Who has tasted for you gall on the wood of the Cross, and instead of the sweetness and of the daring according to God, you to fill your soul up with many imaginings and to enslave your soul, still being you awake, but also sleeping, to the indecent dreams whose stench the angels can't stand, and so you to become cause for falling to others, and spear to yourself. Therefore, force on yourself to follow the example of Christ, so that the fire He throw within you to burn even stronger[40], a fire which all the world's movements are uprooted by, world's movements which kill the new man and which make dirty the courts of the strong and holy Lord. This is for I am daring to say, according to Saint Paul, that "we are the church of God" (1 Cor. 3: 16). Let's therefore clean up His church, as He is clean too, so that he will desire to dwell within it. Let's sanctify it as He is saint too. Let's adorn it with all the [40] It is worthy to be notice this connection made by Saint Isaac between humbleness and the fire of the love. He who loves he doesn't know about himself, likewise the humble one. On the opposite, the proud one doesn't know except about himself, and therefore he is unloving.

good and honored deeds. Let's burn inside it the incense of the resting of His will, through the clean and out of heart prayer, that cannot be achieved while being imparted with the ceaseless worldly movements. And so, the cloud of the His glory will overshadow within our soul, and the light of His glory will shine within our heart. And so all of them who inhabit the tent of God will be filled up with joy and gladness. And they who are daring and shameless will be deprived of the flame of the Holy Ghost.

So, you always condemn on yourself, brother. And say: "Woe to me, my soul, that your detachment from the body has come nigh. Why do you enjoy the things which you are going to leave today and which sight you are going to miss forever? Take heed at the things from ahead, and you think at your deeds, how and which are with you and whom you have spent the days of your life with, or who have received the labor of your plowing, and whom you have make glad in your arena, so that to come out and welcome you in the time of your exit. Whom have you delighted with your running, so that you will find resting at his shore? For whose sake you have been living in ascesis, so that you to reach him into joy? Whom have you gained as your friend in the age to come, so that him to welcome you at the time of your exit? What field you have worked and who will pay you at the sunset, namely at the separation from your body?

Examine on yourself, (soul), and see what sine your part will be at, and if you have been working to the end in that field that sprout out bitterness to them who work it, and you shout out with pain and with sigh towards God Who is resting above your sacrifices and burnt offerings. Let's painful words gush out of your mouth, which to delight the holy angels. Let your cheeks take the color of the crying, so that the Holy Ghost to rest within you and Him to wash you up of the defilements of your evilness. You reconcile the Lord with your tears, so that He will come to you. You call Marta and Mary to teach you the words of the crying. You shout out towards the Lord?

Prayer[41]

Lord Jesus Christ, our God Who cried for Lazarus and Who shed tears of sadness on him, receive the tears of my bitterness. Heal with Your sufferings my passions. Heal with Your wound my wounds. Clean up with Your blood my blood and mix withing my body the fragrance of Your life-make-body. Let the gall which Your enemies watered you to sweeten my soul by delivering my soul from the bitterness which my enemy has watered me with. Let you body stretched on the wood of the cross to wing up my mind towards You, for it is draw downwards by the devils. Let Your head that You leaned downwards on the cross to raise up my head that is slapped by enemies. Let your hands, nailed on the cross by disbelievers, to raise me up towards You, out of the perdition pit, as Your all-holy mouth promised us. Let Your gave that received hits and spitting from the cursed one, to fill up with shininess my face defiled by lawlessness. Let Your soul, that, while You was on the cross, You have surrendered it to Your Father, to guide me towards You by Your grace. I do not have a pained heart towards my searching, I do not have repentance either pricking of the heart, which bring the sons back to their inheritance. I do not have, Master, comforting tears. My mind has been darkened by the things of this world and it cannot look at You into pain. My heart has been cooled down by the multitude of the temptations and it cannot get warm by the tears of the love for You. But, Lord Jesus Christ, God, the Treasurer of the good things, bestow me whole repentance and pained heart, so that I go out with the whole my soul searching for You. This is because without You I will stray myself away from all good. Therefore, You the Kind One, bestow me Your grace. Let Your Father Who gave You birth out of His bosoms, timelessly and eternally, to renew within me the icon of Your image. I have forsaken Youl; You don't forsake me! I have left You; come out and search for me and take me to Your pastures, and count me up among the sheep of Your chosen flock, and feed me up with the greenery of Your godlike mysteries, so that my heart to become their dwelling place and my heart to see in itself the shininess of Your unveilings, that is the comforting and the reinvigoration of those who have been toiling for You in troubles and in all sorts of hardships! May us too be found worthy of this shininess by the grace and by the love for people of our Savior Jesus Christ! Amen.

Word III

About the Withdrawal into Wilderness. And that We Must not Fear, but We Must Teach Our Heart on the Trust in God and We to Dare with Doubtless Faith, as Ones Who Have God as Our Upholder and Guardian

If you ever feel that you are prepared for your withdrawal into loneliness, into the kingdom of the freedom, whose tasks are easy, let not the thought of your fear pushing you, as it usually does, in all sorts of changes and twisting of your thoughts, but rather be trustful that your Guardian is with you, and you willingly entrust on yourself into your wisdom, that you and the whole creation are under the sole Master Who moves and shakes and tames and organizes all the things with a sole approval; and that no together-servant can harm any of His together-servants without the decision of Him Who takes care of and governs everything. And stand up immediately and dare. This is for, despite some people were given approval on some things, they haven't been given approval in all things. This is for neither the devils nor the deadly wild beasts, neither the people mastered by evilness could accomplish their will started towards destruction and killing, if the will of Him Who governs all the things doesn't allow them, and He give them a certain place to work. This is for He doesn't allow their freedom to come to the whole work. This is because if it was differently, nobody would be able to live. Our Lord doesn't allow the power of the evils and of the people to come close to His creation and to accomplish their will in it.

That's why, tell always to your soul: "I have a Guardian Who guards me and no creature can appear to me without His commandment". Believe truly that they don't dare even to show themselves to your eyer and to make their threats be heard by your ears. And if they were allowed from above, form heavens, they would not need any word or any words and their work would fulfill their will.

And says again: "If it was the will of my Master that the evil ones to take mastery upon His creature, I wouldn't resist that for I do not want to hinder His will". And thus, in your trials, fill yourself up with joy, as one who know and who fully feel that the will of our Lord governs you and guides you. Therefore, lean your heart on your trust into the Lord and do not fear either the fear of the night or the arrow flying during the day, "for the faith of the righteous, he says, that into God, it tames the wild beats as on some sheep" (Hebr. 11: 33).

But I am not righteous, he says, so that I could be able to trust God. But you have truly gone out for working the righteousness, in this full of troubles wilderness and that's why you have become obedient to God's will. Therefore, you will toil vainly by enduring those toils, if you don't bring your trouble to God as sacrifice of our love. This is because God doesn't want our toil for itself. This understanding is shown by all of them who love God, by troubling on themselves for their love for Him. This is for they who want to live into Christ Jesus into the fear of God, they will choose the trouble and they will endure the persecution. And He will give them the power to know His hidden treasuries.

About the Progress Coming out of Temptations to Them Who Endure Them with Gratitude and Manhood

This is for somebody among saints said, that there was a certain old man honored among the hermits and I once went to see him and I was sad because of my temptations. And the old man was sick and lying down. And after I bowed before him, I sat next to him and I told him: "Pray for me, father, because I am being troubled by the devils' temptations". And that one opened his eyes and looked at me and he told me: "My son, you are too young and God doesn't let loose the temptations upon you". And I told him: "I am young, but I suffer the temptations of gown up men". That one told me again: "God will make you wise". And I told him: "How will Him make me wise, because I taste the death daily". That one told me again: "God loves you, shut up. God will give you His gift" (This was a war waged during sleep). Then he said again: "Know, my son, that I waged war to the devils for thirty years and until I didn't pass the twentieth, I wasn't helped at all. And after I succeeded in passing over the fifth year (after the twenty years mentioned), I started to find resting. And after one more year, (the resting) multiplied. And after the seventh year passed too (after the twenty), and the eighth year came, it was multiplied even more.

And after the thirtieth year passes as well and came to an end, the resting strengthened so much than I didn't know even the measure it reached at". And he added: "If I stand up to my ministration (liturgy), I will be allowed to serve a sole glory, and if I tarry to the other ones for three days, I will be with God into kidnapping and I won't feel the tiredness at all". Lo what an endless resting was born by working for a long time.

Guarding the Tongue not Only that Wakes the Mind Up towards God, but It also Helps to Restraint

There was somebody among the fathers who ate twice a week. And he told us: "On that day which I talk to somebody I am not able to keep the canon of my fasting, but I am forced to untie it". And I understood that guarding the tongue not only wakes the mind up towards God, but it hiddenly bestows a great strength for the visible deeds, worked through the body, in order those deeds to be accomplished; and it also lightens up the hidden word, as the fathers said: that the guarding of the mouth wakes up the conscience towards God, when somebody keeps his silence into knowledge.

That saint was very accustomed to the taking vigil during night. This is for he said: "During that night which I stay awake until the morning comes, after singing the psalms I rest myself. And after I wake up, on that day I am like one who no longer is in this world. And earthly thoughts do not enter my heart at all, neither I need the usual canon. And I am in kidnapping for the that whole day.

But one day I ate, because there passed four days since I ate the salt time. Therefore, I stood up from the evening service and I went to eat something, but I stopped in the yard of my monastic cell, because there was very much sun, and I stood like that until the sun rose on the next day and started warming up my face. And only when the sun started burning my face, my mind turned back to me and I saw that there was another day, and I thanked God Who pours so much grace over the man and Who make worthy of so much honor on them who follow Him. This is for only Him is due the glory forever and ever. Amen."

Word IV

About Lusting for the World

True is the word of our Lord, that He said, that one cannot earn the love for God in the same time with lusting for the world, neither it is possible one to achieve the partaking with God (the communion with Him) together with the partaking with the world, nor can one take care of God in the same time with the taking care of the world[42]: This is because when we forsake the things of God for our vain-glory, or often for the needs of our body, many of us lean towards the other side. They declare that they work for the Kingdom of Heavens, but they do not remember the Lord's commandment Who said: "If you have the whole care for the Kingdom of Heavens, I won't deprive you of the things necessary to the seen nature, but they will come to you together with the others"[43]. "Does He take care of the birds of the sky which have no souls, and which are created for you, and won't He take care of you?". By no means. Him who takes care of the spiritual things, or of some of them, the bodily things will be given to him without him taking care of them, when they are necessary to him and at the right time. And him who takes care of the bodily things more than he heeds to, he willingly falls from God too. So, if we strive to take care of the things which we must do for the name of our Lord, He will take care Himself of both kinds of our needs, according to the measure of our ascesis.

Therefore, let's search for the living with God not in the bodily things, while forgetting about our souls, but let's turn all our deeds towards the hope for the future things. This is for, he who once surrendered on himself to working the virtue, due to the love of his soul, and he wants to consummate the work of the virtue, he won't take care again of the bodily things, either he has those or not. Doubtlessly, God often allows that the virtuous ones to be tempted by those and He allows the [42] "Nobody can serve to lords. This I for, he either will hate one and love another; or he will follow one and he will disregard another. One cannot serve God and Mammon" (Mt. 6: 24).

[43] "Ask first for the Kingdom of God and for His righteousness and all of these will be added to you" (Mt. 6: 33).

temptations to raise up against them anywhere. This is for God hits them into their body as He did to Job, and He brings them to poverty and to be rejected by people, and He hits the things they have achieved. But the harm doesn't come close to their soul. It is impossible that when we walk on the way of the righteousness not to be us met by sadness and our body not to suffer of illnesses, of pains, and to remain unmoved, if ww want to live into virtue. That man living according to his will, or in envy, or in the things leading him to the perdition of his soul, or in something else that hurts him, he will be condemned. But when the man walks of the way of the righteousness, and he walks his road towards God and so he gains many by making them like him, if he comes across to something like that, he must not deviate from his way, but he must accept that joyfully and without inquiring about it, and he must thank God for God has sent him that gift, and that he has been found worthy to fall for God into a trial, and for he has been found worthy of being partaker to the sufferings of the prophets, of the apostles, and of the other saints. This is for, those ones too, they endured troubles for the sake of this way, either form people, or from devils, either form their body. This is for those troubles do not come without the approval and without the lenience of God, but they come upon him in order they to become him occasions for righteousness. This is for it is impossible God to make him who wants to be with Him, to work the good things, except by bringing him some trials for the truth. And it will be impossible that this one to become worthy of the God's glory, it he doesn't enter it through temptations; and he won't rejoice of it, without the gift from Christ. This is confessed by Saint Paul, by showing that his thing is so great than he reckoned it as gift (charisma). This is for it is a great thing that somebody is prepared to suffer for his hope into God (Phil. 1: 19). This is for he says: "This was given to us form God, that not only us to believe into Christ, but also us to duffer from Him". Likewise wrote Saint Peter in his Epistle (1 Pt. 3: 14): "When you suffer for righteousness, you are happy for being followers of the sufferings of Christ". Therefore, do not rejoice when you are not tempted, and do not be sad when you are in troubles, and do not reckon these as stranger to the way to God. This is for on the way to God people walk form generation to generation through cross and death. And why do those ones come? In order you to find out that you are outside the way to God and you have left that way. Don't you want to walk of the way of the saints, but you want to prepare for yourself another road, so that you to walk on that road without suffering?

The path to God is the daily cross, because nobody ascended to heavens in comfort (in resting). We know where the way of the resting leads us, and on him who dives into himself God doesn't want him ever to be careless. And he must take care of the truth. Buit he will know also out of this that he is under the care of God, for God always sends him sufferings.

But they who experience many trials they won't ever be forsaken by the taking care of God, so that they to end in the hands of the devils. This will be especially if the kiss the feet of their brothers and fi they cover up their guilts and they hide up those guilts as they would have been theirs. He who wants to be in this world without care and who desires this world, but he also wants to live in virtue, he is stranger to this way. This is for the righteous not only they strive to do good deeds but they also are willingly into a great ascesis for overcoming their temptations, in order their patience to be tested. But that soul that has the fear of God, that soul won't fear anything that harms the body that soul is in This is for that soul hopes in God since now and forever and ever. Amen.

Word V

About the Getting Far from the World and about All the Things Disturbing the Mind

God has given to people much honor through the twofold teaching[44], which God has bestowed the knowledge through to the people and he has opened the door for us to enter to know Him. And if you want to be a faithful witness to the said things, you made on yourself such a witness and you won't perish. And if you want to know this externally, you will have another [44] Out of the twofold teaching given to people by God, one is the natural law, and another is the supra-natural law. The natural law is the power sown in their nature for knowing God through His creatures (Rom. 1: 20). And the supra-natural one is the written law, or revealed through prophets and through our Lord Jesus Christ.

teacher and witness who will guide you without straying in the way of the truth[45].

The disturbed mind cannot get rid of forgetfulness and the wisdom won't open its door to such a mind. He who can see the end which all realities reach at, he won't need a teacher for rejecting the worries of the life. The natural law given to the man at the beginning by God, it can be seen in His creatures. And the written law was added after the disobedience.

He who doesn't get far willingly from the causes of his passions, he will be willingly attracted by sin. And the causes of the sin are these: wine, woman, richness, and wellness of the body. Not because these ones are sins by nature, but because their nature easily leans towards the passions of the sin. That's why the man must zealously guard on himself against those. If you always remember your weakness, you won't transgress the border that you must guard. The people hate poverty; God hates the haughty soul and the scattered mind. The people honor the richness; God honor the humble soul.

When you want to set a beginning to a good work, prepare yourself for the temptations which will be brought upon you and do not doubt about the truth. This is because that is a habit of the enemy when seeing somebody starting with a fiery faith a new living, to bring in his way diverse and fearsome temptations, for, by coming through that to fear, his good decision to get cold and him not to have a fiery zeal before starting that work pleasant to God.

Not because the enemy has such a power (because if it was so, nobody would be able to ever do the good), but the enemy is allowed by God, as we have learnt out of Job's case. So, you prepare yourself to manly meet the temptations brought in the way of the virtues, and then start working the virtues. And if you do not prepare on yourself, in advance, for receiving the temptations, you will abstain from working the virtues.

That man who doubts about God helping him in working the virtues, he will fear even his own shadow, and he will reckon on himself as hungry even in the time of the plenty and he will feel on himself full of disturbance even in the peace which he rejoices of. And he who trusts God he will be strengthened in his heart. And his honor will be shown to all people and his praising will be shown in front of his enemies.

The commandments of God are above all the world's treasures. And within him who has achieved these there is God. He who carefully looks at God, he will gain God as a treasurer, and he who wants to do God's wills he, he will have the angels form heavens as guides. He who fears the sins will cross unimpeded the fearsome road, and during the darkness he will find light before and within him. The Lord will guide the steps of him who fear the sins, and at the time of the sliding the mercy of God will come to help him. He who reckons that the sins are unimportant, he will fall under the sins' domination and he will take sevenfold condemnation. You sow the mercifulness with humbleness and you will reap mercy at judgment. Achieve the good in the same sides where you have lost the good. If you owe a penny to God, He won't accept form you a pearl. Thus, if you have lost your cleanness, God won't accept from you the giving of alms, until you tarry in fornication. This is for God wants from you the cleanness of your body. Once you have transgressed the commandment by not wanting to leave the world's richness, why do you fight for other commandments? Have you left a weed within you and you have started waging war against other weeds?

Saint Ephraem said not to fight the heat during summer, while wearing winter clothes. Thus, each of us will reap what he sows. And each illness will be healed with the medicines appropriate to it. And you, defeated by your envy, why do you force on yourself to fight the sleep? Pluck off the mistake while still is small and weak, before it gets widened and strengthened. Do not be careless when the mistake seems small to you. This is for that mistake will be to you a merciless master and you will walk before it as a slave in chains. And he who fight since the beginning against his passion, he will defeat that passion.

He who can endure the injustice joyfully, though he is able to reject that injustice, he will have received the comforting from God, by his faith in God. And he who endures the blames brought to him, with humble cogitation, he will have reached to consummation and the angels wonders about him. This is for not other virtue is so great and so difficult to achieve as this one is.

You won't think about yourself that you are strong, until you are tempted and you remain unchanged. Likewise, test on yourself in all things. You achieve the right-faith within you, so that you will be able to trample on your enemies, and keep your mind unscattered; and do not trust your own power, so that you won't be left into your weakness. This is because then you will know your weakness out of your falling. Do not trust the knowledge either, lest your enemy - placing himself between you and your knowledge – will catch you in the traps of his cunningness. Have a gentle tongue and you won't meet the dishonor at all. Achieve sweet lips and you will have everybody as your friends. Do not ever praise on yourself with your tongue for your deeds, in order you not to be ashamed. This is because in that thing which the man praises with, God will allow him to get changed, in order the man to get humble and to learn the humbleness. That's why you must leave everything to the account of God's prescience and do not think that there is something unchanged in this life.

Reached thus, you will focus your eye always towards God. This is for the cover from God and His care-taking surrender all the people. But it won't be seen except by them who have cleaned up on themselves of all sins and they ceaselessly have their cogitation into God and only with God. To these ones the talking-of-care of God will be especially shown when they reach into a great temptation for God. Then they will feel that as they would see it with their bodily eyes; and each of them, on the measure and the cause of the temptation that came to them. It is shown then in order to give manhood them who fight, as it happened to Jacob, to Jesus of Navi, to the tree young men, to Peter and to the other saints, whom God showed on Himself in some human image, and that made them daring and it upheld them into faith. And if you say that those were given to the saints by God though His oikonomia and the saints have been especially found worthy of such views, let it be to you as encouraging example the holy martyrs, who often many together, and sometimes individually, and in many and diverse places, they lived in ascetic toils for Christ, and they endured mainly, by the power they received from above, in clay bodies, the cuts of the iron and all sort of torments, things above nature.

To these ones the holy angels showed themselves in a seen manner, in order each of those to find out that the godlike grace comes plentifully over them who endure in all ways the whole trial and the whole trouble, in order their valiance to be proven and towards shaming up their enemy.

And what must we say about the ascetics who got fart from the world and about the hermits who transformed the wilderness into a city and who made the wilderness dwelling place for the angels who were always visiting them for the way of their living and as some servant of the Master they were living together with them, by having them as some together-servants! These ones were embracing the wilderness on all the days of their life, and they had their dwelling place in mountains, in caves, in the cracks of the earth, due to their love for God. And for they left the earthly things and for they love the heavenly things and for they made on themselves as followers of the angels, rightly so the holy angels didn't hide from being seen by them and they fulfilled all their requests. And the angels even showed on themselves on some occasions, and they taught them how to live. And sometimes the angels explained them certain non-understood things, and some other times the saints themselves asked the angels about what was necessary to them. And sometimes, when the saints got strayed on the road, the angels guided them, and on some other times, when the saints fell into temptation, the angels delivered them. On some other times, when a happening or a danger occurred unexpectedly, the angels kidnapped the saints form the middle of that danger, for instance by escaping them from a snake, or from a boulder ready to roll down, or from a throwing of a spear, or of a stone. And on some other times, while the enemy was waging war to the saints in a manifested manner, the angels showed on themselves to the sight fi the saints' eyes and they told to the saints that they were sent to help them and they instilled to the saints daring, courage, and manhood. On some other times the angels committed healing through the saints. On some other times, the angels healed the saints themselves who fell in some sufferings. And sometimes the saints' bodied exhausted by non-eating, the angels strengthened them and fortified them by hand's touch, or by telling them above-nature words. And on some other times the angels brought breads to the saints, sometimes even warm, and other things to eat. To some of the saints the angels announced their moving from here, and on occasion they told the saints even the way they will die.

And why to present many cases showing the love of the holy angels for us and their whole care for the saints? The angels take care of us as some big brothers for their siblings (Ps. 144: 19[46]). These things have been said for everybody to find out that "near if the Lord to all of them who call Him into truth". And how much God takes care of them who have surrendered on themselves to Him, and who follow Him with the whole their heart!

What do you thing that God takes care of you for, because you are worried about the temporary things and about the need of your body? And if you to not believe that God takes care of you, and that's why you worry about the things you need, you are more deplorable than all people (Ps. 54: 25[47]). And, so, what are you still living for, or what are you going to live for? "Cast you worry upon the Lord and He will feed you" (Prov. 3: 25); and do not get scarred by the fear coming upon you.

He who has bestowed on himself to God, he will live into the resting of his mind. Without non-earning, the soul will not be able to get free from the disturbance of the thoughts; and without the peace of the senses, the souls won't feel the peace of the mind.

If one doesn't reach into temptations, he won't achieve the wisdom of the ghost. And without tiresomely reading, he won't take the weakening of his thoughts. And without the peace of the thoughts, he won't move himself within hidden mysteries. And without the strength of his faith the soul won't be able to have courage and daring in temptations. And without the feeling of the proven cover from God, the heart won't be able to hope in God. And if the soul doesn't taste the sufferings of Christ into knowledge, that soul won't have fellowship with Him[48].

Reckon as man of God him who, out of his mercy on himself, he has made on himself a dead to his necessary needs.

[46] In KJB we have: Ps. 145: 19: "He will fulfil the desire of them that fear him: he also will hear their cry, and will save them."; in ROB we have: Ps. 144: 19: "The will of them who fear Him He will do and their prayer He will hear and He will save them." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[47] In KJB we have: Ps. 55: 22: "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee: he shall never suffer the righteous to be moved."; in ROB we have: Ps. 54: 25: "Cast towards the Lord your worry and He will feed you; and He won't ever give wabbling to the righteous." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[48] Here is the purpose of the fasting and of the restraints before the Holy Impartation.

This is for, he who gives alms to the poor he will have God as taking care of him. And he who has made on himself poor for God, he will have found endless treasuries.

God needs nobody, but He rejoices when seeing somebody resting His image and honoring that for Him[49]. When somebody asks from you something that you have, do not say within your heart that you will keep that for your own soul, for you to enjoy that, and that God will fulfill that one's need somewhere else. These words belong to the unjust who do not know God. The righteous and honest man won't give his honor to somebody else. Neither let the time of the grace pass unworked[50]. The poor and needy man is given alms by God (this is for the Lord doesn't forsake anybody), but you have turned away from you the honor that has come to you from God, and you have removed the gift from God by removing the poor from you[51]. Therefore, when you give, rejoice and say: "Glory to You, my God, that you have found me worthy of finding somebody to rest". And if you do not have anything to give, you will rejoice even more, thanking God and saying: "Than You, my God, for You have given me this grace and this honor to make myself poor for Your name, and You have found me worthy of tasting the trouble sprinkled on the way of Your commandments, through sickness and poverty, as Your saints who walked on this way they tasted too".

And when you get sick, you will say: "Blessed is him who has been found worthy to be teste by God in the things which we inherit the life through". This is for God bring the illnesses for the health of our soul. This is for somebody among the saints said (and I wrote that down), that that monk who doesn't serve God in a way pleasant to God, and that monk who doesn't zealously live in ascesis for the salvation of his soul, but he behave idly in the ascesis for virtues, he will be left, without any doubt, by God, to fall in trials, so that he won't remain unworking, and due to the much-unworking to lean towards other even worse things. This is why God throws trials over them who are careless and lazy, so that they will cogitate at these ones and not at the vain things. But God always does this [49] God wants to do good to other through us, in order us to show our honoring to His image and us to improve on ourselves through love.

[50] There is an honor similar to that one of God, to help another, and it is a time of the grace, or of fructifying the grace, that time when you have the occasion to do good to somebody else.

[51] The grace is an interpersonal good; or, it is a good activate within the loving relations among us.

to the people who love Him, in order to rebuke them, and to make the wiser, and to teach them Him will. And when they pray to God, He won't listen to them immediately, but when the weaken and when they truly learn that that has happened to them because of their idleness and carelessness. This is for it is written: "When you stretch your hands towards Me, I will turn My eyes away from you, and if you will multiply your prayer, I won't hear you". (Isa. 1: 11). Although these things were written about others, doubtlessly they were written also about those who have forsaken the way of God.

But if we say that God is much merciful, why while ceaselessly knocking on the door and praying in trials we are not heard, but God overlooks our request? We are taught about this by the Prophet who says: "Not the hand of the Lord is too small for giving us alms, neither His ear is hard to hearing us, but our sins have separated us from Him and our lawlessness has turned His face away from us, in order Him not to hear us" (Isa. 58: 1). Remember God all the time and He will remember you when you fall into evil things.

Your nature has become receiver of evil things, and many of them have become the temptations of this world; and the evil things are not far from you, but they spring out from within you and from under your feet. And se close the eyelashes are to one another, as closer are the temptations too to the people. And these have been appointed by God into wisdom and for your benefit, in order you to knock patiently on His door and, by the fear of the troubles, to be sown His remembrance into your thought, and in order you to come closer to Him through prayers and your heart to be sanctified by ceaselessly remembering Him. And if you pray, He will hear you. And you will find out that God is The One Who delivers you and you will feel Him Who has made you and Who takes care of you and who has created for you the twofold world: one as temporary teacher and adviser; another as parental house and eternal inheritance of yours.

God hasn't made you insensitive to the things that sadden you up, lest, by lusting to be God, you to inherit what has inherited him who was Morningstar before, and then by pride he has become satan. Also, God hasn't created you as impossible to be persuaded, and immovable, in order you not to become like the nature of the inanimate realities, and your good things to be gainless and unrewarded, as their natural features are to the speechless beasts. This is for everybody can easily see how much benefit and how much satisfaction and how much humbleness the man gains out of the coming of such troubles.

So, it is obvious that it depends on you to live in ascesis for the good things and to avoid the evil things; and that is beneficial the sadness, and the dishonor coming over you. This is for, by being dishonored, we will get ashamed and we will fear. And by being honored, while bringing thanks to God, we aspire to virtue. God ahs multiplied to you these pedagogues, lest, you by lacking them, namely you being insensitive to the things which make one sad and by being you above any fear, you will forget about your God and you will deviate from Him and you will fall into worshipping the many gods, as many others who, though suffer as you do and they are whipped by these saddening things, not only that they feel in an instance, for the sake of a temporary and poor power and wellness, into the worshipping of many gods, but they also dared insanely to reckon on themselves as gods.

Because of that, though, God allowed you to be in troubles. And sometimes he allowed that also in order you not to deviate and so to upset Him, and thus, in addition to the punishment coming upon you, Him to lose you form His face. Not to tell, also about the dishonor brought to God, and about all the other blasphemies born out of living in abundance and out of the lack of fear, even if somebody wouldn't dare to list up all the said things.

That's why, God has multiplied through suffering and upsets His remembrance within your heart and by fearing the opposite things you have been wakened up by God and so He brought you to the gate of His mercy. And by being you delivered from those and from their causes, God has sown within you the love for Him. And by sowing within you the love, God has brought you closer through the honor as son and God has shown you how rich His grace is.

This is because where could have you known this great taking of care and His protection, if the opposite things hadn't happened to you? This is for, in most of the cases, especially out of these will be multiplied the love for God within your heart, namely out of knowing His gifts and by remembering the greatness of His taking of care for you. All these good things are born to you out of the things saddening you, in order you to learn how to thank.

Therefore, you remember God, so that God will always remember you. And by remembering you and by delivering you, you will get from God the whole happiness. Do not forget about God, by scattering on yourself into the vain things, so that God won't forgive about you at the time of your wars. While you are having a good time, you be obedient to God, so that you to have into your troubles daring towards Him through your ceaseless prayer towards Him, done with the whole your heart.

You clean yourself up before God, by keeping His remembrance within your heart[52], lest, by spending a long time without remembering God, you will be without daring when entering where He is. This is for the daring towards God comes out of the ceaseless dialogue with God and out of the much prayer[53]. Accustoming one to the people and living with the people are done through the body. Getting accustomed to God it is done by remembering God with our soul and by taking heed at the requests we address Him and by the total burning of the self. And out of the long perseverance in remembering Him, it will be committed the crossing into kidnappings and into wonderful things[54]. "The heart of them who are searching for God will be gladdened; look for the Lord you who are condemned, and you will be strengthened in your hope"; search for His face through repentance, be sanctified by the holiness of His face[55], and clean up your sins. Run towards the Lord you who are guilty of sins, towards Him Who can forgive our sins and Who can overlook our mistakes (Ps. 104: 3[56]). This is for God uttered a oath through the prophet: "I am alive, says the Lord. I d0o not want the death of the sinner, but I want him to [52] The cleaning is done by ceaselessly remembering God, and that won't give place to thoughts of pleasure, to egotistic thoughts, which to enter the thinking.

[53] The often remembrance of God, by being like some kind of dialogue with God, it will give you a familiarity with Him, and therefore when you will be in front of Him, at judgment, you will have daring towards God. That's why the saints "have daring towards God", and, properly-said, the judgment they will to it won't be a judgment.

[54] By ceaselessly remembering God we will forgive about all the narrow realities and about ourselves and we will widen on ourselves in order to comprise God's infinity, and everything, into our love.

[55] God by being clean and all-loving, when we think at Him we do not receive into our thought except what is clean and loving, and we feel on ourselves as in some kind of looking at "His spiritual face".

[56] In KJB we have: Ps. 105: 3: "Glory ye in his holy name: let the heart of them rejoice that seek the Lord."; in ROB we have: Ps. 104: 3: "Praise on yourself with His holy name; be gladdened the heart of those who search for the Lord." (E. l. t.'s n.)

turn back and to be alive" (Jez. 33: 11). And again: "I have been stretching My arms the whole day towards the disobedient and speaking-against people" (Isa. 65: 2). And again: "Why do you die with death, you the house of Israel"" (Hezekiah 33: 11). "Turn yourselves towards Me and I will turn Myself towards you" (Mal. 3: 7). Ands again: "On any day which the sinner turns away from his way and he looks towards the Lord and he will judge righteously, I will no longer remember his lawlessness. Living he will be alive, says the Lord. And the righteous, if he forsakes his righteousness and by sinning, he will do inequity, I will no longer remember his righteousness, but I will place a stumbling stone in his way, and he will die into the darkness of his deeds, if he perseveres in them" (Jez. 33: 14-15). Why? This is for the sinner won't stumble on his sin on the day he will turn on himself towards the Lord, and the righteousness of the righteous won't save him on the day he will commit sin, if he perseveres in that sin.

God told Jeremiah: "Take some paper and write down all the things I have told you since the day of Josiah, the king of Judah, until today, all the evil things I have told you that I will bring upon this people, so that by hearing and by fearing, they to forsake the evil way and, by turning back, to repent, and I will forgive their sins" (Jer. 36: 2-3). And the Wisdom says: "He who hides his sin, he won't benefit of that. And he who confesses his sins and who crossed over them, he will achieve mercy from God" (Prov. 28: 13). And Isaah says: "Search for the Lord and, by finding Him, call Him. And by getting closer, let the sinner leave his way and the unjust man his thoughts. And turn towards Me and I will have mercy on you. This is for My thoughts aren't as your thoughts, neither My ways according to your ways" (Isa. 55: 7-9). "If you will obey Me, you will eat the good things of the earth" (Isa. `1: 19). "Come to Me and obey Me and you will be alive into your souls" (Isa. 55: 3). When you keep the ways of the Lord and you do His wills, you hope into the Lord and call Him and while you are still shouting out, He will tell you: "Behold, I am present".

When the temptation comes upon the unjust one, he won't trust to call the Lord, neither to wait salvation from the Lord, because the days of the resting have been removed from him by the will of God. You ask for help before the war starts, and you search for Healer before you get sick. Pray before the troubles have come upon you, and on the day of your saddening you will find Him and He will hear you. Call Him and pray Him before you start rolling down; and before you pray prepare your promises, namely their food. The ship of Noah was prepared in advance and the woods for it were planted 100 years before building that ship. And in the time of the wrath, the unjust ones were destroyed. But to the righteous one He was a cover.

The unjust mouth is shut up with the prayer. This is because a burdened conscience makes the man undaring. The heart sheds tears of joy in time of prayer.

They whom the world has died to, they will endure the trials joyfully. But they whom the world is still alive, they won't be able to endure the injustice, or they will get angry because of being pushed by their vain-glory and they will get disturbed without judgment, or they will be melted down by sadness. How difficult is to achieve the virtue of the patience and how much glory it will bring from God! He who wants to achieve this virtue, namely to receive with long-suffering the injustice, he must get far from his kins and to estrange on himself. This is for he cannot achieve this virtue while still living in his country. This is for if is characteristic only to those who are great and powerful, and them who this world has died to, and them who have lost any hope in the comforting from here, to endure the pain of this virtue while remaining among their people.

As close is the grace to the humble-cogitation, as close are the panful happenings to the pride. The eyes of the lord are towards them who are humble in thought, in order Him to gladden them; and the face of the Lord is before the proud ones, to humble them down. The humbleness always received mercy from God. And to the callous heart and to the fewness of the faith fearsome happenings come into their way. You diminish on yourself, in all aspects, in comparison to all people, and you will be elevated higher that the ruler of this century. Be the first one to bow down and you will be honored more than those who bring golden gifts.

Humble on yourself and you will see the glory of God within you. This is for where the humbleness sprouts out, there will spring up the glory of God. If you want to be your countenance despised by all people, God will make you to be glorified. But when God shows you His glory, you make on yourself easy to be despised into your glory, and do not make yourself great into your smallness. Strive to be despised and you will be filled up with the honor from God. Do not search for being your honored while you are full of wounds inside. You despise the honor in order you to be honored, and do not love the honor because you will be despised. And he who runs after honor the honor will run away from before him. And he who runs away from honor he will be followed by honor and that will be herald to everyone about his humbleness. If you despise on yourself, in order you not to be honored, God will make you known. And if you defame on yourself for the truth, God will command to all His creatures to praise you. And these ones will open before you the door of Him Who created you and they will praise you. This is for you truly are His image and likeness[57].

Wonderful, but rare, it is the man shining through virtues, and showing on himself to the people as humble, luminous in life, wide in conscience, but humble in his thought. Blessed is him who humbles on himself in all aspects, for he will be extolled. This is for he who humbles on himself and who diminishes on himself in everything for God, he will be glorified by God. And he who get hungry and thirsty for God, he will be made drunk by God with His goods. And he who disrobes on himself for God, he will be dressed up by God with the vestment of the incorruptibility and of the glory. You defame on yourself for God, and without you know it your glory will be multiplied for your entire life. Reckon on yourself as sinner, so that you will correct on yourself during the whole your life. Make yourself a fool (ιδιώτης[58]) into wisdom, in order you not to show on yourself as wise, while being stupid. And while the simple and untaught is elevated by his humbleness, you reckon how much honor will bring that to the great and honored ones.

Run away from the vain-glory and you will be glorified, shun the pride and you will be extolled. This is because neither the vain-glory is given to the sons of the people, nor the haughtiness to the women. If you have rejected all the things of the life, nobody will ever rebuke you for a thing. If you have got disgusted of the vain-glory, you run away from them who are hunting for it. Run away from them who love the earning, as also from earning itself. Get far from the people who love partying, as from parties too. You run away from the [57] We have here a strong of paradoxes, as we have found also at Saint John Climacus. We remark, among others: "Make on yourself worthy of being despised when you are great by the glory that you have from God and do not make on yourself great when you are small". The true greatness is shown in the first case, and not in the second case.

[58] It might be this what inspired Dostoyevsky to write his novel The Idiot.

debauched, as also form debauchery too. If the simple memory of the said things disturbs your cogitation, how much more will the cogitation be troubles by seeing and by living with those? You get closer to the righteous ones and through them you will get closer to God. Spend your time with the humble and you will learn their behaviors. This is for, if the simple seeing of them is useful, how much more will be the teaching of their mouth?

Love the poor to that through them you to achieve the mercy[59]. Do not go close to the strife lovers, so that you won't be forced to get out your peace. Endure without disgust the bad smell of the sick, and especially of the poor, because you too are dressed up in body. Do not rebuke them who are sad in their heart, so that you not to be hit with the same staff which they have been hit with and so you to search for them who could comfort you and not to find them. Do not mock the male, or you will go in hell. Lovre the sinners but hate their deeds and do not despise them for their mistakes, in order not to be yourself tempted by those mistakes. Do not rebuke them who need your prayer and do not deprive them of the gentle words of the comforting, so that they not to be lost and their soul to be asked for from you. But you follow the example of the physicians, who heal the hotter illnesses with colder medicines and the colder illnesses with the opposite things.

You force on yourself, when you meet your fellow human, to honor him above his measure. Kiss his hands and feet and often hold them with much honor and place them on your eyes and praise him even for the things which he doesn't have. And when he leaves, you tell him all the good and everything that honors him. This is for by those and by similar things you attract him to good and you force him to be ashamed by the names which you call him with. And so, you will sow within him the seeds of the virtue. And through this habit that you have impropriated to yourself, the image of the kindness will be imprinted within you and you will achieve much humbleness and you will fulfill tirelessly the great things. And even more than that, even if that one has some shortcomings, by being honored by you, he will easily receive from you his healing, by being ashamed of the honor that you have shown him. Let this be the way of your behavior: nicely speaking and honoring everybody. Do not get angry on somebody, to not rebuke either for faith or for evil deeds. And guard on yourself not to defame or to condemn somebody for something. This is for we have an unbiased judge in heavens. And if you want to turn somebody to truth, get yourself saddened for him with tears and tell him with love a word or two, and to not get angry on him. This is for, if you do so, he will see in you the sign of the enmity. This is for the love doesn't know how to get wrath, or how to get angry, or how to blame on somebody passionately. The sign of the love and of the knowledge is the humbleness, that is born out of a good conscience into Christ Jesus our Lord Whom it is due the mastery, together with the Father and with the Holy Ghost, now and forever and ever. Amen.

[59] By your mercy you will gain their love and in their love is working the love from God.

Word VI

About the Benefit Born out of the Running Away from the World

Truly harsh and difficult and hard is the ascesis through deeds. And regardless how undefeated and strong one would reach to be, when the causes of the baits and or the wars and of the fights approach him the fer will attach to him and it will bring him ton falling; all the more it will be so when he meets the shows war of the devil. This is for to the extent the man gets far from the thigs feared by his heart, he will give power to his enemy against him. And when the man falls asleep even for a little while, the enemy will easily defeat him. This is because, when the soul encounters the damaging happening of the world, these happenings become spears to him, and he is somehow naturally defeated while answering those. Actually, our fathers form yore, who walked these paths, they knew that the mind isn't strong all the time, neither can the mind remain steadfast in the same rule and to guard on itself, and sometimes it happens that the mind cannot see the things damaging it. That's why the invented into their wisdom and they put on as a weapon the non-earning, as free, as it was written, from many wars (for the man to be able thus to get rid through his poverty of many sins). That's why they went to wilderness, where there are no things in, because the things are the causes of the passion, so that neither when the time of a weakening came, they wouldn't find reasons for falling, namely the anger, the lust, the keeping of evil in mind, and the glory, but all of these were weaker due to the wilderness. They fortified and built on themselves into wilderness as in an unconquerable tower. And so, each of them was able to consummate their fight in quietude. This was because there the senses were unable to unite themselves with the one who wages us war, by encountering the damaging things. This is for it if better to us to die in battle than to live in sin.

Word VII

About the Rule of the Beginners and about the Things Due to Them

This is their pious and pleasant to God rule: not to let their eyes look around, but to always look forward; not to speak vain things, but only what is needed; to be content with poor clothes, according to the need of the body; to use the food for upholding their body and not towards covetousness. To impart on themselves with all the things but only a little, and not to avoid some and to choose some, neither to fille up their belly with the things they chose.

Greater than all virtues it is the right-reckoning. Do not drink wine except with your friends, or when you are sick and helpless; do not interrupt the speech of him who speaks, and not foolishly contradict him, but be serious as a wise man. And wherever you are, you will reckon on you as the smallest and servant of your brothers. Do not show any naked limb to anyone, neither to get close to somebody's body except if unavoidably needed. Shun the daring as from death. Set a decent rule to your sleep, so that the power guarding you not to forsake you; and wherever you sleep, if possible, let nobody see you. Do not spit before somebody. And if when sitting down, you feel the urge to cough, turn backwards and cough thus. Eat and drink temperately, as it is due to the children of God.

Do not stretch you hand to take something, shamelessly, from in front of the people whom you sit at the table with. And if there is a stranger sitting at the same table urge him once and twice to eat, and then you sit in good order at that table and not disorderly. Sit in good order and gathered together, and not to have any limb naked.

When you yawn, cover your mouth, in order not to be that seen. And by stopping you breathing, that will pass away.

When you enter the monastic cell of your protos, or of a friend, or of a disciple, guard your eyes not to see anything of the things from within it. And if your thought urges you, take heed not to obey it and do the opposite, because he who behaves indecently into these, he is stranger to the monastic image and to Christ Who bestowed this image to us. Do not look at the places where are hidden the vessels in the monastic cell of your friend. Open and close serenely the door of your friend. Do not enter unexpectedly to somebody. But knock on the door and enter decently, when you are invited inside.

Do not hurry up in your walking, except you are forced to by an unavoidable need. Be obedient to anyone in any good thing, but do not follow them who love the earning, who love the money, and to the worldly ones, not to be fulfilled something of the devil.

Talk gently to anybody and look at anybody decently, and do not attach your eyes to the face of somebody.

When walking on the road, do not walk in front of the superiors. And if your company legged behind, and you are a little ahead, you will wait for him. He who doesn't do like that he is mindless and close to the pig which has no law. And if your company starts talking to some people whom he comes across with, you won't hurry him up. Let the healthy one to tell the sick one, before time: "Let's do out need"[60].

Do not rebuke somebody for any mistake, but you reckon on yourself as accountable in everything and as the cause of the mistake. Do not shun from doing, with humble cogitation, not even the most despised thing, but do not ask somebody else to do it. If you are forced to laugh, do not avoid that, but do not let your teeth to be seen. And if you are forced to talk to women, you will turn away your face from seeing them and so you will be able to talk to them. But shun from nuns as from fire; and you will avoid meeting and talking to them and seeing them as it would a trap of the devil, in order you to avoid your heart getting cold from the love for God and you to avoid dirtying your heart with the mud of the passions. Even if they were your sisters, you would avoid them as strangers.

[60] The healthy one to ask the sick one to allow him to do his needs, because the sick one maybe shies. We have in this Word a wonderful Code of the Elegant Manners, not a superficial one, but deeply rooted into the fullest sincerity.

Guard yourself against the mixing with your kins to that to avoid your heart to get cold from the love for God.

Avoid the daring and the meetings with those who can tempt you, as it would be the friendship with the devil. Let yourself have as together-speaker and as together-interpreter of the mysterious things only one: he who fears God and how is always taking heed at himself, and who is poor in his shelter but he is rich in the mysteries of God.

Hide from everybody your mysteries, your deeds, and your ascetic toils. Do not stay in front of somebody without wearing a hat, except it is needed. Go out to do your need decently, and shying yourself of the angel who guards you. And live with fear of God and force on yourself until your death, even if that would be unpleasant to your heart.

You better take deadly venom than eating with women, even if they would be your mother and your sister. It would be tetter to you if you lived together with a dragon, than to sleep with a young man under the same blanket, even if that would be your natural brother.

If somebody superior to you says you, when you are on the road: “let’s sing”, you will obey him. And if he doesn’t tall you that, you will keep your silent with your mouth, but extoll God with your heart.

Do not oppose somebody, neither wage war to him, neither tell lies, nor to swear on the name of your Lord God. Allow yourself to be despised but do not despise. Allow yourself to be done injustice to, but you do not injustice. It is better the bodily things to rotten together with the body than to harm something from among the souly things. Do not sue anyone, but endure if you are condemned even if you are innocent.

Do not love without your soul anything from among the worldly things, but obey them who rule and master and avoid getting mixed with them. This is because this is a trap which the careless fall into, towards their perdition.

Oh, you the greedy one, who search for comforting your belly, you better cast embers into it than the cookies of them who rule and master. Pour your mercy on everybody and be shy to everybody. Guard yourself against the much-speaking, because it quenches form within heart the understanding movements which sprout out form God.

Avoid the discussions about dogmas as they would be a furious lion. Do not enter such discussions neither with believers of the Church nor with the strangers.

And to not cross through the places where furious and quarrelling people are, in order to avoid your heart to be filled up with anger and so the dark to take over your soul.

Do not inhabit together with the proud one, so that the work of the Holy Ghost not to leave your soul and you to become a dwelling place of all passions.

If you, man, guard these rules, and if you occupy on yourself always with the cogitation at God, your soul will see into yourself the light of Christ and you soul will never get darkened. For to Christ are is due the glory and the mastery forever. Amen.

About the Thin Way of the Discernment

Take heed at you, always, and see the purpose they deeds have, the troubles coming upon you, the desert place of your living, the thinness of your mind joined with the detailed knowledge, the great length of your peace, together with the many medicines, namely those trial brought by the true Doctor for the health of your internal man. Some of those come, for a while, for the devils, for a while from the illnesses a body's sufferings, for a while as fears of the thoughts of the soul, as fearsome memories of the thing from the future life; and for another while as stings and burdening of the hot grace and of the sweet tears and of the joy of the ghost, and together with others – not to say more.

Can you see out of all of these that your wound has started healing and steadfastly closing up? Namely, have your passions started weakening? If it is so, they are a sign from God. So, you enter withing yourself and take heed at which passions you see as starting to get weakened, and which passions have perished and they have been totally removed and which passion have started to be silent due to the fact that your soul has been healed and not because the ones who terrify your soul have got far from your, and which passions have started to allow on themselves controlled by cogitation because of the absence of their causes. And take heed again at the following fact: can you limpidly see that in the rottenness of your wound has starter growing the living body[61] that is the peace of the soul? And which passions keep us under force and under the pressure and at what time? And are those passions bodily and souly or are they joined and mixed? And if, though weakened, they move into memory in a covered manner, or do they rebel powerfully against the soul? And do they move around as some masters or are they sneaking around? And how the imperial mind, that one master over senses, it takes heed at the? And when the occur, will the mind fight them and it will make them weakening with its power, or will the mind accept them without keeping them in sight anymore? And which of the old passion have been removed and which have been recently born? And which of the passions move in form of images, and which move in feeling without taking the shape of images? Which move in memory in a dispassionate manner and without (tempting) thoughts and without inciting? Out of these, again, how can one know the soul's measure as it is.

Where the first ones are, the souls haven't reached yet to settle on themselves. This is for they still ask the soul for a fight, despite the soul showing a strength against them. And where are the others, as the Scripture said in a prophetic manner: "David sat in his house and God rested him from all [61] The note in the Grek text: "The body of our proto-parent before falling, as non-obeying the reproachable passions and non-corrupted by the corruptible pleasures, neither killed by the destructive lusts, it was dispassionate and alive, having a life unsubmitted to the shame and to the pain. But after the falling, by submitting on itself to the ugliest passions, and by being corrupted by the evil lusts and pleasures, it has become passionate and dead to the working of the virtue, according to the word: "In the very day you eat from it, you will die with death" (Gen. 2: 17). This is because once our proto-parent tasted out of that tree, it died the impulse towards good from our proto-parent's body. But through faith and by the grace of the Son of God embodied for us, that dead and passionate body can be disrobed again, and the dispassionate and living body can be put on. This is for, by being the passions killed, the living body will immediately appear, as the pious says. This is for, by calling above the passions as "wound", and the health of the body as "the weakening of the passions", he adds that "into the rottenness of the would", namely into the weakness and rottenness of the passions it will "appear the living body".

the people from around him" (2 Kings[62] 7: 1). And in these there is not about only one from among passions, but there is firstly about the natural passions, namely about lust and wrath; and then, the said things must be understood also about the love for glory, and for pleasure, which imagine and hallucinate the faces and stir up to lust and desire. Also, the passions of the love for money, which the soul is imparted hiddenly with, even when doesn't allow to be himself convinced to do the deed. This is because even then are imprinted within mind the images of the deeds of the love for money, related to the earning of money, and the soul is forced to think at them and at the way the soul could commit those deeds together with other deeds.

But not all the passions wage war to us through baits (attacks). This is because there are passions which bring only troubles to the soul: idleness, boredom, and sadness. They do not come as bait, neither the lure the soul by making him to think at resting, but they bring a burden to the soul. And the soul's strength is tested in the victory upon those which wage war to the soul by bait. The think knowledge of these ones and the signs the man must have about those in order him to feel at any step he takes, where he has reached and what field the soul started stepping on, in Canaan or beyond Jordan[63].

Take heed at this too: has the soul enough knowledge by his light, in order to discern between these ones, or the soul discerns them though darkness, or is the soul totally lacking this? Do you feel that your cogitation has started to become get cleaned? Doesn't take place there a scattering during prayer? And which is the passion that disturbs the cogitation when the time for prayer comes? Do you feel without yourself that the power of the quietude overshadows the soul with the gentleness, with the serenity, and with the peace which the soul uses to give birth to in cogitation? It is your mind kidnapped unwillingly by the meanings of the incorporeal realities, which the senses cannot interpret? Is suddenly ignited within you a joy that brings your tongue to silence? Is there springing in the matchless joy of your heart a certain pleasure that gets your mind out of everything?

[62] In KJB this book is usually called as 2 Samuel. (E. l. t.'s n.)

[63] "The land of Canaan shows the body's cleanness and the peaceful state of the soul, and the consummation gained in the human life. And the things from beyond Jordan show the uncleanness caused by passions and the disturbance caused by sin and by the passionate living".

This is for, unnoticeably, from time to time, there comes over the whole body a joy and a gladness, which the flesh tongue cannot express and, in comparison to which, all the earthly realities are reckoned as ashes and trash. The first one among those springs out of the heart during the time of the prayer, another warms up the mind during the reading, and again, another through the ceaseless cogitation (at God). This last one is most of the time outside the others, and it often is caused by a passing thing; and often, at night, in the same time it occurs between sleep and vigil, when it seems that you sleep and do not sleep, or you take vigil but you don't. When this delectation comes, it makes palpitating the whole body, and he who receives it he will reckon in those moments that the Kingdom of Heavens is nothing else but this.

Search for an see again whether your soul has achieved the power that thins up the memories of the senses, with the help of that hope that masters upon your heart and which strengthens the senses from within by the unspoken conviction cause by a mysterious entrustment. And if the heart is awake, see whether your heart hasn't been again enslaved again, because of its carelessness, by the earthly things, despite it is ceaselessly peaking about its ceaseless work, which your heart was together with your Savior.

You achieve the knowledge for discerning between its existence and the stories about it. What helps the soul to quickly taste these, it is the ceaseless peace in his ceaseless and perseverant work. This is because they will be lost after finding them, if you do not take care of what you have received; and you won't find them again for a long time. When one is in these he will dare to say, encouraged by the witness of his conscience, what the blessed Paul said: "I am entrusted that neither the death, nor the life, neither the present ones, nor the future ones, neither all others can separate me from Christ" (Rom. 8: 38). Namely neither the body's troubles, and together with those also the soul's troubles, neither the hunger, nor the persecution, neither the nakedness, nor the loneliness, neither the prison, nor the danger, neither the sword, nor the angels of satan, neither his powers in the form of the evil plots, nor the glory that tempts by its bait, which it lures us with, neither the slandering and the rebukes joined with the useless and vain hits.

If these ones, oh, by brother, they haven't started to diminish, or to cease to be seen within your soul, your ascetic toils and your troubles and the whole your peace are a useless toil. And even if wonderful deeds will be committed through your hand and they will resurrect dead people, you will reckon those the same. So, you immediately move your soul and persuade through your tears Him who saves, so that Him will pull the curtain form the door of your heart and He will pluck the darkness of the storm of the passions off the sky from within you[64], in order Him to make you worthy to see the ray of the day and you not to die sitting into the eternal darkness.

The continuous vigil, joined with the reading and with the often kneelings, one after another, they won't be late in bringing these goods to them who strive for it. And he who has found these, he has found them in those.

But they who want to find these they must persevere in quietude, together with their work; and in addition to these, they mustn't tie their cogitation to anything, and not even to a man, but only to their own soul, and let them persevere in the inward work. But neither in these deeds we will find only within some of them a feeling lived by us. And only by that we achieve an entrustment about the others as well.

But he who sits in quietude and who has received the experience of the kindness of God, he won't need much proving. That's why he neither will be sick within his soul with some sort of disbelief, as it happened to them who doubt the truth. The witness of his mind will suffice him to entrust him more than the countless words which are outside experience. Of God be the glory and the extolling forever! Amen.

Word IX

Brief Presentation of the Kinds of the Monastic Rule and Living. And how the Virtues are Born Ones out of Others

Out of the forced work it will be born the immeasurable warmth, which burns within heart out of the hot memories which occur again within mind. And this work together with the guarding they thin up the mind within their warmth and they bestow the sight to the mind. And this sight gives birth to the hot thoughts which I poke about, in the deeps of the soul's sight that is called contemplation. And at its turn, this contemplation gives birth to warmth, and this warmth that has come through the gift of the contemplation[65], it is born the flowing of the tears. In the beginning the gain is small, namely during a day the tears come to the man and then disappear for several times. But later on, there will come the ceaseless tears. And out of the ceaseless tears the soul will receive the peace of the thoughts[66]. And form the peace of the thoughts the soul will be elevated to the cleanness of the mind. And form the cleanness of the mind the man reaches to see the mysteries of God. This is for the cleanness is hidden in having peace from wars[67]. After these ones, the mind reaches to see unveilings and signs, as Prophet Jezekiel saw. These ones compose the three steps which the soul comes close to God through[68].

[64] Abo the clean mind one can see the "sky", or the godlike light. This "sky" is darkened by the storm of the passions.

[65] Only at Isaac the Syrian we can see this intertwining between contemplation and the warmth and the tears. And only him reckons that as born out of grace. Doubtlessly, at him this contemplation refers to God, and not the rationalities of the things as in case of other spiritual writers.

[66] Again, only at Isaa the Syrian, the peace of the thoughts appears as caused by tears.

[67] Where there still are wars, the thoughts are not yet clean.

[68] "Among these ones the first one is, as it was said, the forced work, or the hunger, the reading, the taking of vigil for the whole night and the others connected to these ones. The second one is the contemplation. And the third one is the warmth out of which the ceaseless tears come out of. The signs seen by Prophet Jezekiel are three. The first sign wats the wind coming from north; the second sign was the light from around him; the third sign was the amber in the middle of the fire (Chap. 1: 4). The wing symbolizes the work, for it comes with strong force: the wind coming from north, as also the forced work done by forcing the body, it forcedly raises us out of all body's passions. About this work tells us also the word of our Savior: "The Kingdom of Heavens is being taken by force and they who force on themselves they will kidnap it" (Mt. 11: 12). And the light is contemplation. This is for what else would somebody contemplate through this contemplation, if he didn't contemplate God? And God is light. (We have here, much before the Century XIV, the affirmation of the seeing of God as light by those who are cleaned up of passions o. n.). "I am the light of the world" (Jn. 8: 12). And the light will dawn to them who contemplate Him. This is for it was said: "Light dawned to the righteous" (Ps. 96: 12 (in KJB we have Ps. 97: 11 (E. l. t.'s n.))). "Sand the light is always before their eyes; light to the righteous ones forever" (Prov. 13: (). And the amber that burns is the heavenly warmth of the grace that occurs in an above-nature manner within heart and it warms up in a very sweet manner the whole soul and it fills up the soul with the godlike longing and love. This was felt by Cleophas and by the people who he was travelling together with, who said to one another: "Hasn't been our heart burning within us, when he has been talking to us on the road and interpreting the Scriptures to us?" (Lk. 24: 32).

The beginning of all of these is the good urge towards God and the kids of the deed of the appeasement, unchanged. These ones are born out of the much cutting off (of the will) and from getting far from the things of the human live. There is not much need to mention each sort of things, because they are known to everybody. But because presenting them won't cause any loss to the reader, but it is rather beneficial, as I reckon, we won't be lazy in presenting them.

These ones are: the hunger, the reading, the woken-up vigil during the entire night, according to each one's power, and the multitude of the prostrations which must be done during day and night hours. One must do at least 30 prostrations in each series, and then to kiss the honored cross and then to withdraw within the monastic cell. But there are some people who add to this measure, according to their won power. Others pray for three hours, having their mind into watchfulness and throwing on themselves on their faces, without getting bored and without their thoughts getting scattered. These two things show and unveil the great richness of the kindness or of the grace, which is being shared to each one among people according to his worthiness.

But which is the kind of the other prayer and of the perseverance into it, unforcedly, we have reckoned as not being good to tell, neither to use the tongue's word or the letters to present its nature and rule, lest him who reads that, by not understanding anything of what he is reading, to reckon the written things as useless, or by being himself nescient about them him to disregard him who know about the nature of those things; and by that him to come to contempt, and from contempt him to come to mockery. In this way he will be like a barbarian in those things, according to the Apostle's word said about him who prophesizes (1 Cor. 14: 11).

So, he who wants to find out about these, let him walk on the road open before and let him start working according to the cogitation. And when he enters the work, he will learn from himself and he won't need anybody to teach him. "Sit, he says, into your monastic cell and itself this thing will teach you". And to our God is due the glory forever. Amen.

Word X

Through what Is Guarded the Beauty of the Monastic Living and what Is the Way of Extolling God

The monk must be in all his behaviors and in all his deeds a useful example to them who see him, in order that out of his many virtues, which must shine like some rays seen by the enemies of the truth, these ones to confess about the monk that he is for Christians a sure and steadfast hope, and the Christians to run to him from all quarters, as to a shelter. And by that the horn of the Church to be raised against the Churches's enemies and many to be moved towards desiring his virtue and to get out of the world, and him to be honored in everything for the beauty of his living. This is for the monastic living is the pride of the Church.

Therefore, the monk must have nice behaviors in all aspects, namely his look above the seen things, the full non-earning, the total contempt for our body, the high fasting, the perseverance into quietude, the good order of the senses, the guarding of the sight, the avoidance of any strife for a thing belonging to this life, the shortness of his speech, the cleanness in remembering the evil, the simplicity united with the right-reckoning[69], the innocence of the heart united with the wisdom, with the nimbleness, and with the sharpness of the understanding[70].

Let him then know that the present life is passing and quickly flowing and that the true and spiritual life is near to us; let him not be known by people and let him not despair. Let him not allow to be himself tied by the friendship or by the company of any man' let him have the place of his living a peaceful place; let him always avoid the people and let his ceaselessly persevere in prayers and in readings; let him not love the honors and let him not enjoy the banquets; let him not tie on himself to this life; let him manly endure the trials; let him deliver on himself of the worldly lusts, by inquiring them, and by remembering [69] The right-reckoning or the discernment is the balance matureness of judging. But it must be done with simplicity. Namely, the simplicity doesn't mean stupidity and the right-reckoning doesn't mean cunningness.

[70] The same paradoxical union between things seeming to be opposite, which shows the matureness and the non-unilaterality of the spiritual man.

their things; let him have his worries for and his thought at the true country; let him have his face serious and composed; and let him shed tears day and night. And more than all of these, let him guard his righteousness, let him get rid of his belly's covetousness, and let him clean himself up of his small or big sins. These are the virtues of the monk, to say shortly, which testify about his consummate death towards the world and about his closeness to God.

Therefore, we must ceaselessly take care of all of these, in order us to achieve them. And if somebody says: "What it was needed for, him to speak about them by and large, and briefly?", I will answer that that was needed for, when he who takes care of his life, he will search for one of the mentioned things and he will see that that one misses from his soul, he will be able to know out of that his lack of fulness in all virtue and he will remember this list. And when he has achieved all the mentioned things, he will be given the knowledge of the others too, which I haven't treated about. And he will be to the saints a reason for extoll God. And through that he will prepare a resting place to his soul, before living the present life. And may the glory be of our God, forever! Amen.

Word XI

It Is not Appropriate to the Servant of God, Who Has Deprived on Himself of the Worldly Things and Who Has Goen Out in Order to Search for God, to Cease this Searching because He Hasn't Reached to Comprise the Truth, and Him to Chill out the Warmth Born out of the Longing for the Godlike Realities and out of Inquiring their Mysteries. And What the Mind if Defiled Like by Remembering the Passions

Three are the steps which the man advances through: the stage of the beginners, the middle stage, and the stage of the consummate. He who is on the first step, though his thought tends towards good, he still has the movement of his cogitation within passions. The second step, is in amid dispassion and addiction. In him are moving both the thoughts from the right and the thoughts from the left. He doesn't cease, as it was said, to spring out both the light and the darkness. And he will often stop for a while from continuously reading the godlike Scriptures and from thinking at the godlike meanings, which ignite him with the countenances of truth when he imagines those, according to his power, in the same time with the external avoidance, out of which it will be born the most inward guarding and an enough work – then he will be dragged by passions. But if he nourishes his natural warmth in the mentioned things and he doesn't leave the searching for them and the desiring for them from the distance, because he hasn't seen them yet, and by nourishing his thoughts with the water of the reading of the godlike Scriptures and by upholding them not to lean towards the things from the left, and also in order they not to receive any devilish seed in the countenance of the truth, He rather will guard his soul with this longing and he will ask for God with pained prayer and with patience, and God Himself will fulfill his request and He will open His door, especially for his humbleness. This is for the mysteries will be opened to the humble ones[71]. And if he dies with this hope, even if he hasn't seen that country from close by any means, I reckon that he will inherit the that country together with the righteous one from old, with them who hoped to reach the consummation, but they didn't see it, according to the apostolic word[72], for they were working for hope on all their days, but they didn't receive it.

But what are we going to say, if the man doesn't reach to enter the Promised Land, that is the way of the consummation, namely he hasn't reached to receiving the manifested truth, according to the measure of his natural power[73]? Will hi be stopped by that and will him remain on the inferior step, whose whole impulse tends towards the left? Or, for he receives the whole truth, will he remain within the lower group on the inferior step, a group which don't know these things and they don't even want these things? Or must him accede on the middle step, which we mentioned? But, if he even haven't seen [71] The humble ones open on themselves to the others. Therefore, to God too. The proud ones see only on themselves, so that they are locked up in themselves and they are blind.

[72] He maybe thinks at the word: "And all of these, who were confessed through faith, they didn't receive the promise" (Hebr. 11: 39).

[73] "The measure of the natural power" means the powers given to his nature that, by using the grace, to reach the steps of the consummation.

that ever, except like in a mirror, he still hope further on, and by that hope he will be placed together with his fathers. And if he hasn't been found worthy of receiving the consummate gift here, through the continuous dialogue with the grace and by spending his time in grace with the whole his mind, during his life, he has been able to cut off his evil thoughts. This was because his heart left this world being full with God into hope.

Everyone who has humbleness in themselves they will enjoy the honor. This is for the incorporeal living of the mind into the longing for God, which the mind is guided within by the understanding of the godlike Scriptures, it will lock up the soul inside, when facing the evil thoughts, and it will keep the cogitation in the remembrance of the future goods, in order the mind not to get drowsy through its idleness and, instead of occupying on itself with the better things, the mind to occupy on itself with the remembrance of the worldly things. This is because, by that, the warmth of the wonderful movements of the mind will get chilled out, and he will fall into vain and irrational lusts. And may the glory be of our God!

Word XII

How It is Due to Sit in Peace Him Who Has the Right-Reckoning

Listen to me, my beloved one: if you want your lusts not to be vain, and your days not to become unworking and deprived of the earning hoped by them who live with the right-reckoning in quietude, let again be your entering in this one too with right-reckoning. You won't do this while thinking at something else, lets you will end like the many. But let yourself have in your cogitation steadfastly its target, so that all the deeds of your virtue to be directed towards it. And you will ask them who rather know this by experience than by knowledge. And you won't stop until you will have learnt its deeds in all the paths. And you will take heed at any step you take: take heed if you will advance on the due way by taking that step, or will you deviate on some different path than that you must walk on. Do not think that the living totally dedicated to appeasement it being consummated only through the shown deeds.

If you want to find out something and to reach that by experiencing it yourself, you will take heed at the signs and at the proofs occurring within your soul, at any step you take, and out of those you will know the truth of the fathers or the delusion of the enemy. Take heed at these few things, until you will be made wise on your way: when you see that in your peace of your mind your cogitation can move freely in the thoughts from the right side and it is not forcedly taken over by some other thought, you will know that your quietude is righteous. And again, take heed when you serve (when you liturgize), if you are in one or another way of your serving (of the liturgy) far from scattering and the verse will be suddenly cut off your tongue and there will be stretched over your soul the ties of the silence from outside his freedom[74], and if these ones continue perseveringly, you will know that you go ahead into your quietude and it has started to take shape the gentleness within you. This is for the simple quietude, out of the deeds of the righteousness, it is priceless[75]. The simple living is reckoned, by the wisemen who have the right-reckoning, as an apart limb that is separated from the help of the others.

And again, if you see with your soul that through every thought moved by your soul and through the views (contemplations) coming into your quietude, your eyes are filled with tears and your tears flow down your cheeks effortlessly, you will not that there will have been started to be done an opening in the separation wall, towards the destruction of your enemies.

And if you see within you, from time to time, your cogitation sinking withing you, without the worry or the usual [74] "He surely calls "liturgy" the prayer. And the "diversity of the liturgy" he calls the divers ways which one can commit the work of the prayer in. This is for we either pray by singing, or by reading, of by standing up, or by kneeling and prostrating, or by raising our hands up. And again, sometimes we pray with a loud voice, on some other times we pray in our mind, and on some other times only by moving our lips. But what does it mean: "And suddenly the verse will be cut off your tongue and over your soul will be stretched the ties of the silence, stopping you soul from his freedom", except that the consummate prayer done by the tongue it ends suddenly and it enters inside the soul and it becomes entirely mental, and that will force the soul to no longer scatter his usual freedom into the external realities, but to forsake any other worry and cogitation, by following only et meanings of the prayer!".

[75] "This means that only the quietude, without any other virtue, we find it as priceless, of the judge rightly". A peaceful man can be also a man who calculates carefully his malefactor plans. The quietude has a content of peace, of gentleness, of love, when focused on God. It is not commendable an egotistic peace.

order from outside, and this lasts for an hour or more, and after that you see your limbs in a big tiredness and the peace ruling over your thoughts, and this remains within you for a long time, you will know that the cloud will have started to overshadow your tent.

And if while you live in quietude you find within your soul thought tearing your soul apart and taking your soul under their domination, and these thoughts always engulf your soul, and your soul's cogitation is always focused on the things he has done, or it wants to inquire the vain things, you will know that you vainly tire on yourself with the quietude. This is because your soul lives in scattering. And causes for that come either from outside, or because of your carelessness from inside related to your duties, better said your carelessness to take vigil and to read. So, you must immediately set your work in order.

And if by doing that you enter these days, but you don't immediately find peace from the disturbance caused by your passions, you won't wonder. This is because even the bosom of the earth remains hot for a long time after the sunrays crosses over it and the smell of the medicine and the smoke of incense poured into the sky it will persist for a long time before scattering and disappearing, all the more will the passions remain when stopped from their usual matter, as baking at the doors, like the dogs used to lick the blood in the butchery, until their power of habit won't be scattered away.
